To RUFF, v. n. 1. To beat a drum in that particular mode which is observed when proclamations are made, S.

This seems originally to have been an oblique use of Germ. ruff-er, to cry; Germ. ausgeruff-en, Sw. utrop-a, to proclaim; Germ. ruf-er, a crier.

This is also written ruffle.

"His Testimony is very short, and he got liberty to deliver it, tho' two drums were ready on each hand to ruffle, as Major White should order them." Wodrow's Hist. ii. 261.

"When James Robertson offered to speak upon the scaffold, he was interrupted by the ruffling of the drums; and when complaining of this, Johnstoun the Town Major beat him with his cane, at the foot of the ladder, in a most barbarous manner." Ibid. p. 266.

2. To give a plaudit, by making a noise with the feet, S.

RUFF, s. 1. The roll of the drum, S.

2. Beating with the feet, as expressive of applause, S.

R U G

—Baith appear that night at play;
And got a ruff frae a' the house,
That made the billies unco crouse.

R. Galloway's Poems, p. 23.

RUFFE, s. Apparently, fame; celebrity, q. state of applause.

"Sir James being thus rebuked, what could he do against a king, a monarch, a victorious and triumphant king? to whom all had yielded, with whom all went right well, in his ruffe, in his highest pitch, in his grandeur, compassed about with his guards, with his armies." Hume's Hist. Doug. p. 21.

RUFFIE, s. A ruffian; a low worthless fellow, Ang. Quhairfoir but reuth thay ruffeis did them ryue, Rigorously without compassion.

Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 233.

And him, that gaitis ane personage,
Thinks it a present for a page;
And on no wayis content is he,
My Lord quhil that he callet be.
Bot how is he content, or nocht,
Deme ye about into your thocht,
The lerit sone of Erle, or Lord,
Upon this ruffie to remord,
That with all castings hes him bred,
His erands for to ryn and red?

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 110.

The origin seems Su.G. rof-wa, to rob.

RUFFY, s. 1. A wick clogged with tallow, instead of being dipped, Tweed. Galloway. See Sup.

"When the goodman of the house made family worship, they lighted a ruffy, to enable him to read the psalm, and the portion of scripture, before he prayed." P. Tongland, Kirkcud. Statist. Acc. ix. 328.

2. The torch used in fishing by night with the Lister. S. Sw. roc-lius, a rush-light, from roe, juncus.

RUFFILL, s. Loss; injury.

I wald have rydden him to Rome, with ane raip in his heid,

War nocht ruffill of my renoun, and rumour of pepill.

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 57.

Mr. Pinkerton derives it from Isl. riufa, to rob. V. Note, p. 393. But it seems rather allied to Teut. ruyffel-en, terere, verrere; q. the tear and wear of one's reputation.

RUFLYT, pret. v. Annoyed; harassed.

Bot thai with in mystir had,
Sa gret defence, and worthy mad,
That thai full oft thair fayis ruflyt,
For thai nakyn perall refusyt.

Barbour, iv. 145. MS.

In Edit. 1620, rushed. Junius expl. ruffle, tumultuose aggreddi, from C.B. rhyfel, bellum.

To RUG, v. a. 1. To pull hastily or roughly, S.

O'er he lap, and he ca'd her limmer,
And tuggit and ruggit her cockernonie.

Jamieson's Popular Ball. i. 303.

2. To tear, as a ravenous fowl with its beak, S.

Ane hidduous gripe with bustuous bowland beik,
His mawe immortall doith pik and ouer reik—
And sparis not to rug, riffe and gnawe.

Doug. Virgil, 185, 24.

Chaucer uses rogge, as signifying to shake. Roggyn or Mevyn, Agito, Prompt. Parv. ap. Tyrwhitt.

3. To spoil; to plunder. See Sup.

Teut. ruck-en, trahere, vellere, avellere, rapere; Su.G. ryck-a, (pron. reuck-a) trahere, raptare; Rycka ut taender, dentes evellere, S. to rug out the teeth. Dan. rag-er til sig, to pluck, to take by force. Ihre thinks that the antiquity of the Su.G. term appears from Lat. runco, used to signify the tearing up of herbs; and that Gr. ῥυκω-ειν, evellere, (Lat. ruo, eruo,) is the common fountain. Perhaps he might have immediately deduced the v. from Isl. ry-a, eruere, vellere; G. Andr. p. 98.

RUG, s. 1. A rough or hasty pull, S.

2. When one purchases any thing under its common price, it is said that he has got a rug of it, S.

This is evidently from the idea of one's snatching at any object, or seizing it with some degree of violence. He greedily lays hold of the opportunity of an advantageous bargain.

To RUG AND RIVE. To carry off by mere violence. S.

RUGGING AND RIVING. 1. Tearing and scrambling; pulling and hauling, in a quarrel or contest. 2. It often conveys the idea of rapacity in seizing and carrying off the property of others. S.

RUGGING AT THE HEART. The sensation experienced by those who get less food than what is required for the proper sustenance of the body; hunger. S.

RUGGAIR, s. A depredator; one who seizes the property of others by force.

"At the north end of Raarsay, be half myle of sea frae it, layes ane ile callit Ronay, mair then a myle in lengthe, full of wood and heddir, with ane havin for heiland galeys in the middis of it; and the same havein is guyed [good] for fostering of thieves, ruggairs and reivairs, till a nail, upon the peilling and spulyeing of poure pepill." Monroe's Iles, p. 28.

RUH-HED, s. Turf for fuel, cut without paring off the grass, hence called ruh-heds, i. e. rough-heads. S.

To RUIFF, v. a. To clinch; to rivet. V. ROOVE.

RUIFF-SPAR, s. A spar for a roof. S.

RUIL, s. An awkward female romp. S.

To RUYNATE, v. a. To destroy; to bring to ruin. S.

To RUINT, RUNT, v. n. To make a harsh noise as in grinding; nearly synon. with Ramsh, Ransh. S.

RUL, s. A young horse. S.

RULESUM, adj. Wicked; worthless; horrible. S.

RULLION, s. 1. A shoe made of rough untanned leather. V. REWELYNYS. 2. It seems to be the same word, that is applied, metaph., to a coarse-made masculine woman, Fife. 3. A rough ill-made animal. 4. A rouch rullion, a man who speaks his mind freely and roughly. 5. A scabbit rullion, a person overrun with the itch. S.

RUM, adj. 1. Excellent in its kind, Loth. 2. Ingenious, especially in mischief or wickedness, Roxb. Gallow. S.

RUMBALLIACH, (gutt.) adj. 1. Stormy, applied to the weather. 2. Quarrelsome; as, a rumballiach wife. S.

RUMBLEGARIE, adj. Disorderly; having a forward and confused manner, S.

Jouk and his rumblegarie wife
Drive on a drunken gaming life.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 576.

It is also used, Burns iv. 235. V. ILL-DEEDIE.

scured by confusion of ideas; awkwardness of expression, or precipitancy of manner; "rouch sense," S. S.

They need not try the jokes to fathom,

They want rumgumption.

Beattie's Address, Ross's Helenore, p. 8.

But sure it wad be gryte presumption,

In ane wha has sae sma' rumgumption.

Shirref's Poems, p. 321.

Rumgumption is used S.B., rummelgumption elsewhere.

It may have been formed from A.S. rum, rumwell, spatiosus, and geom-ian, curare, q. a large share of sense. Or as used in the latter form, the first part of the word may be from rummil, to make a noise, the term being generally applied to those who are rough and forward in their manner, and at first view might seem destitute of understanding. It is equivalent to the S. phrase, rouch sense. Although gumption has the same meaning, S. and A. Bor. the adj. rumgumtious has quite a different signification; "violent, bold, rash. North." Gl. Grose. V. GUMPTION.

RUMGUNSHOCH, adj. Rocky; stony; applied to soil, or to a piece of ground in which many stones or fragments of rock appear. S.

RUMGUNSHOCH, s. A coarse unpolished person. S.

RUMLIEGUFF, s. A rattling foolish fellow. S.

To RUMMAGE, v. n. To rage; to storm. S.

RUMMAGE, s. An obstreperous din. S.

RUMMELSHACKIN, adj. Raw-boned; loose-jointed.

To RUMMIL, RUMLE, v. n. To make a noise; to roar, E. rumble.

Ane routand burn amydwart therof rynniss,

Rumland and soundand on the craggy quhynniss.

Doug. Virgil, 227, 38.

Teut. rommel-en, Su.G. raml-a, Ital. rombol-are, Gr. πομπ-ειν, strepere. Seren. derives the Su.G. v. from Isl. rymb-er, murmur. Perhaps it should be viewed as a dimin. from Su.G. raqm-a, boare. V. RAME, v.

RUMMILGAIRIE, s. A rambling or roving person; a sort of romp, but not a mischievous one. S.

To RUMMYSS, RUMES, RUMMES, ROWMYSS, v. n. To bellow; to roar as a wild beast, S.

Lyke as ane bull dois rummesing and rare,

Quhen he eschapis hurt one the altare.

Doug. Virgil, 46, 13.

Of his E dolpe the flowand blude and atir

He wosche away all with the salt watir,

Grissilland his teith, and rummissand full hie.

Ibid. 90, 47.

A lion caught in the toils, is described as

Roland about with hydious rowmissing.

Henryson, Evergreen, i. 195.

Rudd. views this word as probably derived from the sound. But there seems to be no ground for the supposition. It is undoubtedly a deriv. from some one of the verbs mentioned under Rame. Isl. rym-a, rym-ia, is used in a similar sense. Skogdyren rymia ecke, naer thau hafa graesed; The beasts of the field roar not, when they have grass, Job, vi. 5. Wachter mentions Fr. ramas as signifying noise, although I have not observed this word in any other dictionary.

To RUMMLE, v. a. To stir about. S.

RUMMLE-HOBBLE, s. A commotion; a confusion. S.

RUMMLEKIRN, s. A gullet on rocky ground. S.

To RUMP, v. a. To deprive one of all his money or property; often applied to a losing gamester. S.

RUMPLE, RUMPILL, s. 1. The rump, or rump-bone, S. See Sup.

"It is a sign of a hale heart to rift at the rumple;"

Ramsay's S. Prov. p. 44,

R U N

"Ye ride sae near the rumple, ye'll let nane lowp on behind you;" Ibid. p. 84.

2. The tail, S.

"Otheris alliegis thay dang hym [St. Austine] with skait rumpillis. Nochtheles this derisioun succedit to thair gret displesoure. For God tuke on thaym sic vengeance, that thay and thair posterite had lang talis mony yeris eftir." Bellend. Cron. B. ix. c. 17.

Perhaps a late learned, but whimsical writer, did not know that he had the authority of one of our own historians on his side.

RUMPLE-BANE, s. The rump bone. S.

RUMPLE-FYKE, s. The itch when it has got a firm seat. S.

RUMPTION, s. A noisy bustle within doors. S.

RUMPUS, s. A disturbance; a tumult. S.

RUN, part. pa. Exhausted; run short of; as, "I'm run o' snuff," my snuff is done. S.

To RUNCH, v. n. To grind with the teeth; to cranch. S.

RUNCH, s. The act of grinding any harsh edible substance.

RUNCH, s. An iron instrument for wrenching or twisting nuts on screw-bolts; from E. to wrench. S.

RUNCHES, s. pl. Wild mustard; a term applied both to Sinapis Arvensis, and Raphanus Raphanistrum, S. skellies, synon. skellachs, Loth. See Sup.

Some define Runches as a larger and whiter flower than Skellachs, Loth.

On ruites and runches in the field,

With nolt, thou nourish'd was a year;

Whill that thou past baith poor and peild,

Into Argyle some lair to leir.

Polwart, Watson's Coll. iii. 8.

RUNCHIE, adj. Raw-boned; as, "a runchie queyn," a strong, raw-boned woman. S.

To RUND, v. n. V. ROOND. S.

RUND, ROON, s. The border of a web; the salvage of broad cloth, S. Roon, expl. "a shred, a remnant," Shirr. Gl., is the same word. See Sup.

In thae auld times, they thought the moon,

Just like a sark, or pair o' shoon,

Wore by degrees, till her last roon

Gaed past their viewing.

Burns, iii. 254.

A.S. Su.G. Teut. rand, Isl. ronð, raund, margo, extremitas. The primary sense of the Su.G. and Isl. words is linea, which Ihre derives from rad, id. with the insertion of n.

To RUNDGE, v. n. "To range and gather," Gl. Evergreen.

— Quha keip ay, and heip ay

Up to themselves grit store,

By rundging and spunging

The leil laborious pure.

Vision, Evergreen, i. 219. st. 12.

It seems doubtful if this word be not misapplied. For it may rather signify to gnaw, to consume, being apparently the same with rounge. V. RONGED.

RUNG, s. 1. Any long piece of wood; but most commonly a coarse heavy staff, S. 2. A spoke. See Sup.

With bougars of barnis thay left blew cappis,

Quhill thay of bernis maid briggis;

The reird rais rudelie with the rappis,

Quhen rungs wes laid on riggis, Chr. Kirk. st. 14.

Here the word evidently signifies any rough poles, or pretty gross pieces of wood, as the cross spars of barns, called bougars. Perhaps it has the same meaning in the following passage,

The calves and ky met in the lone,

The man ran with ane rung to red.

Bannatyne Poems, p. 217. st. 8.

R U N

"I'll take a rung, and rizele your rigging with it;" S. Prov. Kelly, p. 396.

3. Used metaph., in relation to the influence of poverty.

An' as for Poortith, girmn carline!—

Aft hae I borne her wickit snarlin,

An' felt her rung.

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, i. 120.

Skinner observes, that those timbers of a ship, which constitute her floors, are called rungs; perhaps q. rings, (from their being bolted to the keels,) ringed poles. But we have the very term in Moes.G., in the sense still most common in S. Hrugg, supposed to be pron. hrung, virga. "And commanded them, that they should take nothing for their journey, niba hrugga aina, save a staff only;" Mark vi. 8. Hence Isl. raung, pl. rungr, Su.G. rong, rang, wraeng, Fr. varangues, the ribs of a ship. Isl. rang is also used to denote the perch or pole on which fowls sit while they sleep; which more nearly approaches to the most ancient sense, and to that retained by us. Honan sitter ei sa hogt a rang, Chron. Rhythm. ap. Ihre; i. e. S. "The hen sits na sa heich on the rung." Junius strangely views E. rodde, Belg. roede, as synonymes of Moes.G. hrugg, mentioning no other; Goth. Gl. In the Gl. to Landnamabok, Isl. rong, costa navis, is derived from rang-r, Dan. vrang, obliquus. But as we find the same term in Moes.G., this derivation seems inadmissible.

RUNG-WHEEL, s. The wheel in a corn-mill which has spokes or rungs, and is driven by the cog-wheel. S.

RUNG IN, part. pa. Worn out by fatigue; applied to men or horses quite exhausted by running. S.

RUNGATT, adj. Errat. for Runigatt; renegade. S.

RUNGAND, part. pr. Raging. V. RING, v. S.

To RUNGE, v. a. To rummage; to search eagerly. S.

RUNJOIST, s. A beam laid along the side of the roof of a house that was to be covered with thatch. S.

To RUNK, v. a. To deprive one of what he was formerly in possession of, whether by fair or foul means; as, in play, to take all one's money, S.B.

Most probably it has originally been used in a bad sense, from Isl. reinki, crafty, rank-or, fraud; Pers. renc, guile.

To RUNK, v. a. 1. To attack or endeavour to undermine one's character. 2. To satirize. S.

RUNK, adj. Wrinkled, Aberd.

"Bat the thing that anger'd me warst awa was, to be sae sair gnidg'd by a chanler-chafed auld runk carlen." Journal from London, p. 4.

This resembles the more simple form of the word, retained in Su.G. rynka, Dan. rincke, a wrinkle.

To RUNKLE, v. a. 1. In part. pa. runkled, runckled, wrinkled, S.

At har'st at the shearing nae younkens are jearing,

The bansters are runkled, lyart, and grey.

Ritson's S. Songs, ii. 3.

Auld Bessie, in her red coat braw,

Came wi' her ain oe Nanny,

An odd-like wife, they said, that saw,

A moupin runckled granny.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 272.

2. To crease; to crumple, S.

A.S. wrincl-ian, Belg. wrinckel-en, Germ. runtzel-en, Su.G. rynck-a, rugare.

RUNKLY, adj. Wrinkled; shrivelled. S.

RUNKLE, RUNKILL, s. 1. A wrinkle, S.

Alecto hir thrawin vissage did away,—

And hir in schape transformyt of ane trat,

Hir forret skorit with runkillis and mony rat.

Doug. Virgil, 221, 35.

2. A rumple; a crease, S.

"Christ hais luffit the kirk—to mak it to him self ane glorious congregatioun, haiffand na spot nor runkil, nor ony siclyke thing, bot that it suld be haly & without reпреif." Abp. Hamiltoun's Catechisme, Fol. 17, a. b.

This is proverbially applied, in allusion to what are otherwise called the nicks in a cow's horn. "We may ken your eild by the runkles of your horn;" Ramsay's S. Prov. p. 75.; "spoken to old maids when they pretend to be young;" Kelly, p. 359.

RUNNICK, s. A kennel; a drain. S.

RUNRIG, RUN-RIG, a term used in two senses; both as an adj. and a s. 1. Applied to land belonging to different owners, S. See Sup.

"A separate act passed in the same session of parliament 1695, c. 23., for dividing lands belonging to different proprietors, which lie runrig, with the exception of acres belonging to boroughs or incorporations. Lands are said to lie runrig, where the alternate ridges of a field belong to different proprietors." Erskine's Instit. B. III. T. iii. s. 59.

2. Run-rig is also expl., "a common field, in which the different farmers had different ridges allotted to them in different years, according to the nature of their crops." P. Ayton. Berw. Statist. Acc. i. 80, N.

This mode of possession, or of farming, has been accounted for in the following manner.

"This neighbourhood, on both sides of Tweed, was formerly the warlike part of the country, and exposed to the inroads of the English; the lands, therefore, all lay run-rig, that when the enemies came, all the neighbourhood, being equally concerned, might run to oppose them." P. Smallholm, Roxb. Statist. Acc. iii. 217.

The same reason is elsewhere assigned for this mode of farming, Ibid. i. 80. 81. v. 322, N.

The same absurd plan of farming exists in the Hebrides. V. Pennant's Tour, 1772, p. 201. Various estates in S. are still possessed in this manner. In Orkney, this mode remains both among tenants and landholders.

"Many of the lands that belong to the same proprietor, as well as those that are the property of different proprietors, are blended together in what is called runrig." Barry's Orkney, p. 352.

Notwithstanding the plausibleness of the reason assigned for this custom, as securing common exertion during a state of warfare, it would seem that we ought to trace it to an earlier period. It is most probably a remnant of the ancient Gothic or German manners. We learn from Tacitus (De Moribus Germ.) that, "among the Germans, the cultivated lands were not considered as the property of individuals, but of the whole tribe, which they cultivated, and sowed, and reaped, in common." V. Barry, p. 103.

Cæsar gives materially the same account of the manners of the Germans. "Neque quisquam agri modum certum, aut fines habet proprios; sed magistratus, ac principes in annos singulos gentibus, cognitionibusque hominum, qui una coierunt, quantum, et quo loco visum est, agri adtribuunt, atque anno post alio transire cogunt." De Bell. Gall. Lib. vi. c. 22.

The prevalence of run-rig, in Orkney and Shetland, even among different landholders, affords a strong presumption that it was introduced from Germany or Scandinavia, and gradually found its way, in Scotland, from North to South.

The name seems evidently derived from the circumstance of these lands or ridges running parallel to each other.

RUNSE, s. The noise made by a sharp instrument in piercing flesh. V. RANSH, RUNSH, v. S.

RUNSY, s. A common hackney horse. S.

RUNT, s. 1. The trunk of a tree.

———— Muskane treis sproutit,

Combust, barrant, unblomit, and unleifit,

Auld rottin runtis quharin na sap was leifit.

Palice of Honour, i. 3.

2. The hardened stem or stalk of a plant, as of colewort or cabbage. A hail-runt, the stem of colewort, S.

"The stems, or, to give them their ordinary appellation, the runts, are placed somewhere above the head of the door; and the Christian names of the people whom chance brings into the house, are, according to the priority of placing the runts, the names in question." Burns, iii. 126, N. V. BOWKAIL.

3. The tail of an animal; properly the upper part of it.

4. A short person. S.

Sibb. derives it, without any probability, from root. It is perhaps radically the same with Germ. rinde, bark; also, crust. For what is a runt, S. but the stalk hardened into a sort of bark?

RUNT, s. 1. An old cow, S.B. a cow that has given over breeding, Caithn.

This is evidently quite different from the sense of the word, as used in England, where it signifies an ox or cow of a small size. It is probably from the same origin, however; Belg. rund, a bullock, Germ. rinde, an ox or cow. V. RHIND MART.

2. An auld runt, an opprobrious designation for a female, generally one advanced in life. S.

To RUNT, v. n. To bounce; to caper; to rush forth. S.

RUNTHEREOUT, s. A vagabond. V. RINTHEREOUT. S.

RUNWULL, adj. A person is said to be runwull, when out of the reach of the law. V. WILL, adj. S.

RURALACH, s. A native of the rural world. S.

RURYK, adj. Rural; rustic; vulgar.

Ibid. 347.

"Every body ruses the ford as he finds it;" S. Prov.
Rudd. i. e. commends it more or less. For here the term is meant to bear an ambiguous sense.

"Ruse the fair day at night;" S. Prov. "Commend not a thing, or project, till it has its full effect;" Kelly, p. 282.

Ill rused is sometimes used, as in the S. Prov.; "If it be ill, it is as ill rused;" i. e. discommended. V. Kelly, p.
210.

The term, in its primary sense, has included the idea of boasting. It has still a similar application. One is said to ruse himself; also, to ruse his gudes, when he prefers them to those of others. This corresponds to Isl. raus-a, jactabundè multa effutio; G. Andr. Ros-a, laudare, ex-tollere; Verel. Ind. Su.G. ros-a, roos-a, Dan. ros-er, Ital.
ruzz-are, id. Ihre imagines that it may be derived from ris-a, to elevate. It would be more natural to refer to Moes.G. razda, speech; especially as Isl. raus, evidently allied to ruse, denotes prodigality of words, futile talk.

RUSE, RUISSE, RUSS, s. 1. Boast. Tame ruse. See S.

I compt na thing al thoct yone fant Troianis
Rekin thar fatis that thame hidder brocht,
Al sic vane ruse I fere as thing of nocht,
In case thay proude be of the Goddis ansueris,
And thame awant therof with felloun feris.

Doug. Virgil, 279, 10.

Sum spendis on the auld vse,

Sum makis ane tume ruse.

Ibid. Prol. 238, b. 3.

To mak a tume ruse, to boast where there is no ground for it, but the reverse; as, to boast of fulness, when one is in poverty. This phrase is still used, Ang.

Quhat gif King David war leivand in thir dayis?

The quhilk did found sa mony gay Abayis.—

His successours maks litill ruisse, I ges,

Of his devotioun, or of his holines.

Lyndsay, S.P.R. ii. 232.

The proprietor of the small estate of Deuchar, in Angus, had in his possession, till the year 1745, when it was carried off by the Highlanders, in their search for arms, a broad sword, transmitted from one heir to another, with this curious inscription;

At Bannockburn I serv'd the Bruce,
Of quhilk the Inglis had na russ.

The account has this collateral proof of authenticity, that the family have in their possession seisins from the time of David Bruce downwards. These I have examined.
2. Commendation; praise; without the idea of boasting being included, S.

Ros is used in this sense O.E.

A morn Lybeaus was boun

For to wyne renoun,

And ros wythoute les.

Lybeaus, Ritson's E.M.R. ii. 33.

Chaucer, ruse, commend.

Su.G. ros, roos, praise. Ihre observes, that it was used by ancient writers in the sense of boasting. Isl. hroosun, praise, Dan. roesglede, boasting.

RUSER, s. One habituated to self-commendation.

"A great ruser was never a good rider;" S. Prov. "A man that boasts much, seldom performs well;" Kelly, p. 36.

RUSH, s. A sort of flux or diarrhœa in sheep, when first put upon new or rank pasture. S.

R U T

RUSH, s. An eruption on the skin. S.

RUSH-FEVER, s. The vulgar name for Scarlet fever. S.

RUSHIE, s. A broil; a tumult, Fife. See Sup.

Teut. ruysch, strepitus, ruysch-en, strepere, perstrepere.

Su.G. Isl. rusk-a, id.

To RUSK, v.n. To scratch; to claw with vehemence. S.

To RUSK, v.n. To pluck roughly. When a horse tears hay from a stack he is said to be ruskin at it.

RUSKIE, s. 1. A basket for carrying corn, during the operation of sowing, Perth. Loth. It is made of twigs of briar and wheat straw.

2. "A sort of a vessel made of straw to hold meal in."

"You are as small as the twitter of a twin'd rusky;" S.
Prov.; "a taunt to a maid, that would gladly be esteemed neat, and small;" Kelly, p. 395.

3. A hive for bees, made of rushes or straw, S.B. shep, synon. 4. A coarse straw-hat worn by peasant girls and others to defend their faces from the sun. S.

From A.S. risc, a rush, Su.G. rusk, congeries virgultorum; or rather, radically the same with ryssia, Germ.
reusche, Fr. ruche, a bee-hive.

RUSKIE, adj. Healthy and stout. S.

RUTE, s. A blow. V. ROUT, s. 2.

RUTE, s. A fowl; perhaps the same with the Rood- Goose.

"The wylde guse of the greit bind. ii. s. The claik, quink, and rute, the price of the peice. xviii. d." Acts,
Mar. 1551, c. 11, Edit. 1566.

Isl. hrotta is the name given to a species of wild goose;
anser montanus. It is also called Fialla rota, q. the fell (or mountain) rute; G. Andr. p. 124. V. Rood Goose.

RUTEMASTER, RUTMASTER, ROOTEMASTER, s. The captain of a troop of horse. V. RITMASTER. S.

RUTH, adj. Kind. "Ruth and ready," still disposed to shew kindness. S.

RUTHER, s. A loud noise; a tumultuous cry; an uproar, S.

— Sic a ruther raise, tweesh riving hair,
Screeding of kurches, crying dool and care,
Wi' thud for thud upon their bare breast bane,
To see't and hear't, wad break a heart of stane.

Ross's Helenore, p. 23.

A.S. hruth, commotion, C.B. rhuthr, impetus, rhuthro, cum impetu ferri, Ir. ruathar, pillage. It may, however, be of the same origin with Ruddy, q. v., especially as Isl.
hrid, denotes a combat.

A hundreth schippis, that ruthyr bur and ayr,
To turss thair gud, in hawyn was lyand thar.

Wallace, vii. 1066. MS.

To RUTHER, v.n. 1. To storm; to bluster. 2. To roar. S.

RUTHIE, s. The noise occasioned in the throat or breast by oppressed respiration. S.

RUTILLAND, part. pr.

I am ane blak monk, said the rutilland Rauin,
Sa said the Glaid, I am ane halie Freir;
And hes power to bring you quick to heuin.

Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 207.

This is printed Rutill and Rauin, but evidently by mistake. If rutilland be the original word, it must allude to the glossy appearance of the raven; Fr. rutil-er, Lat.
rutil-are, to glitter. In later editions it is ratling, as synon.
with rolpand, an epithet used in the description of the raven in the preceding stanza.

RUTOUR, s. A spoiler; an oppressor.

RUTTERY, s. Lechery. S.
To RUVE, v. a. To clinch. V. ROOVE.
RUWITH. Apparently, within. S.
Fight was prodly, with purpou and palle;
Birdes branden above, in brend gold bright;

S A C

Ruwith was a chapell, a chambour, a halle;
A chymné with charcole, to chaufe the knight.
Sir Gawan and Sir Gal. ii. 9.

This being a description of a royal pavilion, perhaps ruwith may signify, formed of tapestry, from A.S. reowu, tapestry. It may, however, be an error for withinn, within,
or some word of similar meaning.
RWHYS, Wyntown. V. RUSCHE, s.

S.

The letter S., Ihre observes, was a peculiar favourite with the ancient Goths; qua nulla — carior, nulla frequentior.

This letter, as occurring in the beginning of words, in many instances cannot be viewed as a radical. While prefixed in some Goth. dialects, it was thrown away in others. This was especially the case before h.
The same term sometimes appears with s, and sometimes without it. Of this we have some vestiges in our own language; as, cry and sery.

Ss is often used by our old writers as the mark of the pl.; as, horss for horsis, horses.

SA, SUA, SWA, conj. 1. So; consequently.

Quhen he is stuffit, thair strike, and hald hym on steir,
Sa sall ye stonay yone stowt, suppose he be strang.
Gawan and Gol. iii. 15.

"Brothyr," he said, "sen thow will sua,
"It is gud that we samyn ta." Barbour, v. 71. MS.

2. In such a manner.

Now God gyff grace that I may swa
Tret it, and bryng it till endyng—
Barbour, i. 34. MS.

3. As, in like manner.

And on the north halff is the way
Sa ill, as it apperis to day. Barbour, viii. 40. MS.

SACHLESS, adj. Useless; unavailing. Sackless. S.

SACK, s. One of the privileges of a baron. V. SAK.

SACKE, s. Sackcloth.

His Abbots gat an uncouth turne,
When Shauellinges went to sacke.
Spec. Godly Sangs, p. 35.

i. e. When monks and friars were obliged to put on sackcloth. The phrase is metaph., expressing their deep sorrow on account of the Reformation.

The phrase sack gown still denotes a gown made of sackcloth, such as that in which penitents used publicly to appear, according to the former custom of the church of Scotland; although, if I mistake not, this relic of Popish penance is now universally laid aside.

To this custom the following proverbial phrase undoubtedly refers.

Do'in well oursells, we canna help
Tho' a friends binna stiddy;
Sma' is their kin that canna spare
To fill baith sack and widdy.

Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 15.

i. e. Both the sack gown and the halter.

SACKET, SAKKET, s. A small sack or bag, S.B.

"The poiet confermis this samyn purpos, sayand, that euerye man of this varld baris tua sakkettis vitht hym.
The fyrst sakket hyngis befor hym, vitht in the quhilk ar

p. 216.

A dimin. from sack, a term which has passed through a great variety of languages; Moes. G. sakk, A.S. saec, sacc, Alem. sac, Dan. Belg. sack, Fr. sac, Ital. sacc-o, Lat.
sacc-us, Gr. σακκος, Heb. שק, sak, id.

SACKETY, adj. Short and thick; as, "a sackety bodie," a little thick person. S.

SACKLESS, adj. Useless; silly; feeble; good for nothing; simple; as, "a sackless mortal." S.

SACRATE, adj. Sacred. S.

To SACRE, v. a. To consecrate. See Sup.

Thy secrete sawis and thy prophecyis,

And, O thou blissit woman, vnto the,
Wise walit men sall dedicate and sacré.

Fr. sacrer, Lat. sacr-are. Doug. Virgil, 165, 12.

SACRE, s. A piece of artillery. E. saker. S.

To SACRIFY, v. a. 1. To sacrifice; to offer religiously;
Lat. sacrific-are.

Into this coup of gold Anchises hys syre
At the altare was wount to sacrify.
Doug. Virgil, 214, 7.

2. To consecrate; to dedicate.

Quha sall fra thens adorne in any stede
The power of Juno, or alteris sacrifye? Ibid. 14, 34.

S A D

3. To appease; to propitiate.
Unto the hallowit stede bring in, thay cry,
The grete figure, and lat us sacryfy
The haly goddes, and magnify hir nicht.
Ibid. 46, 30.
- SACRISTER, s. One who has charge of the utensils of a church; the same with Sacrist, Sacristan, E. S.
- SAD, adj. 1. Grave; serious; not flippant.

Thre hundreth haill, that sekyr war and trew,
Off Lennox folk, thair power to renew.
Ibid. x. 56. MS.
- Sade*, Chaucer, steady; unsad, unsettled, unsteady.
O stormy peple, unsad and ever untrewe,
And undiscrete, and changing as a fane;
— Thus saiden sade folk in that citee,
Whan that the peple gased up and down.
— He so often hadde hire don offence,
And she ay sade and constant as a wall.
Clerkes T. ver. 8871. 8878. 8923.
4. Close; compact; cohesive, S. See Sup.
A road, or foot path, is said to be sad, when it is beaten by the feet of passengers.
C.B. sathru signifies calcare, conculcare; syth, solidus;
Davies.
- It is used by R. Brunne, p. 305., in the sense of close, compact.
Streth suld non haf had, to perte tham thorgh oute,
So wer thei set sad with poyntes rounde aboute.
The kyng sauh tham comand so sadly in the mede.
5. Heavy; as, the bread is very sad, i. e. not well raised,
S. See Sup.
“In some provincial dialects, — sad is used for heavy;”
Sir J. Sinclair’s Observ. p. 146.
6. Weighty; solid; applied to proofs.
“Bot quhat auailis this equitie of the caus befor heireris,—utterly ignorant of the mater how it was done,— quhilk esteme the sclanderis of maist lewd slicht personis, for sad testimoneis.” Buchanan’s Detect. D. i. b.
7. Flat; close to the ground, S.
Thus a thing is said to lie sad, S.
8. Sad is applied to colour, grave, or not gaudy; dark, as opposed to light. 9. Expl. as signifying great. S.

SAFT, adv. 1. Softly, not harshly; applied to music, S.
In window hung, how aft we see
Thee keek around at warblers free
That carrol saft, and sweetly sing!

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 36.

2. Lightly, as opposed to being fast asleep.

"O sleep ye, wake ye, Kinmont Willie,
"Upon the morn that thou's to die?"
"O I sleep saft, and I wake aft;
"It's lang since sleeping was fleyed frae me."

Minstrelsy, Border, i. 151.

SAFTLY, adv. Softly, S.

Then quickly he took aff his shoon,
And saftly down the stair did creep.

Minstrelsy, Border, i. 84.

To SAFT, v. a. To soften, to mollify; applied to the mind.

Su. G. saa, id. situla, vas quo aqua portatur; Isl. saa, majusculum quodvis vas, Ol. Lex. Run. The Fr. use seau in the same sense, which is most probably from the Goth. Some have mentioned Heb. סאה, seah, a measure, as allied. Wachter observes, that, with the ancient Germans, saw denoted water; hence Ihre supposes that saa, as signifying a vessel for holding water, naturally derives its origin.

SAY, adv. So. Syn. Sa, Sae. S.

SAYARE, s. An author; a poetical writer.

The sayare eik suld wele consider this,
His mater, and quham to it intitillit is.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 271, 34.

He is here speaking of the Heroic style of writing.

Nearly allied both to sayare and sage-man is O.E. segger. R. of Brunne, speaking of his translation of Langtoft's Chronicle, says,

I mad noght for no disours,
Ne for no seggers no harpours,
Bot for the luf of symple men,
That strange Inglis can not ken.

Prol. xcix.

Hearne renders the term, "sayers, historians." R.
Brunne had undoubtedly the minstrels, the hereditary chroniclers of the nation, especially in his eye. The only sense given of disours, in the Gl., is discourse. But it evidently signifies rehearsers, tale tellers; Fr. discur, a speaker. As a poet was called a Makare, because he composed, he might be designed a Sayare, or Segger, because he recited his compositions; unless the name was from saga, sage, as descriptive of the general character of these works, which were merely rhythmical histories or narrations.

SAID, s. A thick sod or turf for fuel. V. SADE. S.

SAIDLE-TURSIDE, s. A sort of wooden settee used

SAIL-FISH, s. The basking shark, S. Squalus maximus, pinna dorsali anteriore majore, Linn.

"The sail-fish, or basking [i. basking] shark, appears on the coasts of the parish early in the month of May, if the season is warm; he is a stupid and torpid kind of fish; he allows the harpooner often to feel him with his hand before he darts at him." P. South Uist, Invern. Statist. Acc. xiii. 290.

"The sun or sail-fish occasionally visits us; this sluggish animal sometimes swims into the salmon nets, and suffers itself to be drawn towards the shore, without any resistance, till it gets so near the land, that for want of a sufficient body of water, it cannot exert its strength," &c. P. Lochgoil-head, Argyles. Statist. Acc. iii. 173.

It is denominated from the large fin which it carries above water. It is also called the Sun-fish, S.; Carbin, Cairban, or Carfin, Hebrides; Hoe-mother or Homer, Orkn.

Mr. Pinkerton leaves the first part of the word sayndis, as occurring here, for explanation. But it evidently ought to be printed sayndisman, from A.S. sandes-man, nuntius; from sandes the genit. of sand, a message, and man, i. e. one employed to deliver a message, Isl. sendeman, id. ap. SAK, SACK, s. A term used in our old laws, to denote one of the privileges of a baron.

"And some criminal actions pertains to some of the judges foresaids, and to their courts: and chiefie to them quha hes power to hald their courts, with sock, sack, gallous and pit, toll and thame, infang-thief, and outfang-thief," Reg. Maj. B. i. c. 4. s. 2.

Sok undoubtedly denotes the right with which a baron is vested, of holding a court within his own domains. It seems also to signify the extent of the jurisdiction of this court.

A.S. soc is expl. not only curia, but, territorium, sive praecinctus, in quo Saca et cetera privilegia exercebantur.
 Hickes, Thes. i. 159.

Sack seems properly to signify the right of the baron to prosecute his vassals in this court, and to decide the matter in controversy, by imposing fines or otherwise punishing the guilty.

A.S. sac, saca, lis, actio, causa forensis. Hence E. sake, equivalent to cause; as, for God's sake, propter Dei causam.
Sak is expl. by Rastell, as equivalent to placitum et emenda. i. e. as denoting not only the plea, but the pecuniary mulct imposed on the person found guilty: and in the laws of Edward the Confessor, as synon. with foris- factura or forfeiture. V. Spelman, vo. Sac. Su.G. sak signifies not only a cause, and also guilt or crime, but the fine imposed on the criminal.

Skene expl. sock as, according to some, referring to the sock or plough-share; "quhen the tenent is bound and oblished to cum with his pleuch to till and labour ane part of the Lordes lands." De Verb. Sign. vo. Sokman- nia; also, Not. in Reg. Maj. Lib. i. c. 4. This idea seems to have been thrown out by Littleton. V. Spelm. vo.
Soc. But it is quite fanciful. For sock, as denoting a plough-share, is not of A.S. origin. Besides, soc, juris-dictio, is the same with socn, socna, where the resemblance is lost. A.S. soc, I suspect, is from Moes.G. sok-jan, A.S. soec-an, to seek. 1. Because its literal sense is sequela.
 2. Because it corresponds to L.B. secta. "Sok,—now wee call soyte, from the French worde suite, h. e. sequela;"
 Skene, in vo. 3. Because this is confirmed by analogy.
 Su.G. soek-a signifies, in jus vocare; soeka och swara, actorem et reum esse, Leg. Ostg. ap. Ihre. Hence soekn, citatio in jus, corresponding to A.S. socn; soeknedag, dies, quo in jus vocare licet, exactly analogous to our phrase a lawful day; i. e. a day in which a man might be brought into a court of law, in order to be prosecuted; Isl. yfersokn, suprema jurisdictio. Su.G. soeka is also used, in a secondary sense, as signifying to exact; soekn, an exaction;
soeknare, quaestor, one who levies fines.

This analogy renders it highly probable that sac has the same origin; especially as Su.G. sak, equally with soekn, signifies a mulct. The cognate Germ. term, suche, causa, lis, jus cognoscendi de causis controversis, is deduced by Wachter from such-en, quaerere, inquirere.

SAKE, s. Blame; guilt, or accusation.

SALE, SAIL, SAILL, s. 1. A palace.

Thare stude ane grete tempill or sait ryall,
Of Laurent ciete sete impereall.

Doug. Virgil, 210, 55. sail, MS.

The sense requires it, sete being used in the following line.

2. A hall; a chamber; a parlour.

The renk raikit in the sail, riale and gent,
That wondir wisly wes wrought, with wourschip and wele.
Gawan and Gol. i. 6.

It seems doubtful whether the term here denotes the palace in general, or one chamber in it.

Within the cheif palice, baith he and he Ar enterit in the sale ryall and hie.

Doug. Virgil, 472, 38.

The term is used in both senses in the Northern languages: A.S. sal, aula, palatium; Su.G. sal, habitaculum, conclave; aula, curia; Isl. sal, domus ampla et magnifica, multorum hospitum et convivarum capax;—camera in aedium editiori loco, quam adire per scalas necessum est; Verel. Ind. Germ. sal, templum, palatium; also, coenaculum, pars aedium amplior et ornatior; Fr. sale, Ital. L.B. sala, a hall.

A.S. Alem. sal also denotes a private house. The natural origin of the term, in all its senses, is undoubtedly to be found in Moes.G. sal-jan, divertere, manere, hospitari; whence salith-vos, mansiones; A.S. saelth, Alem. selitha, habitatio.

Barbour, iii. 540. MS.

Instead of takys, used in MS., I suspect that it ought to have been lakys, lacks or wants. For, as the passage stands, it cannot bear any tolerable meaning. Barbour expresses the same idea with that contained in the emphatical S. Prov. Hunger's gude kitchin.

Germ. salze, Fr. sausse, id. The origin is Germ. salz-en, sale condire; as properly signifying a kind of pickle made of salt. V. Wachter, vo. Salz.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 450, 47.

"I shall make it salt to you, i. e. I shall make you pay dear for it. That's the thing that makes the kail salt, Prov. Scot. Bor. i. e. That's the ground of the quarrel," Rudd.

2. Severe; oppressive; overwhelming. S.

3. Costly; expensive; applied to any article of sale, S.

I need scarcely observe, that Lat. sales in pl. and E. salt, are both metaph. used to denote wit. Although the sense is different, there may be an analogy. The term, as used S., might originally denote what is poignant to the mind. It may, however, have a reference to some ancient superstition, such as that mentioned by Kilian. Soute ende broode eten, offam judiciale edere. "This," he says, "was a bit of bread, devoted in the way of execration by certain words, which was presented to the guilty person; salt being at the same time offered, perhaps, because it was customary to use it in execrations and imprecations. For the Germans, Saxons, Belgae, and many others, were firmly persuaded, that no one, conscious of evil, could eat bread devoted in this manner;" vo. Sout, sal.

This superstitious idea evidently corresponds to the constant use of salt in the sacred rites of the heathen, from whom it was immediately borrowed by the church of Rome. V. Casal. de Vet. Sac. Christ. Rit. p. 205. It is well known that the heathen always used salt in their sacrifices. The sacred nature of this rite would naturally enough induce a persuasion of the efficacy of salt, when devoted in the manner described above; as the person who profaned it would be accounted so daring in his guilt as to call for an immediate intervention of the power of their offended deities.

It is said to have been an ancient custom among some heathen nations, that those who promised faith to kings, eat salt adjured or consecrated in the presence of the kings to whom they bound themselves. Hence it is said in the book of Esdras, that the princes of the Samaritans, when they wrote to the Persian kings, accusing the Jews, thus expressed themselves; "We are mindful of the salt, which we eat in the palace." V. Du Cange, vo. Sal.

But the rite itself, as used in sacrifices, was probably borrowed from the Jewish customs. It was one of the laws delivered by Moses; "Every oblation of thy meat-offering shalt thou season with salt;" Lev. ii. 13. As salt was a symbol to which Pythagoras attached great importance, it has been supposed, on pretty good authority, that he learned the sacred use of it from the Jews. V. Gale's Court, P. ii. 130, 152, 153, 204.

SALT SE, or SEA. A phrase commonly used by our old writers to denote the sea.

Vnder thy gard to schip we vs addres,
Ouer spynnand many swelland seyis salt.

Doug. Virgil, 72, 46.

But the term salt, as connected with sea, is not to be viewed in the light of a common poetical epithet. It seems evidently to have originated from its being formerly used as a s., denoting the sea itself. We may safely form this conclusion from analogy. For salt was the designation which the ancient Scandinavians gave to the sea. The Baltic sea is by Isl. writers commonly called Eystra salt, i. e. the Eastern sea; Germ. salz, mare, Gr. ἅλς, and Lat. sal-um, signify both the sea, and that seasoning which we give to our food, extracted from its waters. According to Ihre, it must remain uncertain, whether salt has its name from the sea, or the sea, as thus denominated, from salt. But Seren. observes, perhaps more justly, that Su.G. salt, as denoting the sea, seems to be the radical term; as it is not likely that men would be acquainted with salt, before they had tasted the waters of the sea.

Moes.G. sinapis, A.S. senep, Alem. senaf, senef, Dan.
senep, Belg. sennep, id. all from Gr. σινάπις. Saler seems to signify a vessel for holding salt; Fr. saliera, Ital.
saliera, salera, probably from the Lat. phrase salarium
vas. A salt-vat, is still called a salt-seller, S. Johns., after Swift, writes salt-cellar, but improperly; Somner and Minsheu, salt-seller.

To SAND, v. a. To nonplus; used like E. to gravel. S.

SAND-BLIND, adj. 1. Used in a different sense from that of the E. word; for it denotes that weakness of sight which often accompanies a very fair complexion,
S. synonym. blind-fair.

2. It also signifies purblind; short-sighted. S.
 SAND-BUNKER, s. A small well fenced sand-pit. S.

To SANE, v. n. To say.

Unquyt I do no thing nor sane,
 Nor wairis a luvis thocht in vane.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 81.

Quhat sall I of his wounder workis sane?

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 160, 7.

Lyndsay, shewing the folly of worshipping images, has the following singular argument.

Quhy suld men Psalmis to thame sing or sane,
 Sen growand treis, that yeirlie beiris frute,
 Ar mair to praise, I mak it to the plane,
 Nor cuttit stockis, wanting baith crop and rute.

Warkis, 1592. p. 72.

It occurs in O.E.

If it be sothe, quod Pierce, that ye sayne, I shall it sone espye.

V. SEYNE.

P. Ploughman, Fol. 33, a.

To SANE, SAYN, SAINE, SEYN, v. a. 1. To make the sign of the cross, as a token of blessing one.

Quhen Schyr Aymer herd this, in hy
 He sanyt him, for the ferly. Barbour, vii. 98. MS.

In hy presens apperyt so mekill lyght,
 That all the fyr scho put out off his sycht,
 Gaiff him a wand off colour reid and greyne,
 With a saffyr sanyt his face and eyne.

Welcum, scho said, I cheiss the as my luff.

Edit. 1648, sayned.

Wallace, vii. 94. MS.

It occurs in Ywaine and Gawin.

He sayned him, the soth to say,
 Twenty sith, or ever he blan,
 Swilk mervayle had he of that man;
 For he had wonder that nature
 Myght mak so fowl a creature.

Ritson's E.M.R. i. 26.

i. e. He made the sign of the cross twenty times. Sayne is used in the same poem for a sign.

And sone sho frayned at Lunet,
 If sho kouth ani sertan sayne.

Ibid. p. 120.

Langland uses seynd in the same sense.

Than sate Slouth up, & seynd him swyth,
 And made a vowe before God, for his foule slouth, Shal no Sondag be thys seuen yere, but sikenes it let,
 That I ne shall do me or day to the dere church.

P. Ploughman, Fol. 27, b.

This is undoubtedly the primary sense of the word. For as Germ. segn signifies a sign, and also blessing, and segnen, to bless, to consecrate, to sanctify; the terms, as Wachter has observed, seem to be used metonymically, the sign being put for the thing signified. The same word occurs in Alem., Notker, Psa. cxxviii. 8. Gotes segen si uber iuh; The blessing of God be upon you. In Gotes namen segenoen uir iuh; In the name of God we bless you. Wachter conjectures that this mode of speaking had its origin among the Franks, who, he says, from the beginning of Christianity, used the sign of the cross in entering into vows, and consecrating persons and things, as the Catholics do at this day. He quotes the following passage from Alcuin. Hoc enim signo crucis consecratur corpus Dominicum, sanctificatur fons baptismatus, initiantur presbyteri et caeteri gradus ecclesiastici, et omnia quaecunque sanctificantur, hoc signo Dominicae crucis cum invocatione Christi nominis consecrantur.

The S. v. and s. syne, synd, which denote a slight ablution, seem to have had the same origin. We may add Isl. sign-a, consecrare, Verel. Ind. Su.G. id. notare signo crucis. A.S. segnunge, signatio, from segn-ian, signare. Ille nullam salutem neque consolationem thurh heora segnunge onfeng, per eorum ministerium suscepit, Bed. 502. 26. where, says Lye, the Sax. interpreter, by the ministry of the priests wished sealing to be understood, i. e. with the sign of the cross. V. SYND.

2. To bless, God being the agent. S.

The King said, "Sa our Lord me sayn, Ik had gret causs him for to sla." Barbour, ix. 24.

"Hence Scot. Bor. the expression, God safe you and sane you." Rudd.

It seems also used in the south of S.

3. To pray for a blessing. S.

Sum sains the Sait, and sum thame cursis.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 41.

Quhen that the schip was saynt and under sail,
 Foul Brow in Hoil thou purpost for to pass.

Kennedy, Evergreen, ii. 71.

"Many of the vulgar account it extremely dangerous to touch any thing, which they may happen to find, without saining (blessing) it, the snares of the enemy being notorious and well attested." Minstrelsy, Border, ii. 187.

It has the same signification in O.E.

We tolde the seven hundurd towrys,
 So Cryste me save and sayne.

Le Bone Florence, Ritson's E.M.R. iii. 13.

4. To consecrate; to hallow. 5. To heal; to cure; pron. Shane. V. SHANED. S.

Teut. God seghene u, Servet, conservet te Deus; God segene de maeltyd, Deus conservet convivas, sit felix convivium, prosit convivis; Kilian.

—Sum gres, sum gowlis, sum purpoure, sum sanguane.
Doug. Virgil, 401, 2.
Fr. sanguin, id. Lat. sanguin-eus, from sanguis.
SANOUROUS, adj. Healing; medicinal.
Under the circle solar thir sanourous sedis
Were nurist be dame Nature that nobill maistres.
Houlate, i. 3. MS.
"Savoury," Gl. But the poet speaks of herbs that were Mendis and medicine for all menis neidis;
Help till hert, and till hurt, helefull it was.
He evidently uses sanourous as synon. with helefull.
Lat. sano, -are, to heal.
SANRARE, Houlate, i. 17. is an error of the transcriber.
The Bannatyne MS. reads;
Upoun the sand yit I saw as the saurare tane, &c.
i. e. Treasurer.

SAP, s. Sorrow; tears, caused by affliction or vexation. S.
SAP, s. Liquid of any kind, as milk or small beer, taken with solid aliment, especially with bread, for the purpose of moistening it.
To 'ford him sap, a cow he'll chuse
To pick around his borders.
Morison's Poems, p. 45.
Belg. sap, id. 'Tis vol sap; It is full of liquor. The Icelanders give the name of saup to drink. It is radically the same with A.S. saep, Su.G. Germ. saft, succus, juice; which Wachter derives from sauf-en, to moisten. V. next word.
SAPMONEY, s. Money allowed to servants for purchasing sap, S.
"The skippers, or men who have the charge of the boats,— SAPS, s. pl. "Sops, bread soaked in some nourishing liquid," Gl. Sibb. It is more generally boiled.

Ale-saps, wheaten bread boiled in beer; when butter is added, this mess is called butter-saps. This is commonly given as a treat, among the vulgar, at the birth of a child.
Perhaps Gael. sabhs, soup, is allied.
SAPOUR, s. A sound or deep sleep. S.

Bannatyne Poems, p. 173.
This word is used in the same sense with sergeant, Chaucer, a squire attending a prince or nobleman. Fr.
sergeant, Germ. scherge, a lictor. Seriaunt is a servant, R.
Glouc. Wachter derives scherge from Alem. scurgi, averte.
SARY, SAIRY, SARIE, adj. 1. Sad; sorrowful.
Palinurus, quod sche, thou sary syre,

"Loftily," Gl. But it seems to signify, artfully; from A.S. searolice, mechanice, artificiose; from sear, seara, searuwa, art.
Perhaps sarraly, which Mr. Pinkerton renders boldly, may be viewed as the same word.

The King weile sone in the mornynge,
Saw fyrst cummand thar fyrst eschele,
Arrayit sarraly, and weile. Barbour, viii. 222. MS.
And thai, that in the woddis sid wer

Bot vthir wayis that sate sall be full salt.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 450, 47.

Rudd. derives it from Fr. saut, a leap, jump, skip; saut-er, to skip over. Faire le saute, to become bankrupt, to flee the country for debt.

SATOURE, s. A transgressor; a trespasser.

Rycht so the satoure, the false theif, I say,

King's Quair, iv. 12. Tytl. Edit.

According to this reading, it might seem allied to Fr. sauteur, a leaper, q. one who overleaps proper bounds. V. SATE. Tytl. expl. it, "the lustful person." But Sibb. writes feator, Chron. S. P. i. 42. This may be from Fr. fautier, faulty; faut, fault.

SATTERDAY, SATERDAY, s. Saturday, the last day of the week.

This day, in the calendar of superstition, has been reckoned unlucky.

—"Certane craftis men—will nocht begin thair warke on the Saterday, certane schipmen or marinars will nocht begin to sail on the Satterday, certane trauelars will nocht begin thair iornay on the Satterday, quhilk is plane superstition, because that God Almychty made the Satterday as well as he made all other dayis of the wouke." Abp. Hamiltoun's Catechisme, 1551, Fol. 22, b.

A.S. saeter-daeg, i. e. the day of Saturn. For the A.S. called Saturn Seater; as they also gave him the name of Crodo. V. Verstegan, p. 84.

SETTERDAYIS SLOP, a gap or opening, which, according to law, ought to be left in cruives for catching salmon, in fresh waters, from Saturday after the time of Vespers, till Monday after sunrise.

"Thay that hes cruuis in fresche watters, that thay gar keip the lawis, anentis the Setterdayis slop." Acts, Ja. I. 1424. c. 13. Edit. 1566.

"The water sould be free, that na man sall take fisch in it, fra Saterday after the Euening song, vntill Munday after the sunne rising." Stat. Alex. II. c. 16. V. SLOP.

SATURNDAY, s. The same as Saterday. S.
SAUAGE, SAWAGE, adj. Brave; intrepid.

This term is used by Henry the Minstrel in a milder sense than that attached to it in our times.

Yong Wallace, fulfillit of hie curage,
In pryss of armys desirous and savage;
Thi waslage may neur be forlorn.

Wallace, ii. 2. MS.

Here it may perhaps signify ardent, vehement in spirit. As Wallace was still deservedly a great favourite with the nation, we may perceive somewhat of this attachment in the manner in which the passage has been treated. Early editors, viewing the term savage as disrespectful to the guardian of Scottish liberty, have altered the verse; as in Edit. 1648.

Young Wallace, then fulfilled of hie courage,
In prise of arms desirous of vassalage, &c.
This forms part of the character of a worthy clerk.
Maistir Jhone Blayr was oft in that message,
A worthy clerk, bath wyss and rycht savage.

Ibid. v. 534.

I can scarcely think that the author used it for sage. Thus, however, it is rendered Edit. 1648.

A worthie clerk, both wise and als right sage.

SAUCH, SAUGH, s. A willow or sallow tree, S.; as the flowers of willows are here termed palms. See Sup.

—"Tristrem be we saught,
And have min londes wide." Sir Tristrem, p. 163.

A.S. saecht, seht, id. Wurdon sachte, Erant reconciliati, Chron. Sax. A. 1077. This is the part. of seht-ian, reconciliare, componere. Hence saecht-ian, id. litem componere, which is far more probably the origin of E. settle, as used to denote the removal of variance or disturbance, than settle, a seat, referred to by Dr Johns.

A.S. set-an, sett-an, also signifies, componere; sedare, pacare. Both this v. and seht-ian are radically the same with Isl. saett-ast, reconciliari; saett, reconciliatus; Su.G. saett-a, conciliari, amicitiam contrahere; whence samsaett, Isl. saettmal, a covenant. Syith and assyith are to be traced to the same fountain; as denoting the atonement made, or fine paid, for procuring reconciliation.

2. At ease; in peace; undisturbed.

Now lat vs change scheildis, sen we bene saucht
Grekis ensenyeis do we counterfete.

Doug. Virgil, 52, 6.

i. e. Since we are presently without disturbance, our enemies being at a distance.

Perhaps Su.G. sackta, tranquillus, pacificus, may be viewed as rather allied to saetta, reconciliari, than to Goth. sef, tranquillity, which Ihre considers as the root. Hence sackta, quietly, gently; sacht-a, to allay, to compose; sachtmodig, pacific. Osacht, inquietude, which nearly resembles S. saucht, is still used. Gael. sioghai, quiet, seems allied.

SAUCHT, SAUGHT, s. Ease; tranquillity, S. "S. Bor. To sit in saucht, to live in peace and quiet; and, to live in unsaucht, i. e. trouble;" Rudd. See Sup.

A.S. sahte, seht, peace, friendship, reconciliation; Isl. saett, id. V. the part. Teut. saecht, tranquillus, pacificus; saecht-en, saechtigh-en, mitigare, lenire. Gael. sogh, prosperity, ease, pleasure; sioth, peace, quietness.

SAUCHNING, SAUGHTENING, SAWCHNYNG, s. 1. Reconciliation; agreement; pacification.

Doug. Virgil, 342, 10.

“For saving, and that for save,” Rudd. But perhaps this is an error for sasyn, i. e. seizin, corporal possession. In consequence of examining the MSS., I find, that, although saving is the word in that used by Rudd., in the oldest MS. it is saysin.

S A W

How come mankind, when lacking woe,
In Saulie's face their hearts to show?

Fergusson's Poems, p. 98.

The name might seem to have had its rise from the deule weedes, appropriated to them, from A.S. sal, black. But if we should suppose, that, in the time of Popery, these mourners, during their procession, chaunted prayers, the name might be supposed to originate from their frequent repetition of Salve Regina.

SAULL PREIST. V. COMMONTIE in Sup. sense I. S.
SAVOUR,* s. A term used in S., especially with respect to preaching the gospel, equivalent to Fr. onction.

The E. language has no word exactly corresponding. Hence unction has of late been adopted from the Fr. Savour occurs in 2 Cor. ii. 15., in a sense very nearly the same. What is there said in relation to God, is, in our use of the term, transferred to those who know the power of divine truth. Hence, SAVOURY,* adj. Possessing onction, S. V. SAIRLES, which is used in a sense directly opposite.

To SAUR, v. n. To savour. V. SAWER. S.

SAUR, SAURIN, s. The smallest quantity or portion of any thing; q. probably, a savour. S.

SAURLESS, adj. Insipid; tasteless. V. SARELESS. S.

SAUT, s. Salt, S. See Sup.

Ramsay's S. Prov. p. 18.; i. e. be thoroughly acquainted with him.

SAUT-FAT, s. A saltcellar, or vessel for holding salt, S.

In our country, in former times, the saut-fat was invariably placed in the middle of the table. It was a pretty large vessel, of a flat form, that there might be no danger of the salt being spilled. For if this happened, it was universally accounted a bad omen. This is a very ancient superstition. We learn from Festus, that the Romans reckoned it ominous to spill the salt at table. Among them, the idea might originate from the custom of consecrating the table, by setting on it the images of the Lares and salt-holders, salinorum appositu; Arnob. Lib. ii. A family salt-cellar (paternum salinum) was kept with great care; Horat. Od. ii. 16. 14. V. Adam's Rom. Antiq. p. 445. V. SALT. See Sup.

A.S. sealt-faet, id. Teut. sout-vat. A.S. faet, fat, a vessel of any kind, is often conjoined with another s., particularly defining the use of the vessel meant; as leht-faet, a candlestick, i. e. a vessel for holding a candle.

To CAST, OR LAY SAUT ON one's TAIL. To get hold of one. S.

NO TO HAE SAUT TO ane's KAIL. To be in great poverty. S.

NO TO MAKE SAUT TO ane's KAIL. To make almost nothing by one's professional exertions. S.

To SAUT, v. a. 1. To salt; to put in pickle. 2. To snib; to put down; to check. 3. To heighten in price; as, “I'll saut it for you,” I'll make you pay dear for it. S.

SAUTER, s. A saltier in heraldry. S.

SAW, SAWE, s. 1. A word; a saying; often applied to a proverb; an old saw, S. O.E. id.

In fragil flesche your febill sede is saw;—

Nurist with sleuth, and mony vnsemlly saw.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 93, 15.

Sé that thy saw be sicker as thy seill.

Stewart, Bannatyne Poems, p. 149.

A.S. saga, sage, dictum, dictio, from sag-an, dicere.

2. A discourse; an address.

All thai consentyt till that saw.

And than in till a litill thraw,

S A W

Thair iiii bataillis ordanyt thai.

Barbour, xi. 302. MS.

This term is used to denote a pretty long speech made by Robert Bruce to his army, on the day preceding the battle of Bannockburn.

3. Language in general.

Allsua set I myne intent,
Fra that I sene had storis sere,
In Cronnyklys, quhare thai wrytayne were,
Thare matere in-tyl fowrme to draw,
Off Latyne in-tyl Ynglys sawe.

Wyntown, i. Prol. 30.

4. A sentence; a legal decision; or perhaps rather a testimony given in a court of law.

Sa meikle tressone, sa mony partial sawis,
Sa littill ressonne, to help the common cawis,
That all the lawis ar not set by ane bene;
Sic feniet flawis, sa mony wastit wawis,
Within this land was nevir hard nor sene.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 43.

"So many partial sentences or decrees;" Ibid. p. 252, N. But it seems doubtful, whether this phrase be not rather meant to denote the testimony given by witnesses before judgment is passed. Thus partial sawis may signify the evidence of witnesses who have sworn falsely; or who have received what our law calls partial counsel, as having been instructed what to say.

The cognates of this word are used in a forensic sense in various Northern languages. Dan. sag, an action, a suit, a process. Foere sag moden, to sue one at law. A.S. sage, a witness, saga, a testimony. Hu fela sagena; How many things they witness; Quam multa testimonia; Matt. xxvii. 13. Germ. sag-en, to give evidence in a court of law, to confess, to denounce; sage-man, an informer, an accuser; aussage, a judicial confession, the deposition of witnesses; Su.G. saegnarting, the place of judgment, in which sentence is pronounced, or rather where witnesses are heard; Leg. Westro-Goth. ap. Ihre, vo. Saega. Some have viewed Heb. שָׁחַח, suahh, eloqui, as the radical term.

5. It seems to be sometimes used in a higher sense, as denoting an oracle, a prediction of a deity; or, at least, the forebodings of one, who, although possessed of more than human knowledge, was not certainly acquainted with the mysteries of fate.

Thus Juno says;

Bot now approchis to that innocent knyght
Ane fereful end, he sal to dede be dycht;
Or than my sawis ar voyde of verité.

Doug. Virgil, 341, 16.

And in relation to Venus it is said;

—— All othir thingis thou knawis
Is now conforme vnto thy moderis sawis.

Ibid. 31, 28.

A.S. sage, "praesagium, a divining, a foretelling;" Somner. From the resemblance, one might almost suppose that the Romans had borrowed their designation for a wise woman, or witch, saga, from the Goths.

This word, especially as denoting a proverb, an old saying, evidently proves its near relation to Isl. Su.G. Alem. Franc. saga, a narration, a history, whether true or false; the name given by the Icelanders to all the ancient annals of their country, and history of their ancestors, whether transmitted by tradition, or in the rude songs composed in early ages. A.S. sage also signifies a tale; whence sage-man, sag-man, "delator, the tale-teller, the tales-man;" Teut. saeghe, fabula, narratio; Moes.G. insagt, id. V. SAYARE.

Ritson's S. Songs, i. 211.

SCAFF, SKAFFIN, s. 1. A term used by the vulgar to denote provisions, food of any kind. Fine scaff, excellent provision, S.

We'll ripe the pouch, and see what scaff is there;

I wat, when I came out, it wasna bare.

Ross's Helenore, p. 74.

— Scaff and raff ye ay sall ha!

Jamieson's Popular Ball. ii. 363.

2. Expl. "merriment, diversion," Sibb. Gl.

Sibb. conjectures that it originally signified feasting. V. next word.

SCAFFAR, s. A parasite.

"He commandit all idill pepil, as juglaris, menstralis, bardis, & scaffaris, othir to pas out of the realme, or ellis to fynd sum craft to wyn thair leiffyng." Bellend. Cron. B. ix. c. 18. Mimos, histriones, bardos, parasitos, Boeth.

Elsewhere this is connected with flecheouris or flatterers.

"He banist all tauernaris, drunkartis, scaffaris & vane flecheouris out of his hous." Ibid. B. xi. c. 7. Adulatores parasitosque, Boeth.

Su.G. skaffare, Dan. skaffer, Teut. schaffer, one who provides food for others, a steward, a clerk of the kitchen;

L.B. skapwardus, from Su.G. skap, provision, and warda, to keep. Alem. scepf-an, Germ. schaff-en, Su.G. skaff-a, procurare; Belg. schaff-en, to dress victuals; whence schaf-tyd, the time of taking any meal.

The transition, to the sense in which it is here used, is easy, as denoting one who makes court to others for the sake of his belly; corresponding to E. smell-feast, Belg. panlikker, Gr. παρυσίτος, from παρῶν and σίτος, frumentum.

SCAFFERIE, s. Extortion. V. SKAFRIE.

SCALKT, pret. v.

He scalkt him fowlar than a fuil;

He said he was ane lichelus bul,

That croynd even day and nicht.

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 360.

The term seems to signify, bedaubed; q. he so besmeared him with filth, that he made a more ridiculous appearance than a fool with his motely coat. Thus it is the same with skaikit, bedaubed, S. V. SKAIK.

SCALLYART, s. A blow or stroke. S.

SCALLINGER SILUER. Apparently errat. for Stal-linger, q. v. S.

SCALLION, s. A leek. S.

SCALP, SCAWP, s. 1. Land of which the soil is very thin, generally above gravel or rock, S. scawp, Shirr.Gl.

Plenty shall cultivate ilk scawp and moor,

Now lea and bare, because the landlord's poor.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 60.

This seems merely a metaph. use of E. scalp, from Teut. schelp, q. a shell.

2. A bed of oysters or mussels, S.

"Around this little island, commonly called Mickery, there are several oyster scalps." Sibb. Fife. N. p. 93.

"On the south side of this part of the Tay, there is a scalp of a small kind of mussels, esteemed good bait for the white fish." P. Ferry-Port-on-Craig, Fife, Statist. Acc. viii. 461.

And pance not, nor skance not,
The perril nor the pryce. Cherrie and Slae, st. 97.

The word seems radically allied to Isl. skyn-ia, censeo, agnosco; skyn, ratio, sensus; Su.G. skoen-ia, intelligere, mentis acie videre; in its literal sense, to see, to behold; skoen, judicium; Dan. skionn-er, to judge, skionsom, prudent.
2. To reproach; to make taunting or censorious reflections on the character or conduct of others, especially in an oblique manner, S. See Sup.

But war ye me, your heart wad scance ye,
In spite o' Pleasure's necromancy.—

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, i. 182.

3. To give a cursory account of any thing. S.

4. To make trial of; to put to the test. S.

To SCANSE at, v. a. To conjecture; to form a hasty judgment concerning. S.

To SCANSE of, v. a. To investigate; to scrutinize. S.

SCANCE, SKANCE, s. 1. A hasty survey in the mind; a cursory calculation, S.

I gave it a scance, I run over it hastily; as the word glance is used in E. for the act of the mind. V. the v.

2. A cursory view of any subject in conversation, S.

3. A transient view of any object with the natural eye. S.

SCANCLISHIN, s. Scanty increase. Small remainder. S.

SCANNACHIN, part. pr. Streaming; dancing. S.

To SCANSE, SKANCE, v. n. 1. To shine; often applied to one who makes a great show. Skancin, shining; also, showy, S. See Sup.

The cheeks observe, where now cou'd shine
The scansing glories o' carmine.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 96.

This is nearly allied to skoen, pulcher, skoen-a, Germ. schon-en, ornare. The origin is undoubtedly Su.G. skin-a, Germ. schyn-en, lucere, splendere.

2. To make a great blaze on any subject in conversation; to make an ostentatious display, S.B.

3. To embellish; to magnify in narration. When one is supposed to go beyond the truth, especially in the language of ostentation, it is said, He's skancin, S.B.

This is merely a secondary sense of the same v., q. to cause to shine; exactly corresponding to Su.G. beskoen-a, beskoen-ia, (Germ. beschon-en,) causam suam ornare verbis, Ihre; Beskoenia en sah, to set a gloss upon a thing.

SCANCE, s. A gleam. S.

SCANCER, s. 1. A showy person. 2. One who magnifies in narration. S.

SCANSYTE, part. pa. Having the appearance of, seeming; characterized in any particular way.

This peess was cryede in August moneth myld;
Yhet God of battaill furios and wild,
Mars and Juno ay dois thair besynes,
Causer of wer, wyrkar of wykitnes;
And Venus als the goddess of luff,
Wycht ald Saturn his cours is till appruiff;
Thir iiii, scansyte of diuerss complexioun,
Battaill, debaite, inwy, and destructioun,
I can nocht deyme for thair malancoly.

Wallace, iii. 347. MS.

These foure showes of divers complexion. Edit. 1648.

This seems allied to scance, v. to shine; but in sense it most nearly resembles Su.G. skin-a, apparere, prae se ferre; Germ. schein-en, manifestare; a secondary sense of the v., as signifying to shine.

SCANT, s. Scarcity. V. SKANT.

SCANTLING,* s. A rude sketch; a scroll of a deed. S.

SCANTLINGS, s. pl. Rafters which support the roof of a to-fall, or projection, Ang.

Either a peculiar use of E. scantling, because of the comparative smallness of such rafters; or as allied to Teut. schantse, sepimentum muri quod a lapsu tuetur et protegit in muro stantes; Kilian.

SCANTLINS, adv. Scarcely, S.B. Gl. Shirr.

SCANT-O'-GRACE, s. A wild dissipated fellow. S.

SCAP, s. A bed of oysters or mussels. V. SCALP. 2. S.

SCAPE, s. A bee-hive. V. SKEPP.

SCAPETHRIFT, s. A spendthrift. S.

SCAR, SKAIR, SCAUR, s. 1. A bare place on the side of a steep hill, from which the sward has been washed down by rains, so that the red soil appears; "a precipitous bank of earth," Loth. Sibb. writes also skard. See Sup.

Is it the roar of Teviot's tide,
That chafes against the scaur's red side?
Is it the wind, that swings the oaks?
Is it the echo from the rocks?
What may it be, the heavy sound,
That moans old Branksome's turrets round?

Lay of the Last Minstrel, C. i. 12.

This seems nearly synon. with cleuch, S.B., in one of its senses.

2. A cliff, Ayrs.

Whyles owre a linn the burnie plays,
As thro' the glen it wimpl't;
Whyles round a rocky scar it strays;
Whyles in a wiel it dimpl't. Burns, iii. 137.

This, I apprehend, is the original sense.

Grose defines scarre, A. Bor., "a cliff, or bare rock, on the dry land; from the Saxon carre, cautes. Hence Scarborough. Pot-scars; pot-sherds, or broken pieces of pots;" Prov. Gl.

This seems to be the same with Su.G. shaer, rupes; from shaer-a, to cut, Alem. scir-an; as its synon., klippa, a rock, is from klipp-a, secare. C.B. esgair signifies the ridge of a mountain. V. SCHOR, adj.

SCAR, adj. Wild; not tamed. S.

SCAR, s. Whatever causes alarm. S.

SCARCEMENT, s. V. SCARSEMENT. S.

SCARCHT, s. A hermaphrodite, S. Scart.

"In the year preceding, there was a bairn which had both the kinds of male and female, called in our language a scarcht." Pitscottie, p. 65.

E. scrat is mentioned by Skinner, Gen. Etym. But Grose gives it as A. Bor., "used for men and animals;" Prov. Gl.

A.S. scritta, id. This Ihre considers as allied to Isl. skratt, the devil; because a hermaphrodite is tanquam naturae infelix monstrum; vo. Skratta. But he has not observed that there is another Isl. term which has still greater resemblance; skraede, homo meticulosus, nebulo; G. Andr. p. 214.

SCARE, SKARE, s. Share; portion. S.

SCARF, s. The name given to the corvorant; and also to the shag, Orkney. V. SCARTH.

SCARGIVENET, s. A cant word for a girl, of from twelve to fourteen years of age. S.

SCARMUS, s. A skirmish.

"Edward prince of Scotland, eldest son to king Malcolm deceissit, throw ane wond that he gatt at ane scarmus nocht far fra Anwik." Bellend. Cron. B. xii. c. 12.

Fr. escarmouche, Ital. scarramuccia, L.B. scaramutia, scarmutia. As Ital. mucc-ire, as well as Fr. muss-er, signifies to hide, Du Cange thinks that the word is formed from scara and muccia, militaris cohors occultata; observing, that it properly denotes those combats which have their origin from ambushades. V. SKYRM.

SCARNOGHIN, s. A great noise. S.

SCARPENIS, s. pl. Thin soled shoes; pumps; Fr. escarpines.

—Thair dry scarpenis, baythe tryme and meit;
Thair mullis glitteran on thair feit.

Maitland Poems, p. 184.

SCARRIE, SCAURIE, adj. Abounding with scours. S.

To SCARROW, v. n. 1. To emit a faint light. 2. To shine through the clouds; applied to the moon, &c. S.

SCARSEMENT, s. 1. The rows of stones which separate the slates of two adjoining roofs. 2. The edge of a ditch on which thorns are to be planted. 3. The part at the bottom of a dike which projects when its thickness is suddenly contracted. 4. A projection among rocks, S.

To SCART, v. a. 1. To scratch; to use the nails, S. See S.

Yea, weighty reasons me inclines
To think some eminent divines
Makes their assertions here to thwart,
And one another's cheeks to scart.

Cleland's Poems, p. 89.

"Biting and scarting is Scots folk's wooing;" Ferguson's Prov. p. 9.

"I'll gar you scart where you youk not;" S. Prov. Kelly, p. 397.

2. To scrape; to clean any vessel very nicely with a spoon, S.

"Scart the cogue wad sup mair;" Ramsay's S. Prov. p. 61.
And syne the fool thing is oblig'd to fast,
Or scart anither's leavings at the last.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 76.

3. To gather money in a penurious way; to scrape together money; used rather in a neut. sense.

If loue of money, whence all evill springs,
Thee, (prickt with thornie cares) in bondage brings,
Moue thee to scrape, to scart, to pinch, to spare,
To rake, to runne, to kill thy selfe with care;
Things most secure to doubt, to waite, to watch,
Of penny, or of penny-worth to catch
Some gnat, by chaunce in spider-web arriv'd,
Of bowel-wasting wretched wayes contriv'd;
Draw neere, heere learne but for the day to care,
Uncertaine to suck up to-morrow's ayre.

More's True Crucifixe, pp. 191, 192.

4. It is sometimes applied to indistinct writing, or by the illiterate to writing of any kind. S.

It seems radically the same with Belg. kratz-en, Dan.

kratz-er, id. per metaph. Hickes informs us, that the A. Norm. wrote eskrat; A. Bor. scraut.

To SCART out, v. a. To scrape clean, applied to a dish. S.

SCARTINS, s. pl. What is scraped out of any vessel. S.

To SCART one's BUTTONS. To draw one's hand down the breast of another, so as to touch the buttons with the nails; a mode of challenging to battle among boys. S.

To SCARTLE, v. a. To scrape together by taking many little strokes. S.

SCART, s. 1. A scratch, S.

"They that bourd with cats maun count upo' scarts;" Ramsay's S. Prov. p. 72.

2. A meagre puny-looking person. 3. A niggard. 4. The dash of a pen in writing. S.

This might seem allied to Dan. short-er, to fail, to come short; Su.G. skard-a, Isl. skierd-a, to diminish. But from the secondary use of the v., as exemplified above, it seems rather from the idea of scraping.

SCART-FREE, adj. Without injury, S. One is said to have come off scart-free, who has returned safe from a broil, or battle, or any dangerous situation.

All whom the lawyers do advise,
Gets not off scart free, but are fain
To take some other shift or train.

Cleland's Poems, p. 110.

It seems generally to have been interpreted, free from even a scart or scratch. But I am doubtful whether it be not allied to Isl. skard, Su.G. skaerd-a, a hurt, injury, or wound; Alem. orskardi, laesio auris, lidsardi, laesio membri. V. HALE-SKARTH.

SCART occurs as if an adj.

Riven, raggit ruke, and full of rebaldrie

Scart scorpion, scaldit in scurilitie,

I se the haltane in thy harlotrie,

And into uther science nothing slie.

Dunbar, Evergreen, ii. 51.

He may allude to the puny size of the scorpion, although burning with ill humour. A very small person, especially a puny child, is called a weary scart, S.

SCARTLE, s. An iron instrument, resembling a hoe, such as scavengers use, for cleaning a stable or cow-house, Tweedd. clatt and scraple, synon.

Meg, muckin at Geordie's byre,

Wrought as gin her judgment was wrang;

Ilk daud of the scartle struck fire,

While, loud as a lavrock, she sang!

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, ii. 156.

From the v., as signifying to scrape.

SCART, SKART, SCARTH, SCARF, s. The corvorant, S. Pelecanus carbo, Linn.

The Scarth, a fysh-fangar,

And that a perfyte.

Houlate, i. 14. MS.

And in the calm or loune weddir is sene,

Aboue the fludis hie, ane fare plane grene,

Ane standyng-place, quhar shartis with thare bekkis

Forgane the son gladly thaym prunyeis and bekis.

Doug. Virgil, 131, 45.

Mergus is the word here used by Virg., which is the name given to the corvorant by Pliny, Lib. x. c. 33.

"The corvorant, here called the scart, frequents the island in the loch of Clunie." P. Clunie, Perth. Statist. Acc. ix. 235.

"The Shag, (pelecanus graculus, Lin. Syst.,) so well known by the name of Scarf, is very frequently seen with us in both fresh and salt water.—The Cormorant, or Corvorant, (pelecanus carbo, Lin. Syst.,) our great Scarf, is a species not so numerous as the former, but like it in most respects." Barry's Orkney, p. 300.

"This is called Scart, Frith of Forth." Neill's Tour, p. 199

Norw. skarv, Isl. skarf-ur, Germ. scharb, id. Thus it appears that scart is a corruption of the Northern name, which is still retained in Caithness.

"In the summer months, the swarms of scarfs, marrots, faiks, &c. that come to hatch in the rocks of Dungisbay and Stroma, are prodigious." P. Canisbay, Caithn. Statist. Acc. viii. 159.

"Sharv, skarf-ur, and scharb, seem merely abbreviations. For the Sw. name is sioe-korf, and Germ. scharb is given as synon. with see-rabe, i. e. the sea-raven, korf and rabe both signifying corvus. Thus the E. name, properly corvorant, is partially from the same origin with scarf; being comp., as some have supposed, of corv-us, and vorans.

SCAS, s. Small portion?

Kenely that cruel kenered on hight,
And with a scas of care in cautil he strik,
And waynes at Schir Wawyn that worthely wight.

Sir Gawan and Sir Gal. ii. 22.

Fr. escas signifies the tenth penny of moveables, wherein a foreigner succeeds a freeman; Alem. scaz, a penny; money; substance; originally the same with SCATT.

To SCASH, v. n. To squabble. S.

To SCASHLE, v. a. To use any piece of dress as a thing of no value, to use carelessly, S.B.

Isl. skuasli, quisquilliae; or from SKODGE, v. q. v.

SCASSING, s. Perhaps, beating. S.

SCAT, s. Loss; damage; for Skaith. S.

To SCAT, v. n. To Scat and Lot, to pay shares in proportion; to pay scot and lot, to pay taxes or duties. S.

SCATT, s. The name of a tax paid in Shetland. See S.

"The hills and commons are again divided into scattolds, from each of which a certain tax, called scatt, was anciently paid to the Crown of Denmark, when Shetland made a part of the Danish dominions; became payable to the Scottish monarch, when these islands were finally ceded to Scotland; fell at length, by donation from the Crown, to a subject superior, and is at present payable to Sir Thomas Dundas of Kerse, Bart., [now Lord Dundas].—The scatt may amount to 6*d.* for each merk of land, and is paid chiefly in butter and oil." P. Unst, Shetl. Statist. Acc. v. 196. N.

Dan. skat, Su.G. Isl. skatt, A.S. sceat, Belg. schot, Mod. Sax. schatten, a tax, E. shot, scot and lot. Ihre expl. the Su.G. term as primarily signifying money. A.S. sceat had the same meaning. In the reign of the Saxon king Ethelbert, it denoted a farthing. The term appears in its oldest form in Moes.G. skatts, pecunia. It was also the denomination of one species of coin; Ataugeith mis skatt; Shew me a penny, Luke, xx. 24. Hence skattjane, money-changers, Mar. xi. 15.

To SCAT, v. a. To subject to the tax called Scat. S.

SCATHOLD, SCATTHOLD, SCATTOLD, SCATTALD, SCATHALD, s. Open ground for pasture, or furnishing fuel. S.

SCATLAND, s. Land paying the duty called Scat. S.

SCATTALDER, INSCATTALDER, s. A possessor of a share in the common or pasture ground called a Scattald. S.

OUTSCATTALDER, s. One who has no share in a Scattald. S.

SCATTERGOOD, s. A spendthrift. S.

To SCAUD, v. a. To scald. V. SKAUDE. S.

SCAUD, SCAWD, s. A disrespectful name for tea. S.

SCAUD-MAN'S-HEAD, s. The sea urchin, S. Echinus esculentus, Linn; in Orkney and Shetland called Ieggar, a name nearly obsolete.

To SCAUM, SCAME, v. a. To burn slightly; to singe. S.

SCAUM, SKAUM, s. 1. The act of singeing clothes by putting them too near the fire, or by means of a hot iron. 2. A slight burn. 3. The appearance caused by singeing; a slight mark of burning. S.

SCAUM o' THE SKY. Thin atmospheric vapour. S.

SCAUP, SCAWP, SCAWIP, s. 1. The scalp; the skull.

2. A bed or stratum of shell-fish; as, "an oyster scaup."

3. A small bare knoll, or piece of stony ground. S.

SCAUR, s. A precipitous bank. V. SCAR.

SCAURIE, SCOREY, s. The young of the herring-gull, Orkney.

"The Brough — is the resort and nursery of hundreds of scauries, or herring-gulls, (larus fuscus.) I believe the Orkney name scaurie is applied to this gull only while it is young and speckled; and it loses its speckled appearance after the first year." Neill's Tour, p. 25.

Isl. skioer is given as the name of a bird; pica vel sturnus, G. Andr. p. 213. The bird here referred to is undoubtedly the Sea-pie, or Oyster-catcher, hoematopus ostralegus, Linn., which in Sw. is called Strandskiura, Norw. Strand-skiure. V. Pennant's Zool. p. 482.

SCAW, s. 1. Any kind of scall. 2. The itch. 3. A faded or spoiled mark. S.

SCAW'D, SCAW'T, SCAW'D-LIKE, part. adj. 1. Changed or faded in the colour; especially as applied to dress.

2. Having many carbuncles on the face. S.

SCAW, s. An isthmus or promontory. S.

SCAWBERT, adj. Applied to ostentatious people who wish to cut a figure above their rank in life. S.

SCAZNZIED. Meaning not clear. S.

SCELLERAR, s. One who has charge of the cellar.

The Goull was a garnitar,

The Swerthbak a scellarar,

The Scarth a fysh-fangar.

Houlate, i. 14.

L.B. cellarar-ius, cellerar-ius, cellar-ius, cui potus et escae cura est, qui cellae vinariae et escariae praest, promus; Du Cange. See Sup.

SCEOLDER, s. The Sea-Pie, a bird. S.

SCHACHT, s.

The yonger wend up-on-land, weil neir

Rycht solitair; quhyle under busk and breir,

Quhyle in the corn, in uther menys shacht,

As outlawis dois that levis on ylin wacht.

Henryson, Chron. S.P. i. 107.

—"Probably means, 'of others aucht, or property.'"

Ibid. p. 114. N.

Schacht seems indeed to signify property, as referring to land. Fland. schacht lands, a rood of land. V. D'Arsv.

SCHADDOW HALF. That portion of land which lies toward the North, or is not exposed to the sun. V.

SONIE HALF. S.

SCHAFFIT, part. Provided with a sheaf of arrows. S.

SCHAFFROUN, CHEFFROUN, SAFERON, s. A piece of ornamental head-dress anciently worn by ladies. S.

SCHAFTMON, SHAFTMON, SCHATHMONT, s. "A measure of six inches in length; or, as commonly expressed, the fist with the thumb turned up;" Sibb. Gl.

He clef thorgh the cautel, that covered the knight,

Thorgh the shinand shelde, a shaftmon, and mare.

Sir Gawan and Sir Gal. ii. 15.

A.S. scaeft-mund, "semipes;—the measure from the top of the thumb set upright, to the uttermost part of the palme, which is by a tall man's measure half a foot;" Somner. He mentions shaffmet and shaftment as E. words. They are still used, A. Bor. The origin may be scaeft, cuspis, and Dan. Sax. mund, manus, q. the point of the hand.

Isl. mun, Su.G. mon, however, signify, summa, quantitas; fotsmon, a foot-breadth, haarsmon, the breadth of a nail. Hence one might almost suppose, that the A.S. word had some affinity, and had originally denoted a measure as long as the head of a spear.

S C H

SCHAGHES, s. pl. Groves. V. SCHAW.
 SCHAIFFE, SCHEIF, s. l. A quiver or bundle of arrows, amounting in number to twenty-four. See Sup.
 "The king commands that ilk man haueand the valour of ane kow in gudes, sall haue ane bow with ane schaiife of arrowes, that is, twenty-foure arrowes." 1 Stat. Rob. I. c. 26. s. 4.
 The phrase was also used in E., and originated, according to Minshew, from the circumstance of the arrows being "tied up like a sheafe of corn." Schilter, however, gives Alem. scaph as equivalent to quiver; Theca, armarium. Fr. Junius in Willeram. p. 220. Hodie, schafft.
 2. A certain quantity of iron or steel.
 "Ane scheife of irone contienes sexteene gades; ane scheife of steile contienes fourteene gades." Skene, Verb. Sign. vo. Schaffa.
 SCHAIK, TO-SCHAIK, pret. Shook.
 — Brym blastis of the northyn art
 Ouerquhelmyt had Neptunus in his cart,
 And all to-schaik the leuys of the treis.
 V. To, 2. Doug. Virgil, 200, 22.
 To SCHAIP, v. a. V. SCHAPE.
 SCHAKERIS, SHAIKERS, s. pl. 1. "Labels, or thin plates of gold, silver, &c. hanging down, bractea, from the E. shake;" Rudd.
 — All his hede
 Of goldin schakeris and rois garlandis rede, Buskit full well.— Doug. Virgil, 139, 50.
 — The quhilk lyke silver shaikers shynd Embroydering Bewties bed.
Cherrie and Slae, st. 4.
 The term seems nearly correspondent to spangles, and may be allied to Teut. schaeckier-en, alternare, variare, because of the change of appearance.
 2. The moisture distilling from flowers.
 — Syluer schakeris gan fra leuys hing,
 With crystal sprayngis on the verdure ying.
Doug. Virgil, 401, 26.
 SCHAKER-STANE, s. The stone-chatter, a bird; now S. stane-chacker, q. v.
 The Stainyell and the Schaker-stane,

Burel's Pilgr. Watson's Coll. ii. 28.
 SCHAKLOK, s. Perhaps a picklock. S.
 SCHALD, adj. Shallow; shaul, S. schawlde, Wyntown. See Sup.
 Sa huge wylsum rolkis, and schald sandis,
 And stormes grete ouerdreuin and sufferyt haue we.
Doug. Virgil, 148, 48.
 He spyit, and slely gert assay,
 Quhar the dyk schaldest was.
Barbour, ix. 354. MS.
 "Shawl waters make maist din;" Ramsay's S. Prov. p. 61.
Schald, and E. shallow, as well as shoal, must have all the same origin. This, however, is very obscure. Johnson derives shallow from shoal and low; Spiegel. and Seren. from Sw. skallig, calvus, glaber, a term metaph. applied to land that is barren and burnt up; Rudd., with more probability, from A.S. scylf, a shelve.
 SCHALD, SHAULD, s. A shallow place.
 Now schaw that strenth, now schaw that hie curage,
 Quhilk on the schaldis of Affrik in stormes rage
 Ye dyd exerce.— Doug. Virgil, 133, 52.
Syrtibus, Virg. V. SCHOR, adj.
 SCHALIM, SHALM, SHALIN, SHAWME, s. According to Rudd., the cornet or crooked trumpet; although he says that Doug. seems to use it simply for tibia, a pipe. See Sup.

S C H

 Trumpetts and schalims, with a schout,

 With tympanys, tawbernis, ye war wount to here,
 And bois schawmes of torned busch boun tree.
Doug. Virgil, 299, 45.
 Su.G. skalmieia, Teut. schalmey, Fr. chalemie, a pipe; Belg. schalmey, a hautboy. Some derive the word from Su.G. skall-a, to sound. But it seems rather from Lat. calam-us, a reed, or pipe.
 Chaucer uses shalmies, which, according to Tyrwhitt, signifies psalteries.
 SCHALK, s. l. A servant.
 Out with suerdis thai swang, fra thair schalk side.
Gawan and Gol. ii. 20.
 It seems meant for schalkis sides, the sides of their servants or squires; for there is no evidence that schalk was ever used for left, q. left side.
 A.S. scalc, Su.G. Isl. skalk, Moes.G. shalks, shalkman, Alem. scalch, Germ. Belg. schalch, id. Hence Mareshalk, a marshall, literally, a servant who has the charge of horses; sene-schalch, a steward, from sin, sind, familia, and schalch, servus, &c.
 2. A knight.
 In this sense it is applied to Sir Rival of Rone, i. e. the river Rone.
 Schaip thé evin to the schalk in thi schroud schene.
 Compared with st. 22. Gawan and Gol. ii. 23.
 As knecht, originally denoting a servant, became a title of honour, we find that schalk, id. underwent a similar change. A knight, indeed, as long as the term retained its military sense, still denoted a servant, as, the Knights of St. John, i. e. the servants consecrated to him. The change was properly with respect to the degree of honour attached to the designation, as arising from the supposed dignity of the service. The same observation applies to schalk in its composite state. V. SKALLOG.
 SCHALMER, s. l. A musical instrument. 2. The person whose business it was to play on this instrument. S.
 SCHALMERLANE, s. Chamberlain. S.
 SCHAMON'S DANCE. Some particular kind of dance anciently used in S.

SCHANT, part. adj. Soiled; dirty.

In a description of the tawdry dress of women, it is said that they appear,

With clarty silk about thair taillis,

Thair gounis schant to shaw thair skin,

Suppois it be richt oft full din.

Maitland Poems, p. 185.

The dirtiness of their gowns is ironically represented as meant for a foil to the skin, though often abundantly dun.

Clarty expl. the idea conveyed by schant, which is from the same origin with schent, q. v. For Teut. schend-en signifies to pollute. Also, schande maeck-en, vitiare, polluere.

SCHAVELLING, s. The contemptuous designation given, by Protestant writers, about the time of the Reformation, to a Romish priest or monk, because of the tonsure or shaven crown.

"We detest and refuse the usurped authoritie of that Roman Antichrist.—His three solemne vowes, with all his shavellings of sundrie sorts;" National Covenant, 1580, Collect. Conf. ii. ii. 121. 123.

In the Lat. Translation, ascribed to Mr. John Craig, this is rendered; Variasque rasurae sectas.

"Now sum wil say, thir wer Preichouris, and Ministeris of the word, and had bin sum time anoyntit shavelingis, markit with the beistis mark." H. Charteris, Pref. to Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592. A. 4. a.

The term was used in the same sense by O.E. writers.

—"Shifting shavelinges, and nosegay nunnes." Nar-bonus, Part i. 41.

Sibb. says that schavelingis is expl. vagabonds. He therefore refers to schawaldouris as a synon. term. I need scarcely say, that there is not the slightest connexion. Had he looked into Johns., he would have observed the true sense of it, as used by Spenser.

TO SCHAW, v. a. To shew: part. pa. schaw.

Sir Gawan and Sir Gal. i. 6.

Su.G. shog, Isl. shog-r, Dan. show, A.S. scua, Ir. Gael. saeghas, id. The term, as used in Celt., is borrowed, I suspect, from some of the Goth. dialects, (especially as it does not occur in C.B.) in the same manner as Ir. salvaiste, woody, from Lat. sylvest-ris.

2. It seems also used in the sense of shade, covert.

The place he tuke, and ful priué vnknaw
Liggis at wate vnder the derne wod schaw.

Doug. Virgil, 382, 45.

Schaw here must certainly be understood as conveying a different idea from wod, or wood.

Schaw, according to Camden, denotes "many trees near together, or shadow of trees." Remains, Surnames, Lett. S.

This seems indeed to be the primary and proper sense of the word. When applied to trees, the sense is evidently secondary, from A.S. scua, or Su.G. skugga, a shadow, because of the shelter they afford. V. SKUG.

It is evident, at any rate, that it is the same Goth. word which signifies a shadow and a wood. Thus Su.G. skog, sylva, cannot be viewed as radically different from skugga, umbra. Ihre views Gr. σκια, umbra, as the root. V. SKUWES.

SCHAWALDOURIS, s. pl. Expl. "wanderers in the woods, subsisting by hunting."

Willame of Carrothyris ras

Wyth hys brethir, that war manly,

And gat til hym a cumpany,

"Shavaldres occurs in Knyghton.—Prompt. Parv. expl. it, discursor, vagabundus;" Gl. Wynt.

Mr. Macpherson has observed, that schaw and wald both signify wood, forest, &c. But schaw, in this composition, may signify covert, q. those who live in the shelter of the woods. Or the last part of the term may be allied to A.S. weallian, Su.G. wall-a, peregrinari, vagari. Accipiat de motu inconstante, qualis est vagantium et erronum; Ihre, in vo.

Gawan and Gol. iii. 2.

"Shields," Gl. But the passage seems to admit of another sense. Scheidis to schew, may denote the distance of one knight from another; from Germ. scheide, intervallum loci; Su.G. skede, id. It properly denotes a course, and seems to have been applied to the courses made, when the knights attacked each other in combat. Halfthan setti sin hest a sceid; Halfdanus equum ad cursum incitavit, Halfd. Bannatyne Poems, p. 171.

This does not signify shepherd, as might seem at first view ; for this idea has no connexion with the rest of the stanza. V. Hegeshraper. It might signify shopkeeper, from A.S. sceop, Belg. schap, as mention is made, a little downward, of his buith. I question, however, if shopkeeper was a term then in use. As there is here a description of a penurious wretch who stays at home when bread is to be baked, counts it all caik by caik, and carefully locks it up ; scheip-keipar may signify keeper of provisions, from the same origin with Scaff, scaffier, q. v.

SCHL, SHEL, s. "A strumpet," Sibb. Gl.

In the passage referred to, which is rather too coarse for insertion, Lyndsay, with great freedom, warns James V. of the ignominy and evil consequences of his voluptuous life. But Sibb. has evidently mistaken the sense of the word. It is merely a metaph. borrowed from the schelis or sheals in which sheep are sheltered. V. SHEAL. He compares the king, in two different stanzas, to a restless ram running from one sheal to another.

This intelligent writer, in his Note on this Act, inadvertently contradicts the text. For he says ; "The famous yew tree of Cruickstone, the inheritance of the family of Darnley in the parish of Paisley, is made the reverse of this new coin."

Belg. schilpad, Teut. schild-padde, testudo ; according to Kilian, from its resemblance to a shield. But it seems more natural to think, that it received this name from its being covered with a shell, q. the shell-frog, Su.G. skyll-padda, or as Ihre writes it, skyldpadda, id. Wachter derives schildpadde from schild, not as signifying a shield, but a covering ; tectum, operimentum.

Syne hakkyng thame by tailyeis and be sydis,

In the hayt flambis brycht has thame laid.

Doug. Virgil, 455, 52.

As conjoined with tailyeis, this can scarcely signify sides or halves of the animal. Frusta is the word used by Maffei. Caesim in frusta trucidant.

Rudd. derives it from Lat. schidium, Gr. σχιδιον, from σχίζω, scindo. But whatever relation this word may be supposed radically to have to the Gr., it is immediately allied to A.S. scide, a billet of wood, Lancash. shide; Isl.
Su.G. skid, Germ. scheit, lignum fissum, lamina lignea;
split-wood.

SCHIDIT, To SCHID, part. pa. Cloven; split.

Grete eschin stokkis tumbillis to the ground;

With wedgeis schidit gan the birkis sound.

Doug. Virgil, 169, 20.

Wyth wedgeis and with proppis bene diuide,

The strang gustand ceder is al to schid.

Ibid. 365, 16.

The s., in its various forms, has evidently originated from the Goth. verbs, signifying to separate, or divide;
as Teut. scheyd-en, scheed-en, dividere; Lat. scind-o, scid-i.

SCHILTHRUM, SCHILTRUM, SCHYLTRUM, s.

The Inglis men, on othyr party,

That as angelis schane brychtly,

War nocht arayit on sic maner:

For all thair bataillis samyn wer

In a schilthrum. Bot quethir it was Throw the gret stratness of the place

That thai war in, to bid fechtung;

Or that it wes for abaysing;

I wate nocht. But in a schiltrum

It semyt thai war all and sum;

Owtane the awaward anerly,

That rycht with a gret company,
Be thaim selwyn, arayit war.

Barbour, xii. 425. MS.

Sic dows and perylys til ethchewe
All that Schyltrum thai slw down
And sawfyd of Berwyk swa the town.

Wyntown, viii. 11. 35.

According to Mr. Macpherson, this is "a word of which the precise meaning is unknown, if indeed it has not had more meanings than one." Mr. Pinkerton observes, that, "from Hearne's Robert of Gloucester, it appears that a schiltrum is an host ranged in a round form." The Bruce, vol. ii. p. 137. N. It would seem that neither of these gentlemen has observed that the word is immediately derived from A.S. I find it spelled two ways. Sceoltruma, coetus, cohors, turma. According to this orthography, it would appear to be composed of sceol, a multitude, and trum, a troop or band, or trum, firm, secure, fortified, powerful. But this composition of the word indicates nothing as to the form, though it is clear from Barbour's description that this was peculiar; for he describes the vanguard as differently disposed. The true orthography seems to be scyld-truma, which Lye renders, scutum validum, testudo. Thus he has evidently viewed the word as compounded of scyld, a shield, and trum, powerful. But perhaps the last word is rather truma, q. a troop with shields, or a troop in the form of a shield.

This etymon, as well as the translation of the word by testudo, indicates the form of the Schiltrum. I need scarcely say, that properly it must have meant a body of armed men closely joined to each other, and covering their heads with their bucklers, so that the massive weapons of their enemies could not hurt them. In this sense A.S. scyldtruma was certainly used. For Lye quotes a phrase from Aelfric's Gram. which conveys this idea. Under thiccum scyld-truma, subter densa testudine. This term therefore expresses that figure which has been called in Gr. χελωνη, Sat. testudo, Fr. tortue, E. tortoise, Belg. schild-pad, Germ. schild-krote, a tortoise, schild-duck, testudo militaris.

But although this must have been the original meaning, there is no certain evidence that it is used in this sense by Barbour. All that clearly appears, from his description of the battle of Bannockburn, is, that the whole army of the English, except the vanguard, formed one body, instead of being in distinct battalions, like that of the Scots. For having said of the Scots, that they were

In thair bataillis all purwayit

With thair braid baneris all displayit;

and that

Thai went all furth in gud aray, and tuk the plane full apertly;

he adds, that the English

War nocht arayit on sic maner:

For all thair bataillis samyn wer

In a schilthrum.

B. xii. 411. 420. 427. &c.

He says, that he knows not whether this was for want of room to extend themselves properly, or from fear. Afterwards he calls this large body a gret scheltrum, v. 443. Wyntown seems to use the term still more generally, as merely denoting a body of armed men, and as equivalent to Hysale, q. v. Lye, vo. Hreotha, conjectures, that the military tortoise was also called, by the A. Saxons, Bord-hreotha, and Scyld-hreotha.

The word occurs in Rich. Cœur de Lyon.

Asonder he brake the scheltron.

It is also used by R. Brunne, when describing the Battle of Falkirk [Falkirk,] p. 305.

Ther scheltron sone was shad with Inglis that were gode.

Shad signifies, parted, separated. Warton understands scheltron as denoting "soldiers drawn up in a circle;" Hist. E. P. i. 166. This seems indeed to be the meaning of the term, according to the description given by R. Brunne, pp. 304, 305.

Our Inglis men & thei ther togidere mette,
Ther formast conrey, ther bakkis togidere sette,
Ther speres poynt ouer poynt, so sare & so thikke,
& faste togidere joynt, to se it was ferlike.—
Strength suld non haf had, to perte tham thorgh oute,
So wer thei set sad with poyntes rounde aboute.

"The Scottes," according to Hollinshed, "were deuided into four schiltrons, as they termed them, or as we may say, round battailes, in forme of a circle, in the whiche stode theyr people, that carried long staues or speares which they crossed joyntly together one wythin an other, betwixt which schiltrons or round battails were certain spaces left, the which wer filled wyth theyr archers and bowmen, and behinde all these were theyr horsmen placed." V. Gl. R. Brunne, p. 647.

SCHILL, adj. Shrill, S.

Widequhare with fors so Eolus schoutis schill,

Doug. Virgil, 201, 35.

This term occurs, although rarely, in O.E.

Than blewe the trumpes fulle loud & full schille.

R. Brunne, p. 30.

Sibb. oddly refers to Teut. schrey, clamor. It is evidently allied very closely to Alem. scill-en, schell-en, skell-en, sonare. Psalterium scillit also ein lira; Psalterium sonat instar lyrae; Notker. Psal. cxli. 1. Din stimma schell in minen oron; Thy voice sounds in my ears; Willeram. cap. ii. 14. ap. Wachter. Sw. skall, skal, sound; Isl. skiall sonorous, skiall hogg, verber sonorum; Germ. schall, schall-en, to sound, schellen, tingling; Belg. een schelle stem, a shrill voice. Hence Germ. schelle, a bell; S. skellet, q. v. a sort of rattle; Gael. sgalam, to tinkle, to give a shrill cry, is evidently allied.

Etymologists have offered no rational conjecture as to the origin of E. shrill. It might seem, at first view, from the synon. terms, that its ancient form had been schill. But I am convinced that it is radically different. V. SKIRL, v.

on persons of rank or authority, that R. of Brunne dubs Noah himself.

Ibid. ix. 12. 98.

This title descended at length to ordinary Priests. V.
POPE'S KNIGHTS. Rudd. derives it from Fr. sieur, as contracted from seigneur, from Lat. senior. But the etymon given by the learned Hickes is far more probable, from Goth. Sihor, lord. Augustine informs us, that the Gothic Christians, who were captives at Rome, used to say in their own barbarous language, Arme Sihor, i. e.
Lord, have mercy. This is from sihor, or sigora, as signifying a victor, one who triumphs; and this from sige victory. Wormius observes, that Sir or Siar was used more antiently than Her, which has the same meaning.
We have elsewhere seen, that Isl. saera, sira, is a praenomen expressive of dignity. G. Andr. thinks that it has originated from Heb. שר, sar, a prince, שור, sur, to have the principality, to bear sway; Lex. p. 205.

Wyntown, viii. 39. 34.

This phrase of winning shone seems very ancient. As connected with hose, it is often used in old Ballads, with respect to a page, or boy who acts as a servant. It is still vulgarly said of a servant who is a bad worker, that he is not fit to win schone to himself. It seems uncertain whether it originated from the circumstance of stockings and shoes constituting the wages of a boy, as, in many places, a pair of shoes is still one article promised as part of wages; or from the marauding warfare carried on in former times. The language of Wyntown would suggest an idea rather ludicrous, that when Knights were in want of shoes, they were sent to make an inroad in order to carry off cattle, for affording them the necessary supply; as David Bruce is said to employ his knights. The hides might at times be as necessary as the beeves themselves. We certainly know, that the Lady of the Manor used in former times, when her larder was nearly empty, to present a covered dish containing a pair of clean spurs, as a signal to the Laird and his retainers to set off in quest of a supply. V. Minstrelsy of the Border, i. Introd. cviii. But Wyntown most probably uses the phrase, as borrowed from the wages of a hireling, to denote an act of service, and the reward connected with it in the enjoyment of the booty.

"This emprioure causit riche perle and precious stanis to be set in his schone in mair taikin of insolence than ony ornament." Bellend. Cron. B. vi. c. 9.

SCHOR, SCHORE, SCHOIR, adj. 1. Steep; abrupt; including the idea of rugged.

—Twasum samyn mycht nocht rid

The nethyr halff wes peralous;
For a schor crag, hey and hidwouss,
Raucht to the se, doun fra the pass.

Barbour, x. 22. MS.

—To the fute sone cummyn ar thai
Off the crag; that wes hey and schor.

Ibid. ver. 600. MS.

This is evidently the same with schore, Doug. Virgil, 342, 16.

On cais thare stude ane meikle schip that tyde,
Hir wail joned til ane schore rolkis syde.

Rudd. views the term as denoting the shore, and the whole phrase as signifying "a rock hard by the shore, or lying flat or low as the shore." But schore undoubtedly corresponds to A.S. scorene; scorene clif, abrupta rupes, a craggy rock or cliff, Somner; from A.S. scyr-an, to separate, Su.G. schoer-a, to break; schoer, brittle, easily broken. The Germ. v. schor-en, eminere, is used to denote rocks rising out of the sea. This sense exactly agrees with the phrase used by Virg. Crepidine saxi.

This word is still used in Loth., Clydes., and in the South. It is said of a day that looks very gloomy, that it shores rain.

It is possible that schorand heuchis (V. Schor, v.) may be merely threatening cliffs, the term being used metaph. V. the s.

This schore compt I nocht ane laik.

Gawan and Gol. i. 8.

i. e. I reckon not thy threatening a disgrace to me. In Edit. 1508, instead of laik, it is caik.

Sibb. derives the v. from Sw. skorr-a, reprehendere. But it is not used in this sense. It merely signifies, to grate, to make a harsh noise. It may be allied to Su.G. skur-a, primarily to scour, to clean; in a secondary sense, to chide; skur, reprehension; taga en i skur, to quarrel one; Mod. Sax. schur-en, id. Eenen to degen schuren, to chide one severely. Dan. skurren, discord. In a similar sense it is vulgarly said, S. I gaif him a skour, I scolded him severely. Lat. scurra, a low jest, might thus be viewed as a cognate.

But I am much inclined to think, that this v. has been originally used in relation to objects which, from their external position, threatened to fall. Thus a crag, broken off from, or slightly attached to, a ridge of rocks, might be said, in an oblique sense, to schore a person sitting or passing under it, because being a schor rock, or broken off from the mass, it was likely to tumble down, and thus threatened destruction to passengers. V. SCHOR, adj. and SCAR.

Schoir is used by Dunbar, in one place, where it cannot bear this sense.

Quhan that the nycht dois lenthin houris,
With wind, with haill, and havy schouris,
My dulé spreit dois lurk for schoir,
My hait for langour dois foirloir.

Maitland Poems, p. 125.

Mr. Pinkerton seems to view it as here meaning terror. Perhaps it may signify grief, vexation, from Germ. schur, id. Or it may mean, lurks for protection, from Fr. essor-er, to shroud one’s self from wet, to shun approaching or threatening storms; Cotgr.

S C H

SCHORE, s.

Stand at defence, and shrink not for ane schore;
Think on the haly marthyris that are went.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 356, 13.

Junius renders this pugna, Etym. But Rudd, considers it as simply signifying a shower of rain. It appears that this, metaph. used, was a proverbial phrase in former times.

Thocht all beginnings be maist hard,
The end is plesand afterward;

Then shrink not for a schoure.

Cherrie and Slae, st. 37.

The sense given by Rudd, is confirmed by the language of the Scottish Translator of this Poem, who wrote so early as 1631, and must have known the use of many words and phrases now unintelligible, or very obscure. He renders it,

— Tenui veniente procella

Illico non paveas.

Cerasum et Silvestre Pomum, pp. 19, 20.

SCHORE, s. Perhaps a gloomy or forbidding prospect. S. SCHORE CHIFTANE.

— Avenand Schir Ewin thai ordanit, that thre
To the schore chiftane chargit fra the kyng.

Gawan and Gol. ii. 3.

This seems to signify high chieftain; Germ. schor, altus, eminens.

To SCHORT, v. n. To grow short; to decrease; to contract.

Yit quhan the nycht begynniss to schort,
It dois my spreit sum pairt confort.

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 127.

Su.G. Isl. short-a, deesse, to be deficient; A.S. ge-skort-en, Germ. Belg. schort-en, id.

Mr. Tooke expl. E. short, q. shored, shor’d, as literally signifying, cut off, from A.S. scir-an, to shear, to cut, to divide; as “opposed to long, which means extended, long being also a past participle of leng-ian, to extend, or to stretch out.” Divers. Purley, ii. 172.

Ihre views A.S. sceort, brevis, or Lat. curt-us, as the origin. That the letter s was prefixed appears probable from Su.G. kort, which has a more simple form, being used in the same sense.

To SCHORT, v. a. 1. To curtail.

She was tyred with his speeches.—
But he some patience extorted,
By promising that he should short it.

Cleland’s Poems, p. 32.

Scort is used in O.E. as a v. a., in the sense of shorten.

Thorgh Edrike’s conseile Knoute did him slo,
& tok quene Emme & wedded hir to wife,
Thorgh Edrike’s conseile, scho scorted his life.

R. Brunne, p. 49.

2. Applied to the means used for producing an imaginary abbreviation of time, and preventing langour, S. See Sup.

Wyth dyuers sermond carpand all the day,
Thay schort the houris, driuand the tyme away.

Doug. Virgil, 473, 51.

And quhill thay thus towart the cieté pas,
With sindry sermouns schortis he the way.

Ibid. 252, 25.

Thus with sic manere talking euery wicht
Gan driuing ouer, and schortis the lang nycht.

Ibid. 475, 47.

3. To recreate or amuse one’s self; with the pron. prefixed or subjoined, S.

The clerk rejosyis his bukis ouer to seyne,
The luffare to behald his lady gay,
Young folke thame schortis with gam, solace and play.
Doug. Virgil, Prol. 125, 13.

Thay fall to wersling on the goldin sand,
Assayand honest gammis thame to schorte.
Ibid. 187, 29.

Yit fure I furth, lansasing ourthort the landis Towart the sey, to schort me on the sandis.
Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 226.

This is evidently a metaph. use of the v. as signifying to abbreviate. The same transition may be remarked in the formation of Isl. skemt-a, tempus delectamentis fallo, skemtum, temporis quasi decurtatio; from skam, short, G. Andr. V. Ihre. Teut. scherts-en, Germ. scherz-en, Belg. scherss-en, jocari, nugari, ludere, have a great resemblance. But the analogy between these, and the terms signifying to shorten, is lost, if the assertion of Wachter be well-founded, that the primary sense of scherz-en is ludere, salire, lascivire. He derives it from Gr. σκηρ-αω, id. Ital. scherzare, to joke, is evidently from the same origin, whatever this may be.

SCHORTE.

There is na sege for na schame that schrynkis at schorte
May he cum to hys cast be clokyng but coist,
He rekkys nowthir the richt, nor rekles report.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 238, a. 25.

At schorte seems here to signify, at a taunt or derision;
whether as allied to Teut. scherts, jocus, I shall not pretend to determine.

Elsewhere at schort, signifies quickly.

Hay, hay, go to, than cry thay with ane schout,
And with ane huge brute Troianis at short
Thare wallis stuffit, and closit euery port.

Doug. Virgil, 275, 4.

SCHORTSUM, adj. 1. Cheerful; merry, S.B.

2. Causing cheerfulness, S.B. See Sup.

"Any thing that is pleasant and delightful is called Scot. shortsum;" Rudd.

3. Applied to a pleasant situation, Buchan.

V. SCHOT, v. a.

SCHOT, SCHOTE, SHOT, s.

Ane schot wyndo unschet ane litel on char,
Persauyt the mornyng bla, wan and har.
—The schote I closit, and drew inwart in hy,
Cheuerand for cald, the sessoun was so snell,
Schupe with hait flambis to steme the fresing fell.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 202. 24, 33.

This is expl. by Rudd., "the shutter of a window."

"There was on a scaffold opposite the cross,—read by Mr. Archibald Johnston, a protestation, avowed by Cassils, &c.—Some out of shots [small round or oval windows] cried rebels, on the readers." Baillie's Lett. i. 68. 69.

The words in brackets have evidently been inserted by the editor. But he seems to have mistaken the sense. Wodrow explains it otherwise.

"Her house was upon the East side of the Salt-market [Glasgow], towards the foot of it, in a timber fore-land, with windows called shots, or shutters of timber, and a few inches of glass above them." Hist. ii. 286.

Chaucer also uses the term.

And forth he goth, jolif and amorous,
Til he came to the carpenteres hous,
A litel after the cockes had ycrow,
And dressed him up by a shot window.

Miller's T. ver. 3358.

"A schot window," according to Mr. Tooke, "means a projected window, thrown out beyond the rest of the front: what we now call a Bow window." Divers. Purley, ii. 132. He derives it from A.S. scit-an, projicere.

SCHOT, part. pa. Allowed to expire, or elapse. S.

SCHOUFER, s. A chaffern for keeping water warm. S.

SCHOURE, s. A part; a division; applied to music.

Quben thay had sangin, and said, softly a schoure;

And plaid as of paradyss it a poynt war;

In come japand the Ja, as a jugloure.

Houlate, iii. 11.

Teut. scheur, shore, ruptura; scheur-en, to divide, A.S. scyr-an, id. scyr-maelum, divisis partibus. This term seems to have been anciently used in the same sense with O.E. fitt. By the way, the latter may have been adopted to denote a division, as being originally put at the end of a song or poem by the author, in the same manner as explicit. Thus Fit might simply signify, "It is done. This is the end of the work, or part."

SCHOURIS, SCHOWRIS, s. pl. Sorrows; afflictions; throes; agonies.

Rest all at eis, but sair or sitefull schouris;

Abide in quiet, maist constant weillfair.

Palice of Honour, ii. 30.

Thairfoir, deir dow, sum pitie tak,

And saif mee fra the schowres.

Philotus, S.P.R. iii. 5.

"Swed. sorg, Goth. saurg, aerumna, dolor; Teut. sorghe, cura," Sibb.

The pangs of childbirth are still called schours, S. That this is from the same root with sorrow, is probable, not only from the use of the latter term in the same sense E., but because the word rendered sorrow, in relation to childbirth, Joh. xvi. 21., is saurga in the version of Ulphilas. Schour, however, might be traced to Germ. schaure-en, tremere, schaure, tremor.

Schoures is used by R. Brunne in a metaph. sense, for contentions, broils.

Ther after ros hard schoures in Scotlond of the clergie, Bisshopes, abbotes, & priours, thei had misborn tham
hie,

& alle that fals blode, that often was forsuorn,

That neuer in treuth stode, sen Jhesu Criste was born.

Chron, p. 333.

In the Fr. original, dolours is the term used.

To SCHOUT, v. a. To shoot; to strike with any missile weapon, as with an arrow. S.

To SCHOUT, v. n. To dart forward; to come on impetuously and unexpectedly. Syn. Lans, v. S.

To SCHOW, v. a. 1. To drive backward or forward, to shore, E.

To schowin is used Doug. Virgil, 134, 32., but whether in the infin. or part. pa. is doubtful.

—And with lang bolmes of tree

Pykit with irn, and scharp roddis, he and he,

Inforsis oft to schowin the schip to saif.

2. It is also used as a v. n. signifying to glide or fall down.

Thryis schowing down on the erd sche fell.

Doug. Virgil 44, 32.

A.S. scuf-an, Belg. schuyff-en, Su.G. skuff-a, Isl. skiuf-a, trudere.

SCHOW, s. A push; a shove. S.

To SCHOWD, SHOWD, v. n. "To waddle in going;"

Gl. Shirr. howd, S.B.

Showding frae side to side, and lewdring on.

V. LEWDER.

Ross's Helenore, p. 59.

Teut. schudd-en, to shake; quatere, agitare.

SCHREFTIS-EVIN, s. Shrove-Tuesday, Fastringis-Ewyn, or Fastren's E'en. S.

SCHREW, SCHROW, s. A worthless person; an infamous fellow.

This cuntré is ful of Caynes kyn,

And syc schyre schrewis.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 238, b. 33.

"Conarus—gaue braid landis to maist vile and diffamit creaturis, becaus thay louit his corruptit maneris & vice; and be counsall of thir wickit schrewis he gouernit his realme." Bellend. Cron. B. v. c. 6.

Thai wicked schrowis

Has laid the plowis; That nane, or few, is

That ar left ocht.

By O.E. writers, as well as by our own, this word was used in a worse sense than in our own times. As it now denotes a clamorous woman, a vixen, it has been deduced from be-schrey-en, to make a noise. But this derivation supposes that to be the primary, which we know is only a secondary, sense. We must therefore seek an origin that suggests the worst idea which has been affixed to the word. Seren. derives shrew from Isl. shraveifa [skraveifa,] mulier cyclopica, from skra, horrendum quid, and veif, mulier. Skinner derives it from Germ. be-schrey-en, incantare, fascinare, ut beshrew you, malum te fascinum corripit; may you be subjected to the evil effects of witchcraft. Mr. Tooke views it as originating from A.S. syrw-an, syrew-an, to vex, to molest, to cause mischief to. But the v. used in this sense, as far as I can observe, always assumes a different form. It is sorg-ian, sorhg-ian. That written syrw-an, syrew-ian, invariably signifies moliri; insidiari, machinari, contere; be-syrw-an, "to lay in wait, to deceive, to beguile;" Somner. Syrwa, insidiae. Thus, schrew might originally denote a deceitful person, who still endeavours to deceive others. Schrewit may with propriety be viewed as the part. past, syrwde, insidiatus, or imperf. insidiabatur. The term shrewd, in its modern acceptation, seems to allude to this original signification.

Tyrwhitt renders it, as used by Chaucer, "an ill-tempered curst man or woman." But Chaucer employs the term in a worse sense than what is merely applicable to the temper.

"The jure that dredeth to do right, maketh men shrewes;" i. e. wicked men.

Applying the words of the apostle Paul, concerning magistrates as bearing the sword, he says;

"They beren it to punish the shrewes and misdoers, and for to defende the goode men." Tale of Melibeus, p. 285. Ed. Tyrwhitt.

To SCHREW, SCHRO, v. a. To curse; to wish a curse to, E. beshrew.

I schro the lyar, full leis me yow.

V. SCHREW, s.

Bannatyne Poems, p. 158.

SCHREWIT, part. adj. 1. Wicked; accursed.

All said Laocon justlie (sic was his hap)

Has dere bocht his wickit and schrewit dede,

For he the haly hors or stalwart stede

With violent straik presumyt for to dare.

Doug. Virgil, 46, 26.

2. Unhappy; ill-boding; as E. shrewd.

The fereful spaymen therof prognosticate

Schrewit chancis to betide, and bad estate.

Ibid. 145, 15.

3. Poisonous; venomous.

Gawan and Gol. ii. 23.

In Edit. 1508, *shron*d; but undoubtedly an error of the press.

My schroud and my schene were schyre to be schawin.

Houlate, iii. 22.

A.S. scrud, garments, apparel; Dan. skraut, Su.G. skrud, from A.S. scryd-an, Isl. skryd-a, amicare, vestire. Verel. gives, as the origin, Isl. skraut, pomp, elegance; as skrud always denotes elegant dress, or that used on occasions of ceremony. Hence E. shroud, our last dress, a winding-sheet. V. SCHURDE.

To SCHUDDER, v. a. To oppose; to withstand.

And ferder eik amynd his feris he

Twyis ruschit in, and schudderit the mellé.

A.S. sceor-ian, tondere.

This, however, is a term used in E. V. Cowel, vo. Shorling.

To SCHUTE, v. a. To push. Su.G. skiut-a, Teut. schutten, propellere.

This v., as conjoined with the prep. by, or about, signifies;

1. To put off; to delay, S.

And gin ye wad but shoot it by a while,

I ken a thing that wad your fears beguile.

Ross's Helenore, p. 20.

Su.G. skiut-a is used in the same sense, only with a different prep. Skiuta upp, differre.

2. To pass any particular time that is attended with difficulty. One who has many bills to pay at a certain period, says; I wish I could get such a time shot by, S. To shute about, id.
3. To avoid; to escape. S.
4. To schute about, a vulgar phrase used to denote that one is in ordinary health; nearly corresponding to Fr. se passer, to make shift, S.
5. To Schute, or Shoot, ower, or oe'r, v. a. To entertain in a slight and indifferent way; "He shot James ower wi' a very plain dinner." 6. To Schute o'er, v. a. To spend or pass with difficulty; applied to time; as, "How will auld Donald schute o'er the winter?" S.

The casting dart fast birrand lattis glyde,
That fleand sclentis on Eneas scheild.
Doug. Virgil, 347, 40.

"Bot the stoutnes of the Marques le Beuf (d'Albuf, they call him) is most to be comendit; for in his chalmer, within the Abbey, he started to ane halbart, and ten men wer scarce able to hald him. Bot as hap was, the inner-yet of the Abbay keipit him that nycht; and the danger was between the croce and the Salt Trone; and so he was a large quarter of a myle from the schott and sklenting of boltes." Knox's Hist. p. 305.

4. Used metaph., to denote immoral conduct.

Quhat kimmer casts the formest stane, lets se,
At thae poor queans, ye wrangfully suspeck,
For sklenting bouts.— Semple, Evergreen, i. 76.

5. To speak aside from the truth; to fib. 6. To err doctrinally; to go aside from the truth. S.

Sw. slant, id. slint-a, lapsare, Seren.; most probably from slind, latus, q. what hits the side of any object.

SCLENT, SKLENT s. 1. Obliquity, S.

2. Acclivity; ascent, S.

SCOLL. To drink one's scoll. V. SKUL.

SCOLLEDGE, s. Carrying one in a scull or cock-boat. S.

SCOMER, SKOMER.

Bettir thou gains to leid a dog to skomer,
Pynd pyck-purse pelour, than with thy master pingle.

Dunbar, Evergreen, ii. 53.

This seems to mean, "to cater for thee," or, "smell where there is provision." Belg. schaymer, a smell-feast, gaan schuymen, to sponge, to be a smell-feast, to live upon the catch; and this from schuym, the scum of the pot.

To SCOMFIS, SCOMFISH, SCONFICE, v. a. 1. To suffocate, to stifle. It denotes the overpowering or suffocating effect of great heat, of smoke, or of stench, S.
See Sup.

Her stinking breath

Was just enough to sconfice one to death.

Ross's Helenore, p. 36.

2. Used as v. n. To be stifled, S.

Now very sair the sun began to beat,
And she is like to sconfice with the heat. Ibid. p. 27.

"Scumfish'd, smothered, suffocated; North." Gl. Grose.

It may perhaps be radically allied to Isl. kafu-a, Su.G. kufu-a, qwafo-a, to suffocate, Isl. kof, suffocation; s being prefixed, which is very common in the Goth. languages, and m inserted.

But, perhaps, it is merely an oblique sense of the ancient word signifying to discomfit, (V. Scumfit.) Ital. sconfiggere, id.

SCOMFIS, SCOMFICE, s. A state approaching to that of suffocation, caused by a noxious smell or otherwise. S.

To SCON, v. a. To make flat stones, &c. skip along the surface of the water. S.

SCON, s. A cake. V. SKON.

To SCONCE, v. a. To extort; or, to excite another, by undue means, to spend, Ang.

To SCONCE a woman. To jilt her; to slight her. S.

To SCONE, v. a. To beat with the open hand; to correct, S. skelp, skult, synon.

"To scone, to beat a child's buttocks with the palms of the hand," Rudd.; vo. Skonnys.

Isl. skeyn-a, skoyn-a, Su.G. shen-a, leviter vulnerare. Some derive this from shan, cutis; others, from ska, accidere; Gl. Kristn. and Landnamabok. Ihre refers to A.S. scaen-an, frangere. He also observes, that Su.G. shena denotes a wound caused by striking, as distinguished from saar, which signifies one produced by a sharp weapon.

SCONE, s. A stroke on the breach with the open hand. S.

SCOOF, SCUFE, s. A sort of battledoor of wood. S.

SCOOL, s. Swelling in the roof of a horse's mouth; usually burnt out with a hot iron. V. SKULE. S.

SCOOPIE, s. A straw-bonnet. S.

SCOOT, SCOUT, s. A term of the greatest contumely; applied to a woman; a trull, or camp-trull. 2. A braggadocio; one who is the hero of his own story. S.

SCOOT, s. A wooden drinking cup; also scoop. S.

SCOOTIFU, s. The full of a scoop. S.

SCOOTIKIN, s. A dram of whisky. S.

SCOPIN, s.

Thai twa, out of ane scopin stowp,

Thai drank thre quartis soup and soup.

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 114.

This phrase might, at first view, seem to signify, as Mr. Pinkerton conjectures, a chopin stoop, or vessel containing two English pints. But it is probable that the term means drinking, from the v. Scoup, q. v.

SCORCHEAT, s. Supposed to denote sweetmeats. S.

To SCORE, * v. a. To mark with a line. S.

To SCORE A WITCH. To draw a line with a sharp implement above the breath of one suspected of witchcraft as an antidote against her fatal power. S.

SCORE, s. A deep, narrow, ragged indentation or fissure on the side of a hill. S.

SCOREY, s. The Brown and White Gull, Orkn.

"The Brown and White Gull (Larus naevius, Linn. Syst.) which the people here call the Scorey, is much more rarely met with than most others." Barry's Orkney, p. 303.

Others view this as the Herring-gull, Larus fuscus, Linn.

The Shua Gull is called Skua Hoirei, Clus. Exot. p. 368.

ap. Penn. V. SCAURIE.

SCORLING, s. The skin of a shorn sheep. S.

To SCORN, v. a. 1. To rally or jeer a young woman about her lover; to rally her, by pretending that such a one is in suit of her. Hence, scorning, this sort of rallying, S. 2. To Scorn a young woman with an unmarried man, to allege that there is a courtship going on between them in order to marriage. S.

At bughts in the morning nae blyth lads are scorning,
The lasses are lonely, dowie, and wae.

Flowers of the Forest, Ritson's S. Songs, i. 3.

SCORN, s. The scorn, a slight in love; or rejection after having made a proposal of marriage. S.

This seems merely an oblique sense of the E. v., from Teut. schern-en, ludere, illudere; which Lye derives from A.S. scearn, firmus. But, according to Cotgr., Fr. escorn-er signifies, to deprive of horns; hence, to disgrace.

To SCORP, SCROP, SKARP, SKRAP, SKRIP, SCRIP, v. n.

To mock; to deride; to gibe.

Scho skornit Jok, and skrippit at him;

And murgeonit him with morkkis.

Chr. Kirk, st. 4. Chron. S. P. ii. 360.

Skrippit, Edit. Maitland Poems, p. 444.

Skrapit, Edit. Callander, p. 112.

The ja him skrippit with a skryke,

And skornit him as it was lyk.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 22.

"Thair was presentit to the Quein Regent, by Robert Ormistoun, a calfe having two heidis, whairat sche scorppit, and said, 'It was bot a comoun thing.'" Knox's Hist. p. 93. In Lond. Edit. 1644, it is ludicrously converted into skipped.

"The Cardinal skrippit, and said, It is bot the Ysland flote; they ar come to mak us a schow, and to put us in feir." Ibid. p. 41.

Scrape is still used in Fife, and perhaps elsewhere, as a v. denoting the expression of scorn or disdain.

I know not if the term be allied to Isl. skrijpe, obscaenum quid ac tetrum; or Su.G. skrapp-a, jactare se, which is derived from skraf-a, nugari, skraf, nugae, Isl. ord-skraepi, a perverse and prattling woman. Kilian, however, mentions schrobb-en, as synon. with schobb-en, convitari, cavillari, a secondary sense of the v., as signifying to scrape or scrubb. V. SCRIBAT.

SCOT AND LOT. To pay scot and lot, to pay shares in proportion; to pay taxes or duties. S.

To SCOT, v. n. To pay taxes or duties. S.

SCOTTING and LOTTING. Payment of duties. S.

SCOTCH, s. An ant or emmet. S.
 SCOTCH-GALE, s. A species of myrtle, S. Myrica gale, Linn.

"Near to the King's Well, in the same barony, is to be found what is called the Scotch-gale, a species of the myrtle." P. Fenwick, Ayrs. Statist. Acc. xiv. 60.

"Myrica gale. Gale, Goule, Sweet Willow, or Dutch Myrtle. Anglis. Gaul. Scotis." Lightfoot, p. 613.

This is said to be "a valuable vermifuge." Statist. Acc. xvi. 110.

A.S. gagel, "pseudo-myrtus, eleagnus: quod Belgis hodieque gaghel. Gawle, sweet willow, or Dutch mirtle-tree;" Somner.

SCOTCH-MARK. A characteristic designation, borrowed from a defect or imperfection, whether natural or moral; as, Muckle-mow'd Meg, gawky Kate, drunken Will. S.

SCOTCH MIST. A thick, small, but wetting rain. S.

SCOTS AND ENGLISH. A game of children. S.

SCOTTE-WATRE, SCOTTIS-WATTRE, a name given by the Saxons to the Frith of Forth.

"Illa aqua optima—Scottice vocata est Forth, Britanice Werid, Romane (lingua vulgari) vero Scotte-wattre, i. e. aqua Scottorum, quae regna Scottorum et Anglorum dividit, et currit juxta oppidum de Strivelin." De Situ Albaniae, ap. Johnst. Antiq. Celto-Norman. p. 136.

"Goodall—[Intro. ad Fordun.] has shewn that Usher, Carte, Innes, and others, have fallen into gross errors, by mistaking Scottiswath for Scottiswatre. The former, as Fordun undesignedly tells us in two places, is Solway frith; the latter is perfectly known to be the frith of Forth. Indeed, wathe, or wade, implies a ford; while watre means a small sea, or limb of the sea." Pinkerton's Enquiry, ii. 207.

SCOTTIS BED. Meaning doubtful. S.

SCOTTIS SE, the Scottish sea, or Frith of Forth.

Towart Anguss syne gan he far,
 And thought sone to mak all fre
 That wes on the north half the Scottis Se.

Barbour, ix. 309. MS.

Than all thame gaddryd he,
 That on sowth halfe the Scottis Se
 He mycht purches of armyd men.

Wyntown, viii. 31. 6.

"The haill thre Estatis hes ordanit, that the Justicis on the south syde of the Scottis see set thair Justice airis, and hald thame twyis in the yeir, and als wa on the north syde of the Scottis see, as auld vse and custume is." Acts, Ja. II. 1440. c. 5. Ed. 1566.

This phrase, I suppose, must have been used by A.S. writers. For what is rendered in the A.S. translation of Orosius, Scottisc sae, is expl. by Lye, Scotticum mare sive fretum. Lye, most probably finding the Frith of Forth thus designed by A.S. writers, understood this as meant; or perhaps Alfred, the A.S. translator, had the same idea, from the use of the expression in his time. It does not appear, however, that this was the meaning of Orosius; for, in the original, he calls it, Mare Scythicum, probably referring to what is now called the German Ocean, and describes it as, a septentrione, so that it would seem that it is the same sea which he mentions frequently after, under the name of Oceanus septentrionalis.

The Frith of Forth is called the Scottish Sea, Acts, Malc. II. c. 8. The country "on the north side of the Scottes sea," is distinguished from that "beyond the Scottes sea, as in Lowthian, and these partes betwix the water of Forth and Tine." As Mr. Pinkerton observes, that part of Scotland south of Clyde and Forth was not accounted to be in Scotland proper, till a late period, but only belonging to it.

The reason of Forth having been called the Scottish sea, seems to be, that the Angli of Northumberland held all the south east part of Scotland, from the Forth to the Tweed, for about a century before the year 685. From this date it belonged to the Picts; and even after the union of the Scottish and Pictish kingdoms, the old distinction remained. V. Pinkerton's Enquiry, ii. 205. &c.

Boece gives a later origin to this designation; for, according to him, it had its rise from the conquest of the southern parts of Scotland, by the Saxons, about the year 859, after the death of Kenneth MacAlpine. He gives the following as one of the articles of the humiliating peace granted to the Scots. "The watter of Forth sall be marche betwix Scottis and Inglis men in the eist partis, & it sall be namyt ay fra thyne furth, the Scottis see." Bellend. Cron. B. x. c. 13.

This designation is used by John Hardyng,

On the morowe, Sir Robert Erle Umfreuile
 Of Angeou then the regent was by north
 The Scottis sea; and Aymer Walence the while Erle of Pembroke, by south the water of Forth
 Wardeyn was of Scotland forsoth,
 That day faught with Kyng Robert Bruys,
 Besyde Jhonstoune, where he fled without rescowes.

Chron. Fol. 168. b.

Angeou is here, by mistake of the transcriber or printer, put for Angos, of which Umfreuile is called erle, Fol. 167, a. This is the same Umfreuile to whom Hardyng ascribes the defeat and capture of William Wallace. V. GOSSEP.

SCOTTISWATH, s. The frith of Solway. S.

SCOUDRUM, s. Chastisement. S.

SCOVIE, s. A fop; adj. Foppish. S.

SCOVIE-LIKE, adj. Having a foppish appearance. S.

SCOVINS, s. The crust which adheres to a vessel in which food is cooked. S.

To SCOUK, v. n. To go about hiddlins, or clandestinely, as if intending to do a bad act. S.

Scouk, s. A look indicating a clandestine, immoral act. S.

SCOUKIN, SCUKIN, part. adj. Ill-looking; thief-like. S.

SCOULIE-HORN'D, adj. Having the horns pointing downwards. S.

To SCOUNGE, v. n. 1. To go about from place to place like a dog; generally applied to one who caters for a meal, who throws himself in the way of an invitation, S. 2. To pilfer. See Sup.

SCOUNRYT, Barbour, xvii. 651. V. SCUNNER.

To SCOUP, or SKOUP AFF, v. a. To quaff; to drink off, S.B.

O. Teut. schoep-en, Germ. schoep-en, to drink. Wachter thinks that the origin may be Franc. schaff, a hollow vessel; or perhaps Heb. scaabh, hausit. Su.G. scopa, a vessel for drawing water, a bucket, or scoop, and Belg. schoep, id. are evidently allied. V. SCOPIN.

SCOUP, s. A draught of any liquor, S.B. wacht, synon.

SCOUP, SCOWP, s. 1. Abundance of room; a wide range, S.

2. Liberty of conduct, S.

For mony a menyie o' destructive ills
 The country now maun brook frae mortmain bills,
 That void our test'ments, and can freely gie
 Sic will and scoop to the ordain'd trustee.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 85.

Sibb. views this as the same with E, scope. But perhaps it is rather from the same fountain with the v. scoup, q. room to run about.

Scoup, however, is used by Doug. in a sense not easily intelligible.

Decrepitus (his baner schane nocht cleir)
Was at the hand, with mony chiftanis sture.—
Bot smirk or smyle, bot rather for to smure,
Bot scoup, or skist, his craft is all to scayth.

King Hart, ii. 54.

The uncertainty of the meaning of skist leaves the other term in a similar state. O.Fland. schoppe signifies sport. This would correspond with smirk or smyle, and form a contrast with scayth. But there is reason to suspect that skist has been originally skift, a word still commonly used, S.B. Thus the phrase might signify, that without any particular scope or aim, and also without facility of operation, his whole craft lies in doing harm.

To SCoup, SCowP, v. n. To run with violence; to spring; to skip; "to leap or move hastily from one place to another;" Shirr. Gl. S.B. See Sup.

The lyon, and the leopard,
From louping, and scouping, war skard,
And faine for to fall down.

Burel's Pilgr. Watson's Coll. ii. 17.

Thair wes na bus could hald thame bak,
So trimly thay could scoup;
Nor yet no tike culd thame oretak,
So lichtly thay did loup.

V. DANDER, v.

Ibid. p. 20.

Teut. schop-en, incedere cum impetu, Isl. skop-a, discurrere. Perhaps Moes.G. shev-jan ire, is radically connected. Here undoubtedly we have the origin of E. skip, and not in Ital. squitt-ire, as Johnson strangely imagines.

SCoup-HOLE, s. A subterfuge.

Neither's this scoup-hole with [worth] a flee,
Or sixteenth part of a Kildee.

Cleland's Poems, p. 86.

Apparently from SCoup, to run; q. a hole for running out by. I know not the meaning of kildee. As this work is very incorrectly printed, it may be an error of the press.

SCouPPAR, SKouPER, s. 1. A dancer, q. a skipper.

"Vertew—in that court was hated, and filthines not onlie mentained, bot also rewarded; witnes the Lordship of Abircorne, the barony of Achermoutie, [q. Auchtermoutie?] and dyvers uthers pertheyning to the patrimony of the Croun, gevin in inheritance to Scoupperis, Dauners, and Dalliards with Dames." Knox's Hist. p. 345. Skippers, Lond. Edit. p. 374.

2. A light unsettled person. This, at least, seems the signification in the following passage.

Land-louper, light skouper, ragged rouper, like a raven.
Polw. and Montgom. Watson's Coll. iii. 30.

SCOUR, s. 1. A name given to the diarrhoea in cattle, S. V. LASK. 2. A thorough purgation of the bowels, applied to man. S.

SCOUR, s. The act of scouring. S.

To SCOUR OUT, v. a. To drink off, S.

An' ilka blade had fill'd his wame,
Wi monie scour'd-out glasses.

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, i. 158.

This is perhaps merely a metaph. use of the E. v. Isl. skyr, however, signifies, sorbillum.

SCOUR, s. 1. A hearty draught or pull of any liquid.

2. A large dose of intoxicating liquor. S.

To SCOUR, v. a. 1. To whip; to flog; to beat. 2. It is very commonly applied to the whipping of a top. S.

SCOUR, SCOURIN, s. Severe reprehension. S.

SCOURING, s. A drubbing. S.

To SCOURGE the ground, or land, to exhaust the strength of the soil, S.

"The principal crops consist of oats, barley, and rye. The last has, of late years, been in no high estimation, from the effect it has in scourging the ground." P. Cromdale, Moray, Statist. Acc. viii. 255.

SCOURIE, adj. Shabby. V. SCOWRY. S.

SCOURINS, s. pl. A kind of coarse flannel. S.

To SCOUT, v. a. To pour forth any liquid substance forcibly, S. See Sup.

An' gut an' ga' he scoutit.—

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, i. 155.

It is also used in a n. sense; to fly off quickly, most commonly applied to liquids.

But as he down upon her louted,

Wi' arm raxt out, awa' she scouted. Ibid. ii. 103.

Su.G. skiut-a, jaculari.

SCOUT, s. A syringe. V. SCOOT-GUN. S.

SCOUTH, SCOWTH, s. 1. Room; liberty to range, S. scoup, synon.

"The Doctor, contrair to the opinion of Bede—will have the wall to be built by Severus in stone, and that the last reparation in stone by the Romans, was upon Severus his wall in Northumberland, that the Scots and Picts might have the greater scouth, and so not molest the Brittons, when the Romans had deserted them." Sir James Dalrymple's Collections, p. 19.

2. Freedom to converse without interruption, opportunity for unrestrained communication, S.

For when love dwells between twa lovers leel,
Nor good nor ill from ither they conceal:
Whate'er betides them, it relieves their heart,
When they get scouth their dolor to impart.

Ross's Helenore, p. 18.

3. "Room;" Gl.

An' as we're cousins, there's nae scouth
To be in ony swidders;
I only seek fat is my due,
I mean fat was my brither's.

Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 4.

4. Abundance; as scouth of siluer, abundance of money, scouth of meat, &c.

As Su.G. skott, not only signifies cess, public money, but sometimes food; it may have been transferred to denote abundance.

SCOUTH and ROUTH. Room to range, and abundance to eat. S.

SCOUTHER, s. A hasty superficial toasting. S.

SCOUTHER, s. Sea blubber. V. SCOWDER. S.

SCOUTHER, s. A flying shower, Loth. syn. skrow, S.B.

SCOUTHERIE, adj. Abounding with flying showers. S.

SCOUTHY-LIKE, adj. Threatening flying showers. S.

SCOUTI-AULIN, SCUTIALLAN, s. The Arctic Gull, Orkn.

"Arctic Gull, Larus parasiticus. This bird is sometimes simply called the Allan; sometimes the Dirten-allan; and it is also named the Badoch.—They pursue and harass all the small gulls till these disgorge or vomit; they then dexterously catch what is dropped, ere it reach the water. The common names are derived from the vulgar opinion that the small gulls are muting, when they are only disgorging fish newly caught." Neill's Tour, p. 201. V. SKAITBIRD.

SCOW, s. Any thing broken in small, useless pieces. S.

To SCOWDER, SKOLDIR, SCOUTHER, v. a. To scorch; to burn slightly, S. pron. scowther. A scowther ban-nock, a scorched cake. See Sup.

Fy, showdert skin, thou art but skyre and skrumple.

Dunbar, Evergreen, ii. 54.

Thy skoldirt skin, hewd lyke a saffron bag,
Gars men dispyt thair flesch, thou spreit of Gy.

V. EWDER, s. 2.

Ibid. p. 56.

Sibb., with considerable appearance of probability, derives it from Teut. schoude, a chimney, schoud-en, to warm. But the Teut. v. properly signifies, to warm liquids. It is given by Kilian, as a cognate of Fr. eschaud-er, Ital. scald-are, whence E. scald, S. scaud. All these terms are also restricted to liquids in a heated state, in which sense scowder is never used. Its origin undoubtedly is Isl. swid-a, Dan. swid-er, Su.G. swed-a, swed-ia, id. adurere, leni igne perstringere. Ital. scott-are, to burn, to scald, is most probably from the same source. Ihre views swi as denoting heat in the ancient Goth.; whence, he says, Isl. swi, aeris mitigatio, swiar til, aura incalescit. A. Bor. scowder'd, overheated with working, (Gl. Grose,) has evidently a common origin.

The custom of singeing the head and feet of an animal for food has prevailed with the Goths, as well as in S. G. Andr. gives this account of the use of the term swid. "Adusta vel ambusta frusta, veluti culinarii rustici solent caput et pedes pecorum depilare adustione signis, caput pedesque swid vocare solent." Lex. p. 231. i. e. scowdert, S. It seems questionable, if this custom was known in England, as the sage monarch James VI., after his accession, found, to his great mortification, that none of his cooks could grace his table with a black sheep's head, till one of his majesty's countrymen taught them the method of singeing it.

SCOWDER, SCOUTHER, s. A hasty toasting, so as slightly to burn what is thus prepared, S. See Sup.

Isl. swide, adustio; swida, ambustio, inflammatio.

SCOWDERDOUP, s. A ludicrous term for a smith. S.

SCOWF, s. 1. Empty blustering. 2. A blusterer; as, "He's naething but a scowf." 3. A low scoundrel. S.

SCOWMAR, s. A scowmar of the se, a pirate; a corsair.

Thai had bene in gret perell ther;
Ne war [a] scowmar of the se,
Thomas of Downe battyn wes he,
Hard that the ost sa straytly than
Wes stad; and salyt wp the Ban,
Quhill he come wele ner quhar thai lay.

Barbour, xiv. 375, MS.

Belg. zee-schuymmer, a sea-rover; Fr. escumeur de mer, id. from escumer, to skim, whence the phrase, escumer des mers, to scour or infest the seas.

In the laws of the Lombards, and writings of the middle ages, robbers are often denominated Scamari, scamares, Scamatores; whence Fr. escamott-er, to steal. Ipse quantocius Istri fluentia praetermeans latrones properanter insequitur, quos vulgus Scamares appellabat. Eugippius, in Vita S. Severinicap. 10. Et plerisque ab actoribus, Scamarisque et latronibus undique collectis, &c. Jornandes de Reb. Getic. c. 58. V. Du Cange. These terms Ihre views as from the same origin with Su.G. skam, diabolus, cacodaemon, Isl. skiaeman, malefactor. I suspect, however, that scowmar, although nearly allied in sense, has no etymological affinity.

SCOWR, s. A slight shower; a summer shower. S.

SCOWRY, adj. Showery; denoting weather in which intermitting showers are accompanied by blasts of wind, S. A scowry day, one of this description.

May Scotia's simmers ay look gay and green,
Her yellow har'st frae scowry blasts decreed!

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 59.

Moes.G. skura windis, a great storm of wind; Mar. iv.

Hence A.S. scur, imber.

SCOWRY, SCOURIE, adj. 1. Shabby in external appearance; thread-bare, as applied to clothes; a scoury hat, S. See Sup.

The Tod was nowthir lein nor scowry,
He was a lusty reid-haired Lowry,
Ane lang tail'd beist and grit withall.

Dunbar, Evergreen, i. 201.

2. Mean in conduct; used especially in the sense of niggardly, S.O.

3. "Having an appearance as if dried or parched; also wasted;" Gl. Sibb. In this sense it is sometimes applied to ground.

Sibb. derives it from scowder. But it is undoubtedly nothing but a corruption of E. scurvy, which is commonly used in sense 2.

SCOWRIE, s. A scurvy fellow, S.O.

Young Willie Pitt, o' ready wit,
Did lay this plot for Lowrie;
For a' his grace, and honest face,
Fox thought him but a scowrie.

SCOWRY, s. The Brown and White Gull. V. SCAURIE. S.

To SCOWTHER, v. a. To scorch. V. SCOWDER. S.

SCOWTHER, s. A slight flying shower. V. SCOUTHER. S.

SCRAB, s. 1. A crab, Pomum sylvestre; pl. scrabbis.

Syne brade trunscheouris did thay fill and charge
With wilde scrabbis, and vthir frutis large

Betid.———

Doug. Virgil, 208, 44.

Skinner derives E. crab from Belg. schrabb-en, mordicare, because of its acid and harsh taste.

2. In pl. "stumps of heath or roots," S.B. Gl. Ross.

A hail hauf mile she had at least to gang,
Thro' birns and pikes and scrabs, and heather lang.

Ross's Helenore, p. 26.

Scrubbe occurs in the same sense; although metaph. used.

"What was hee but a knottie, barren, rotten scrubbe, marring the ground?" Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 1200.

A.S. scrob, scrobb, Belg. skrobbe, frutex.

SCRABER, s. The Greenland dove, Colymbus Grille, Linn., in Orkn. called Tyste.

"The Scraber, so called in St. Kilda, in the Farn Islands Puffinet, in Holland the Greenland Dove, has a small bill sharp pointed, a little crooked at the end, and prominent." Martin's St. Kilda, p. 32.

SCRA-BUILT, adj. Built with divots or thin turfs. S.

SCRADYIN, SKRAWDYIN, s. A puny sickly child. S.

SCRAE, SCREA, s. A shrivelled old shoe. S.

SCRAIGHTON, s. A person fond of screaming. S.

SCRAIGH O' DAY. The first appearance of dawn. S.

To SCRALL, v. n. To crawl.

This Moses made the froggs in millions creep,
From floods and ponds, and scrall from ditches deep.

Hudson's Judith, p. 19.

Formed from E. crawl, or, Su.G. kraell-a, by prefixing s. V. the letter S.

SCRAN, s. Ability to effect any purpose. V. SKRAN. S.

To SCRANCH, v. a. To grind somewhat crackling between the teeth. V. CRANCH. S.

SCRANNIE, s. An old, ill-natured, wrinkled hag. S.

To SCRAPE, v. n. To express scorn or disdain, Fife. V. SCORP.

SCRAPIE, s. A mean niggardly person; a miser; from the idea of his scraping money together, S.

SCRAPLE, s. 1. An implement used for cleaning the Bake-board. 2. One for cleaning a cow-house. S.

SCRAT, s. A rut; a scratch or scart. S.

SCRATTED, part. pa. Scratched. S.

SCRAT, SKRATT, s. A meagre mean-looking person. S.

SCRATTY, SKRATTY, adj. Thin; lean; puny-looking. S.

SCRATCH, s. An hermaphrodite. S.

SCRAUGH, s. A loud and discordant sound. S.

To SCRAUCHLE, v. n. To use as it were both hands and feet in getting forward; to scramble. S.

SCRAW, s. A thin turf used for covering a house. S.

SCOB AND SCRAW. Apparently, snug; comfortable; compact; like the roof of a house with the turfs secured. S.

SCREA, s. A shoe. V. SCRAE. S.

To SCREED, SKREED, v. a. 1. To rend; to tear, S.

— A rather raise, tweesh riving hair,
Screeding of kurches, crying dool and care.

Ross's Helenore, p. 23.

2. Used in a moral sense, with respect to defamation.

—Some their neighbours names are screeding.

Morison's Poems, p. 81.

According to Sibb., from Teut. schrooden, mutilare, decurtare, praesecare; schroode, segmen. As the term seems necessarily to imply the idea of the sound made in the act of tearing any thing, I suspect that it should be traced to Isl. skrida, rupium fissarum lapsus et ruina. Thus sknaeskrida denotes the fall of snow in a conglomerated state from the mountains; Conglobatae nivis ex montibus lapsus; Verel. He mentions, as a cognate, Moes. G. disskreitan, scindere, disscindere. It is used in the very same sense with our skreid. The high priest, disskreitands wastjos seinos; rending his clothes; Mark, xiv. 63. Faurhah alhs disskritnoda in twa, gah stainos disskritnodedun; The veil of the temple was rent in twain, and the rocks rent; Matt. xxvii. 51.

Teut. schrood-en may be traced to the same fountain; as well as Germ. schrot-en, to divide, says Wachter, in whatever way this is done, by breaking, cutting, mutilating, &c. Also A.S. scread-an, be-scread-an, disscindere, screadung, resectio, screadungas, frusta, also screade, whence E. shred; corresponding to Isl. skurd-ur, sectio, our skreid of cloth. Su.G. skraed-a, secare. This term has probably given origin to Gael. sread, a cry, shout; sreadan, the noise of any thing rending. V. the s.

SCREED, SKREED, s. 1. The act of rending or tearing; a rent, S. See Sup. 2. The sound made in rending, S. 3. Any loud shrill sound, S.

Their cudgels brandish'd 'boon their heads,—
Their horns emittin martial screeds.

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, ii. 12.

The ice gae a great screed; a phrase used to denote the noise made by the cracking of ice, exactly analogous to Isl. snaeskrida, mentioned above.

4. The thing that is rent or torn off; as, a screed of cloth, S. Ihre mentions this as A. Bor. vo. skraeda. V. the v. See S. 5. With respect to immorality in general.

Ye, for my sake, hae gi'en the feck
Of a' the ten commands

A screed some day. Burns, iii. 30.

To SCREED, SKREED, v. a. 1. To talk fluently and facetiously. 2. To do any thing quickly, or with spirit. 3. To lie; especially as denoting what consists in fabrication or magnifying in narration. S.

To SCREED AFF, or awa, v. a. To do any thing quickly, S.

— On the fourth of June,

Our bells screed aff a loyal tune.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 14.

SCREED, SKREED, s. 1. A dissertation; a harangue; as, a lang screed. 2. A poetical effusion in writing. 3. A long list or catalogue. 4. Screed, Screed o' drink, a long revel; a hearty drinking-bout. 5. The indulgence of intemperance for a considerable time. S.

To GIE ONE A SCREED of one's mind. This denotes a discourse that is not pleasing to the person addressed, as being expressive of disapprobation or reprehension. S.

To SCREED, SKREED, v. n. 1. To cry; to scream. 2. To produce a sharp sound; perhaps somewhat grating to the ear. S.

To SCREEDGE, v. a. To tear; the same as Screed. S.

SCREEL, s. A large rocky hill nigh the sea; a haunt for the fox. This is merely a local name. S.

SCREG, s. A cant term for a shoe, S.

It has been deduced from Gael. scraw, covering, crust.

To SCREIGH, SKREIGH, v. n. To shriek, S. See Sup.

"It is time enough to skreigh, when ye're stricken;"

Ramsay's S. Prov. p. 47.

Su.G. skrik-a, vociferari, Isl. skraek-a, Dan. skryg-er.

Ihre gives the Su.G. v. as a frequentative from skri-a, id. V. SKRY.

SCREIK, SCRYKE, s. Shriek; howling, S.B. skreik.

The young children and frayit matronis eik

Stude all in raw, with mony pietuous screik,

About the tressour quhympers and wourdis sare.

Doug. Virgil, 64, 20.

And oft with wylde scryke the nycht oule

Hie on the rufe allane was hard youle.

Ibid. 116, 9.

SCREYB, s. A common name for the wild apple. S.

SCRENOCH, s. A noise made about any trifling matter, Banffs. V. SCROINCH.

SCREW, s. A small stack of hay. S.

SCREW-DRIVER, s. The tool used by carpenters for driving screw-nails; E. a turn-screw. S.

SCRY, s. Noise; clamour. V. SKRY.

SCRIBAT, pret. v. Jeered; taunted; made game.

Methocht his wit wes quyt went away with the laif;
And so I did him dispys, I scribat quhen I saw him,
That superexpendit ewil of speche, spulyeit of all vertew. Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 59.

This is evidently the same v. with Scorp, q. v. In Edit. 1508, however, spittit is used instead of scribat.

To SCRIBBLE, SCRABBLE, v. a. To tease wool, S.

"They have erected a teasing or scribbling, and a carding machine, which are driven by a small stream of water."

P. Twyneholm, Kirkcudbr. Statist. Acc. xv. 80.

Belg. schravel-en, to scrape; Teut. schraeffel-en, corradere, verrere, apparently from Teut. schrabb-en, to scrub.

SCRIBE, s. A crab (apple.) V. SCRAB. S.

SCRIDDAN, s. A mountain torrent, Ross. See Sup.

"The farms which are bases to high mountains, as in Kintail, suffer great losses from what is called scriddan, or 'mountain torrent.'—The farm of Auchuirm, in Glenelchaig, once a populous town, was, in 1745, rendered uninhabitable, and is since converted to a grazing, by an awful Scriddan." P. Kintail, Statist. Acc. vi. 249.

Perhaps from Gael. sreadan, the noise of any thing rending; Shaw. V., however, SCREED, v. and s.

To SCRIEVE, v. a. To scratch; to scrape; to peel, Ang. Flandr. schraeff-en, radere.

SCRIEVE, s. A large scratch, Ang.
 To SCRIEVE, SKRIEVE, v. n. To move or glide swiftly along. See Sup.
 Scho thro' the whins, an' by the cairn,
 An' owre the hill gaed scrievin. Burns, iii. 136.
 But, oil'd by thee,
 The wheels o' life gae down-hill scrievin,
 Wi' rattlin glee. Ibid. p. 13.
 It is used metaph. in the same sense, S.
 Expl. "gleesomely, swiftly," Gl.
 SKRIEVER, s. A clever fellow; one who goes expeditiously through his work. S.
 Sibb. refers to Su.G. skrid-a, leni motu provehi. But I would prefer Isl. skref-a, gradi, whence skref, gressus, passus; or skrepp-a, lubricè dilabor, G. Andr. p. 215.
 SCRIEVE, s. Any thing written. A lang scribe, a long letter or writing, S.
 SCRIEVER, s. An inferior sort of writer; a mean scribe. S.
 Teut. schrijv-en, Germ. schreyb-en, Lat. scrib-ere, to write.
 To SCRIEVE, v. n. To talk familiarly, implying the idea of continuation; skrieve, a conversation of this kind, S.
 This may be merely another sense of scribe, as properly denoting what is written; but perhaps rather allied to Su.G. skraefw-a, to rant, to rattle, to rave; whence skraefla, a rattling, or ranting fellow or woman; Wideg. Isl. skraefa, skrafe, manskraefa, from skraf-a, nugari, sermocinari.
 To SCRIFT, SKRIFT, v. n. To magnify in narration; to fabricate; to fib. V. SKRIFT. S.
 To SCRIFT, SKRIFT AFF, v. a. To rehearse from memory; including the idea of ease and fluency in repetition. V. SKRIFT. S.
 SCRIM, s. A very thin coarse cloth, used for making blinds for windows, buckram, &c. S.B. See Sup.
 "There was no cloth made at Forfar, but a few yard-wides called Scrims." P. Forfar, Statist. Acc. vi. 512.
 To SCRYM, v. n. To skirmish.
 Thar wes ilk day justyn of wer;
 And scrymyn maid full apertly;
 And men tane on athyr party.
Barbour, xix. 520. MS.
 Alem. Germ. schirm-en, more anciently, according to Seren. scrim-en, pugilare, Su.G. skirm-a, to fight, Fr. escrim-er, A.S. scrimbre, a gladiator, which term has been deduced, by Martinius, from West-Goth. scrama, a weapon, a sword. Su.G. skraem-a, a slight wound, is viewed as a cognate.
 SCRYMMAGE, s. A skirmish.
 Ane Inglissman, on the gait saw he play
 At the scrymmagis a bukler on his hand.
Wallace, iii. 359. MS.
 Here it is evidently used to denote a mock fight.
 To SCRIM, v. a. 1. To strike smartly on the breech with the open hand. 2. To rinse; as, "to scrim the cogs." S.
 SCRIMGER, s. An avaricious person; a miser. S.
 To SCRIMP, SKRIMP, v. a. 1. To straiten; to deal sparingly with one; used both as to food and money. He scrimps him in his meat. He does not give him enough of food, S.
 For some had scrimpt themsel's o' food
 To wait that night.
Shirref's Poems, p. 212.
 — Ye'se nae be scrimp'd of meal;
 And ye hae fouth of milk, I see, yoursel.
Ross's Helenore, p. 95.
 Hence scrimpit, parsimonious, niggardly.
 — What signifies your gear?

A mind that's scrimpit never wants some care.
Ramsay's Poems, ii. 66.
 2. To limit; to straiten; in a general sense, S.
 Was she found out for mending o' their meal?
 Or was she scrimped of content or heal?
Ross's Helenore, p. 50.
 He gangs about sornan frae place to place,
 As scrimpt of manners as of sense and grace.
Ramsay's Poems, ii. 136.
 Sibb. properly derives it from Teut. krimp-en, contrahere, diminuere, coarctare, extenuare. In some other dialects s is prefixed; hence Germ. schrump-en, corrugari, Su.G. skrump-en, corrugatus.
 SCRIMP, adj. 1. Scanty; narrow; deficient; applied to food or money, S. scrimpit, synon.
 Each in their hand a scrimp hauf bannock got,
 That scarce for anes wad fill their mouth and throat.
Ross's Helenore, p. 49.
 2. Contracted, not correspondent to the size; applied to clothes, S.
 Plain was her gown, the hue was o' the ewe,
 And growing scrimp, as she was i' the grow.
Ross's Helenore, p. 28.
 — Sic is the way
 Of them wha fa' upon the prey;
 They'll scarce row up the wretch's feet,
 Sae scrimp they make his winding-sheet.
Ramsay's Poems, ii. 467.
 3. Limited, not ample. See Sup.
 "It may be, this scrimp and scanty proclamation of pardon was not so pleasing to them as the former, and their friends spare them." Wodrow's Hist. ii. 74.
 4. Deficient, in relation to mind.
 How many do we daily see
 Right scrimp of wit and sense.
 Who gain their aims aft easily
 By well-bred confidence? Ramsay's Works, i. 114.
 Sw. krimpe, little; Belg. bekrompen, narrow, scant. V. the v.
 SCRIMPPLY, adv. Sparingly, S.
 "When Dr. Lighton [Leighton] was Commendator of Glasgow, and he himself Professor of Divinity there,—he allowed and invited all people to accuse their Pastors, and give in what indictments they pleased against them,—this was not done scrimply neither, nor out of mere form; but if there was any partiality, it was against the Minister." Account present Persecution of the [Episcopalian] Church in Scotland, A. 1690, p. 48.
 "But the cases are very different, where the mosses are scrimply sufficient, for a length of time, to supply the inhabitants." Dr. Walker, Prize Essays Highl. Soc. S. ii. 117.
 SCRIMPIE, adj. Not liberal; sparing; niggardly. S.
 SCRINE, s. Perhaps, a casket for holding jewels. S.
 SCRYNOCH, s. V. SCROINCH.
 SCRIP, s. A mock; most probably one expressed by a distortion of the face.
 Wallace as than was laith to mak a ster,
 Ane maid a scrip, and tyt at his lang suorde:
 Hald still thi hand, quoth he, and spek thi word.
 V. SCORP. Wallace, vi. 141. MS.
 SCRIPTURE, s. A pencease.
 I hint ane scripture, and my pen furth tuke;
 Syne thus began of Virgil the twelt buke.
 Fr. escriptoire, id. Doug. Virgil, Prol. 404, 35.
 SCRIVER, s. Probably, paymaster. S.
 SCROBIE, s. The scurvy. V. SCRUBIE. S.
 SCROG, s. A stunted bush or shrub, S. A. Bor. See S.
 Fyue fouliis I chaist out throw ane scrog.

Quhairfor thair motheris did me warie;
For thay war drownit all in a bog.

Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 300.

— Every thyng that doith repare
In firth or feild, flude, forest, erth or are,
Or in the scroggis, or the buskis ronk,
Lakis, maressis, or thare poulis donk,
Astablit lyggis styl to sleip and restis.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 450, 2.

"Al the grond of the palecis of that tryumphand tounne [Troye] ande castel, is ouergane vitht gyrse ande vild scroggis." Compl. S. p. 31.

In pl. it is commonly used to denote thorns, briers, &c.
and frequently small branches of trees broken off, S.

This word, by Rudd. Sibb. and in Gl. Compl. is viewed as from A.S. scrobb, frutex, whence E. shrub. But perhaps it is rather allied to Teut. schrag, schraeg, pl. schraeghen, spars or slips of wood for supporting vines; ligna trans-versa, capreoli; canterii. V. Wachter, Kilian. The origin is Germ. schrag, obliquus.

SCROGGY, SKROGGY, adj. 1. Stunted, S.

The company al samyn held away
Throw scroggy bussis furth the nerrest way.

Doug. Virgil, 264, 19.

In sere placis the herde at hys desyre
Among the scroggy rammell settis the fyre.

Ibid. 330, 47.

"The name of the town [Dumfries] is, by some, supposed a compound of Gothic or Celtic, with a Roman word, Drumfriars; by others, it is considered as more entirely Celtic, Drumfresh, a hill or rising ground clad with furze or scroggy bushes." P. Dumfries, Statist. Acc.
v. 140.

By the way, I may subjoin an etymon more probable than either.

"John of Wallingford mentions the Castrum Puellarum as at the Northern extremity of Northumbria. This name our writers apply to Edinburgh. It is a mere translation of the name of Dumfries: Dun-Fres; Dun, castellum, urbs; Fru, Fre, virgo nobilis, Icelandic. This was the name given by the Piks, while the Cumri of Cumbria called the same place Abernith, as it stands at the mouth of the Nith." Pinkerton's Enquiry, ii. 208.

2. Abounding with stunted bushes or brushwood, S.

— Quhare now standis the golden Capitole,
Vmquhile of wylde buskis rouch skroggy knoll.

Doug. Virgil, 254, 12.

On scroggy braes shall akes and ashes grow.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 60.

SCROINOCH, SCRYNOCH, s. Noise; tumult, Aberd.

Nae doubt, sma' scroinoch they wad mak,
If she in lofty style could crack.

Shirref's Poems, p. 320.

Sibb. naturally enough refers to Sw. skraen, clamor, stridulus; Gl.

SCROOFE, SCRUF, s. 1. A thin crust or covering of any kind, S. See Sup.

"The outwarde scroofe, suppose it appeareth to be whole, where the inward is festered, auaileth nothing, bot maketh it to vndercoate again." Bruce's Eleven Serms. T.
ii. a, b.

"Striue therefore euer to keep the soule in a sense and feeling, and let not that miserable scroofe to goe ouer thy soule." Rollock on the Passion, p. 12.

— His nose will lose the scruf, Gif he fa' down.

R. Galloway's Poems, p. 18.

2. Used to denote money that is both thin and base.

"Now they spair not planelie to brek down and convert gud and stark mony, cunyit in our cunyeouse, in our Soveranes les aige, into this thair corrupted scruef and baggages of Hard heidis and Nonsounts." Knox's Hist. p.

164.

Radically the same with E. scurf, Su.G. skorf, the scurf of a wound, according to Seren. from skorpa, crusta.

SCRUFAN, s. A thin scurf or covering; as, a scrufan of ice, S.B.

Su.G. skrof is used in the latter sense, glacies rara. V.
preceding word.

SCROPPIT, adj.

Ane scroppit cofe quhen he begynnis

Sornand all and sindry airtis,

For to by hennis reid-wod he rynniss.

Bannatyne Poems, p. 170.

This is the description of what is now called a cadger.
Lord Hailes renders scroppit contemptible, illustrating this sense by the passage in Knox's Hist. quoted under SCORP.

Scroppit, as here used, seems synon. with E. scrubbed, scrubby, mean, sordid; from Belg. schrobb-en, to scrub, whence schrobber, a mean fellow, a scoundrel; Germ.
schrabb-en, to scrape money together, schrobber, avaritious.

SCROW, SKROW, s. A scroll; a writing, S. See Sup.

Thy scrows obscure are borrowed fra some buik.

Polw. and Montgom. Watson's Coll. iii. 6.

Kennedy, Evergreen, ii. 48.

SCROW, s. The name given most commonly to the minute cancri observed in pools and springs, Cancer stagnalis and C. pulex, S. It is, however, also occasionally applied to some of the aquatic larvae of flies and beetles, especially to the larva of the Dytiscus marginalis.

Squilla, nostratibus the Scrow. Sibb. Scott, p. 34. Su.G.
skrof, skeleton, from its appearance?

SCROW, s. 1. A number; a crowd; a swarm; with bustle and confusion. 2. Riot; hurlyburly. S.

SCROW, s. Damaged skins of which glue is made. S.

SCRUB,* s. A niggardly oppressive person. S.

SCRUB, s. The plane that is first used in smoothing wood; the fore-plane, or jack-plane. S.

SCRUBBE, s. V. SCRAB.

SCRUBBER, s. A handful of heath tied tightly together for cleaning culinary utensils. S.

SCRUBBLE, s. 1. The act of struggling. 2. A squabble; an uproar. 3. The difficulty to be overcome in accomplishing any work. S.

To SCRUBBLE, v. n. To struggle; to raise an uproar. S.

SCRUBIE, s. The vulgar name of the scurvy, S.

Isl. skyrbiug-ur. This term occurs A. 1289; although some understand it of the elephantiasis. V. Von Troil, p.
324. Su.G. skoerbiug. Hence,

SCRUBIE-GRASS, s. Scurvy-grass, S. scroobie-grass, A.Bor.

SCRUFE, s. A scurf. V. SCROOFE. S.

To SCRUFE, v. a. To take off the surface; to touch slightly; to do any thing slightly and superficially. S.

To SCRUG one's Bonnet, v. a. To cock one's bonnet smartly or fiercely. S.

To SCRUMPILL, v. a. 1. To crease; to wrinkle. 2. Applied to animal food shrunk from being over-roasted. S.

To SCRUNT, v. n. V. SKRUNT.

SCRUNT, SKRUNT, s. 1. A stubby branch, or a worn out besom. 2. A tall, thin person. 3. a scrub; a niggard. S.

SCRUNTET, SCRUNTET-LIKE, adj. Stunted in growth; meagre. S.

SCRUNTY, SKRUNTIE, adj. Stubby; short and thick. Stunted in growth. Meagre; mean; niggardly. S.

SCRUNTINESS, s. The state of being stubby. S.

To SCRUPON, v. a. To hamper. S.

SCRUPON, s. A person who hampers. S.

SCRUTOIRE, s. A desk at the upper part of a chest of drawers. Drawers is used without such desk. S.

To SCUBBLE, v. a. To soil, as a schoolboy does his book. Syn. Suddle. S.

SCUD, s. A blast or sudden shower of rain, snow, or hail. To SCUD, v. a. 1. "To dust with a rod; Scot." Callander's MS. notes on Ihre. Su.G. skudd-a, excutere. 2. To beat; to chastise; properly, to strike on the buttocks with the palm or open hand, S. synon. skelp, scult, scon.

SCUD, s. A stroke with the open hand or with a ferula. S.

To SCUD, v. a. To quaff; to drink liberally, Loth. —You wha laughing scud brown ale, Leave jinks a wee, and hear a tale. Ramsay's Poems, ii. 520.

SCUDS, s. pl. Brisk beer; foaming ale, S.

"They sent in some smachry or ither to me, an' a pint o' their scuds, as sower as ony bladoch." Journal from London, p. 9.

It is also used by Ramsay, i. 216.

Teut. schudd-en, Su.G. skudd-a, utskudd-a, fundere. In the same manner jute, bad ale, is formed from A.S. geotan, to pour out.

SCUDDIEVAIG, s. The same with Skuryvage, q. v. S.

SCUDDIN' STANES. Those thin stones that can be made to skim the surface of a body of water. S.

To SCUDDLE, v. a. To sully and put out of proper shape by use or wearing. V. Suddill. S.

To SCUDLE, SCUDDLE, v. a. 1. To cleanse; to wash. 2. To act as a kitchen-drudge. S.

SCUDDLE, s. A kitchen-drudge; a scullion. S.

SCUDDLIN-BOY, s. A scullion-boy. S.

SCUDLER, SCUDLAR, s. A scullion. See Sup.

From Teut. schotel, a plate, a dish; whence schotel-water, eluvies culinaria, Kilian.

To SCUE, v. n. To go slanting along; to go sidelong. S.

SCUFE, s. A bat used for playing at hand-ball. S.

To SCUFF, v. a. 1. To graze; to touch slightly in passing quickly; to brush along, S.

—A pair of rough rullions to scuff thro' the dew, Was the fee they sought at the beginning o't. Song, Ross's Helenore, p. 137.

This seems radically the same with Teut. schuyv-en, Germ. schupf-en, Su.G. skufw-a, skuff-a, E. shove, q. to give a shove in passing.

2. To tarnish by frequent wearing, S. Thus it is said of a piece of dress that has lost the new appearance, that it is much scuffed. Hence,

3. To scuff, or scuff about, to wear as an ordinary dress, for the coarsest work; to wear as a drudge, S.

Perhaps Germ. schuft, a tatterdemalion, is allied.

SCUFF, s. 1. The act of grazing or touching lightly. 2. A stroke; apparently a slight one. S.

SCUFFET, s. A smith's fire-shovel. S.

SCUFFLE, s. The horse-hoe; an agricultural machine. To SCUG, v. a. To shelter. V. Skug.

SCULDUDRY, SCULDUDDERY, s. 1. A term, now used in a ludicrous manner, to denote those causes that come under the judgment of an ecclesiastical court, which respect some breach of chastity, S. See Sup.

To fill his post alake there's none,
That with sic speed
Could sa'r sculdudry out like John. Ramsay's Poems, i. 222.

2. Grossness; obscenity. 3. Rubbish; tatters. S.

The first part of the word is most probably formed from Germ. schuld, A.S. scyld, Alem. sculdi, Su.G. skyld, Isl. skulld, a fault, an offence; whence L.B. sculted-um, a great offence, and scultet-us, a bailiff, A.S. sculdeta, an exactor, one who exacted satisfaction from delinquents. V. Spelman. Thus the word might originally be q. sculdet-ry, or an offence of that kind that subjected to a fine.

Callander, I find, in his MS. notes on Ihre, has given the former etymon. He mentions the S. term under Su.G. skoela, debtor, Moes.G. dulgiskula, id. Ir. sgaldruth, however, denotes a fornicator, Lhuyd. The origin is Alem. sculen, &c. debere, because satisfaction is due to the law, on account of the offence. The s. indeed primarily signifies debt, obligation.

SCULDUDRY, adj. 1. Connected with Crim. Con. 2. Loose; obscene. S.

SCULE, SKULE, SKULL, s. A great collection of individuals; generally applied to fishes. E. shoal; as, a scule o' fish, a shoal of fishes. V. SKULE. S.

SCULL, s. A shallow basket; sometimes used as a cradle, S.

"Her father had often told her that he built the first house in Portnockie the same year in which the house of Farskane was built, and that she was brought from Cullen to it, and rocked in a fisher's scull instead of a cradle." P. Ruthven, Banffs. Statist. Acc. xiii. 401. V. LENNO, and SKUL.

SCULLION,* s. 1. The lowest domestic servant, or kitchen-drudge. 2. A knave or worthless fellow. S.

To SCULT, SKULT, v. a. 1. To beat with the palm of the hand, S. synon. skelp, scud, scon. 2. To chastise by striking the palm. S.

Isl. skell, skellde, id. diverbero palmis; skell-r, a stroke, G. Andr. It might, however, be deduced from A.S. sculd, Germ. schuld, debt, what is due to one; in the same sense as we say S. to pay, or to give one his payment, when he is beaten for a fault. V. AIGHINS.

SCULT, s. 1. A stroke, properly with the open hand. 2. A stroke on the hand. Syn. Pandie, Pawmie. S.

SCUM, s. A greedy fellow; a mere hunks; a contemptible, worthless wretch. Syn. Scamp, Skellum. S.

To SCUM, v. a. To scum up one's mou', to strike one on the mouth and so keep him from speaking. S.

SCUMFIT, part. pa. Discomfited.

Quhat mysteryt ma in a power to pass,
All off a will, as I trow set ar we,
In playne battail can nocht weill scumfit be. Wallace, viii. 466. MS.

Altered to discomfist, Edit. 1648. Ital. sconfigg-ere, id.

SCUN, s. "Plan; craft;" judgment; understanding. S.

SCUNCHEON, s. A stone in the inner side of a door or window, forming the projecting angle, S. See Sup.

Perhaps allied to Germ. schantse, E. sconce, as forming the bulwark or strength of the wall.

SCUNCHEON, s. A square dole of bread, cheese, &c. S.

To SCUNNER, SCOUNER, v. n. 1. To loathe; to nauseate, S.

S C U

Yea, some will spue, and bock, and spit
At moats like to a midge's foot.
We scunner at most part of meat,
Which we're not used for to eat.

Cleland's Poems, p. 104.

2. To surfeit, S.B.

3. To shudder at any thing, because of its repugnance to the dictates of the mind.

"This James—procured the Pope's dispensation to marry his eldest son upon his brother's daughter, sister to the said William. By this cause, without doubt, the whole lands should be united in one; yet, notwithstanding, the rest of the Douglasses scunnered, thinking the marriage to be unlawful." Pittscottie, p. 18.

4. To hesitate, to startle at any thing from doubtfulness of mind.

"He explains his notseeing through the King's authority, and says he scunnered to own it, and that such things had been done, as in a well guided commonwealth would annul his right." Wodrow, ii. 301.

5. To shrink back from fear.

Bot thai that held on feyt in hy
Drew thaim away deliuerly;
And scounryt nocht for that thing,
Bot went stoutly till assailling.

Barbour, xvii. 651. MS.

According to Sibb., this word is "merely a variety of shudder," But the idea is contrary to evidence. A.S. scunning signifies abomination; on-scun-ian, to loathe; scun-ian, in its simple state, not only vitare, aufugere, but timere, reveriri; whence we discover the reason why its derivative scunner is applied, not only to loathing, but to fear. It appears, indeed, that fear is the primary idea. Thus, in like manner, Germ. scheu-en signifies vitare, fugere, verab-sheu-en, abominare. The radical word may be Isl. sky, abhorrere, evitare.

SCUNNER, SKUNNER, SKONNER, s. 1. Loathing; abhorrence, S.

We might have missed a beastly blunner,
Had we not spewed out our skunner
Against this Test, in every where,
As Antichristian hellish ware.

Cleland's Poems, p. 106.

Sae comes of ignorance, I trow;
'Tis this that crooks their ill-far'd mou'
With jokes sae crouse, they gar fouk spew
For downright skonner.

Ross's Helenore, Beattie's Address, st. 12.

"The head o't was as yallow as biest milk; it was enough to gi' a warsh-stamach'd body a scunner." Journal from London, p. 3.

2. A surfeit, S.B. 3. The object of loathing; any person or thing, which, from whatever cause, excites disgust. S.

To SCUNNER, v. a. To disgust; to cause loathing. S.

SCUR, s. The minute cancri in pools, &c. V. SCROW, s. 2.

SCUR, s. The Cadew, or May-fly. S.

SCURDY, s. 1. A kind of moorstone, S.

"The greater part of the parish stands on rock of moorstone, commonly called scurdy: it is of a dark blue colour, and of so close a texture that water cannot penetrate it."

P. Lunan, Forfars. Statist. Acc. i. 442.

2. A resting-place in general; a favourite seat. S.

Isl. skord-a, firmo, colloco firmiter; skorda, fulcrum?

SCURF AND KELL. V. KELL. S.

SCURL, SKURL, s. A dry scab after a sore, S. as Sibb. observes, a dimin. from scurf.

SCURLY, adj. Opprobrious. Scurly words, Loth.; corr. from Fr. scurrile, id, SCURR, s. A low blackguard. Any thing low. S.

SCURRIE, adj. Low; dwarfish; as, Scurrie-thorns. S.

SCURRIE, s. The Shag; Pelecanus Graculus. S.

SCURRIEVAIG, s. V. SKURYVAGE. S.

SCURRIE-WHURRIE, s. A hurlyburly. S.

SCURROUR, SKOURIOUR, SKURRIOUR, s. 1. A scout.

The spy he send, the entré for to se,
Apon the moss a scurrou sone fand he,
To scour the land Makfadyane had him send.

Wallace, vii. 796. MS.

In a dern woode thai stellit thaim full law;
Set skourioris furth the contré to aspye.

Ibid. iv. 431. MS.

Although Fr. coureur signifies a scout, the term may be from Fr. escur-er, literally to scour, as the v. is metaph. used in military language, to scour the fields, or as above, to scour the land. Ital. scorridori signifies a scout. Its form would indicate some affinity to Su.G. skyr-a, circumcursitare.

2. An idle vagrant fellow, Rudd.

SCUSHIE, s. A cant term for money, Aberd. perhaps formed by corr. from cash.

Or if, as we have sometimes seen,
Mischance should wear their schushy done,
May some guid friend the want supply.

V. LANG-CRAIG, 2.

Shirref's Poems, p. 245.

SCUSHLE, s. A scuffle. S.

SCUSHLE, s. An old, thin, worn-out shoe. S.

To SCUSHLE, v. n. To make a noise in walking with shoes either too large, or which have the heels down. S.

SCUSIS, pl. Excuses.

Thy scusis and rusis
Sall serue for na effect;
Bot rather, sall farther
Thy knaifré to detect.

Burel's Pilgr. Watson's Coll. ii. 45.

Ital. scusa, an excuse. Rusis, self-commendations.

SCUTARDE, s. "Skulker," Pink.

I have ane wallidrag, ane worm, ane auld wobat carle,—
Ane scabbit skarth, ane scorpion, ane scutarde behind.

Maitland Poems, p. 48.

It seems rather to convey the idea of one in whom nature is so decayed, that he has lost the power of retention; from the v. Scout, q. v.

To SCUTCH, v. a. To beat; to drub.

"He made a long and pitiful narration of Strafford's oppression: That being at table with Lord Mure and Lord Loftes, discourse falling in concerning the Deputy's scutching of a gentleman with a rode, of his name, and of the gentleman's treading, by accident, on the Deputy's gouty toes, it was alledged he had said, that man had a brother in England who would not be content with such a revenge for such an affront," &c. Baillie's Lett. i. 269.

To SCUTCH LINT. After the flax has been beat with a mallet upon a smooth stone to separate the seed from the rind, it is divided into handfuls which are held alternately in the left hand over a small perpendicular board fixed firmly in a sole, while, with a wooden instrument somewhat like a sword, held in the right hand, it is scutched, or whipped, till the flax is completely separated from the rind. S.

It is the same with E. scotch, although applied in a peculiar sense. The flax is whipt or beat with a switch. Ital. scutic-are has been given as synon. with E. scotch. Scusso signifies stripped. Perhaps it is radically the same with the E. v. to switch.

SCUTCH, SKUTCH, s. 1. A wooden implement, shaped like a sword or coulter, used in dressing flax, hemp, &c. 2. One of the pieces of wood which, in a lint-

- SCUTCHER, s. The same with Scutch, sense 1. S.
- SCUTIFER, s. A term equivalent to Squire. S.
- To SCUTLE, (pron. as Gr. v) v. a. To pour from one vessel to another backwards and forwards, in a childish way; so as frequently to imply the idea of spilling part of the liquid, S. synon. jirgle. See Sup.
- This may seem akin to Isl. skutl-a, to toss backwards and forwards, (ultro citroque jactare,) Germ. schuttel-n, motitare, from Su.G. skudd-a, Germ. schutt-en, to pour out, which have been traced to Chald. שדש, shada, fudit. Our term, however, has great resemblance to Isl. gutl-a, liquida moveo, et agito cum sonitu; G. Andr. p. 100.
- SCUTLES, s. pl. Any liquid that has been tossed backwards and forwards from one drinking vessel to another, S. synon. jirgle. V. the v.
- SCUTTAL, s. A pool of filthy water. S.
- To SCUTTER, v. n. To work in an ignorant, awkward, and dirty way.—To SCUTTER, v. a. To make or do any thing in this way. S.
- To SCUTTER up, v. a. To bungle up; to botch. S.
- SCUTTLINS, s. pl. The light wheat, or refuse, of which an inferior kind of flour is made. S.
- SCUTTLIN-FLLOUR, s. The flour made of light wheat. S.
- SE, s. Seat; residence; as the see of Rome.
Hir native land for it postponis sche,

- SEANTACK, s. A fishing-line across a river, to which baited hooks are suspended by short lines. S.
- SEARCHERS, s. pl. Officers formerly employed to apprehend idlers on the streets during public worship. S.
- SEATER, s. A meadow, Orkney.
“As to our meadows, they are always called Seaters. Though I am little acquainted with the Norwegian language, I understand a Seater to be a place for maintaining milch cows; and these Seaters are to this moment properly adapted for it. We have many in this parish, namely, Kirk-seater,” &c. P. Birsay, Statist. Acc. xiv. 320, N.
I know not whether this be allied to Su.G. soed, Isl. saudr, cattle, a flock; or sed-ia, to feed, pasci; G. Andr. p. 204.
- SEATER, SETER, s. The green pasturage attached to a dwelling in the ancient language of Shetl. V. STER. S.
- SEATH, SEETH, SETH, SAITH, SEY, s. The coalfish, Gadus Carbonarius, Linn. S. See Sup.
“Seath, Gadus Carbonarius.” P. Glasgow, Lanarks. Statist. Acc. v. 536.
“The fish, which frequent Lochlong, are cod, haddocks, seath, lythe,” &c. P. Arroquhar, Dunbartons. Ibid. iii. 433.
“The fish commonly taken on this coast are cod, skate, hollibut, haddocks, whittings, saiths or cuddies.” P. Drainy, Elgin, Ibid. iv. 79.
“The tenants have from their landlords threepence allowed for a ling, a penny for a cod or tusk, and a half-penny for a seth (cole fish.)” P. Dunrossness, Shetl. Ibid. vii. 397.
“Asellus Niger, the Colefish of the North of England, our fishers call it a Coleman's Seeth.” Sibb. Fife, p. 123.
These fish are called not only seaths, but “podlers and baddocks,” on the East coast. V. BADDOCK.
“In Orkney and Shetland the fry are called sillocks or sellocks; at Edinburgh, podleys; and at Scarborough, pars. The year-old coal-fish is the cooth of Orkney; the piltock of Shetland; the pollock of the Hebrides; the glasscock of Sutherland; the cuddie of the Moray Frith; the grey-podley of Edinburgh; and the billet of Scarborough. The appearance of the coal-fish varies much with its age; hence a new series of provincial names. In Orkney it is, 1. a sillock; 2. a cooth; 3. a harbin; 4. a cudden; and, 5. a sethe. The full-grown fish is also, in different places, termed a sey, a grey ling, a grey lord, &c.” Neill's Tour, p. 209.
Dr. Barry mentions only three stages.
“The Coalfish (gadus carbonarius, Lin. Syst.) which is so well known here by the name of the sellock, cuth, or seth, according as the age of it is either one or two or more years, is much more abundant than any other, and, indeed, exceeds in number almost all the rest of our fish taken together.” Hist. Orkney, p. 293.
They are also, in an early stage, called Tibrics. V. TIBRIC.
Isl. seid is thus indefinitely expl., Pisciculi nomen, G. Andr. p. 204. Shall we suppose that sey, the name of the pollack in Norway, has been transferred to this fish? V. SYE, s. 2.
- SEAT-HOUSE, s. The manor-house on an estate. S.
- SEAWA, s. A discourse; a narrative. S.
- SECOND-SIGHT, s. The power of seeing things future, or things distant, especially of a disastrous kind, supposed to be inherent in some of the inhabitants of the Highlands and Islands of Scotland. S.
- SECRET, s. A coat of mail concealed under one's tants of usual dress.
“How soon the Earl [Gowrie] saw him in his chamber, he called upon this deponent [Henderson,] and bad him put on his Secret and Plate Sleeves." Cromarty's Acc. of Gowrie's Conspiracy, p. 47.

This is evidently distinguished from the armour used for the head. For Henderson afterwards sent to his own house for his "steel-bonnet and gantlet." Ibid. p. 48.

"Let thy secret loue bee vnto his soule like a Secret or jack in this bloodie battell." Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 1172.

This term has been borrowed from the Fr., but changed as to its application. For Fr. secrete is a thin steel-cap, or a close scull worn under a hat; Cotgr.

SECT, s. Attendance on an overlord by his vassals, in the court held by him. 2. Pursuit, Sect of court, legal prosecution. S.

To SECT, v. n. Meaning unknown, perhaps errat. S.

SECT, s. V. WYNE SECT, the wine called Sack. S.

SECTOURIS, s. pl. Perhaps, executors. S.

SEDEYN, adj. Sudden; sedeynly, suddenly. This is the orthography of the Perth Edit. of Wallace. Both sodeyn and sodeynly are used in the MS., the o, if I mistake not, invariably, where it has been read as e.

SEDULL, s. A schedule; used in reference to the Legend of a Popish Saint.

Compleyn, Sanctis, thus, as your sedull tellis,

Wallace, ii. 215. MS.

To SEE* about one. To acquire an accurate acquaintance with surrounding circumstances. S.

To SEE till or to, v. a. To care for; to attend to; as, "She'll be weel seen till." 2. To observe; to survey. S.

To SEED, v. n. A mare or cow is said to seed when the udder begins to swell and indicate pregnancy. S.

SEED-BIRD, s. A name given to a sea-fowl, S.A.

"Sea-fowls appear here in great numbers in the spring, about seed-time; they follow the plough, and are thence called seed-birds." P. Sprouston, Tiviotdale, Statist. Acc. i. 67.

SEED-FOULLIE, s. The Wagtail, S. Motacilla alba, Linn.

Perhaps q. seed-foul, from Su.G. saed, and fugl. Or the latter part may be formed from folja, sequi; q. the companion of the seed-time. For its Sw. name, saedsaerla, has this signification; as it announces to the husbandman the proper time for sowing. Saedsaerla, motacilla, ab ara, nuntiare, quippe quae suo adventu colonis nuntiat, tempus adesse, quo hordeum sulcis mandandum est; Ihre, vo. Saed.

SEED-FUR, s. The furrow into which the seed is to be cast. S.

SEED-LAUEROCK, s. The Wagtail. S.

SEEDS, SEIDIS, s. pl. 1. The remains of the husks of oats after grinding. 2. That part which remains in meal. S.

SEEING-GLASSE, s. A looking-glass; a mirror. S.

To SEEK, v. a. To attack in a hostile manner. V. SOUCHT.

To SEEK one's meat, to beg, S. to Gae fra door to door, synon.

To SEEK,* v. a. To court; to ask in marriage. S.

SEEK AND HOD. The game of Hide and Seek. S.

SEELFU', adj. Pleasant. V. SEILFU'.

SEENIL, adj. Rare; singular. V. SEYNDILL. S.

SEENILLIE, adv. Singularly; remarkably. S.

To SEEP, v. n. To ooze. V. SIPE. S.

SEER, s. One supposed to have the second-sight. S.

SEERIE, adj. Weak; feeble. V. SARY, SAIRY. S.

To SEETHE, v. n. To be nearly boiling, S.B.

S E G

The sense is thus varied from that of the E. v., of A.S. seoth-an, Isl. siod-a, Su.G. siud-a, Germ. sied-en, aestuare; which Wachter views as allied to Heb. עִיִּי, efferbuit.

To SEFOR, v. a. To save; to preserve; to provide a remedy.

With God's grace, wee tak it upon hand,

To sefor this as ressoun can remeid;

In tyme to cum thair of thair be na pleid.

Priests of Peblis, S.P.R. i. p. 14.

It is printed sef or, as if two words. But this I apprehend, is by mistake. The safrie (pron. sai-frie) of any thing is the preservation of it in safety. It sometimes denotes the reward supposed to be due for the care exercised in preserving and returning any thing that has been lost; from Fr. sauv-er, to save, to preserve. V. SAFER.

To SEG, SEYG, v. n. 1. To fall down. See Sup.

This term is especially used concerning liquids, when, in consequence of absorption, they sink down in the wooden casks that contain them, S. swag, E. The roof of a house is also said to be seggit, S.B. when it has sunk a little inwards.

2. Metaph. applied to the influence of intoxicating liquor, S.B.

When drink on them begins to seg,

They'll tak's to see the showman.

Morison's Poems, p. 16.

Su.G. Isl. sig-a, subsidere, delabi; ek syg, lentè defluo; A.S. asig-an, dilabi; Belg. zyg-en, to fall down.

This word is evidently of great antiquity. For Ulphilas uses sig-an and ga-sig-an, as signifying, delabi, deorsum ferri, subsidere. Junius views sig-an as the origin of E. sink, Alem. senk-en, &c. mergi.

SEGGING, s. Act of falling down; state of being sunk. S.

SEG, SEGG, s. The yellow flower-de-luce; all broad-leaved rushes, S. See Sup.

"Iris pseudocorus. Segs, i. e. Sedge. Scotis." Lightfoot, p. 1078.

Seg, Gloucester. id. V. Marshall's Econ. Gl.

"I sau mony grene seggis, that ar gude to prouoke the flouris of vemen." Compl. S. p. 104.

A.S. secg, Fland. segge, id.

SEGGAN, s. The flower de luce. S.

SEGGY, adj. Abounding with sedges. S.

To SEG, v. a. To set the teeth on edge by eating any thing acid. S.

SEGE, s. 1. A soldier.

This gud squier with Wallace bound to ryd,

And Robert Boid, quhilk wald no langar bide

Vndir thrillage of segis of Ingland.

To that falss King he had neuir maid band.

Wallace, iii. 53. MS.

The A.S. word secg signifies "a soldier, a warrior;" Somner. Miles; vir strenuus, illustris; Lye. Isl. segg-ur, vir, miles; Verel. Ind. Seigr, homo propositi tenax. It is probably from the same source with Su.G. seger, siger, A.S. sige, Germ. sieg, victory; especially as Isl. sig signifies battle, fight.

It seems pretty evident, that Blind Harry uses sege in its primary sense, as it refers to the military government of our injured country under Edw. I.

2. Used for man, in a general sense.

I slaid on ane suevynyng, slomerand ane lite,

And sone ane selkouth sege I saw to my sycht.—

Thare is na sege for na schame that schrynkis

schorte,

May he cum to hys cast be clokyng but coist.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 238, a. 9. 25.

Hickes, among different examples of the word being used in this secondary sense in O.E., refers to the following from P. Ploughman.

I have seen segges, quoth he, in the city of London
Bere byghes full bryght about their neckes.—
I must sit, sayd the Segge, or els I must needs nap.—
I am a Surgeon, sayd the Segge, and salves can make.

SEGE, s. 1. A seat; properly, a seat of dignity.

For feyndys ar off sic natur,
That thai to mankind has inwy;
For thai wate weill, and witterly,
That thai that weill ar lifand her,
Sall wyn the sege, quharoff thai wer
Tumblyt throuch thair mekill prid.

Barbour, iv. 228. MS.

Doun sat the goddis in thare segeis dyuyn.

Doug. Virgil, 312, 26.

Prince Eneas from the hie bed with that

Into his sege riall quhare he sat,

Begouth and sayd. Ibid. 38, 34.

2. A see.

"Item, Anentis the article maid to prouyde, how the auld actis and statutis, maid aganis thame that dois contrare the kingis priuilege, grantit to his predecessouris and successouris, be the sege of Rome," &c. Acts, Ja. V. c.
100. Edit. 1566. V. Aw, v.

3. The berth in which a ship lies.

Fr. siege, a seat; corr. from Lat. sedes.

SEGYT, part. pa. Seated; placed; set.

Quhare-evyr that stane yhe segyt se,

Thare sall the Scottis be regnand.

Wyntown, iii. 9. 48.

To SEGE, v. a. To besiege.

SEGG, s. Bull-seg, an ox that has been gelded at his full age, S. This name is used both in the North and South of S. See Sup.

"Bull-segg, a gelded bull. North." Gl. Grose.

Sibb. adds, "A foul thick-necked ox, having the appearance of a bull;" Gl. Shall we therefore suppose that the designation is formed from A.S. seccg, callus; "the thick skinnies in a man's hands, or other parts grown with labour?" V. Somner. Isl. sigg, callus.

SEGSTER, s. An old Aberdeen term for a sexton. S.

To SEY, v. a. To assay; to try. V. SAY, v.

SEY, SAY, s. 1. A trial; the act of tasting.

He and the Erll bathe to the Queyn thai went

Rasawyt hyr fayr, and brocht hyr till a tent;

To dyner bownyt als gudly as thai can,

And serwit was with mony likly man.

Gud purwyance the Queyn had with hyr wrocht,

A say scho tuk off all thing that thai brocht.

Wallace persawyt, and said, We haiff no dreid;

I can nocht trow ladyis wald do sic deid,

To poyssoun men, for all Ingland to wyn.

Sey, Ed. Perth.

Wallace, viii. 1271. MS.

i. e. "The Queen herself tasted of all the food she had brought with her, that the Scots might be assured she had no design to poison them." It is absurdly rendered in editions;

An assay she took of all that gud her thought.

2. An endeavour, an attempt, of any kind. I sall mak a sey to do it, S.

SEY-SHOT, s. An opportunity given in play to regain all that one has lost. S.

SEYAL, s. A trial. S.

SEY-PIECE, SAY-PIECE, s. A piece of work performed by a craftsman, as a proof of his skill in any particular art.

Sure Nature herried mony a tree,

For sprains and bonny spats to thee;

Whase pencil wrought its freaks at will
On thee, the sey-piece o' her skill.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 35.

SEY, s. The Coal-fish. V. SYE.

To SEY, v. a. To strain any liquid, in order to its purification, by making it to pass through a fine

Isl. sy-a, percolare; A.S. se-on, ge-se-an, Germ. sey-en,
Belg. seigh-en, sijgh-en, Dan. si-er, id.

SEY-DISH, s. The searce used for straining milk, S.

Sigh-clout occurs in the same sense in a copy of Tak your auld cloak, &c. in the E. idiom, Percy's Reliques,
i. 149.

Sometime it was of cloth in graine,

'Tis now but a sigh-clout as you may see.

Isl. sij, Teut. sijgh, sijghe-vat, a strainer, id. Kilian.

Hence probably Fr. sas, id.

SEY, s. 1. The Sey of a gown or shift is the opening in which the sleeve is inserted. S.

2. In the dissection of an ox or cow, the back bone being cut up, the one side is called the fore-sey, the other the back-sey. The latter is the sirloin. See S.

His squeamish stomach loaths the savoury sey,

And nought but liquids now can find their way.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 95.

Great tables ne'er engag'd my wishes,

When crowded with o'er mony dishes;

A healthfu' stomach sharply set,

Prefers a back-sey piping het.

Ibid. ii. 363.

Isl. sega is rendered portuncula, particula, and applied to the division of the body of a man; Verel.

SEY, s. A kind of woollen cloth, formerly made by families for their own use, S. O.E. id. say, E. See Sup.

And ye's get a green sey apron,

And waistcoat of the London brown.

Ritson's S. Songs, i. 50.

Fr. sayete, "the stuffe sey;" Cotgr. Skinner derives it from Fr. saye, Ital. saio, Hisp. sayo, a long-skirted jacket, a military coat; all from Lat. sag-um, id. because, he says, such cloth was proper for this purpose.

SEY, s. The sea.

Anone al most ye wend to sey in fere.

Doug. Virgil, 44, 34.

SEY-FAIR, adj. Properly, carried by sea; but used to denote what strictly pertains to the seafaring line.

In an action before the Admiralty court against some merchants of Hamburg for exporting a few bolls of wheat from Scotland, "it wes allegit be Maister Johnne Spens, prolocutor for the merchants of Hamburg, that the said Admiral, nor his deputes, wer na juges competent in the said matter, becaus it was na sey fair matter." Acts Sederunt, 16 January 1554.

SEY, s. A shallow tub; a tub with handles. V. SAY. S.

To SEY, v. a. To see; pron. of the south of Scotland. S.

SEIBOW, SEBOW, s. A young onion, S.

"That his Grace would discharge tith sebowes, leekes, kail, onions, by an act of secret council, till a Parliament be conveened." Act Gen. Assembly, A. 1574. Calder-wood, p. 822.

Germ. zwiebel, an onion, zwiebelein, a young onion;
perhaps from Lat. cepe. The Germ. also use the phrase zweibel-bett for a bed of onions.

Palsgrae defines O.E. "chebole, a young onion; ciuol,"

Fr.; scipouille, a sea onion.

According to Lye, it appears that this term was used in Moes.G. from sild-aleik-jan, admirari, Add. Jun. Etym.
SEILE, SEYLE, SELE, s. Happiness; prosperity, S.B.
 He thoct weill he wes worth na seyle,

 "Seil never comes till sorrow be away;" Ramsay's S. Prov. p. 61.
 Su.G. saell, happy, Isl. saela, happiness. This seems only a secondary meaning. A.S. sel signifies good, in a moral sense. The transition is very natural; for moral goodness can alone produce true happiness. As A.S. sael is used in the sense of bene, well; it also signifies, tempus opportunum, thence transferred to what happens prosperously, res prosperae, integrae; Lye.
SEILY, SEELY, adj. Happy. Seely Wights, and Seely Court, a name given to the Fairies. See Sup.

 R. Galloway's Poems, p. 64.
 Sibb. says that this is a "perversion of Teut. and Sax. selden, raro." But it is evidently from a quite different origin; Su.G. saen, saender, singulus; en i saender, singuli; sin, unus, singularis. Ihre marks the affinity between sin and Lat. singulus. Su.G. sinung signifies singular; sinaledes, sinalund, every one in his own way, as opposed to those who act conjunctly; quisque suo modo. In one instance I find single used for seindle in a prov. phrase. It appears as the adj.
 "Single vse maketh pleasures the more agreeable."
 Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 863.
SEINDLE, SINDLE, adj. Rare; not frequent, S. synle, seenil, S.B. A seenil ein, one occurring by itself and seldom, Ang. V. preceding word.

It seems probable, however, that here it signifies such a procession in honour of the Saints, as is common in Popish countries, when their images are carried through the streets. For in MS. II. it is;

"Efter Easter he come to Edinburgh to hald thair processioun."

Lord Hailes improperly renders seinye filth, Lat. sanies, V. NOTE, pp. 257, 258.

Mr. Macpherson views it as corr., like O.Fr. senne, from Gr. συνδος. In Dict. Trev., however, senne, which is rendered, assemblée à son de cloche, is derived from Lat. sign-um; Fr. sign, a signal, the sound of a bell, whence tocsin. Bullet derives senne from Celt. sen. O.Fr. sanes was used to signify parliaments or general assemblies. A.S. seonath, a synod; Teut. seyne, seene, senne, id.

He also observes that Lat. se has the same force in composition; as se-orsum, apart, se-parare, to separate, &c. I have observed no A.S. term that has any affinity; although ser, sere, is used by R. Brunne and other O.E. writers.

SEIR, s.

Ane helme of hard steill in hand has he hynt,

Ane scheld, wrought all of weir,

Semyt wele upon seir. Gawan and Gol. ii. 17.

If this be the true reading, the phrase may signify, curiously devised, from A.S. sear, a device. It is feir, however, in Edit. 1508. Thus it would signify, in good order, well prepared, as fere of were. But it is doubtful, whether this be not an error in the old copy, as by this reading the usual alliteration is lost.

Doug. Virgil, 253, 26.

According to Mr. Macpherson, sen (conj.) "seems merely the part. passive of se [to see] as the Fr. use veu." This agrees with what has been advanced by Mr. Tooke, Divers. Purl. i. 269.; with this difference, that while he derives the prep. from the part. past, he says that the conj. has sometimes the sense of the one part., and sometimes of the other. But seen that, or seen as, seems a harsh and unnatural resolution of since now used for sen.

One great and obvious defect of Mr. Tooke's ingenious system, viewed in a general light, is, that it proceeds on the supposition that the A.S. is a language completely insulated; or at least, that whatever intimacy of connexion it has with the cognate tongues in other respects, it has none with regard to the formation of its particles. As it is universally admitted that the A.S. and O.Sw. were so similar, that a Saxon could easily converse with a Swede; it might naturally be supposed that A.S. seoththan, siththan, deinde, postea, were radically the same with Su.G. sidan, sedan, id. Now the Su.G. conj. has no affinity to se, videre; but is evidently from sid, sero, post. There is no good reason to doubt, that A.S. siththan, has had a similar origin. For sith exactly corresponds in its signification to Su.G. sid. Moes.G. seitho, signifies late, sero. Ihre (vo. Sedan.) accordingly views A.S. siththan as comp. of sith, post, and than, tunc, as corresponding to postea, posthinc. He also observes, that the order observed in the A.S. term is inverted in Moes.G. thanaseiths, posthac. The world, mik ni thanaseiths saiquhith, seeth me not henceforth; John xiv. 19. This is from than, tunc, and seith, sero. Alem. sid also signifies postquam. Isl. sijdan, Teut. seyd, sind, postea. It must, therefore, be quite unreasonable to deduce sen, in its different forms, from the v. see; as this mode of derivation pours contempt on all the analogy of kindred tongues, and even destroys the unity of the same language. For it might have been added, that there seems to be no example of n or nd being changed into th, in the formation of A.S. words.

Sen may be viewed as bearing the same relation to A.S. siththan, as Su.G. sen to sidan, postea, of which it is a contraction. Su.G. sindan was used as synon. with sidan. Send, thereafter, q. v., in its form corresponds to this. V. SYNE, adv.

"The Earl of Athol went next to the French Ambassador, bearing the great sierge of wax." Spotswood, p. 197.

Mr. Macpherson renders the term, as used by Wyntown, lamps. But in this case there must be a deviation from the proper sense: Fr. cierge, the largest kind of wax-candle; sometimes, a flambeau. Veneroni expl. Ital. cerio by flambeau, and cierge as synon. Lat. cer-eus, id.; as properly being made of wax.

SERGEAND, s. 1. "A degree in military service seemingly now unknown;" Gl. Wynt.

He gat a gret company.

Wyntown, viii. 26. 396.

Spelman views S.B. serjantus as equivalent to scutiger. It seems indeed to correspond to squire, or the attendant of a knight. The term is evidently a corr. of Lat. serviens. It however appears, from Du Cange, that serjantus was also used to denote a soldier on foot, one belonging to the infantry; and sometimes an inferior kind of knight, eques serviens.

2. An inferior officer in a court of justice.

In this sense serjeant and seriaund are used by Skene. But the E. word bears the same meaning.

SET, s. 1. The particular spot in a river or frith, where stationary nets are fixed, S.

"Interrogated, How many feith-sets have the Nether Don fishers on the Fraserfield side of the river, and what are the names of them?—Below the bridge there are two feith-sets:—and during his time, he never heard or knew that the heritors of Nether Don, or their tenants, were interrupted in the use and possession of said feith-sets." State, Leslie of Powis, v. Fraser of Fraserfield, p. 56.

2. The net thus set, S.

"Interrogated, Whether the fishers have not been in the practice of hauling their fishing-nets and feith-sets to the shore at the different places above-mentioned,—when-ever they had occasion to do so? Depones, that they were in use to do so; that in the night-time, and when the water is flooded, the fishers go in boats to their feith-sets." Ibid.

Teut. sett-en; Su.G. saett-a, collocare; saetta ut et naet, to lay or spread a net, Seren.

SET, s. Used nearly in the same sense with attack, shock, or onset, S.

Great may the hardships be, that she has met,

And gotten for my sake so hard a set.

Ross's Helenore, p. 45.

I shanna tell you, nor can I do yet,

How sad the set was, that my heart did get.

Now I might gang as soon, and drown mysell,

As offer hamewith, after what befel. Ibid. p. 70.

It is always used in a bad sense; as, a set of the toothache, a set of the cauld, &c.

SET, s. Kind; manner; fashion. 1. A new set o't, a new kind, S. 2. Shape; figure; cast; make. 3. The pattern of cloth, especially when there are different colours, as in tartan. 4. The socket in which a precious stone is set. S.

SET, SETT, part. pa. Worked after a particular pattern. S.

Either from set, as signifying a scion, or Su.G. saett, manner, fashion, wise.

To SET, v. a. 1. To become one; in respect of manners, rank, merit, obligations, &c. See Sup.

And in spek whispit he sum deill;

Bot that sat him rycht wondre weill.

Barbour, i. 393. MS.

It sets him well, wi' vile unscrapit tongue,

To cast up whether I be auld or young.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 148.

"It sets him ill to behave sae to me," i. e. He acts a very ungrateful part.

2. To become, applied to any piece of dress, S. See S.

Wald scho put on this garmond gay,

I durst sweir be my seill,

That scho woir never grene nor gray,

That set hir half so weill.

Henryson, Bannatyne Poems, p. 104.

Hence setting, "becoming, graceful," S.

— Says she, that lad was a' her care,

That was so setting with his yellow hair.

Ross's Helenore, p. 50.

3. Used in a neut. form; She's a setting lass, S. as signifying, that although a young woman has no claim to beauty, she has that prepossessing appearance, or natural gracefulness of manner, that makes her look to advantage.

The ither too was a right setting lass,

Though forthersome.— Ross's Helenore, p. 94.

A dress is said to set one, or to be setting, when it becomes the complexion or form of the wearer, S.

Su.G. saet-a, convenire; saetelig, conveniens. At hann saeti sem bezt; what is most proper for his station, S.

what sets him best, Spec. Reg. p. 623. Ihre, on this word, refers to the Fr. impers. v. sied, as a cognate term. Cet accoustrement luy sied bien; This garment becomes, be- seems, or fits him well, Cotgr.

SET, s. 1. The set of a borough, its particular consti- tution, or the form of its administration, according to charter, including the number of magistrates and counsellors, the mode of election, &c. S. See Sup.

"At last, Charles I, in 1633, established and confirmed all the grants of his royal predecessors, in favour of the borough; and the set, or form of its government, was rati- fied by the convention of boroughs, in 1706." P. Elgyn, Moray, Statist. Acc. v. 3.

2. The fixed quantity of any article regularly supplied. S.

Mr. Macpherson seems to view this word as radically allied to sauchtnyng, reconciliation, Isl. Sw. saett. Sibb. derives it from Su.G. saett, modus, saett-a, convenire. But the origin is undoubtedly A.S. saet-an, set-an, statuere, constituere, Teut. sett-en, Germ. setz-en; whence gheset, gesetz, lex, constitutio; Alem. kesezzidu, institutione, Kero ap. Schilt.

To SET after ane, v. a. To pursue one, S. I set, or set out, after him; I pursued him.

This is a Su.G. idiom. Saetta efter en, aliquem proper- ato cursu persequi; saett-a, cum impetu ferri, being thus used.

To SET off, v. n. To go away; to begin a journey; generally implying the idea of expedition, S.

SET, SETT, conj. Though; although.

And set tyl this I gawe my wylle,
My wyt I kene swa skant thare-tylle,
That I dowte sare thaime tyl offende.

Wyntown, i. Prol. 33.

Thocht all war heyr the schippis of braid Bertane,
Part suld we loss, set fortoun had it suorn;
The best wer man in se is ws befor.

Wallace, ix. 83. MS.

Sic plesand wordes carpand he has forth brocht,
Sett his mynd troublit mony greuous thocht.

Doug. Virgil, 19, 28.

Seren. mentions Sw. oansedt as used in the same sense.

A.S. set is expl. ideo, idcirco. This particle is most prob- ably the imperat. of the v., like suppose.

SET,* part. pa. Disposed; applied to the temper of mind, or, as in E., the disposition.

Bot he quham by thou fenys thysel begatte
Achill was not to Priame sa hard sette.

Doug. Virgil, 57, 7.

"As Scot. we say, He is very ill set, i. e. ill natured, crabbed, cross-grained; as the E. say, ill-contrived;" Rudd.

"The commissioners told how the marquis and town of Aberdeen were peaceably set, obedient to the king and his laws." Spalding's Troubles, i. 118.

SET, adj. Cast down; distressed; afflicted. S.

"The second chiel was a thick, setterel, swown pallach." Journal from London, p. 2.

From A.S. sett-an, Su.G. saett-a, to place, to fix. We say that one is set in his growth, when it is supposed that he will not grow any taller, S.

SETTRELS, s. pl. The young sprouts plucked in spring from coleworts planted in the end of autumn. S.

SETTRIN, SET RENT, s. A certain portion allotted to a servant or cottager, when working to his master; consisting of different kinds of food, as porridge, broth, and bread, Ang. Perth.

More is generally allowed than one person can eat; but whatever the labourer leaves, he has a right to carry home to his own family. The vessel appropriated to this use is called the settrin cap. The phrases settrin bread, settrin meal, &c. are also used.

This is a corr. of set rent. "We say Scot., He lives upon his purchase, as well as others on their set rent, Prov." Rudd. vo. Parches. V. also Kelly, p. 392.

"Now I think the very annuity and casualties of the cross of Christ,—and these comforts that accompany it, better than the world's set rent." Rutherford's Lett. P. i. ep. 6.

SEUCH, SEWCH, s. 1. A furrow; a small ditch, S.

In the meyn tyme Eneas with ane pleuch

S H A

The cieté circulit, and markit be ane seuch.

Doug. Virgil, 153, 11.

It is now written sheugh. V. SHARN.

2. A fosse connected with a rampart; a ditch surrounding a fortification. 3. A gulf.

As we approchit neir the hillis heid,
Ane terribill seuch birnand in flammis reid
Abhominabill, and how as hell to see,
All full of brinstane, pick, and bulling leid,—
I saw.——— Palice of Honour, iii. 4.

Seugh, A. Bor., a wet ditch; E. sough, a subterraneous drain; not from Fr. sous, as Johnson derives it, but as allied to Teut. soye, souwe, cloaca, Isl. saag-r, Sw. sog, colluvies, ductus aquae fluentis. Perhaps Lat. sulc-us, is from the same origin. Heb. שִׁחָה, shuhah, fossa, fovea; from שָׁחָה, shuahh, inclinari, deprimi.

To SEUCH, v. a. 1. To cut; to divide.

Thay seuch the fludis, that souchand quhare thay fare
In sunder slidis.——— Doug. Virgil, 132, 17.

2. To plant by laying in a furrow. V. SHEUCH. S.
Lat. sulc-are. V. the s.

The Son, the seuin sternes, and the Charle wane.
Doug. Virgil, Prol. 239, b. 2.

SEW, pret. v. Sowed, Doug. V. SKAIL, v. 1.

SEWAN BELL.

For and I flyt, sum sege for schame suld sink,— Roches suld ryve, the warld suld hald nae gripis;
Sa loud of cair the sewan bell suld clink.
Dunbar, Chron. S.P. i. 351.

Perhaps this name might be given to the bell rung to call the monks to their devotions, q. the recollection-bell, Fr. souven-ir, to remember.

SEWANE, s. "Seems to signify some drug or medical composition," Rudd. "Some kind of confection, or sweet-meat," Sibb.

—— Triakil, droggis, or electuary,
Seropys, sewane, succure, and synamome.
Doug. Virgil, Prol. 401, 40.

Qu. sabine, S. savin, a plant to which powerful effects are still vulgarly ascribed?

SEWANS, s. pl. Expl. sowens, by Mr. Pinkerton, as occurring Houlate, iii. 6. But in MS. it is sewaris, i. e. sewers, officers who serve up a feast.

Mony sauourous sawce with sewaris he send.

SEWIS, s. pl. Places where herons breed. V. HERONE
SEW. S.

SEWSTER, s. A sempstress. S.

To SHAB, v. a. To smuggle; to send any person or thing away privately. S.

S H A

SHABLE, SHABBLE, s. 1. A crooked sword, or hanger. See Sup.

"A sea-captain offered to strike off my head with a shable." Colvil, Introd. to Mock Poem, p. 8.

"Even the church-yard on a Sunday was sometimes the scene of action, where two hostile lairds, with their respective adherents, rushed upon one another with their dirks and their shabbles." P. Strathdon, Aberd. Statist. Acc. xiii. 184.

Su.G. Dan. Belg. sabel, Germ. saebel, Fenn. sabeli, a crooked sword, a scymitar. Wachter derives the term from Arab, seif, a sword, properly of the falchion kind.

2. It is now generally used to denote an old rusty sword; Ane auld shable, S. 3. Any little person or thing. S.
- To SHACH, v. a. To shape or form any thing in an oblique way, to distort; pret. shacht; part. pa. id. also beslacht, S. See Sup.

There are many cognates in the other Northern languages. Isl. shag-a, to decline, to bend, to turn out of the way; deflectere, G. Andr.; shaga, a promontory which stretches obliquely; shack-ur, shackr, obliquus, impar, in-equalia habens opposita latera; shacht, obliquitas, duarum ejusdem rei laterum inequalitas, Landnamab. Gl.

These words are formed from Isl. sha, an inseparable particle, corresponding to Lat. dis, and denoting disjunction. Hence also Su.G. ligga skafottes, divaricata crura alterius capiti obvertere, Ihre; to lie heads and throws, S.; shack-a, to set asunder; shack-a, to divide, to break off; Isl. skaegeltand, one who has unequal teeth, q. whose teeth are shacht, or shachtelt. To the same fountain must we trace Isl. skeif-r, Dan. skaev, Germ. schief, E. skew, and askew, oblique.

SHACH-END, of a web, the fag-end, where the cloth becomes inferior in quality, in consequence of the materials growing scanty, or of the best being used first, S.B. V. preceding word.

To SHACHLE, v. a. To use any thing so as to distort it from its proper shape or direction, S. He has shachlit aw his shoon, he has put his shoes quite out of shape. Hence Shachlin, unsteady, infirm, S. See S.

SHACHLED FEET. Distorted feet, S.

"Ye shape shoon by your ain shachled feet;" Ramsay's S. Prov. p. 86.

I spier'd for my cousin, fu' couthy and sweet,—
And how her new shoon fit her auld shackl't feet.
Leg. shackl't. Burns, iv. 250.

Teut. schahl, schehl, obliquus. V. SHACH.

SHACHLED SHOON or SHOES. Metaph. a female that has been deserted by her lover, or thrown aside like a pair of old shoes. S.

SHACHLE, s. 1. Any instrument or machine that is worn out, S.B. 2. A weak animal, all shachled or shaken. 3. A feeble, diminutive, half-distorted person. S.

To SHACHLE, SHOCHEL, v. n. To shuffle in walking, S. shochle, Loth.

"Had you such a shoe on every foot, you would shochel;" S. Prov. "A scornful return of a woman to a fellow that calls her she, and not by her name." Kelly, p. 142. She, (S. scho.) is pron. in the same manner as shoe.

SHACKLE-BANE, s. 1. The wrist, S. improperly written shekel bane.

He gowls to be sa disappointed,
And drugs, till he has maist disjointed
His shekel bane.—— Ramsay's Poems, ii. 495.

Contrive na we, your shakle banes
Will mak but little streik.

Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 35.

q. The bone on which shackles are fixed. A.Bor. shackle of the arm, id.

2. Used also to denote the pastern of a horse. S.
SHAFT, s. A handle; as a whip-shaft, the handle of a whip, S.

Su.G. shaft, Isl. shapt, manubrium.

SHAFTS, s. A designation of one kind of woollen cloth, Aberd.

"Clothes manufactured from the above wool, — three quarters to yard broad seys, sarges, shafts, plaidings, baizes, linsey-woolseys, jemmies, and striped apron stuffs." Statist. Acc. (Aberd.) xix. 208.

SHAG, s. 1. The refuse of barley, or that which is not properly filled, generally given to horses or cattle, S. dichtings, synon. See Sup.

As, in thrashing, the beards are not so easily separated from this kind of corn, as that which is fully ripened, it may have received its name from this circumstance; from Su.G. skaegg, hair in general, hence applied to the beard; Isl. skegg, Dan. skiaegg, id. A.S. sceage, coma.

2. The term is sometimes applied to the refuse of oats. S.

SHAIRN, s. The dung of cattle. V. SHARN. S.
To SHAK one's crap, to speak loudly and vehemently, to give vent to one's ill humour, S.B.

Afore ye lat him get o'er meikle time
To shak his crap, and scauld you for the quean,
Be bauld enough to tell him a' your mind.

Shirref's Poems, p. 54.

This metaph. seems borrowed from the cackling of a fowl, when provoked.

To SHAK a fa', [fall], to grapple, to wrestle, S. V. FAW.
To SHAK a foot. To dance. S.

To SHAKE, * v. a. One is said to be sair shaken, when much emaciated by disease or long confinement. S.

SHAKE, s. Emaciation as above; a sair shake. S.

SHAKE-DOWN, s. "A temporary bed made on the floor, when a house is crowded;" S. V. Sir J. Sinclair's Observ. p. 173. See Sup.

It is also used metaph.

They've taen him neist up in their arms,
And made his shak-down in the barns.

Allan o' Maut, Jamieson's Popul. Ball. ii. 238.

SHAKE-RAG-LIKE, adj. Like a tatterdemalion. S.

SHALE, s. A name given to allum ore. S.

SHALL, s. The scale of a balance for weighing. S.

SHALL, s. A shell, Aberd. S.

SHALLOCH, adj. Plentiful; abundant. S.

SHALLOCHY, adj. Shallow; as, Shallochy land. S.

SHALT, s. A horse of the smallest size. Syn. Sheltie. S.

To SHAM, v. a. To strike, Loth.; as, I'll sham your legs.

To SHAMBLE, v. n. 1. To rack the limbs by striding too far; as, You'll shamble yoursell, pron. shammil, Ang.

2. To distort the face; to make a wry mouth, S.

Hence shamble chafts, wry mouth, distorted chops, S.B.

Compare you then to Thersites,

Wha for's ill-scrappit tongue,

An' shamble-chafts, got on his back

Puss wi' the nine tails hung.

V. SEMBYL. Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 24.

To SHAMBLE, v. a. To distort; to writhe. S.

SHAMBO, SHAMBO-LEATHER, s. Shamoy-leather. S.

SHAME, * s. In profane language used for the Devil; as, Shame care! or in imprecation; as, Shame fa' ye!

i. e. befall you. Syn. with Foul, Sorrow, Mischief. S.

SHAMLOCH, s. A cow that has not calved for two years.

SHAMMEL-SHANKIT, adj. Having crooked legs. S.

SHAMS, s. pl. Legs. Fr. jambes, id.

SHAN, adj. 1. "Pitiful; silly; poor;" Gl. Rams.

Of umquhile John to lie or bann,

Shaws but ill will, and looks right shan.—

Ye're never rugget, shan, nor kittle,

But blyth and gabby.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 225, ii. 329.

2. Shan in Ayr. seems to signify backward; averse. S.

Allied perhaps to A.S. scande, Teut. schande, ignominia, dedecus; Su.G. skaend-a, probro afficere. See Sup.

Shan, shame-facedness, bashfulness; Linc. Gl. Grose.

SHAND, adj. Pitiful; worthless. S.

To SHANE, v. a. To heal; to cure; properly denoting the supposed effect of superstitious observances. S.

SHANG, s. A sort of luncheon; a shang o' bread and cheese, a piece; a bite between meals. S.

SHANGAN, s. "A stick cleft at one end, for putting the tail of a dog in, by way of mischief, or to frighten him away;" Gl. Burns, S. See Sup.

He'll clap a shangan on her tail.— Burns, iii. 62.

Perhaps originally the same with Shangie, s. q. a shackle.

As denoting what is cloven, it may, however, be derived from the Isl. part. ska, signifying disjunction. See Sup. V.

SHACH.

To SHANGIE, v. a. To enclose in a cleft piece of wood, S.A.

A bridal haudin at the mill,

The watch were there resortin,

To shangie ilka lassie's tail.—

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, ii. 8.

SHANGIE, s. 1. A shackle that runs on the stake to which a cow is bound in the byre; hence also called rin-shackle, Fife. V. SHANGAN.

2. The chain by which dogs are coupled. S.

SHANGIE, adj. Thin; meagre, S.

Gael. seang, small, slender, slender-waisted; seang-aim, to make slender or thin, to grow slender; Shaw.

SHANGINESS, s. The state of being slender; meagreness. S.

SHANK of a hill, the projecting point of a hill, S. V. Now. See Sup.

SHANK of a coal mine. The pit that is sunk for reaching the coals, S. See Sup.

From A.S. scenc-an, to sink; or perhaps the E. word, as denoting a handle, is used metaph., in the same manner as shaft for a pit.

SHANK, * s. The handle; as, "the shank o' a spune." S.

To SHANK, v. a. To sink a coal-pit. S.

To SHANK off, v. n. To depart quickly. V. SCHANK. S.

SHANKS, s. pl. Stockings. V. SCHANK.

SHANKUM, s. A person or beast with long small legs. S.

SHANNACH, s. Commonly expl. a bone-fire; but properly one lighted on Hallow-eve, Perth.; sometimes shinicle. See Sup.

It is corr. from Gael. Samhnag, or, as it is otherwise written, Samh-in, the great festival observed by the Celts at the beginning of winter. Dr. Smith, having spoken of Beltane, says;

"The other of these solemnities was held upon Hallow-eve, which, in Galic, still retains the name of Samh-in. The word signifies the fire of peace, or the time of kindling the fire for maintaining the peace. It was at that season that the Druids usually met in the most central places of every country, to adjust every dispute, and decide every controversy. On that occasion, all the fire in the country was extinguished on the preceding evening, in order to be supplied, the next day, by a portion of the holy fire which was kindled and consecrated by the Druids. Of this, no person who had infringed the peace, or was become obnoxious to any breach of law, or any failure in duty, was to have any share, till he had first made all the reparation and submission which the Druids required of him. Whoever did not, with the most implicit obedience, agree to this, had the sentence of excommunication, more dreaded than death, immediately denounced against him. None was allowed to give him house or fire, or shew him the least office of humanity, under the penalty of incurring the same sentence.—

“In many parts of Scotland, these Hallow-eve fires continue still to be kindled; and, in some places, should any family, through negligence, allow their fire to go out on that night, or on Whitsuntide, [Gael. Be'il-tin,] they may find a difficulty in getting a supply from their neighbours the next morning.” Galic Antiquities, Hist. Druids, pp. 31—33. V. HALLOW-EEN BLEEZE.

SHANNAGH, s. “It is ill shannagh in you to do” this or that; i. e. It is ill your part to do so. S.

SHAP, s. A shop. V. CHAP. S.

To SHAPE away, v. a. To drive away.

Ane cursit fox lay hid in rox;—
Nane might him shape away.

Spec. Godly Sangs, p. 6.

Lord Hailes renders it, without any apparent reason, “cut off.” It is certainly allied to Germ. schieb-en, schupf-en, to drive; Teut. schuyff-en, id. Kilian.

SHAPINGS, s. pl. The small bits of cloth cut off with the scissors in shaping any piece of dress. S.

SHARD, s. A little despicable creature; used as a term of reproach to one that is puny or deformed. S.

To SHARE, v. a. To pour off the lighter parts of a liquid from the heavier. The same with Schire, v. S.

To SHARE, v. n. Applied to liquids, when they separate in a vessel into two or more parts. S.

SHARINS, s. pl. The least valuable part of liquids. S.

SHARG, s. A tiny mischievous creature. S.

SHARGIE, adj. Thin; shrivelled. S.

To SHARG, v. a. To tease; applied to language. S.

SHARG, s. Petulant unnecessary expostulation. S.

SHARGAR, SHARGER, s. A lean person; a scrag; sometimes used to denote a weakly child, S. also shargan.

At first I thought but little of the thing;
But mischief's mother's but like midge's wing.
I never dream'd things wad ha gane this length;
But we have e'en seen shargars gather strength,
That seven years have sitten in the flet,
And yet have bangsters on their boddom set.

Ross's Helenore, p. 89.

V. PLAY-FEIR and WARYDRAGEL.

It seems radically the same with E. scrag, which Dr. Johnson derives from Belg. scrughe, a word I have not met with. Seren., however, mentions Belg. scraghe, id.

SHARN, SHEARN, SHAIRN, s. The dung of oxen or cows, S. scarn, A. Bor. See Sup.

They turn'd me out, that's true enough,
To stand at city bar,
That I may clean up ilka sheugh,
Of a' the sharn and glaur.

R. Galloway's Poems, p. 30.

A.S. scearn, Fris. scharn, Dan. skarn, dung.

SHARNEY-FACED, adj. Having cow-dung on the face. S.

SHARNY, adj. Bedaubed with cows' dung, S.

“Ye shine like the sunny side of a sharney weght;”

i. e. an instrument for winnowing corn; Ramsay's S. Prov. p. 86. This is spoken in ridicule of those who appear fine.

SHARNY-PEAT, s. A cake consisting of cows' dung mixed with coal-dross, dried in the sun, and used by the poor for fuel in some places, S. Cows' dung, dried for the same purpose, is called casings, A. Bor. Ray.

SHARNIE, s. The person who cleans a cow-house. S.

SHARPING-STANE, s. A whet-stone. S.

SHARRACHIE, adj. Cold; chill; piercing; a term applied to the weather, S.B.

Sometimes it is pron. shellachie, which is possibly the original word, from the same fountain with chill, written schill by Doug.

SHARROW, adj. 1. Bitter, in relation to the taste; also used in a general sense. 2. Keen; sharp. S.

SHATHMONT, s. A measure of six inches in length.

His legs were scarce a shathmont's length,
And thick and thimber was his thighs.

Ritson's S. Songs, ii. 139.

It is more properly written SCHAFTMON, q. v.

To SHAUCHLE, v. n. To walk with a shuffling or shambling gait. SHAUGHLIN', part. pr. shambling. S.

SHAVE, SHEEVE, s. A slice; as, a shave of bread, S. shive, E. See Sup.

Be that time bannocks and a sheeve of cheese
Will make a breakfast that a laird might please.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 73.

She begs one sheave of your white bread,
And a cup of your red wine.

Jamieson's Popular Ball. ii. 124.

Belg. schyf, a round slice. This is indeed the precise sense of our term. Sw. en skifwa brod, id. from skifw-a, diffindere, in tenues laminas secare; Isl. skyfe, scindo, seco.

To SHAVE, v. a. To sow, Aberd. shaw, Buchan.

SHAVELIN, s. A carpenter's tool. V. CHAVELING. S.

SHAVER, s. A humorous fellow, a wag, S.; V. Gl. Shirr.; a low word; borrowed from the idea of taking off the beard. See Sup.

SHAVIE, s. A trick or prank; a disappointment. S.

To PLAY one A SHAVIE. } To play one a trick good

To WORK one A SHAVIE. } or bad; to disappoint one. S.

SHAVITER, s. A term expressive of contempt; as, a puir drunken shaviter; a blackguard. S.

SHAVITER-LIKE, adj. Having a blackguard appearance. S.

SHAUL, SHAWL, adj. Shallow. V. SCHALD. S.

SHAULING, s. The act of killing salmon by means of a leister, S.A. V. LEISTER.

SHAUM, s. The leg or limb. S.

SHAUP, s. 1. The hull; the husk; as, a peashaup, the hull of peas, S.

2. Metaph. for an empty person, one who is a mere husk.

Here, Sir, you never fail to please,
Wha can, in phrase adapt with ease,
Draw to the life a' kind of fowks.

Proud shaups, dull coofs, and gabbling gowks.

Ramsay's Works, i. 134.

3. Used to denote weak corn. S.

Teut. schelp, putamen, Su.G. Isl. skalp, vagina; Dan. skulpe, “hulls, husks, cods, or shells of pulse,” Wolff; from Germ. schel-en, Su.G. skyl-a, to cover.

SHAUPIT, part. pa. Furnished with pods. S.

SHAUPIE, SHAWPIE, adj. Lank; not well filled up. S.

SHAW, s. Show; appearance. S.

SHAW, s. A wood. V. SCHAW. S.

SHAW, s. A piece of ground that turns suddenly flat at the bottom of a hill or steep bank. S.

SHAWL, adj. Shallow. V. SCHALD and SHAUL. S.
SHAWS, s. pl. The foliage of esculent roots; as of potatoes, turnips, carrots, &c. S.

It is also used in sing., to denote all the herbage of a single root; as, a carrot-shaw.

"A potatoe shaw was lately dug up, which had 103 attached to it, the least of them of a proper size, and the most part very large, all produced from a single potatoe, set uncut." Edin. Evening Courant, 31. Oct. 1805.

Teut. schawe, umbra; originally the same with S. and E. shaw, a wood.

SHEAD of corn. V. SHED of corn.

SHEAL, SCHELE, SHEIL, SHIELD, SHIELLING, SHEELIN, s. 1. A hut, or residence for those who have the care of sheep; also a hut for fishermen, S. See Sup.

"On the sides of the hills, too, upon spots where shields have been occasionally erected, to shelter the shepherds in summer and harvest, when feeding their flocks at a distance from their ordinary dwellings, the sward is richly variegated with clover, daisies, and other valuable grasses and wild flowers." P. Durness, Sutherl. Statist. Acc. iii. 377.

"Here we refreshed ourselves with some goats' whey, at a Sheelin, or Bothay, a cottage made of turf, the dairy-house, where the Highland shepherds or graziers live with their herds and flocks, and during the fine season make butter and cheese." Pennant's Tour in S. 1769, pp. 122. 123.

"The fishers built another sheal on the said haugh on the north side, and both sheals on the north side still remain: That said sheals are built of feal." State, Leslie of Powis, &c. 1805. p. 143.

2. A shed erected for sheltering sheep, on the hills, during the night; containing also a lodge for the shepherd, S.

3. A summer residence; especially, one erected for those who go to the hills for sport, S.

"It [Durness] surely has been a sheal, or summer dwelling of old, belonging to the bishopric of Caithness." P. Durness, Sutherl. Statist. Acc. iii. 576.

4. Schelis, pl. Wynter schelis, winter quarters; the term being improperly used.

"Agricola—returnit in Brygance, leuand his army in the wynter schelis." Bellend. Cron. B. iv. c. 11. In hibernas dimissus exercitus, Boeth.

5. Metaph. used to denote a nest for a field-mouse.

As I hard say, it was a semple wane

Of fog and fern, full fecklessly was maid,

A silly sheil, under a eard-fast stane.

Henryson, Evergreen, i. 146.

This term is not unknown in England. "Sheal, a cottage or shelter: the word is usual in the wastes of Northumberland and Cumberland." Camden's Remains, Surnames, Let. S.

It is undoubtedly of Gothic origin. Isl. sael is used precisely in the first sense given above, also saelo-hus, and sello-bod. The former is thus defined by Verel; Tuguria in sylvis, montibus, aut litoribus, quae aestivo tempore inhabitant, qui pecorum pascendorum curam habent, aut iter per inuia facientes. Sael, domuncula aestiva in montanis; saeluhus, tuguria viatoribus ad pernctandum exstructa; G. Andr. p. 205.

A.S. sæld, seld, a mansion, Alem. selitha, a tabernacle, seem to be from the same fountain.

Perhaps it is the same word which appears with the insertion of h; Su.G. skale, Isl. skali, a cottage, whence skalabu, one who dwells, or has a hut, in the woods. In Iceland, "formerly houses were built in some particular places for the use of travellers, which were called Thiod- brautar-skaala;" Von Troil, p. 57. Isl. skiul is used almost exactly as in sense 2. Latebra, proprie tectum sine parietibus, ad arcendam pluviam a substantibus; gardaskiul, q. a yard shiell; shogaskiul, a wood or schaw-shiell, &c. V. Verel. Ind. p. 229. Ihre informs us, that, in the Salic Law, skaal denotes a building, hastily thrown together, in which the hunters lie in wait. The affinity of this to sense 3. is so plain, as to require no illustration. Hence probably Isl. skall-a, to drive wild beasts into the nets; and skalla-lag, the society of huntsmen. Ihre derives skale, a cottage, from skyl-a, to cover; whence also skiul, tegmen, the same with the Isl. word mentioned above. Sael has been deduced from Moes. G. sal-jan, to inhabit, whence salithwos, habitations, mansions.

As Ir. sgalain denotes huts, cottages, (Obrien) Gael. id. (rendered in sing. by Shaw;) it seems highly probable that the Celts borrowed the term from the Goths, with whom it appears to have been of far more general use.

It may be conjectured, that this word was used by the Picts to denote even their superior sort of buildings, otherwise called burgs or bruchs. For, according to G. Andr., Dan. skale has the sense of conclave, rotunda domus; as distinguished from stue, which he renders, curta domus.

To SHEAL, SHIEL, v. a. To sheal the sheep, to put them under cover, to enclose them in a sheal, S.

I see a bught beyond it on a bog.

Somebody here is shealing with their store,

In summer time, I've heard the like afore.

Ross's Helenore, p. 77.

Shill is used in the same sense, A. Bor. But Grose improperly expl. it, "to sever sheep;" misled by the similarity of the v. to that signifying to separate.

To SHEAL, v. a. To take the husks off seeds, S. See S.

"There are—great complaints that the corn is not well shealed," Statist. Acc. xvii. 117. V. SHILLING.

Belg. scheele, the husk; scheel-en, A.S. sceal-ian, Germ. schal-en, Su.G. skal-a, to shell, putamen auferre; Germ. geschalete gerste, peeled barley.

The radical v. seems to be Su.G. skil-ia, A.S. scyl-an, disjungere, because thus the grain is separated from the husk.

To SHEAR, SCHEIR, v. a. 1. To cut down corn with the sickle, S. A. Bor. See Sup.

2. To reap, in general.

And sen that thou mon scheir as thou hes sawin,

Haue all thy hope in God thy Creatour,

And ask him grace, that thou may be his awin.

Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 258.

"Quhasa sawis littil, sall scheir litill alsa, and he that sawis plenteously sal lykwais scheir largely." Abp. Hamiltoun's Catechisme, 1552, Fol. 66, a.

SHEAR, s. The act of shearing or reaping. S.

SHEARER, s. 1. More strictly, one employed in cutting down corn, as distinguished from a bandster, or one who binds the sheaves, S.

Scarse had the hungry gleaner put in binde

The scattered grain the shearer left behinde—

Hudson's Judith, p. 3.

"Male shearers [receive] from 20s to 30s, female ditto from 15s to 20s for the harvest season." P. Maryculture, Aberd. Statist. Acc. vi. 82, N.

2. In a general sense, a reaper, S. See Sup.

Thus to gae to the shearing, to go to work as a reaper, without any reference to the particular kind of work in which one may be employed, S.

A.S. scear-an, tondere. But our use of the term seems of Scandinavian origin; Su.G. skaer-a, metere, falce secare; skaera saed, to reap, skaera, a sickle, shoerd, the harvest, skoerdetid, the time of harvest, i. e. S. the shearing. A reaper in Sw. is skoerdeman, i. e. a shearer.

SHEARIN, s. 1. The act of cutting down corn. 2. By a common metonymy, harvest in general. S.
To SHEAR, SHEER, v. n. To divide; to separate; to take different directions. S.
SHEAR of a hill. The ridge or summit, where wind and water are said to shear, or take different directions. S.
SHEAR-KEAVIE, s. That species of crab called Cancer depurator, Linn. receives this name at Newhaven. V. KEAVIE.
SHEARN, s. V. SHARN.
SHEAR-SMITH, s. A maker of Wool-shears. S.
SHEAVE, s. A flat slice, as of bread, S. V. SHAVE.
SHED, s. A Shed of land, a portion of land, as distinguished from that which is adjacent, S. See Sup.
A Shed of corn, a piece of ground on which corn grows, as distinguished from the adjacent land on either side. S.
 From A.S. scead-an, Teut. scheyd-en, separare; scheyding, partitio.
SHED, s. 1. The interstice between the different parts of the warp in a loom, through which the shuttle passes, S. See Sup.
 "The principal part of the machinery of a loom, vulgarly called the Caam or Hiddles,—makes the shed for transmitting the shuttle with the weft." Adam's Rom. Antiq. p. 523. V. HEDDLES and SCHED.
 2. Used in a general sense for an interstice of any kind. S.
To SHED, v. a. To divide; to separate; particularly to separate lambs from their dams. S.
SHEDDIN', s. Separating lambs from the parent ewes. S.
SHED of the hair. V. SCHED, SCHED. S.
SHEDDER-SALMON. A female salmon. S.
SHEDE, SHEED, s. A slice; sheed, S.B.
 Shaftes in shide wode thei shindre in shedes.
Sir Gawan and Sir Gal. ii. 13.
 Assunder I shall hack it
 In sheeds this day.
V. SCHIDE. A. Nicol's Poems, 1739, p. 74.
To SHEED, v. a. To cut into flat slices, S.B.
SHEELING, s. The same with Shilling, q. v. S.
SHEELIN-HILL, s. The knoll or eminence near a mill where the grain is winnowed. S.
SHEEN OF THE EE. The pupil of the eye, S.B. sicht, sight, synon. from its brightness. V. SCHENE. See S.
 It may, however, be from A.S. seo, the sight of the eye; accus. seon.
SHEEP-HEAD SWORD. A basket-hilted sword. S.
SHEEP-NET, s. A net which, when hung upon stakes, forms an enclosure for confining sheep. S.
SHEEP-ROT, s. Butterwort or Yorkshire sanicle, an herb, S.B. Steep-grass, or Yearning-grass, S.A. Pin-guicula vulgaris, Linn. See Sup.
SHEEP'S-CHEESE, s. The root of Dog-grass. S.
SHEEP-SHANK, s. To think one's self nae sheep-shank, to be conceited. S.
SHEEP-SILLER, s. An allowance to ploughmen in lieu of permission to keep a few sheep on the farm. S.
SHEEP'S SILLER, s. Common Mica. S.
SHEEP'S SOWRUCK. Triticum repens. V. SOURUCK.
SHEEP-TAID, s. A tick or sheep-louse. Syn. Ked. S.
To SHEER, v. n. To divide; to part. V. SHEAR, v. S.

To SHEET, v. a. To shoot, Aberd. S.
SHEET STYTH. Shot dead. S.
SHEEVE, s. A slice. V. SHAVE.
SHEYL, SHYLE, v. a. To distort the countenance. S.
SHEIMACH, s. "A kind of pack-saddle; same with sunks." Gl. Sibb.
 But it seems more strictly defined, "a kind of bass made of straw or sprot-ropes plaited, on which the panniers are hung, which are fastened to a pack-saddle." Kincardines.
 This is nearly allied to Gael. sumag, Su.G. some, Alem. Germ. saum, a packsaddle. A.S. seam, sarcina jumentaria, sem-an, onerare.
SHEIMACH, s. A thing of no value, something that is worn out, S.B.
 This may be only a secondary sense of the preceding word, borrowed from a sheimach when useless.
SHEIKY, s. The seal, a fish. V. SELCHT. S.
SHELL. You're scarcely out of the shell yet; a phrase applied to young persons, to those especially who affect something beyond their years, S. It is obviously borrowed from a chick bursting the shell.
To SHELL down, v. a. To expend; applied to money. S.
SHELLYCOAT, s. 1. The name given to a spirit, supposed to reside in the waters, S.
 "Shellycoat, a spirit, who resides in the waters, and has given his name to many a rock and stone upon the Scottish coast, belongs also to the class of bogles. When he appeared, he seemed to be decked with marine productions, and in particular with shells, whose clattering announced his approach. From this circumstance he derived his name.—Shellycoat must not be confounded with Kelpy, a water spirit also, but of a much more powerful and malignant nature." Scott's Minstrelsy, I. Introd. civ. cv.
 2. A sheriff's messenger, or bum-bailiff, Loth.
 I dinna care a single jot,
 Tho' summon'd by a shelly-coat;
 Sae leally I'll propone defences,
 As get you flung for my expences.
Fergusson's Poems, ii. 70.
 Denominated perhaps from the badges of office on his coat.
SHELL-SICKNESS, s. A disease of sheep. S.
SHELM, s. A rascal.
 "When the Landgrave called him shelm, Pultroon, Traitor, and deceiver of him whose daughter he had married, he made earnest suit to the Emperour, for the liberty of his godfather, though in vain." Melvil's Memoirs, p. 12.
 Fr. schelm, knave, rascal, varlet. This, according to Cotgr., is from a Germ. word which signifies wicked.
 Germ. schelm originally signifies the carcase of a dog, or any other animal, that is cast out. Hence it has been applied to man; and denotes one whom all execrate as carrion, unworthy of the rites of sepulture. The reproach, as Wachter thinks, originated from this, that, as part of the punishment of some crimes, the bodies of the criminals were cast forth, after death, without burial.
 Su.G. shelm, Belg. schelm, E. shellum, Jun. shelm, id.
SHELM, s. The pieces of wood which form the upper frame of a cart, into which the starts or posts in the sides are morticed. S.
SHELMENTS, s. pl. V. SHILMONTS. S.
SHELTIE, s. A horse of the smallest size, S.
 "This country [Shetland] produces little horses commonly called shelties, and they are very sprightly, tho' the least of their kind to be seen any where; they are lower in stature than those of Orkney, and it is common for a man of ordinary strength to lift a sheltie from the ground: yet this little creature is able to carry double." Martin's West Isl. p. 377.

"Their horses are but little, yet strong, and can endure a great deal of fatigue, most of which they have from Zetland, and are call'd Shelties." Wallace's Orkney, p. 36.

"Col, and Joseph, and some others, ran to some little horses called here shelties, that were running wild on a heath, and caught one of them." Boswell's Journ. p. 252.

This was in the island Col, one of the Hebridae.

"The horses are well known for their small size and hardiness. They are called shelties in Britain." P. Unst, Shetl. Statist. Acc. v. 188.

Can this have any connexion with Germ. zelt, an ambling horse; zelter, a Spanish horse? Or may not Sheltie be rather a corr. of Shetland, q. a Shetland horse? The Isl. and Dan. name of these islands is Hialtland. V. Heims Kringla, i. 95.

SHEPHERD'S CLUB. The Broad-leaved Mullein. S.
SHEPHROA, s. A piece of female dress.

For she invented a thousand toys,—

As scarfs, shephroas, tuffs and rings.

V. TUFF. Watson's Coll. i. 30.

Perhaps something made of kid-leather finely prepared, from Fr. chevreau, a kid; unless it denoted some ornament like a star, from chevreaux, the designation of some stars that made their appearance about the twenty-eighth of September.

SHERARIM, s. A squabble. S.

SHERIFF-GLOVES. A perquisite belonging to the sheriff of the county of Edinburgh at each of the two fairs. S.

SHERRA-MOOR, s. V. SHIRRA-MUIR. S.

SHETH, SHETHE, s. 1. The stick with which a mower whets his scythe. 2. A coarse and ugly object. S.

SHEUCH, s. A furrow; a ditch. V. SEUCH. See S.

To SHEUCH, SHUGH, v. a. To lay plants together in the earth, when brought from the seed-bed, before they are planted out, that they may be kept from withering, S. q. to put them in a sheuch or furrow. See S.

To SHEUCH, (gutt.) v. a. To distort. S.

To SHEVEL, v. a. To distort, S. Hence shevelling-gabbit, q. having a distorted mouth.

Ye'll gar me stand! ye shevelling-gabbit brock.

V. SHOWL. Ramsay's Poems, ii. 147.

To SHEVEL, v. n. To walk in an unsteady and oblique sort of way, S. Shail, E. is nearly allied in sense.

Isl. skag-a, and skiogr-a, gradu ferri obliquo, are mentioned by Seren., as allied to E. shail. V. SHOWL.

SHEWARD, pret. Assured. S.

SHEWE, pret. of Shiave, Shaw, to sow. S.

To SHY, SHY AFF, v. n. Applied to a horse when it moves to a side from objects at which it is alarmed. S.

SHIACKS, s. pl. A light kind of black oats, variegated with grey stripes, having beards like barley, S.B.

"The species of oats used for this last, [fauchs with a single plowing, or one fur ley] and partly for the outfield, is called small oats, hairy oats, or shiacks. They yield from five pecks to half a boll of meal." P. Keith-Hall, Aberd. Statist. Acc. ii. 533.

Perhaps from Su.G. skaeck, variegated, as these oats are striped.

To SHIAUVE, v. a. To sow. S.

SHIEGLE, v. n. To shake; to be in a joggling state. S.

SHIEMACH, adj. Malignant; reproachful. S.

SHIFT, s. A rotation of crops. S.

SHILBANDS, s. pl. Cart-tops. Syn. Shilmonts. S.

To SHYLE, v. a. To make wry faces. V. SHEYL. S.

To SHYLE, v. n. To look obliquely. V. SKELLIE. S.

SHILFA, SHILFAW, s. The chaffinch, a bird. See Sup.

Her cheek is like the shilfa's breast,

Her neck is like the swan's.

V. SHOULFALL. Mary Stewart, Hist. Drama, p. 113.

SHILFCORN, S.; SELKHORN, s. A thing which breeds in the skin, resembling a small maggot, and vulgarly considered as such; proceeding from the induration of sebaceous matter.

As worms and selkhorns, which with speed

Would eat it up.—

Colvil's Mock Poem, p. 1. 9.

SHILL, adj. Shrill. S.

SHILLACKS, SHILLOCKS, SHEELOCKS, s. pl. The lighter part of oats that is blown aside in winnowing. S.

SHILLING, SCHILLING, SHILLEN, s. Grain that has passed through the mill, and been freed from the husk, S.

Ersch Katherene with thy polk, breik and rilling,

Thou and thy quean as greidy gleds ye gang,

With polks to mill, and begs baith meil and schilling.

Dunbar, Evergreen, ii. 55.

"Another absurdity is, that shillen, i. e. shealing, or hulter corn, is measured by the tacksman of the mill, and is paid, not in shealing, but in meal. There are accordingly great complaints that the corn is not well shealed." P. Rayne, Aberd. Statist. Acc. xv. 117.

i. e. grain that is shelled. V. SHEAL, v. 2. For the same reason it seems to be denominated hulter corn, because the hull is removed.

SHILLIN SEEDS, SHEALING SEEDS. The outermost husk of corn, after being separated from the grain; used for drying the grain in the kiln. S.

SHILLY-SHALLY, adj. Weak; delicate. S.

SHILMONTS, SHELEMENTS, s. pl. 1. The frame or rail, generally extending over the wheels, which is laid on a corn-cart, for carrying a load of corn or hay, S. V. SHILVINS. S.

2. The longitudinal bars of the sides of a muck-bodied or close cart.

SHILPED, adj. Timid; as, a shilped wretch. S.

SHILPETNESS, s. Faintness; tremor. S.

SHILPIE, s. A person trembling always. S.

SHILPIE, SHILPIT, adj. 1. Insipid. Wine is said to be shilpit, when it is weak, and wants the proper taste, S. See Sup.

This seems the primary sense, from Su.G. shaell, insipidus, aquosus, Germ. schal, id. Belg. verschaalden wyn, flat wine; from Teut. verschael-en vento corrumpi, in vappam verti, saporem et odorem genuinum perdere; from schael, patera, q. too long left in the goblet or cup. V. Kilian.

2. "Of a sickly white colour, pale, bleached by sickness," Gl. Sibb. often shilpit-like. S. shilpie-like, S.B. See Sup.

Warsch, insipid, is used in the same metaph. sense.

3. Ears of corn are said to be shilpie, when not well filled, S.B.

In the latter sense it would seem more nearly allied to Teut. schelp, putamen, S. shaup, having only the appearance of a husk.

SHILVINS, s. pl. Rails that fixed the rungs which formed the body of a cart, constructed after the old fashion, Ang.

This word is also at times applied to the tops of a cart, or the frame used when it is loaded with hay or sheaves.

"Shelvings. Additional tops to the sides of a cart or waggon. North." Gl. Grose. It is the same with SHILMONTS.

Su.G. shelwing, discrimen, paries intergerinus; Ihre, vo. Shilia, disjungere. He thinks, however, that it should rather be written shelwaegg.

To SHIMMER, v. n. To shine.

The little windowe dim and darke

Was hung with ivy, brere, and yewe;

No shimmering sunn here ever shone;

No halesome breeze here ever blew.

Ritson's S. Songs, ii. 134.

And whan she cum into the kirk,

She shimmer'd like the sun.

V. SKIMMERIN.

Ibid. p. 190.

SHIMNER, s. One of the cross bars in a kiln for supporting the ribs on which the grain is dried. S.

SHIN of a hill. The prominent or ridgy part of the declivity, with a hollow on each side. S.

SHYND, SOIND, s. A court of law, Shetl. S.

SHYND or SOIND BILL. A deed executed in a court. S.

SHINGLE, s. Gravel. S.

SHINICLE, s. A bonfire. V. SHANNACH.

SHINNERS, s. pl. The refuse of a smith's stithy. S.

SHINNY, s. The game otherwise called Shinty. S.

SHINNY-CLUB, s. The bat used for striking at Shinny. S.

SHINNOCK, s. The same game as Shinty. S.

SHINTY, s. 1. A game in which bats, somewhat resembling a golf-club, are used. S.

"At every fair or meeting of the country people, there were contests at racing, wrestling, putting the stone, &c.; and on holidays all the males of a district, young and old, met to play at football, but oftener at shinty.—Shinty is a game played with sticks, crooked at the end, and balls of wood." P. Moulin, Perth. Statist. Acc. v. 72.

In London this game is called hackie, or perhaps more properly hockey. It seems to be the same which is designed not in Gloucester; the name being borrowed from the ball, which is "made of a knotty piece of wood;" Gl. Grose. See Sup.

This game is also called Cammon. V. CAMMOCK.

2. The club or stick used in playing, S. 3. The ball or knot of wood is called Shintie, Selkirks. Shinnie, Sutherl. Thus they speak of the club and shinnie. S.

Perhaps from Ir. shon, a club.

SHIOLAG, s. Wild mustard. S.

SHIPPER, s. A shipmaster.

"They called all the shippers and mariners of Leith before the council, to see which of them would take in hand to pass upon the said captain." Pitscottie, p. 95. V. SKIPPER, for which this is perhaps an error.

SHIRE, SHYRE, adj. 1. Used in the sense of strait or S. scrimp. 2. Thin. "Thin cloth we call shire." S.

SHIRIE, SHYRIE, adj. Thin; watery; applied to liquids. S.

SHIREY, adj. Proud; conceited. S.

SHIRLES, s. pl. Turfs for fuel, Aberd. corr. from Scherald, q. v.

To SHIRP away, v. n. To shrink; to shrivel. S.

SHIRPET, part. adj. Thin and tapering towards a point. S.

SHIRRAGH, adj. Having an acrid taste. S.

SHIRRAGLIE, s. A contention; a squabble. S.

SHIRRA-MUIR, SHERRA-MOOR, s. 1. A designation for the rebellion in favour of the Stuart family in 1715, from the name of the moor between Stirling and Dunblane, where the decisive battle was fought. 2.

Transferred to a violent contest of any kind. 3. A severe drubbing with the tongue. S.

SHIRROCHY (gutt.), adj. Sour; having a haughty but penetrating look. V. SHARROW. S.

SHIRROT, s. A turf or divot, Banffs. V. SCHERALD.

SHIRROW, s. A species of field mouse; the shrew. S.

SHIRT, s. "Wild mustard, Brassica napus," Gl. Sibb.

SHIT, s. A contemptuous designation for a child; generally denoting one that is puny, S.

Fra the Sisters had seen the shape of that shit,

Little luck be thy lot there where thou lyes.

Polw. and Montgom. Watson's Coll. ii. 16.

This seems the same with E. chit; Ital. cito, puer, puella. Gael. siota, however, signifies "a pet, an ill-bred child;" Shaw.

SHIT-FACED, adj. Having a very small face, as a child. S.

To SHITHER, v. n. To shiver. S.

SHITTEN, SHITTEN-LIKE, adj. Terms used as expressive of the greatest imaginable contempt. S.

SHITTLE, s. That which is good for nothing. S.

SHMYLICK, s. A gun or fowling-piece. S.

SHOAD, ON-SHOAD, s. A portion of land. Syn. Shed. S.

To SHOCHLE (gutt.), v. a. and n. V. SHACHLE. S.

SHOCHLES, s. pl. Legs; used in contempt. S.

SHOCHLIN', part. adj. Waddling; wriggling. S.

SHOCHLING, part. pr. Used metaph., apparently in the sense of mean, paltry.

Debts I abhor, and plan to be

Frae shochling trade and danger free,

That I may, loos'd frae care and strife,

With calmness view the edge of life.

V. SHACHLE, v. n.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 441.

SHODDIE, s. 1. A little shoe, like that of a child. 2.

The iron point of a pike-staff, or the pivot of a top. S.

SHODE-SHOOL, s. A wooden shovel, shod with iron. S.

SHOEING THE AULD MARE. A game of children. S.

To SHOE THE MOSS. To replace the uppermost and grassy turfs, after peats have been cast. S.

SHOELIN, part. adj. Distorted. S.

SHOES, s. pl. The fragments of the stalks of flax, separated by the mill or by hand-dressing, S. perhaps the same with Shaws, q. v. The only ground of doubt is, that shoes is used for lint in the same places, where the foliage of potatoes, &c. is called shaws. Pron. q. shows. See Sup.

To SHOG, v. a. To jog; to shake. V. SCHOG. S.

To SHOG, v. n. To shake from corpulence. S.

SHOG-BOG, s. A bog, through which a spring runs, and which undulates when one walks over it. S.

SHOGGIE-SHOU, s. A game. V. SHUGGIE-SHUE. S.

SHOGGLE, SHUGGLE, s. 1. A large piece of ice floating down a river in a fresh. 2. A clot of blood. S.

To SHOGLE, v. a. To jog. V. SCHOGGLE. S.

SHOGLE, s. A jog. S.

SHOLMIT, adj. White-faced; applied to an ox or cow. S.

SHOLT, s. A small horse. Also Shalt or Sheltie, q. v. S.

SHONY, s. The name given to a marine deity formerly worshipped in the Western Isles. S.

To SHOO, v. a. To produce a swinging motion. S.

SHOOD, s. The distant noise of animals passing. S.

SHOOGLE, s. A jog; a shog. V. SCHOGGLE. S.

SHOOI, s. A name given to the Arctic Gull. S.

S H O

SHOOL, s. A shovel. S.
To SHOOL, v. a. To shovel. To SHOOL aff. To shovel off. S.
To SHOOL frae. To remove from, by shovelling. S.
To SHOOL on. Metaph. to cover, as in a grave. S.
To SHOOL out. To throw out with violence. S.
SHOOL-THE-BOARD, s. A game. V. SLIDE-THRIFT. S.
SHOONE, s. pl. Shoes, S. shune. V. SCHONE. S.
SHOOP, pret. of v. to shape. S.
To SHOOT, v. a. To make a selection in purchasing cattle or sheep. V. SHOTT. S.
To SHOOT, v. a. To push; to push out; as, "I'll shoot him o'er the brae," "Shoot out your tongue." S.
OUTSHOT, s. A projecting building. S.
To SHOOT BY. To delay. V. SCHUTE. S.
To SHOOT AMANG THE DOWS. V. Dow, a dove. S.
To SHOOT, SHUTE, v. n. To run into seed. S.
To SHOOT, v. n. To push off from the shore in a boat, or to continue the course in casting a net, S.B.
"Depones, That they had the following shots on the Fraserfield side of the river,—the Throat-shot opposite the west point of the Allochy inch; and from thence they shot all the way to the sea." State, Leslie of Powis, 1805, p. 80. V. SHOT, s. 4.
To SHOP, v. n. To knock; to rap at a door.
"The most pairt of the warld ar so negligent in this poynt of dutie, that there are verie few that haue their heart free when the Lord shoppeth." Bruce's Sermon. 1591. B. Fol. 5. a.
Knocketh, Eng. Edit. But the proper word is chappeth. V. CHAP.
SHORE, s. The prop or support used in constructing flakes for enclosing cattle, S.A.
Shored is used in a similar sense, A. Bor.
Their Patron so did not them learn,
St. Andrew with his shored cross.
Propped, Note, p. 23. Battle Flodden, st. 131.
Teut. schoore, fulcimen; schor-en, schoor-en, fulcire;
Isl. skur, suggrundia. The word is used in E. in the sense of buttress.
To SHORE, v. a. To count; to reckon, S.
Su.G. skor-a, to mark; Isl. skora mantal, to number the people. The word is derived from skaer-a, to cut, from the ancient custom of making notches on a piece of wood for assisting the memory.
SHORE, s. Debt.
Syne for our shore, he died therefore,
And tholed pain for our mis.
Spec. Godly Sangs, p. 23.
In the same sense E. score is used, derived by Skinner from Belg. schore, scissura, ruptura. But V. the v.
For our shore might be rendered, "on our account."
To SHORE, v. a. 1. To threaten. V. SCHOR, v.
2. To offer, S.O.
A panegyric rhyme, I ween,
Even as I was he shor'd me. Burns, iii. 356.
This is merely an oblique sense of the v. as properly signifying, to threaten. The E. v. offer is used in a similar sense, S. He offered to strike me; i. e. he threatened to give me a blow.
3. Used impersonally to denote that rain is about to fall; as, It's shorin. 4. To shore a dog to or till, to hound a dog on cattle or sheep. 5. To shore him off or off, to recall him from the pursuit. S.
SHORT, adj. Laconic and acrimonious; as, a short answer, a tart reply; to speak short, to speak tartly, S.
See Sup.
"Gif Isaiah had bene als short and craibed as Jonas, no question he wald haue speared a reason at God." Bruce's Eleven Sermon. D. 6, a.

" He maun be little worth, that left you sae,"
" He maybe is, young man, and maybe nay."
" Ye're unco short, my lass, to be so lang;
" But we maun ken you better ere ye gang."
Ross's Helenore, p. 57.
Thus the adv. is used by Dunbar.
The gudwyf said richt schortlie, "Ye may trow,
" Heir is na meit that ganeand is for yow."
Maitland Poems, p. 74.
Su.G. kort, brevis, (whence Isl. skorte, desum,) is used in the same metaph. sense. Kort om hufwudet; Est homo qui facile irascitur; Kort swar, iratum responsum, Ihre, vo.. Stackig; and Teut. kort. Kort veur't hooft, iracundus, irritabilis. In like manner we say, Short of the temper, S.
SHORT-TEMPERED, adj. Hasty; irritable. S.
SHORTLIE, adv. Tartly. S.
To KEEP SHORT BY THE HEAD. To restrict as to expenditure; to give narrow allowance as to money. S.
SHORT-BREAD, s. A cake baked of fine flour and butter, to which sugar, carraways and orange-peel are frequently added. S.
SHORTCOMING, s. Defect; deficiency; used in a moral sense, as, shortcoming in duty. S.
SHORT-GOWN, s. A gown with short skirts worn by female cottagers and servants. Syn. Curtoush. S.
SHORTS, s. pl. 1. The refuse of flax separated by the fine hackle. The coarse hackle removes the hards.
2. The refuse of hay, straw, &c. S.
SHORTSYN, SHORTSYNE, adv. Lately; not long ago. S.
SHOT, s. 1. The act of moving in any game; a stroke in play, S.
Su.G. skott, ictus, from skiut-a, jaculari.
Thus it is applied to Curling.
— Some hoary hero, haply he
Whose sage direction won the doubtful day,
To his attentive juniors tedious talks
Of former times;—of mony a bonspeel gain'd,
Against opposing parishes; and shots,
To human likelihood secure, yet storm'd:
With liquor on the table, he pourtrays
The situation of each stone.
Graeme's Poems, Anderson's Poets, xi. 447.
2. The term is also used metaph.
" The great shot of Cromwell and Vane is to have a liberty of all religions, without any exception. Many a time we are put to great trouble of mind. We must make the best of an ill game we can." Baillie's Lett. ii. 62.
It might signify aim, object in view. But the connexion with game seems to determine the sense as explained above.
SHOT-ABOUT, s. Alternate moves; turn-about. S.
SHOT, s. To begin new shot, new bod, to begin any business de novo, after one has been engaged in it for a time; to do it over again, S.B.
This is most probably a very ancient phrase. I scarcely think that it respects play. It seems rather allied to Su.G. Isl. skot, E. shot, or share of money paid for drink, and bod, invitatio convivialis, Verel; q. "You shall not only have a new feast, but a new invitation."
SHOT. "To come shot; to come speed; to advance;" Shirr. Gl. S. See Sup.
Teut. schot, proventus; crescendi ratio; or rather schot, as in the Belg. phrase, Dat schip maakt schot; That ship goes a great pace; Sewel.
SHOT, s. Shot of ground, a field, a plot of land, Loth. synon. sched. See Sup.

Perhaps as originally signifying a small portion, q. a corner; Su.G. skoet, angulus.

SHOT, s. The wooden spout by which water is carried to a mill, S. perhaps from Su.G. skiuta, jaculari.

SHOT, s. A kind of window. V. SCHOTT.

SHOT, s. 1. That particular spot where fishermen are wont to take a draught with their nets, S.B.

"Interrogated, If the deepening that branch of the river called the Allochy, at the west end, would hurt the shot at that end of the Allochy, or if the deponent is a judge of fishing?" State, Leslie of Powis, v. Fraser of Fraserfield, p. 40.

"Being asked, If their fishing stations or shots have not been frequently repaired on both sides of the river, and at different times, ever since he was a fisher? depones, That they have: That by the reparation made by Dr. Gregory's dike,—the bed of the river to the sea has been deepened, and the navigation of it ameliorated." Ibid. p. 96.

2. The act of drawing a net, or the sweep of the net drawn at the Leaw, S.B.

"Depones, That the fishing of Nether Don could not be carried on without sights from the high banks, as she is not a good banging water, by which he means taking chance shots, without seeing the run of the fish." Ibid. p. 58.

3. The draught of fishes made by a net. S.

Teut. schote, jaculatio, q. the act of shooting off with the boat from the bank; Belg. Netten schieten, to cast nets, Sw. skiuta ut ifraan landet, to put off from the shore.

SHOT, s. V. ELFSHOT.

To SHUTE A-DEAD, to die; a phrase used concerning cattle. When they are very bad in any disease, it is said they are like to shute a-dead, S.B.

Perhaps in reference to animals pushing out their limbs at full length, when dying.

SHUTTLE, SHOTTLE, s. 1. A small drawer, S.
At Edinburgh we sall ha'e a bottle
Of reaming claret,
Gin that my half-pay siller shottle
Can safely spare it.

Hamilton, Ramsay's Poems, ii. 323.

2. A till in a shop; a money-box, S.
3. The shottle of a kist, a kind of box in the upper part of a chest, extending across. 4. A hollow in the stock of a spinning wheel, to contain a pirn or bobbin. S.
Isl. skutill, a table. Hence the Prov., Skam er skutill myn, quad Bonde; Short is my table, quoth the husband-man, or peasant; G. Andr. p. 209, vo. Skamr.

SHUTTLE o' Ice. A declivity or slope covered with ice.
SIB, SIBB, adj. 1. Related by blood, in a state of consanguinity, S. sib'd, id.

"Ane bastard, quhais father is incertaine, be the law

Fat needs him prattle mair?
Yet it's na far my gentle blude
That I do seek the gear.

Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 16.

This word occurs in P. Ploughman, but by Warton is erroneously expl. mother.

He hath wedded a wyfe, within these syx moneths,
Is syb to the seuen artes, Scripture is hyr name.

Fol. 47, b.

And but ye be sibbe to some of these sisters seuen,

Other in aliance of eny loue, to dethe he let bringe.
P. 315.

In a later MS. it is changed to sibbe.

A.S. sib, consanguineus; Neh sib, proxime cognatus, Leg. Eccles. Canut. 7. Su.G. sif, cognatus; Teut. sibbe, affinitas.

2. Bound by the ties of affection; in a state of friendly intimacy. 3. Possessing similar qualities; like; used metaph. 4. Similar in state or circumstances. 5.
Having a right or title to, in a legal sense, Sib to a good estate. 6. O'er sib, too intimate; applied to illicit connexion between individuals of different sexes. 7. To Mak Sib, to make free. S.

Some have derived this word from Lat. cipp-us, which,
as Cæsar informs us, was a word used by the Gauls to denote the trunk of a tree with its branches, (Bell. Gall.
L. 7. c. 73.); applied, by an usual transition, to the calculation of degrees of kindred. But Ihre justly prefers the idea, that the term primarily denoted peace, concord, (as Moes. G. gasib-jon, reconciliari.) For, says he, as the conjunction of blood, among relations, is viewed as a bond and pledge of concord; so with the ancients, it was almost always denominated from friendship. He refers to Su.G. fraende, (S. friend, a relation,) in proof of this.

Accordingly, A.S. sib seems primarily to have signified peace, as unsibbe denotes war; Alem. sibba, pax, siphea, Isidore; Su.G. Isl. sefe, quies, tranquillitas.

SIBMAN, s. A relation; a kinsman.
Sa maid he nobill chewisance.
For his sibmen wonnyt tharby,
That helpyt him full wilfully.

Barbour, iii. 403. MS.

—He gat speryng that a man

SIBNES, SIBNESS, s. 1. Propinquity of blood, S.
"The like is to be said, gif she be separate fra him, for parentage, and sibnes of blude (within degries defended and forbiddin)." Reg. Maj. B. ii. c. 16. § 74.

2. Relation; used in a metaph. sense, S.
"A man sometimes will see ugly sights of sin in this case, and is sharp-sighted to reckon a sibness to every sin." Guthrie's Trial, p. 86.

SIBBENS, SIBBINS, s. A disease. V. SIVVENS.
SIC, SICK, SIK, adj. Such, S. A. Bor. sike, id. See S.
The floure skonnys war set in by and by,
With vthir meissis sic as was reddy.

V. SWILK. Doug. Virgil, 208, 42.

SICCAN, adj. Such kind of. S.
SICKIN, SIKKIN, adj. Such kind of.
The wemen als, that on hir rydis,
Thay man be buskit up lyk brydis,
Thair heidis heisit with sickin saillis.

Sic ansuere gaif, and plane declaris it.

Doug. Virgil, 151, 22.

From sic, such, and kind, or A.S. cynn.

SICKLIKE, adj. Of the same kind; similar, S.

SIC and SICKLIKE. A phrase used to express strict resemblance, but generally in a bad sense; as, "They are all sic and sicklike, not one better than another." S.

SICKLIKE, adv. In the same manner.

"Sicklike, his instructions carried him to the removal of the high commission," &c. Baillie's Lett. i. 92.

SICWYSE, adv. On such wise.

And as thay flokkit about Enee als tyte,

Sicwyse vntill thaym carpit Sibylla.

Doug. Virgil, 188, 30.

SYCHT, s. 1. Sight, S.

2. Regard; respect.

"The pepill (that fled to kirkis and sanctuaryis) wer slane but only sycht to God." Bellend. Cron. B. vii. c. 11.

3. A great quantity of objects seen at once. S.

The term is frequently used by Bellenden in this sense; and corresponds to Belg. aan-zien, op-zigt, in-zigt, Sw. an-seende, an-sichte, Lat. respectus, from re and aspicio.

To SIGHT, SIGHT, v. a. To view narrowly; to inspect, S. from the E. s. See Sup.

To sicht the ones it will but vex his brane.

Lament. L. Scotland, Dedic.

"The moderator craved that these books might be sighted by Argyle, Lauderdale, and Southesk." Baillie's Lett. i. 103.

SICHT of the ee. V. SHEEN.

SIGHT, s. A station on the bank of a river, or elsewhere, whence those fishers called sightmen observe the motion of salmon in the river, S.

"That the fishers used sights, during the fishing season, upon Fraserfield's grounds, on the north of the river, and west of the bridge: that the westmost sight was above the Fluicky-shot, the next above the Ford-shot," &c. Leslie of Powis, &c. v. Fraser of Fraserfield, p. 56.

To SIGHT, v. a. A term used in fishing, to denote the act of spying fish in the water from the banks, in order to direct the casting of the net, S.B.

"Being asked, Whether the Seaton side in general is not the best side for sighting fish? depones, that it is so, and is most used." State, Leslie of Powis, &c. 1805, p. 123.

SIGHTMAN, s. One employed, in a salmon-fishery, for observing the approach of the fishes, S.

"They are also with propriety called sightmen; because, from habit and attention, they become wonderfully quick-sighted in discerning the motion and approach of one or more salmon, under the water, even when ruffled by the wind, and deepened by the flowing tide." P. Ecclescraig, Kincardine, Statist. Acc. xi. 93.

SICHTER, (gutt.) s. A great quantity of small objects seen at once; as, a sighter of birds, of motes, &c. S.

SICHTY, adj. Striking to the sight. S.

SYCHTIS, s. pl. V. FOIRSYCHT or FORBREIST. S.

SICK, s. Sickness, a fit of sickness, as; The sick's na aff him, S.B.

Moes.G. sauhts, Su.G. siuk-a, Germ. seuche, id. Sikes colde, cold fits of sickness, Chaucer, Knightes T.

Wyf of Bathes Prol. ver. 5976.

SICKER, SIKKER, SIKKIR, SIKKAR, SEKER. adj. 1. Secure; firm, S. See Sup.

"For quhat vthir thing is Baptyme, bot ane faithful cun-nand and sicker band of amitie maid be God to man, and be man to God?" Abp. Hamiltoun's Catechisme, Fol. 126. a.

2. Free from care.

Tho, quod hys fader Anchises, Al yone be

Thay saulis—

Qubilk drynkis younder, or thay may eschape

At yone riuer, and the flude Lethee,

The sikkir watter but curis, traistis me,

Quharby obliuious becum thay als tyte,

Foryetting pane bypast, and langsum syte.

Doug. Virgil, 190, 21.

i. e. the water free from cares.

3. Certain; as denoting assurance of mind.

"Thow suld be sikkar that the cause or matter qubilk thow confermes with ane eith is trew." Abp. Hamiltoun's Catechisme, Fol. 31. a.

4. Certain; as denoting the effect.

Our thourch his rybbis a seker straik drew he,

Quhill leuir and lounngis men mycht all redy se.

Wallace, ii. 407. MS.

— Thy groans in dowy dens

The yerd-fast stanes do thirle:

And on that sleeth Ulysses head

Sad curses down does bicker;

If there be gods aboon, I'm seer

He'll get them leel and sicker.

Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 6.

In this sense, we often speak of a sicker straik, a stroke that does not miss, that comes with all the force intended.

5. Cautious in mercantile transactions, or in the management of one's business, in whatever way, S. He, who is tenacious of his own rights or property, is said to be a sicker man.

There couthie, and pensie and sicker,

Wonn'd honest young Hab o' the Heuch.

This at least seems the sense, as it is afterwards said;

And Habbie was nae gien to proticks,

But guided it weel eneuch.

Jamieson's Popular Ball. i. 292. 293.

Isl. seigr is used in a similar manner. Seigr a sitt mal, causam suam obstinate persequens; Verel.

6. Possessing a good understanding, to be depended on as to soundness of judgment, S.B.

Says Colin, for he was a sicker boy,

Neiper, I fear this is a kittle ploy.

Ross's Helenore, p. 89.

7. Applied to language. He speaks very sick, he expresses himself in a precise and accurate manner, including also, in some degree, the idea of determination, S.

It is also used in O.E.

Siker was tho the Emperour, he ne leuede nogt by hynde. R. Glouc. p. 55.

Chaucer, id.

Rudd. derives it from Lat. secur-us. But as Su.G. seker, siker, Isl. seigr, Alem. sichurir, Germ. sicher, Belg. zeke, and C.B. sicer, have all the same sense; this word is probably as ancient as the Lat. Both may be from the same Scythian stock. Some might prefer an Oriental etymon; Heb. סָגַר, sagar, clausit. It properly signifies to put any thing into such a state that it cannot be easily moved, Stock. Clav.

To SICKER, v. a. To make certain; to secure. S.

SICKER, adv. Securely; certainly. S.

SICKERLY, adv. 1. Surely; firmly, S.

"That thou may be sickerly groundit in the trew faith of this sacrament,—dout nocht bot that our saluour Jesus Christ is baith man and God." Abp. Hamiltoun's Catechisme, Fol. 142, b.

2. Smartly ; severely, in relation to a stroke, S.

"Who spoke against conclusions, got usually so sickerly on the fingers that they had better been silent." Baillie's Lett. i. 384.

SICKERNES, s. Security, S.B. Baron Lawes. See Sup. It is used by R. Brunne, p. 147.

The kyng of France & he, at the riuer of S. Rymay, Held a parlement, gode sikernes to make,
That bothe with on assent the way suld vndertake.
Ilkon sikered other with scrite & seale therby.

SICK-LAITH, adj. Extremely unwilling to do any thing ; as, "I'll be sick-laith to do it." S.

SICKNESS, s. The Braxy, a fatal disease of sheep. S.

SICKRIFE, adj. Sickly ; having a slight degree of sickness, S. used improperly, as the sense attached to it does not correspond to the force of the adj. rife.

V. SICK.

SICK-SAIR'D, part. adj. Satiated to loathing. S.

SICK-TIR'D, adj. Fatigued to nausea. S.

SIDE, SYDE, adj. 1. Long ; hanging low ; applied to garments, S. See Sup.

Thare was also the preist and menstrale sle,
Orpheus of Trace, in syde rob harpand he.

Doug. Virgil, 187, 34.

Syde was hys habyt, round, and closit mete,
That strekit to the ground doun ouer his fete.

Ibid. 450, 35.

This idea is sometimes expressed by the phrase fute syde.

Than he that was chefe duke or counsellere,

In rob rial vestit, that hate Quirine,—

Gird in ane garmont semelie and fute syde,

Thir yettis suld vp opin and warp wyde.

Ibid. 229, 35.

Hence the title of one of Lyndsay's Poems, In contempt of Syde Tailis ; a satire not unnecessary for the ladies of this age, who subject themselves to the awkward and in-commodious task of being their own train-bearers. The very term fot-sith occurs in A.S., rendered by Lye, chlamys.

Side, A. Bor. id. My coat is very side, i. e. very long, Grose's Prov. Gl.

Su.G. sid, Isl. sidr, demissus, A.S. side, sid, longus, amplus, spatiosus. Su.G. sida klader, vestes prolixae, Ihre, side claise, S. Isl. sidskeggr, one who has a side beard. A.S. sidfexed, qui comam prolixam alit ; sidreaf, toga talaris. This sense is retained in P. Ploughman.

He was bittlebrowed, and baberlypped also,

Wyth two blered eyen, as a blinde hagge,

And as a lethren purse, lolled his chekes,

Well syder then his chyn, they sheuered for olde.

Fol. 23. a, b.

The term was used by E. writers at least as late as the reign of Elizabeth. In the account of the Queen's entertainment at Killingworth, we are informed that one appeared in the dress of an ancient minstrel. He had "a side gown of Kendale green, after the freshness of the year now.—His gown had side sleeves down to mid-leg, slit from the shoulder to the hand." V. Essay on Anc. E. Minstrels, Percy's Reliques, i. xvi.

2. This term was also applied to other objects which hung low ; as to hair, military habiliments, &c. 3. Syde upon, metaph. used as signifying, dealing hardly or severely with ; distressful to. S.

4. Late. One who comes to a place too late, or who passes the time appointed, is said to be syde, S.B.

Ihre views this as the primary sense, giving sid, inferior, and demissus, only a secondary place. The idea seems well-founded. For Moes.G. seitho signifies, sero. Seitho warth ; It was late. In like manner it is said of a traveller, who is so late that he must necessarily be overtaken on his journey by the night ; He'll be syde, S.B. Junius derives the Goth. word from saitua, occasus, the setting of the sun.

I have not observed that the A.S. word occurs in this sense, except in the superl. Sidesta, serissime, which may be from sith, post ; like sithest, postremus. The compar. is found in Alem. sidor, later, from sid, postquam. Isl. sijd, sero, sydre, posterior. Fyr oc sijdur, first and last, G. Andr. Su.G. sid um aptan, late in the evening, corresponds to Moes.G. seitho, and to our use of the term. Su.G. sid is used, not only as an adv., sero, but as an adj., serus. Sida hoesten, autumnno extremo.

SIDE-DISH, s. A cant term for a person invited to an entertainment to play off his humour at the expense of some of the company. S.

SIDE-FOR-SIDE, adv. Alongside ; in the same line. S.

SIDE-ILL, s. A disease of sheep.

SIDY-FOR-SIDY, adv. On a footing with ; in a line of equality ; Side for side. S.

SYDIS, pl. Cuts of flesh, Doug. Virgil. V. SCHIDE.

To SIDLE, v. n. To move in an oblique sort of way, like one who feels sheepish or abashed. S.

SYDLINGIS, SIDELINS, adv. 1. Side by side.

The wallis ane hundreth fute of hicht,

Na wounder was, thocht they wer wicht :

Sic breid abufe the wallis thair was,

Thre cartis micht sydlingis on them pas.

Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 77.

2. Obliquely ; not directly ; having one side to any object, S. Sidelong, E. is now used in the same sense ; but sideling is the ancient term. See Sup.

"They had chosen a strong ground somewhat sideling on the side of a hill." Hollingshed's Chron. V. Gl. R. Brunne, p. 647.

SIDELING, adj. 1. Having a declivity, S.

2. Oblique ; applied to discourse, S.

For Nory's sake, this sideling hint he gae,

To brak her piece and piece her Lindy frae.

Ross's Helenore, p. 105.

This is also used as a s. The sidelins (sidlings) of a hill,

S. i. e. the declivity, q. along the side.

SIDS, SUDS, s. pl. Syn. Shillin-seeds, Sowen-sids. S.

SIDS, s. pl. The husks of grain. S.

SYE, s. The sea.

 Hence to sett apoun syse, to set on a throw at dice, to play at dice in general.
 Sum ledis langis on the land, for luf or for lak,
 To sembyl with thare chaftis, and sett apoun syse.
Doug. Virgil, Prol. 238, b. 14.

SYITH, SYTH, s. Times; feil syith, many times.
 Set I feil syith sic twa monethis in fere
 Wrote neur ane wourd, nor nicht the volume stere.
Doug. Virgil, 484, 19.

Full fele syth, and weill fele syth, a great many times, very often.
 Nocht for thi full fele syth,
 Thai had full gret default off mete.
Barbour, iii. 470. MS.

Mr. Pinkerton expl. syth, easy; in reference perhaps to the following passage.
 — And saw it wes not syth to ta
 The toun, quhill sik defens wes mad.
Barbour, xvii. 454.

But here it is eyth, in MS. A.S. siþe, Moes.G. sintha, SIKIE, adj. Full of rills; commonly dry in summer. S.

To SIKE, v. a.
 Giff ye be warldly wight, that dooth me sike,
 Quhy lest God mak you so, my derest hert,
 To do a sely prisoner thus smert?
King's Quair, ii. 25.

Mr. Tytler thinks it not improbable, that, as sile signifies grief, syke is used metri causa. Perhaps it rather refers to sighing. V. next word.

SIKING, s. Sighing.
 Hit yaules, hit yamers, with waymyng wete,
 And seid, with siking sare,
 "I ban the body me bare!"
Sir Gawan and Sir Gal. i. 7.

SYLD, part. pa. V. next word.

To SILE, SYLE, SYLL, v. a. 1. To cover, or to blindfold.
 Be not thairfoir syld as ane bellie blind:
 Nor lat thyself be led upone the yce.
Maitland Poems, p. 164.

Yet he, this glasse who hid, their eyes dide sile,
 His guiltless blood must needs their hands defile.
More's True Crucifixe, p. 62.

Why doe they syle poore mocked people's sight,
 Christ's face from viewing in this mirror bright?
Ibid. p. 78.

2. To hide; to conceal.
 — Yet and thou syll the veritie,
 Then downe thou sall. Spec. Godly Sangs, p. 9.

"Thai offend the Juge, fra quhom thai syle & hyde the veritie." Abp. Hamiltoun's Catechisme, 1551, Fol. 70, a.

3. To ceil; to cover with a ceiling. S.

This seems the same with sylde, ouer sylde. Doug. Virgil, q. v. But the origin is uncertain. O.E. cyll is used to denote a sort of canopy.

"The chammer was haunged of red and of blew, and in it was a cyll of state of cloth of gold; but the Kyng was not under for that sam day." Marriage of James IV. and Margaret of Engl. Leland's Collect. iv. 295.

The origin has been supposed to be Ital. cielo, in a secondary sense, any high arch, from Lat. coel-um. Sibb. prefers Su.G. skyl-a, Teut. schuyl-en, occultare. But I scarcely have met with one instance of a word in our language, derived from Goth. or Teut., altogether losing h or ch. Teut. siele, indusium, subucula, might be supposed to have a preferable claim. Hence, SYLING, s. Ceiling.

—"The elde syling that was once fast joyned together with nailes will begin to cling, and then to gape," &c. Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 612.

To SYLE, v. a. 1. To deceive; to circumvent.

Dissimulance was bissie me to syle,

And Fair Calling did oft upon me smyle.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 16.

"Surround, encompass;" Lord Hailes. But the character, in the personification, fixes the meaning as given above.

—Certis, we wemen

We set us all fra the sichte to syle men of treuth:

We dule for na evil deidis sa it be device halden,

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 61.

Thus subtellie the king was sylit.

And all the pepill wer begylit.

Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592. p. 64.

"Choose ye this day, whether with humbled Esther you will wisely resolve to prove constant,—or if you will—like Peter overwhelmed with fear, adventure to seik your comforte and quietnesse in the sway of time, as though the Lord could be syled, as Absalom was with Chusaye's policie." Epistle of a Christian Brother, A. 1624. p. 5.

This might seem to be a secondary sense of the v., as signifying to cover. But it is nearly allied to A.S. syl-an, to betray. Thus it is used concerning Judas; Mannes sunu thu mith cosse sylst; Betrayest thou the Son of man with a kiss. Luke xxii. 48. Isl. sel-ia, Su.G. sael-ia, to deliver into the hands of another.

2. Elsewhere it may be rendered, betray.

Sen that I go begyld

With ane that faythe has sylt.

Murning Maidin, Maitland Poems, p. 205.

i. e. Delivered up faith, acted a false and treacherous part.

SILLER-MARRIAGE, s. Penny-Bridal; Penny-Wedding.

SILLY, adj. 1. Lean; meagre, S.

2. Weak, as the effect of disease, S.

—We haif sae hecht,—

To do the thing we can,

To please baith, and eise baith,

This silly sickly man. Cherrie and Slae, st. 108.

"A silly bairn is eith to lear," S.; Ferguson's S. Prov. p. 1. intimating, that weakly children often discover great quickness of apprehension, their minds not being diverted by fondness for play.

3. Expressive of constitutional or accidental debility of body. S.—4. Frail, as being mortal.

"My sillie bodie, wee haue taken much pains together for to get a rest which we haue looked long for, but could not find." Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 1134.

5. In the same sense as E. poor is often used, denoting a state which excites compassion, S.

"The silly stranger in an uncouth country must take with smoky inns, and coarse cheer, and a hard bed, and a barking ill-tongued host." Rutherford's Lett. P. iii. ep. 9.

6. Timid; spiritless; pusillanimous. S.

7. Fatuous, having weakness of mind approaching to idiocy, S. See Sup.

—"By reason of the extraordinary loss of blood, and strokes he had got, he did not recover the exercise of his reason fully, but was silly, and next to an idiot." Wodrow, ii. 318.

S Y M

- The term, as thus used, has a much stronger signification than E. silly, foolish. V. SELY.
8. Good; worthy; a sense peculiar to Liddesdale. S.
- SILLY MAN. An expression of kindness and compassion; like E. poor fellow. Syn. Sairy Man. V. SARY.
- SILLY WYCHTIS. A designation given to the fairies. S.
- SILLY-WISE, adj. In some degree debilitated, whether in mind or body. S.
- SILLIK, SILAK, SELLOK, s. The name given to the fry of the Coal-fish, or Gadus carbonarius; properly, for the first year, Orkn.; podlie, synon. Loth. See Sup.
- "There are numbers of small fish, such as coal-fish, and all their fry, of different ages, down to a year old; at which time I have seen them sold at the rate of 6d. the thousand, at the same time that worse fish of the same kind was sold in Edinburgh market at 6d. the dozen, or there about, under the name of podlies. Ours are called silliks." P. Birsay, Orkn. Statist. Acc. xiv. 314. Selloks, ibid. iii. 416.; silaks, vii. 542.
- As this name is in Orkney given more laxly to fry of different kinds, it is not improbable that it is from Su.G. sill, a herring, because the fry thus denominated are nearly of the same size. V. SEATH, and CUTH.
- SILLIK, adj. Such; similar. S.
- SILLIST, adj. Laying aside work in the mean time. S.
- SILLUB, s. A potion; a decoction of herbs. S.
- SYLOUR, Gawan and Gol. V. DEIR.
- SILVER-MAILL, s. Rent paid in money. V. MAILL.
- To SILVERIZE, v. a. To cover with silver-leaf, S.
- SYMER, SIMMER, s. Summer. See Sup.
- "Than folowit mony incursionis, with gret slauchtir, baith of Romanis & Brittonis, continewing all the symer." Bellend. Cron. Fol. 29. a. b.
- SIMMER TREIS. Apparently May-poles. V. SKAFFRIE, and ABBOT of VNRESSOUN.
- To SIMMER and WINTER. 1. To harp on the same string; to be minute and prolix in narration. 2. To spend much time in forming a plan; to ponder; to ruminate. 3. Permanently to adhere to. S.
- SIMMER-LIFT, s. The summer-sky. S.
- SIMMERSCALES, s. pl. The scales that form on fermented liquor in summer when it begins to sour. S.
- To SIMMERSCALE, v. n. To throw up simmerscales. S.
- SIMILABLE, adj. Like; similar. S.
- SYMION-BRODIE, s. A child's toy; a cross-stick. S.
- SIMMER, SYMMER, s. The principal beam in the roof of a building. One of the supports laid across a kiln. S.
- SIMMONS, SYMMONS, s. pl. Ropes made of heath and of Empetrum nigrum, Orkn.; evidently a derivative from Isl. sime, vinculum, funiculus. See Sup.
- SYMPILL, SEMPILL, SEMPLÉ, adj. 1. Low-born, S.
- The sympelast, that is oure ost wyth-in,
Has gret gentilis of hys kyn.
Wyntown. viii. 16. 179.
- Law born he was, and off law simpill blud.
Wallace, vii. 738. MS.
- Sexty thay slew, in that hald was no ma,
Bot ane auld preist, and sympill wemen twa,
Ibid. vi. 825. MS.
- To curs and ban the sempill poore man,
That had noght to flee the paine.
Spec. Godly Sangs, p. 7.
- In the same sense the phrase gentle and semple, is used to denote those of superior or inferior birth, S.
2. Low in present circumstances, without respect to birth.
- For he wes cummyn of gentil-men, 390

S Y N

- In sympil state set he wes then:
Hys fadyre wes a manly knyght;
Hys modyre wes a lady brycht. Wyntown, viii. 13. S.
3. Not possessing strength, from multitude or riches.
Thai war all out to fele to fycht
With few folk, off a sympile land.
Barbour, xi. 202. MS.
- In the same sense he calls a few men, a sympill company, because they durst not attempt to contend with their enemies.
4. Mean; vulgar.
As I hard say, it was a semple wane
Of fog and fern, full fecklessly was maid.
Henryson, Evergreen, i. 146.
- Fr. simple, common, ordinary.
5. Used as a term exciting, or expressive of, pity.
— To your magnificens
I me commend, as I haif done befor,
My sempill heart for now and evirmoir.
Scott, Chron. S.P. iii. 164.
- Thus the phrase poor heart is sometimes used in E.
6. Mere; sempill avail, the bare value; no overplus. S.
- SYMPYLLY, adv. Poorly; meanly; in low and straitened circumstances.
— Sone to Paryss can he ga
And levyt thar full sympylly. Barbour, i. 331. MS.
- To SIMULAT, v. a. To dissemble; to hide under false pretences. S.
- SIMULATE, part. adj. 1. Pretended; fictitious; although apparently legal. 2. Dissembling; not sincere. S.
- SIMULATLIE, adv. Under false pretences. S.
- SIN, s. The sun. S.
- SINNY, adj. Of or belonging to the sun. S.
- SINWART, adv. Towards the sun. S.
- SINACLE, s. "A grain; a small quantity," Shirr. Gl. S.B.; a vestige; used also metaph. See Sup.
- I bade you speak, but ye nae answer made,
And syne in haste I lifted up your head;
But never a sinacle of life was there,
And I was just the neist thing to despair.
Ross's Helenore, p. 15.
- SINCERE,* adj. Grave; apparently serious. S.
- SYND, s.
- Quhair boun ye to, my friend, sche sais,
Astonishtly me think ye gais,
Tell me quhat mouis your mynd.
Gif ye gang wrang, I sall ye gyde,
Appearandly thou wanderst wyde,
I se weill be your synd.
Burel's Pilg. Watson's Coll. ii. 37.
- It may be equivalent to sign or demonstration; Isl. syne, synde, monstro. But I suspect that it rather signifies appearance, or perhaps aspect; Su.G. syn, facies, A.S. onsien, onsyne, vultus, aspectus.
- To SYND, SIND, SEIN, v. a. 1. To wash slightly; as, to synd a bowl, to pour a little water into it, and then throw it out again, S.; to synd, to rinse, or wash out, A. Bor. See Sup.
- A well beside a birken bush,
A bush o'er spread wi' buds,
Tent well a lass of beauty flush
There sinding out her duds.
Morison's Poems, p. 148.
- Wi' nimble hand she sinds her milking pail.
Ibid. p. 185.
- And shape it bairn and bairnlie-like,
And in twa glazen een ye pit;
Wi' haly water synd it o'er,

And by the haly rood sain it.

Jamieson's Popul. Ball. ii. 184.

2. Metaph. transferred to the swallowing of liquids, S.
To synd down one's meat, to dilute it, S. See Sup.

It is always applied to things that are supposed to be nearly clean, as denoting a slight ablution. It seems originally to have denoted moral purification, especially that which was viewed as the consequence of making the sign of the cross.

That this has been the origin of the term, as now applied, appears highly probable, from the mode of consecration observed, in former times at least, in Orkney, by sprinkling with water.

"When the beasts—are sick, they sprinkle them with a water made up by them;—wherewith likewise they sprinkle their boats when they succeed and prosper not in fishing. And especially on Hallow-Even, they use to sein or sign their boats, and put a cross of tar upon them." Brand's Orkney, p. 62.

It must be observed, however, that Isl. sign-a, consecrate, was probably used among the Goths in the times of heathenism. We read of a vessel signat or consecrated to Thor; Herraud S. Signadi Odni; He consecrated it to Odin; Heimskringla, Hakonar Goda S. c. 18. It is possible, however, that the writers only use the terms which had been adopted after the introduction of that corrupted form of Christianity which they had received. Olaus renders sygn, immunis a culpa, absolutus a crimine, insons; Lex. Run. V. SANE, to bless.

SYND, SYNE, s. 1. A slight ablution, S. See Sup.

2. Metaph. applied to drink, as washing the throat, S.

Weel kens the gudewife that the pleughs require

A heartsome meltith, and refreshing synd

O' nappy liquor, o'er a blazing fire.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 55.

To SYND, or SYNDE up Claise. To wash them up, or rinse them in cold water in order to take out the soap, previously to their being laid out to be dried. S.

SYNDINGS, s. pl. Slops; commonly what has been employed in giving a slight washing to dishes or clothes. S.

SYNDE, adv. Afterwards; used for Syne. S.

To SINDER, v. a. To sunder, S.; also, as v. n., to part; to separate.

A.S. syndr-ian, separare.

SINDRY, adj. Sundry; various; A.S. sindrig.

Out of the heuin againe from sindry artis,

Out of quiet hienes the rout vpstertis

Of thay birdis.——— Doug. Virgil, 75, 27.

SINDRY, adj. In a state of disjunction, S.

SYNDRELY, adv. Severally.

Oure Scottis knyghtis syndrely

Be-forsaid in-til armys ran

Til thir gret lordis man for man.

Wyntown, ix. 27. 46.

SYNDRYNES, s. A state of separation or dispersion.

Quha skaylis his thought in syndrynes,

In ilk thyng it is the les. Wyntown, viii. 16. 37.

SINDILL, adv. Seldom; also SINDLE, adj. V. SEINDLE.

SYNE, adv. 1. Afterwards; since, S.

—— Thai wele sone gat of thair bed

A knaw child, throw our Lordis grace,

That eftre hys gud eldfadyr wes

Callyt Robert; and syne wes king.

Barbour, xiii. 695. MS.

Ane clene sacrifice and offerandis made I syne,

Into the fyris yettand sence and wyne.

Doug. Virgil, 73, 27.

It occurs in the same sense O.E.

Rowen drank, as her list,

And gave the kyng: sine him kist.

R. Brunne. V. Ellis, Spec. i. 116.

2. Late, as contradistinguished from soon.

"What I know I shall ever give you an account of soon or syne." Baillie's Lett. i. 355.

i. e. Sooner or later.

Each rogue, altho' with Nick he should combine,

Shall be discovered either soon or syne.

Hamilton's Wallace, p. 318.

Notwithstanding the similarity of A.S. saene, segnis, tardus, to saene, nimis segnis, too slow; this must certainly be viewed as originally the same with sen, prep. For this, as equivalent to E. since, merely denotes the time that has elapsed after some date or event referred to. Teut. sind, Germ. sint, post, postea. Wachter gives sint as synonym. with seit, which he deduces from A.S. sith-ian, ire, venire, rendering it, transitus in aliud tempus. A.S. sith, as signifying time, might indeed have this origin; because of its progress, as the lapse of time resembles the motion of a body from one point to another; or, because men in a barbarous state might calculate time from the advance they made in going from one place to another, as distance is sometimes calculated by hours. Su.G. sen signifies both post and sero. V. SEN.

Under that article, we might have observed, that our phrase sen syne may be viewed as a tautology consisting of two words radically the same, and, in fact, including no other idea than what is conveyed by sen; although the latter preserves more of the form of A.S. sith-than, (after then,) being immediately contr. from sythyn. Or, it may be considered as compounded of sen, conj. since, and the adv. syne, in the sense of then, q. since, after-then, or after that time. Still, however, it is tautological.

Syne, in the phrase lang syne, and auld lang syne, is used as if it were a s. To a native of this country, it is very expressive; and conveys a soothing idea to the mind, as recalling "the memory of joys that are past."

Should auld acquaintance be forgot,

And days o' lang syne?

—We'll tak a cup o' kindness yet,

For auld lang syne.

Burns, iv. 123

SYNE, conj. Since; seeing, S.

Bot Lordys, gywe youre curtasy,——

Syne that I set my besynes

Tyl al yhoure plesans generaly.

Wyntown, i. Prol. 52.

Barbour uses sen in this sense.

SYNETEEN, adj. Seventeen. S.

To SING, v. a. To singe; part. pa. singit, also sung; pron. as E. sing, canere. See Sup.

They have contriv'd rebellious books,

Whose paper well might serve the cooks

To sing their poultrie, I dare swear,

A thousand or three hundred year.

Cleland's Poems, p. 19.

Fat are the puddings; heads and feet well sung.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 92.

"He's like the singed [pron. singit] cat, better than he's likely;" Ramsay's S. Prov. p. 33. Some express it,—"better than he's bonny."

A.S. saeng-an, Germ. seng-en, Belg. zeng-en, id.

SINGIT-LIKE, adj. Puny; shrivelled; as resembling what has been singed, S.

To SING.* He can neither sing nor say, he is quite unfit for the business which he has undertaken. S.

To SING DUMB, v. n. To become totally silent. S.

SINGIN-E'EN, s. The last night of the year, Fife. See S.

—— We come to Jean,

A lass baith douse an' thrifty,

But singin-e'en she's owre aft seen,
She's shakin' hands wi' fifty.

A. Douglas's Poems, p. 24.

The designation seems to have originated from the carols sung on this evening. V. HOGMANAY. It may be observed, however, as many of the superstitious ideas and rites, originally pertaining to Yule, have been transferred to the last day of the year, that some of the vulgar believe that the bees may be heard to sing in their hives on Christmas-eve. V. YULE-E'EN.

SINGLAR, adj. Unarmed.

I wald tak weid, suld I fecht with a man,
Bot [for] a dog, that nocht of armys can,
I will haiff nayn, bot synglar as I ga.
A gret manteill about his hand can ta,
And his gud suerd; with him he tuk na mar.

Wallace, xi. 241. MS.

The only word that resembles this in signification is S. single, thinly clad.

SINGLE, adv. V. SEINDLE.

SINGLE, s. A handful of gleaned corn, S.

Thou lay richt prydles in the peis this sommer,
And fain at evin for to bring hame a single.

Dunbar, Evergreen, ii. 53.

Sibb. writes also sindle, making this form of the word the ground of derivation from Su.G. syn, necessitas, and del, pars, q. poor man's share. But sin, unus, singularis, and del, are perhaps preferable. It may, however, be traced to Lat. singulus, because the ears are gathered singly.

SINGLE, * adj. A single letter, not a capital letter. The single catechis, the Assembly's Shorter Catechism. S.

SINGLE-HORSE-TREE, s. A swingle-tree, or stretcher of a plough by which one horse draws. S.

SINGLE-STICK, s. Cudgel-playing. S.

SINILE, adv. Seldom. V. SEINDILL. S.

SYNING-GLASS, s. A looking-glass or mirror. S.

SINK, s. A place where the superabundant moisture stagnates on the ground. S.

SINK, s. The pit of a mine. S.

To SINK, v. a. To cut the die for striking money. S.

SINKAR, s. The person employed in cutting dies. S.

SINKIL, s.

"I sau sinkil, that slais the virmis of the bellye." Compl. S. p. 104.

Apparently, an errat. for finkil, fennel, still sometimes used as an anthelmintic. V. FYNKLE.

SYNLE, adv. Seldom, S.B. V. SEINDLE.

SINNIE-FYNNIE, s. The Black Guillemot. S.

SINNON, s. A sinew. V. SENON. S.

SYNOPARE, s. Cinnabar. Doug. Virgil, 400, 7.

SINSYNE, adv. Since, S.

— Years sinsyne hae o'er us run,

Like Logan to the simmer sun.

V. SYNE, adv. and SEN.

Burns, iv. 74.

SYOUR, s. Apparently a scion; a tender shoot. S.

To SIPE, SEIP, v. n. 1. To ooze, or distil very gently, as liquids do through a cask that is not quite tight, S. A. Bor.—2. To let out any liquid; not to hold in; used of a leaky vessel. S.

"To sipe, sype, to leak, to pass through in a small quantity;" Gl. Sibb.

Teut. sipp-en, id. stillare, manare, fluere. I need scarcely observe, that this is quite different from sipp-en, pitissare, sorbillare, which corresponds to E. sip.

The diminutives of sipp-en are, Germ. sippeln, zippeln, Belg. zypel-en, afzypel-en, to drop, zyper-en, leakage. The Teut. word in Germ. also assumes the form of sauf-en; fluere, manare. Wachter marks the affinity between this and Heb. zuph [זֶפֶח], zooob] fluxit, emanavit; although he seems to view Germ. saw, aqua, as the root of sauf-en.

A.S. sip-an is very nearly allied; expl. by Somner, "macerare, to soften by steeping in liquor, to soke or wash in water or other liquor, to sappe."

SYPIINS, s. pl. The liquor that has oozed from an insufficient cask, S.

To SIPE, SYPE, v. a. To distil; to shed. S.

SEIPAGE, s. Leakage. S.

SEIPIN, part. adj. Very wet; dripping wet. S.

SIPE, SYPE, s. A slight spring of water. 2. The moisture that comes from any wet substance. 3. A dreg of any liquid remaining. S.

To SYPYRE, SUPIR, v. n. To sigh.

Than softlie did I suoufe and sleep,—

Sypyring, quhils wyring

My tender body to.

Burel's Pilgr. Watson's Coll. ii. 34.

My spreit supirs and sichts maist sair.

V. REMENT.

Burel, ibid. ii. 48.

Fr. souspir-er, Lat. suspir-are, id.

SYPLE, s. A saucy, big-bellied person. S.

SIPLIN, SIPPLYNE, s. A young tree; a sapling, E. S.

To SIPPLE, v. n. To sip. S.

SIRDONING, s. A term used to denote the singing of birds.

Their sirdoning the bony birds

In banks thay do begin;

With pipes of reeds the jolie birds

Halds up the mirrie din.

A. Hume, Chron. S.P. iii. 390.

Fr. sourdine, "the little pipe, or tenon put into the mouth of a trumpet, to make it sound low;" Cotgr.

To SIRDOUN, v. n. To emit a plaintive cry or wail, as some birds do. SIRDOUN, s. A cry of this kind. S.

SYRE, s. A title of honour. V. SCHIR.

SYRE, s. A sewer, S. syver, sometimes pron. as syre.

He and I lap o'er many a syre.

V. SYVER.

Watson's Coll. i. 12.

SIR JOHN, a close stool, S.; knight, synon.

This name might perhaps be introduced about the time of the Reformation, from contempt of the priests, or Pope's Knights; especially as John seems to have been a name commonly imposed, in a disrespectful way, on a priest. Hence the contemptuous designation, Mess John, i. e. John who says mass.

Or shall we suppose that the synon. knight, is the more ancient name, conferred on this utensil from the idea of service?

SIRKEN, adj. 1. Tender of one's flesh, afraid of pain, S.

2. Tender of one's credit. S.

Belg. sorgh-en, curare?

To SIRPLE, v. a. To sip often; to tipple, S.

It is used in the first sense, A. Bor.

Sw. sorpl-a, Germ. schurft-en, Belg. slurp-en, id. all nearly allied to Lat. sorbilla-are.

SIRS, interj. 1. A common mode of address to a number of persons, although of both sexes. 2. O sirs! an exclamation expressive of pain, or astonishment. S.

SISE, Syss, s. 1. Assize, abbrev.

Schir Gilbert Malherbe, and Logy,

And Richard Broune, thir thre planly

War with a syss than ourtane;

Tharfor thai drawyn war ilkane,

And hangyt, and hedyt tharto.

Barbour, xix. 55. MS.

2. Doom; judgment. See Sup.

Als faith is this sentence, as sharp is thy sise;
Syne duly they deemed what death it should die.

Montgomerie, Watson's Coll. iii. 16.

SYSE, s. Six at dice. V. SYISS.

SYSE, SYSS-BOLLE, s. A duty exacted at some harbours.

SYISSTRIE, s. Apparently the boll measure. S.

To SIST, v. a. To stop; to stay. To sist procedure, or process, to delay judicial proceeding in a cause, S.; used both in civil and ecclesiastical courts. Lat. sistere, to stop.

"In church discipline, a difference is to be made between what is satisfactory unto a church judicatory, so as to admit the defender unto all church privileges, as if the offence had never been; and what may be satisfying, so as to sist procedure for the time." Stewart's Collections, p. 261.

To SIST, v. n. To stop; not to go farther. S.

SIST, s. The act of legally staying diligence, or execution on decrees for civil debts; a forensic term, S.

"A sist granted on a bill without passing it, expires also in fourteen days; Act Sederunt, Nov. 9, 1680." Erskine's Instit. B. iv. T. 3. s. 18. V. the v.

To SIST, or SIST one's self, v. a. 1. To cite; to summon; a forensic term, S.

"According to this letter, he [Mr. W. Veitch] was received upon the Borders, and brought prisoner to Edinburgh, and February 22, he was sisted before the committee for publick affairs." Wodrow's Hist, ii. 6.

2. To set, or take a place, as at the bar of a court, where one's cause is to be judicially tried and determined; a term generally used in a religious sense, with respect to one's engagement in the acts of divine worship, in order to express the solemnity of the appearance, S. See Sup.

"Ordinances are means by which, to use an unclassical, but expressive word, we are sisted more directly in the presence of God." Disquisition on the Observance of the Lord's Supper, pp. 45, 46.

The term has been probably borrowed from the Roman law. Sist-ere, to set, or be made to stand; also, to have one forthcoming. Sistere vadimonium, to appear to his recognisance; Cic. pro Quint. 8.

SISTER-BAIRN, s. A sister's child; a cousin. S.

SISTER-PART, s. The portion of a daughter. S.

To SIT, v. n. 1. To stop in growth; to become stunted; applied both to animals and vegetables, S.

2. To shrink, S.

3. To sink, as when a wall falls down in consequence of the softness of the foundation, S.

4. To continue to inhabit the same house, possessed for some time before; to sit, not to flit. 5. To SIT down, to take hold of the lungs; as, "A sitten-down cauld."

6. To SIT to, v. n. To adhere to the pot. S.

This seems merely a peculiar sense of the E. v., as Lat. subsidi-ere is formed from sed-ere, to sit.

SIT, s. The state of sinking, as applied to a wall, S.

To SIT an offer, not to accept of it, S.

"It implieth that very few, who sit the offer until then, are honoured with repentance, as he was." Guthrie's Trial, pp. 82, 83.

To SIT to, v. n. Any food, prepared in a pot, is said to sit to, when, from not being stirred, it is allowed to burn, S.

The phrase evidently respects its adhesion to the vessel. "Pot-sitten. Burnt to. North." Gl. Grose.

SITTEN on, part. adj. Broth or soup which has been boiled too long, especially when burnt in the pot, is said to be sitten on. S.

To SIT ILL TO one's MEAT. To be illfed; to be ill kept. S.

To SIT on one's own coat tail. To act in a way prejudicial to one's own interest. S.

To SIT still, v. n. To continue to reside in the same house, or on the same farm as before. S.

To SIT up, v. a. To become careless in regard to a religious profession or duties. V. UPSITTEN. S.

To SIT, SIT, v. a. To grieve; to vex.

And he for wo weyle ner worthit to weide;

And said, "Sone, thir tithingis sittis me sor,

And be it knawin, thow may tak scaith tharfor."

Wallace, i. 438. MS.

To SIT,* v. a. To sit a charge or summons, not to regard it; to disobey it. S.

SITE, SYTE, s. 1. Sorrow; grief, S.

Stand still thare as thou art with mekle syte;

Preis na forther, for this is the hald rycht

Of Gaystis, Schaddois, Slepe, and douerit Nycht.

Doug. Virgil, 177, 13.

In the same sense the term is used, when Gologras proposes to Gawan, who had defeated him, to submit to be carried to the castle, as if he had been his prisoner; that he might not be openly disgraced.

Thus may you saif me fra syte.

As I am cristynit perfite,

I sall thi kyndnes quyte,

And sauf thyn honoure.

Gawan and Gol. iv. 8.

False is this world, and full of variance,

Besoucht with syn, and othir sytis mo.

Balade, printed 1508, S.P.R. iii. 128.

2. Anxious care. 3. Suffering; punishment. See S.

Sic wikkitt and condempnit wichtis al tyte,

As thay come in that delly pyt of syte,

Tisiphone, the wrekar of misdedis,

With quhip in hand al reddy fast hir spedis

All to assale, to skurge, toir and bete.

Doug. Virgil, 184, 19.

"It is S.—sometimes taken for revenge or punishment, as when they say, I have gotten my heart's site on him, i. e. my heart's desire on him, or all the evil I wish'd him," Rudd. "To dree the syte, to suffer punishment," Shirr. Gl. S.B. V. SITHE, s.

Rudd. views it as akin to S. syth and assithment. Sibb. renders it "rather perhaps horror, à Fris. saeghe, horror, metus." He has invented a new sense, for introducing an etymon, that would scarcely deserve attention, although the words corresponded in signification.

The origin is undoubtedly Isl. eyt-a, to mourn, to lament; whence sut, sorrow, anxiety, syting, id. sytning, care. Sytta, dicitur, qui assiduo luget; G. Andr. Perhaps Su. G. swid-a, dolere, may be viewed as a cognate; as well as Alem. suiden, id. also, affligere.

SITFULL, SITEFULL, adj. Sorrowful, causing sorrow.

Compleyne for him in to that sitfull sell is,

Compleyne his payne in dolour thus that duellis.

V. SITE.

Wallace, ii. 218. MS.

Rest at all eis, but sair or sitefull schouris;

 "Editions read, 'The Swaryn.' I cannot interpret either." Pink. N. The Edin. Edit. 1758, reads syvevaryne. There can be no doubt that the chief magistrate is meant. For in some of the towns in Ireland, that, according to their constitution, have no Mayor, he is denominated The Sovereign; as, The Sovereign of Belfast, &c. The term seems to have been introduced from England, after the conquest of Ireland, from Fr. Souverain. See Sup.
 According to Pasquier, (Recherches, quoted by Menage,) those who were afterwards called Presidents of different chambers, in France, were formerly denominated Souverains. Even the Baillies and Seneschals, he says, bore the same designation, in respect to the inferior officers in their jurisdictions. This name was given to them in the Ordinance of Charles VI. of France, A. 1386, Dict. Trev. To SKAIGH, SKEGH, v. a. To obtain any thing by craft or wiles; to obtain by any means; to steal; to filch. S.

SKAIGHER, s. One who obtains any thing by artful means; nearly the same with E. thief. S.

To SKAIK, v. a. 1. To spread; to separate one part of any thing from another, in an awkward or dirty manner, S.B.

It is properly applied to moist substances. A child is said to *shai*k his porridge, when instead of supping them equally, he spreads them over the plate with his spoon.

2. To bedaub. Clothes are said to be *shai*kit with dirt or gutters, especially when streaked with it here and there, S.B.

This seems to be a very ancient word, as intimately allied to Isl. shack-ur, impar, sheche, dispar facio, G. Andr. p. 209. Shachi, inaequalitas, discrimen; Orkneyinga, S. p. 168. V. SHACH and SCALKT.

To SKAIL, SKAILL, SKALE, v. a. 1. To disjoin; to separate; to disperse; implying the idea of violence, or of the influence of terror, S.

Bot the Kyng rycht manlyly
Swne skalyd all that cumpany,

Skayle is used as the pret., in relation to the dispersion of a fleet.

Bot a storme swa gret thaym skayle,
That thai war drywyn all away. Ibid. viii. 42. 96.

2. To dismiss; to cause to depart, S.

"The Schiref sall be him self, his Deputis, or Officiaris, send to thay parteis, and charge thame to ceis, and *shai*ll thair gaddingis, and cum in sober and quyet wyis to the court after the forme of the said act." Acts, Ja. III. 1487. c. 123. Ed. 1566.

To skail the byke, a metaph. phrase borrowed from a hive of bees, signifying, to disperse the assembly, S.

3. To scatter; to disperse; applied to rumours.

And dangerous rumours amangis the commouns hedis
Skalit and sew of me in diuers stedis.

Spargere voces, Virg. Doug. Virgil, 41, 47.

A. Bor. "scale; to spread, as manure, gravel, or other loose materials," Gl. Grose.

4. To scatter; applied to the mind.

Quha skaylis his thought in syndrynes
In ilk thyng it is the les. Wyntown, viii. 16. 37.

5. To spill; to shed; used both with respect to liquids and solids. You will skail your kail, you will spill your broth, S. See Sup.

"An old seck is ay skailing." Ray's Scot. Prov. p. 280. Divers. Purley, i. 238. The phrase is elliptical, as referring to what it contains, grain, meal, &c.

Mr. Tooke expl. this, "parting, dividing, separating, breaking." Ibid. p. 240. But it is not the sack itself that is skail'd, but the grain contained in it. This is skail'd or dropt out, by reason of the holes in the sack.

6. Applied to birds; to scatter with their bills. S.

7. To skale down, to pour out.

I sall apoun thame ane myrk schoure doun skale
Of weit and wynd, mydlit with felloun hale.

Infundam, Virg. Doug. Virgil, 103, 52.

8. To leave the place formerly occupied. S.

Mony a boat skail'd the ferry.

9. Skalit down, in a dishevelled state.

The samyn tyme the Troianis madynnes quhite
With hare doun skalit all sorrowful can pas
Vnto the tempel of the greuit Pallas.

Doug. Virgil, 28, 2.

Skail is used, rather anomalously, as the part. pa.

And the religious nun with hare doun skail,
Thre hundreth goddis with hir mouth rowpit sche.

Doug. Virgil, 117, 53.

10. To skail house, to give over keeping house, synon. displenis; or perhaps, as denoting the cause, to waste one's domestic property. See Sup.

"Were it not that want paineth me, I should have skailed house, and gone a begging long since." Rutherford's Lett. P. i. ep. 124.

11. To Skail a Sege, to raise a siege, by forcing the besieging army to disperse, or remove from the place. S.

12. To Skail a Proclamation, to recall it; to discharge from its obligation. 13. To Skail a Gun, to empty it of its contents. S.

14. To Skale a rig, to plough ground so as to make it fall away from the crown of the ridge, S.

15. To unrip; Skelt, "having the seams unript," S.B. Gl. Ross.

To her left shoulder too her keek was worn,
Her gartens tint, her shoon a' skelt and torn.

Ross's Helenore, p. 28.

This sense is merely a particular application of the v. as signifying, to disjoin.

Rudd. improperly seeks a Fr. origin. Sibb. has mentioned the true origin, but confounds it with Su.G. shala, festinanter currere, which has certainly no connexion. It occurs indeed in almost all the Goth. dialects. Su.G. Isl. skil-ia, distinguere, separare, A.S. scyl-an, Belg. scheel-en, schill-en, Mod. Sax. schal-en, id. Su.G. skael, Teut. scheele, discrimen, distinctio. This word also appears in Celt. For scaoil-am, and sgaol-am, signify to separate, to scatter.

To SKAIL, SKALE, SCALE, v. n. 1. To part; to separate, one from another. The kirk is skailing; the people, who have been assembled for worship, are parting from each other, S.

Thai skalylt throw the toun in hy;
And brak wp duris sturdely,
And slew all that thai mycht ourtak.

Barbour, v. 93. MS.

Isl. skil-iast, unus ab altero recedere; G. Andr. p. 213.

Scale in this sense is used by Hollingshed. Speaking of the retreat of the Welchmen, during the absence of Richard II., he says; "They would no longer abide, but scaled and departed away." Ap. Divers. Purley, ii. 237.

2. To be diffused; applied to tidings or news.

Bot tithandis, that scalis sone
Off this deid that Douglas has done,
Come to the Clyffurd his ere, in hy.

Barbour, v. 447. MS.

It is also used with respect to an offensive smell.

The stynk scalylt off ded bodyis sa wyde,
The Scottis abhord ner hand for to byd.

Wallace, vii. 467. MS.

3. To depart from a place formerly occupied; applied to the sailing of vessels. 4. To jut outwards; applied to a wall. S.

SKAIL, SCAIL, s. 1. A dispersion or separation; as, the skail of the kirk, the dismissal or separation of those who have been assembled for public worship, S.

2. A scattered party, those who fly from battle.

Schyr Adam of Gordoun, that than
Wes becommyn Scottis man,
Saw thaim dryf sua away thair fe;
And wend thai had bene quhone, for he Saw but the fleeing skail perfay,
And them that seezed on the prey.
—Bot then both forray, and the scail,
Were knit into a sop all hail.

Barbour, xv. 337.

The last four lines are from Edit. 1620.

SKAILIN, SCAILIN, SCALING, s. A dispersion; the act of scattering, S. See Sup.

— It sall soon get a scailin!

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, ii. 158.

SKAIL-WIND, s. A dispersion, or that which causes it, S. See Sup.

The term seems to have been originally applied to denote the effects of a storm in dispersing ships. V. SKAIL, v. a. sense 1.

SKAILER, s. A scatterer; a disperser. S.

SKAIL-WATER, s. The superabundant water let off by a sluice before it reaches the mill. S.

SKAILMENT, SCALEMENT, s. The act of dispersing, or of driving away. S.

SKAIL, SKALE, s. A thin, shallow vessel of wood or tin for skimming the cream off milk. S.

SKAILDRAIK, SKELDRAKE, s. The shieldrake or burrough Duck, Anas todarna, Linn.

—"They discharge any persons whatsoever—to sell or buy any—Schidderems, Skaildraik, Herron, Butter, or any sik kynde of fowles." Acts, Ja. VI. 1600, c. 23.

In Orkney it is called "skeel-goos";—sometimes—skeel-ing-goose or skeel-duck; in Shetland, scale-drake." Neill's Tour, pp. 195, 196.

Shall we suppose that this fowl is thus denominated from Su.G. skael, ratio, facultas intelligendi; for the same reason that it was called chenalopex, or the fox-goose, by the ancients, and is still designed the slygoose by the inhabitants of Orkney?

Grose assigns another reason. Explaining A. Bor. sheld, party-coloured, flecked or speckled, he adds; "Hence sheld-drake and sheld-fowl. South."

SKAILLIE, SKAILYIE, s. Blue slate used for covering houses, S.B.

"That the heretors of such houses as are alreadie thaicked with thack and straw (if the same thacke, and straw-roofs shall hereafter at any time become ruinous) shall bee astricted to thaick the same againe with sklaite, or shaillie, lead, tylde, or thacke-stone." Acts, Ja. VI. 1621. c. 26.

A distinction is here made between shaillie and thacke-stone, similar to that which is retained, S.B.; the name shaillie being confined to blue slates, while the flat stones, commonly used instead of them, are called brown sklates.

"Narrest the Wolfis iyle layes ane iyllane, callit in Erische Leid-Ellan-Belnachna, quhairin ther is fair skailyie aneuche." Monroe's Isles, p. 9.

Rudd. writes this skelly, vo. Skellyis.

Skaily is sometimes expressly distinguished from slate.

"Here is to be found marle, and kylestone, freestone and whinstone, slait and skaily, as good as the kingdom affords." Pennecuik's Tweeddale, p. 5.

The Dutch call those slates, which are taken from the rock in laminæ, and used for covering houses, schalie. Moes.G. skal-jos, tiles, tiling, Luke v. 19. pl. of skal-ja, a shell, a tile. Hence perhaps the Isl. name for a roof, skali. The origin might seem to be Su.G. skil-ja, disjungere, from the circumstance of these slates being found in laminæ. Ihre, however, directs to a different one. V. SKYLE, v. Hence, SKAILLIE PEN. A sort of pencil of soft slate, used for taking memorandums, or writing accounts, on a slate, S.

Su.G. skaer, a rock, Alem. scorr, O.Belg. schorre, Gr. σκαρ-ος, id. The root is supposed to be Su.G. skaer-a, to cut, to divide; as klipp-a, a rock, from klipp-a, to cut. These are also called Kairs.

SKAITBIRD, s.

Ignorant elfe, ape, owl, irregular,
Skaldit skaitbird and common skandelar.

Kennedy, Evergreen, ii. 49.

Here the Poet seems to allude to the Arctic Gull or Dunghunter, Larus Parasiticus, Linn. "All writers that mention it," says Pennant, "agree, that it has the property of pursuing the lesser gulls so long, that they mute for fear, and that it catches up their excrements before they fall into the water; from which the name." Zool. p. 534. Others assert, that it only forces them to vomit up their newly swallowed food, which it devours.

Kennedy seems to have believed that this fowl attacked the bird which it pursued, by pouring forth its excrement. Hence most probably the epithet of skaldit. The name skaitbird, according to this idea, may be from Su.G. skit-a, cacare; especially as in some places it is called shite-scouter, S. V. AULIN and SCOUTIALLAN.

SKAITH, s. 1. Hurt; damage, in whatever way, S. See S.

—Ha, how grete harme, and skait for euermare
That child has caught, throw lesing of his moder!

Doug. Virgil, 79, 23.

Scathe is used in the same sense, E. I mention the word in this acceptation, merely to observe that in Ang. it is pron., as would seem, nearly in the Goth. mode, skaid, or q. skaidt. Isl. skade, Su.G. skada, id. Moes.G. skath-jan, A.S. scaeth-an, Belg. schaed-en, Germ. schad-en, nocere.

2. Injury supposed to proceed from witchcraft, S. Thus men or cattle are said to have gotten skait, when it is believed, that the disease, which affects them, proceeds from preternatural influence.

"Superstition yet continues to operate so strongly on some people, that they put a small quantity of salt into the first milk of a cow after calving, that is given any person to drink. This is done with a view to prevent skait, if it should happen that the person is not cany [i. canny.] A certain quantity of cow dung is forced into the mouth of a calf, immediately after it is calved, or at least before it receives any meat; owing to this, the vulgar believe that witches and fairies can have no power ever after to injure the calf." P. Killearn, Stirl. Statist. Acc. xvi. 121. 122.

G. Andr. observes, that Skade is the name of Janthes or Ate in the Edda. Hence, he says, shade, loss, injury, and shad-a, to hurt. I need scarcely add, that with the Romans Ate was the goddess of revenge, a principle supposed to be predominant with all witches.

SKAITHIE, SKATHIE, s. A kind of fence or shelter of rude materials, sometimes erected on the outside of a cottage door to ward off the wind. S.

SKAITHLESS, SCAITHLESS, adj. 1. Innocent; without culpability. 2. Uninjured; unhurt. S.

SKAITHLIE, adj. Injurious; hurtful. S.

SKAIVIE, adj. Harebrained; applied to one who acts as if in a delirium, or on the borders of insanity, S. See Sup.

Sibb. writes also schavy, rendering it "wode, i. e. mad," and seems to derive it from schaw, a wood.

As the term denotes obliquity of mind, it is evidently from Isl. skeif-r, Sw. skef, Dan. skiaev, Belg. Germ. scheef, obliquus; q. having the mind awry or distorted. A. Bor. scafe, wild, as, a scafe lad, a wild youth, (Gl. Grose,) may be viewed as originally the same. V. SHACH.

S K A

SKALD, s. A scold. V. SCOLD, SCALD. S.

SKALDOCKS, s.pl. Apparently the same as Shellochs. S.

SKALE, SKAIL, s. A skimming-dish. S.

SKALIS, s.pl. Perhaps cups or goblets. S.

SKALK, s. A bumper of whisky taken in the Highlands and Western Isles in the morning. S.

SKALL, SKELL, s. A right to the next turn of the mill in grinding. S.

SKALLAG, SCALLAG, s. A kind of bond-servant, who carries kelp, and does all the hard work; a term used in the Long Island.

"The scallag, whether male or female, is a poor being, who for mere subsistence, becomes a predial slave to another, whether a subtenant, a tacksman, or a laird.—Five days in the week he works for his master; the sixth is allowed to himself, for the cultivation of some scrap of land, on the edge of some moss or moor." J. Lane Buchanan's Travels in the W. Hebrides, p. 7.

Gael. scalog, or rather, sgallag, a man-servant. The word has undoubtedly been imported into the Western Islands by the Norwegians. Moes.G. skalks, A.S. Alem. scalc, Su.G. Isl. skalk, servus; a denomination given, as Wachter observes, both to slaves and to free servants. Hence Marescalc, the modern Marshal, &c.

SKALRAG, adj. Having a shabby appearance. S.

SKALRAG, s. A tatterdemalion. S.

SKALV, s. The straw netting that contains fishing-lines. S.

SKALVE, s. Snow in broad flakes. S.

SKAMYLL, s. 1. A bench; a form. See Sup.

2. Shambles, shambles.

The fleschers' shamblis ar gane dry;

The heiland men bringis in na ky.

Maitland Poems, p. 182.

S.B. shemmils denotes the butchers' market; from the tables or benches on which the meat is exposed. Seren. derives the E. word, rather whimsically, from Isl. shemma, domus brevis, skamr, brevis.

SKAMLAR, SCAMBLER, s. Perhaps one who wanders about in quest of entertainments; a sorner. S.

To SKANCE. V. SCANCE.

SKANES, s.pl. Scurf of the head appearing among the hair; or, the exfoliation of the cuticle. S.

SKANT, SCANTH, s. Scarcity. See Sup.

And thus grete skant of time, and besy cure,

Has made my werk mare subtil and obscure,

And not so plesand as it aucht to be.

Doug. Virgil, 484, 23.

— The scanth of men ye set nocht by,

And mortall weris contempnis and comptis not.

V. ROOVE, sense 2.

Ibid. 30, 5.

"Scot. they say scanth and want," Rudd.

Jun. derives E. scant, adj., from Dan. shan-a, skon-a, parcere; but Seren., with greater probability, from Isl. skam-r, brevis, [skemt-a, dividere, proportionari,] as originally signifying that any thing is too short for the use for which it was intended.

SKANTACK, s. A set line, with baited hooks on it, for catching fish by night in a river or lake. S.

SKAP, s. Head; scalp.

SKAPTYNE, s. The practice of extortion. S.

To SKAR, SKAIR, v. n. To take fright; to be affrighted, S.
Duel no langare, but cum hidder in haist,
Ne skar not at his freyndis face as ane gaist.
Doug. Virgil, 214, 52.

A horse that skars is one that is easily startled, or takes fright at objects on the road, S. a skair horse, id. S.B.
Johns., after Skinner, derives E. scare, to affright, from Ital. scarare, consternare: Sibb. thinks that it is "perhaps originally the same with schoir," to threaten: But Seren., after referring to the Ital. word, mentions Isl. skora, provocare, scorast, diffugere. But the cognate term is undoubtedly Isl. skiar, vitabundus, Ihre; refugus, Verel.
From the former, we learn that Su.G. skygg, which he makes synon. with Isl. skiar, is used precisely in the same sense with S. skair, in relation to a horse. Usurpatur frequentissime de equo, qui re quavis territatus a via deflec-tit; Ihre vo. Sky. Skiarr-ast, pavidissimus, Edd. Saemund.
The root is Su.G. sky, vitare.

SKAR, SCAR, adj. 1. Timorous; easily affrighted or startled, S. skair, S.B. See Sup.
The uther sayis, Thocht ye wes skar,

"He began to retract, and to say that the old man was coming to ride on the horse behind him, and the horse being scar, he twice threw him off, and so he broke his neck." Fountainhall's Decisions, i. 59.

2. Shy; affectedly modest, S. skeigh, synon.
And Bess was a braw thumpin kittie,
For Habbie just feer for feer;
But she was (and wasna't a pity?)
As skittish and scare as a deer.
Jamieson's Popular Ball. i. 294.
And now cam the night o' feet washin',

This may signify a small, puny creature, as the term scart is still used in this sense; perhaps from Su.G. skort-a, deficere, or skard-a, diminuere. Or it may be the same with Scarcht, q. v.

To SKASHLE, v. n. To quarrel; to wrangle. S.

SKASHLE, s. A squabble; a wrangle; a quarrel. S.

To SKAT, v. a. To tax; to levy.
This Revin I likin till a fals crownar,

SKEEBRIE, s. Thin light soil, Ang. scalp, scaup, synon.

Perhaps allied to Su.G. skofwe, a covering, Teut. schubbe, a scurf, or rather to Ir. scarab. V. next word.

SKEEBROCH, s. Very lean meat, Galloway. Ir. scarab, thin; lean. Kebrach is synon. Loth.

To SKEEG, v. a. To lash; to flog, v. SKEG. See S.

Quhan words he found, their elritch sound

Was like the norlan blast,

Frae yon deep glack, at Catla's back,

Minstrelsy, Scot. Border, iii. 359.

The term literally signifies to lash or scourge, S.B. It may possibly be an oblique use of Skeyg, q. to cause to move nimbly. If we may trust Bullet, skig-ia is a Celt. word, signifying, to cut, to slice, to strike. Arm. skei, to knock, to bang. Su.G. sweg denotes a green bough used as a rod or scourge.

SKEEGGERS, s. pl. A whip; properly, one made of sedges, used by boys in playing at top, Ang. V. the v.

SKEEG, s. A stroke on the naked breech. S.

SKEEG, s. He played skeeg, he became bankrupt. S.

SKEICH, SKEIGH, adj. 1. Timorous; apt to startle, S. Messapus musing can withdraw on dreich, Seand his stedis and the horses skeich.

Doug. Virgil, 278, 37.

2. Unmanageable; mettlesome; skittish. A term applied to a horse, even when not timorous, S.

Perhaps this is the proper sense in the following passage.

To him in fere also has he layd—

—Thymetes, ane man of full grete fors,

Casting from his staffage, skeich, and hede strang hors.

Doug. Virgil, 422, 18.

Casting for casten, part. pa. cast; thrown.

3. Coy; shy; a term frequently applied to women, S. Shamefu' she was, and skeigh like ony hare, Nor cou'd she think of sitting langer there.

Ross's Helenore, p. 30.

4. Proud; nice, S. often applied to women, (but in a stronger sense than in that last mentioned,) as including the idea of prudery, or expressive of disdain, S.

Maggie coost her head fu' high,

Burns, iv. 26.

"Let gae my hands, I say, be quait;"

And vow! gin she was skeigh

And mim that day.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 262.

5. Fierce-looking. S.

Sibb. mentions, although with marks of uncertainty, Sw. shaelg, obliquus, which has no connexion. Rudd. has referred to Skinner, vo. Skittish; and this adj., as deduced from E. skew, to eschew, has evidently the same origin. Germ. scheuch, scheue, shy; Ein scheues pferd, a skeich horse; Belg. schouwigh, also schichtig, id. from Alem. scuuu-an, Germ. scheu-en, Belg. schouw-en, to shun, to be shy.

The affinity is still closer with Su.G. skygg, a term frequently applied to a horse in the same sense. V. SKAR. adj. This is from sky, vitare. I need scarcely add, that there is every reason to believe, that E. skew, eschew, shun, shy, skittish, scare, and S. skeich, skair, skar, skeir, scunner, have all one origin.

SKEICHNESS, s. The act or state of being skeich. S.

To SKEICH, v. n. To take fright; to startle.

Of Hippolytus, it is said that he

SKEIR, SKEER, adj. Hare-brained, S. See Sup.

This may seem to be the same word that is written skire by Rudd., and mentioned under SCHIRE. But I suspect that it is rather from Isl. skiar, pavidus, as properly denoting that delirium which is produced by excessive fear.

It may thus be viewed as equivalent to an E. phrase.

They shed forth a gleam, fraught with malice and ire,
 A gleam fraught with horror and cruelty dire,
 Like mortals whose senses are scar'd.

2. A sort of iron rattle, used for the same purpose as a hand-bell, for making proclamations on the street, (synon. clap, clapper.) Loth.

Su.G. skaella, Isl. skella, nola, tintinnabulum. In Su.G. that bell which is hung about the necks of animals is called skaella. The same name was anciently given to the bells worn by persons of distinction, that their inferiors might get out of the way. L.B. skella, Ital. squilla, Germ. Belg. schelle, Hisp. esquila. In this sense the word skella is used in the Salic Laws, tit. 29. Si quis skellam de caballis furaverit, &c. It is written scilla by Eadmer, in the life of St. Anselm, Lib. 1. Sumta in manibus chorda pro excitandis fratribus scillam pulsantem. Thus it denoted both the bells hung to the necks of

P. Ploughman, Fol. 53. a.

In Edit. 1566, it is printed as one word, askile.

To SKELLIE, SCALIE, v. n. 1. To have a squint look, S.

See S. 2. To perform any piece of work not in a straight line, but obliquely. 3. To throw or shoot aside from the mark. S.

Su.G. skael-a, torvis oculis intueri, Su.G. id. also skel-a, limis intueri, Germ. schiel-en, id. Skinner apprehends that E. scowl, which is probably allied to this, has some affinity to Gr. σκολ-ιος, obliquus.

SKELLIED, adj. Squinting. S.

SKELLIE-ED, adj. Having the eyes placed a little obliquely. S.

SKELLIE, s. The hand-bell used by public criers. S.

SKELLIE-MAN, s. A bellman or public crier. S.

SKELLYIS, s. pl. "Sharp or rugged rocks," Rudd.

—As Sergest with fers mynd al infyrit,
 Turnit his stevin toward the rolk ouer nere,
 Vntyl ane wikkit place his schip did stere,
 Quhil on the blynd craggis myscheuuslye,
 Fast stikkis scho, choppand hard quhynnis in hye,
 And on the scharp skellyis, to hir wanhap,
 Smate with sic fard, the airis in fendris lap,
 Hyr forschyp hang, and sum dele schorit throw out.
 And first Sergest behynd sone left has he,
 Wreland on skellyis, and vndeippis of the se.

Doug. Virgil, 134, 26, 51.

The word is certainly of the same meaning with E. shelves, which, I suspect, originally denoted a ridge of low rocks, rather than sand-banks. V. SKELVE, v.

SKELLOCH, SKELDOCK, SKELLIE, s. 1. Wild mustard, generally used in pl. S. synon. runches, S.B. Sinapis arvensis, Linn. See Sup.

"The corn fields are liable to the common weeds, especially to skelloch (mostly wild mustard), for which, to sow late after ploughing, when the plant is risen up, and may be destroyed by harrowing, has been tried with success." P. Nigg, Kincardine, Statist. Acc. vii. 197.

Ir. sgeallagach, wild mustard; Obrien. Gael. sgeallan, the seeds of mustard. The E. name charlock, has some resemblance. A.S. cerlice, id. Somner.

2. The term Skelloch is sometimes applied, in the South of S. to Wild radish, Raphanus raphanistrum, Linn.

By the more intelligent, however, even among the peasantry, the wild radish is called runches, while the name skelloch is given to wild mustard.

To SKELLOCH, v. n. To cry with a shrill voice, S.B.

This, as well as squeal, squall, E. is nearly allied to Isl. skell-a, clangere, Su.G. squael-a, ejulare, plorare. Seren. observes, that as the latter properly denotes the wailing of infants, as the consequence of disease, it may be traced to Isl. quill-a, prae aegritudine queri, a deriv. from Sw. quid-a, id. Franc. skell-an, Germ. schall-en, to emit a sound, erschall-en, to ring. Gael. sgal, a shriek, a loud shrill cry; Shaw.

SKELLOCH, s. A shrill cry; a squall, S.B.

To SKELP, v. n. 1. To beat; applied to the motion of a clock.

Baith night and day my lane I skelp;
Wind up my weights but anes a week,
Without him I can gang and speak.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 557.

2. To beat with velocity and violence. The veins are said to be skelpin, when the pulse beats very quick or hard, as in a strong fever, S.B.

Su.G. skalfw-a, Isl. skialf-a, A.S. scylf-an, to tremble; Isl. skelf-a, to shake, to cause to tremble; skialft, tremor, iardskialfe, an earthquake; Su.G. skaelfwa, skalfwosot, a fever, q. because of the tremulous motion of the joints, from skalfwa, and sot, sickness.

Seren., however, seems to appropriate this designation to the ague; and this is exactly analogous to the name by which it is known, S.B. the trembling fevers.

To SKELP, v. a. 1. To strike with the open hand. It properly denotes the chastisement inflicted on the breech, S. scud, scult, synon.

Bat fat's the matter? the cheil says,
He sav't the Grecian schips,
Held aff the Trojans an' the gods,
An' skelpit Hector's hips.

Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 27.

Sometimes it signifies to flog the buttocks by means of a lash.

He's whirled aff the gude weather's skin,
And wrappit the dandily lady therein;
"I darena pay you for your gentle kin,
But weel may I skelp my weather's skin."

Jamieson's Popular Ball. i. 325.

I'm friends with Mause; with very Madge I'm gree'd;
Altho' they skelpit me when woody fleid.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 190.

This may be viewed as an oblique use of the preceding v., as Isl. skaelf-a, Su.G. skelfw-a, also signify, to fright, terrere, Verel. Isl. skelf-a, however, is occasionally used in the very same sense with our skelp; percello, Kristni-sag. Gl.; skell-a, id. Rasskell-a, podicem manu verberare; Gl. Orkneyinga, S. vo. Skella.

2. To strike, in whatever way; to drub, S.

— Baxter lads hae seal'd a vow
To skelp an' clout the guard.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 51.

3. Applied to the strokes of misfortune. S.

4. To skelp, to skelp it, to move quickly on foot, to trip along; especially applied to one who is barefooted, S.

The well-win thousands of some years
In ae big bargain disappears;

'Tis sair to bide, but wha can help it,
Instead of coach, on foot they skelp it.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 332.

As lightsomely I glowr'd abroad,

To see a scene so gay,

Three hizzies, early at the road,

Cam skelpin up the way.

Burns, iii. 29.

Perhaps this use of the term has originated from the sharp noise made by the feet in walking smartly, q. striking or beating the road.

5. Denoting quick motion on horseback. S.

SKELP, s. 1. A stroke; a blow; used in a general sense, S.

Quhen Inglismen come into this land,
Had I bene thair with my bricht brand,
Withowttyn ony help,
Bot myne allane, on Pynky Craiggis,
I sowld haif revin thame all in raggis,
And laid on skelp for skelp.

Lyndsay, S.P.R. ii. 11.

The water is said to come with a skelp on a boat, when its shock is sudden and violent, so as to make it give way. The term, in this application, has considerable resemblance to Isl. skialf-a, concutere, quatere, tremefacere.

2. Metaph. for a misfortune, in trade or otherwise, S., as E. blow is frequently used. A sair skelp, a severe blow.

— Quhys loking comfort to resae,
Quhys loking for a skelp;
Quhys dreiding sche suld me disae,
Quhys houping for hir help.

V. Mow-BIT. Burel's Pilgr. Watson's Coll. ii. 48.

3. A severe blast; a squall; applied also to a heavy fall of rain. 4. A large portion. S.

SKELPER, s. 1. One who strikes with the open hand.

2. A quick walker; as, "He's a skelper at gangin'." S.

SKELPIE-LIMMER, s. An opprobrious term applied to a female, S.

Ye little skelpie-limmer's face,
I daur you try sic sportin,
As seek the foul Thief ony place,
For him to spae your fortune.

Burns, iii. 131.

SKELPIN', s. A beating with the open hand. S.

SKELPING, adj. 1. Making a noise; as, a skelpin' kiss, a smack. 2. Clever; agile; active. S.

SKELP-THE-DUB, adj. A term applied to one who is accustomed to do low work; as, to act like a footboy. S.

SKELP, s. A splinter of wood. Syn. Shelb. S.

To SKELP, v. a. To apply splints to a broken limb. S.

SKELPIE, s. A worthless person. S.

SKELT, part. pa. Having the seams unript. V. SKAIL. v.

To SKELVE, v. n. To separate in laminae. A stone is said to skelve, when thin layers fall off from it, in consequence of friction, or of exposure to the air, S.B.

Teut. schelffe, squama, mica, schelffer, mica, schelffer-en, assulatim frangere, in micis frangere sive frangi. The word appears in a more primitive form in Su.G. skaell-a, Isl. skel-iast, in tenues laminas dissilire, from skal, putamen; and this perhaps from skil-ia, separare.

SKELVE, s. A thin slice, lamina, S.B. Teut. schelre, segmen.

SKELVY, adj. 1. A term applied to a rock which appears in a variety of laminae, S.B.

Ilk rib sae bare, a skelvy skair.—

Minstrelsy, Border, iii. 358.

2. Applied to rocks which form the bed of a shallow river, S. shelvy, E.

Here, foaming down the sheley rocks,

In twisting strength I rin. Burns, iii. 356.

To SKEMMEL, SKEMBLE, SKAMMEL, v. n. 1. To throw the limbs out loosely and awkwardly in walking. 2.

To walk or climb over slight or loose obstructions; also, to climb over rocks or walls. S.

To SKEMMEL, SKAMMEL, v. a. To throw things hither and thither in a slovenly and careless way. S.

SKEMMIL, adj. Having the feet thrown outwards. S.

SKEMMLING, s. A foolish way of throwing the legs. S.

SKEMMIL, s. A tall thin person. S.

SKEMP, SKEMPY, s. A worthless fellow; a Scamp. S.

SKEO, SKEE, s. A small hut, built of drystone for drying fish without salt, Orkn. See Sup.

SKEP, SKEPP, SKEPPE, SCAPE, s. 1. A case, resembling a basket, made of twisted straw, used as a bee-hive, S. See Sup.

Forth of their skeppes sum raging beis

Lyes out, and will not cast;

Sum uther swarmes hyves on the treis

In knotts togidder fast.

A. Hume, Chron. S.P. iii. 389.

"Bees are so rare there, that a young man, in the end of April, stopt the skep (which a lady had taken hither from Angus) with a piece of a peat. About 8 days thereafter, the Laird going to look after them, found them all dead. His family being convened, he inquired who had done it. The actor did confidently answer, that upon such a day he did it because they were all flying away." Mackaile's Relation concerning Orkney, MS. Adv. Libr. V. Barry's Orkney, p. 453.

2. Used metaph. in relation to industry.

Yit thir, alas! are antrin fock,

That lade their scape wi' winter stock.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 31.

Su.G. skaepp-a, skepp-a, a vessel used by farmers in sowing, for holding the seed; sadeskaeppa, q. a seed-skepp. A.S. sciop, a vessel, a box; Germ. schaffa, a wooden concave vessel, Teut. schap, vas, theca, Lat. scappium, L.B. scapp-a, from Gr. σκαφος, cavitas; Gael. sgeip, a bee-hive; Shaw.

E. skep must have been originally the same; expl. "a sort of basket, narrow at the bottom, and wide at the top, to fetch corn in." Johns. oddly derives it from scephen, Lower Sax. to draw.

To SKEP, v. a. To enclose in a bee-hive. S.

To SKEP a bike. To carry off wild bees with their combs from their natural nest, and put them into a hive. S.

To SKEP in, v. n. To get intimate with. S.

SKEPPING, s. The act of putting bees into their houses when they hive. S.

SKEPLET, adj. Skeplet hat,—meaning not clear. S.

SKER.

Venus that day coniunit with Juppiter,

That day Neptunus hid him like ane sker :

That day Dame Nature, with greit besines,

Furtherit Flora to kith hir craftines.

Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 190.

Skar, later Edit. Perhaps as one scared or frightened.

It seems used as an adj. But V. SKAR, s. 2.

SKERIE, adj. Somewhat restive; easily scared. S.

SKERR, s. A ridge of rock. V. SKERRY and SKAIRS. S.

SKERR, s. A bare precipice; a Scar. S.

SKERRY, s. 1. An insulated rock, Orkn. See Sup.

"Near this Pentland Skerry, there are two or three other skerries or rocks, on which there is not nourishment for any tame living creature." P. S. Ronaldsay, Statist. Acc. xv. 300.

"There are several which are overflowed at high water, and have scarcely any soil for the production of vegetables;—these—are called Skerries, a name which indicates sharp, ragged rocks." Barry's Orkney, p. 18.

2. It is sometimes, although perhaps improperly, used in a more limited sense; as appears from the following example.

"The sandy beaches of the two first mentioned extend each a mile in length; that of the last not so much, except at low water of spring tides; and consist partly of skerries, (flat rocks, over which the sea flows and ebbs)." P. Stron-say, Orkn. Ibid. p. 388.

Perhaps from Su.G. Isl. skaer, a rock, and ey, an island; although Isl. skaer by itself, is sometimes rendered, scopulus maris. V. SKAIR.

SKERTER, s. The name for Sea-belts, Orkn. Fucus saccharinus, Linn.; one of the species of sea-weed burnt for making kelp.

"F. saccharinus, Skserter, Orkney." Neill's Tour, p. 191.

The name seems allied to Sw. ske-oert, scurvy-grass.

SKET, SKETE. Ful sket, full hastily or quickly; i. e. full readily.

The harpaur gan to say,

—"The maistri give I the, Full sket."

Bifor the kinges kne

Tristrem is cald to set.

Sir Tristrem, p. 34.

My ingenious friend the Editor properly refers to A.S. scyt-an, irruere. It may be added, that On scyte waes is rendered by Lye, in praecipiti erat, was in haste, or rushed headlong: scyte-raese, praeceps ruens. Perhaps, however, it is more immediately allied to Isl. skiot-ur, celer, pernix; skiotur à foti, swift of foot; whence the Sw. have given the name skiut to a horse, as he is also called haest, from hast-a, festinare.

To SKETCH, v. n. To skate. S.

SKETCHERS, s. pl. The vulgar name for skates. S.

SKETCHERS, s. pl. Two wooden legs with a cross-bar, for supporting a tree that is to be sawed. S.

To SKEUCH, (gutt.) To distort; to twist to a side. S.

SKEUGH, s. A twist to one side; a distortion. S.

To SKEVREL, v. n. To move unsteadily in a circular way. S.

SKEW, SKEU, s. That part of a gable which is oblique, from the eaves to the chimney-stalk, S. See Sup.

The bitter, blindin, whirlin drift,

Through raggit skeu, an' chimlie rift,

The cottage fills.

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, i. 45.

This has the same origin with SHACH, q. v.

To SKEW, v. a. 1. To build in an oblique form, S.

2. To skew a house, to cover the gables of a thatched roof with sods, Tweedd.

SKEW, s. Skew and reskew.

Hardy and hat contenyt the fell mellé,

Skew and Reskew off Scottis and Ingliss alss :

Sum kerwyt bran in sondyr, sum the hals,

Sum hurt, sum hynt, sum derffly dong to dede.

Wallace, v. 835. MS.

As reskew evidently denotes the deliverance of those who have been taken by an enemy, from O.Fr. rescou-er, to take again; skew signifies the state of being seized by the enemy, from secou-er, to move violently; Imprimer à un corps un mouvement qui enbranle toutes ses parties; Dict. Trev. Corr. from Lat. succut-ere, to shake.

The term seems properly to denote that disorder into which part of an army is thrown, in consequence of which some are taken prisoners.

To SKEW, v.n. To twist one's self affectedly. V. SKEUGH, S.
To SKEW, v.a. To shun; to seek shelter from; as, to skew a shower, to seek shelter from rain. S.

SKEW, s. A wooden machine placed on the chimney-tops of country houses for preventing smoke. S.

SKEW'D, adj. Acting like one deprived of reason, Perth., evidently the same word with SKAIVIE, q.v.

To SKEWL, v.a. To distort; to put any thing out of its proper direction; skewled, having an oblique direction, S.B. V. SHOWL.

SKY, s. A small board, about four inches in depth, used in the construction of the Shetland plough, in place of a mould-board. An old barrel stave is generally fixed on for this purpose. See Sup.

"A square hole is cut through the lower end of the beam, and the mercal, a piece of oak about 22 inches long introduced, which, at the other end, holds the sock and sky." P. Aithsting, Statist. Acc. vii. 585.

EAR-SKY, s. A part of the plough jutting out obliquely backwards, on the right side, a little above the sky. S.

SKY, s. Shadow. See Sup.

My fader than lukand furth throw the sky,
Cryis on me fast, Fle son, fle son, in hye.

Doug. Virgil, 63, 12.

"Fr. Junius with little ground renders it umbra, because Virgil has it so. And it would seem as if he had designed to derive the word from Gr. σκια;" Rudd. Junius, [or, as appears, Lye] is certainly right, not only as he has Virgil on his side; but because skye is an O.E. word, used in this sense by Gower.

And with that worde, all sodenly
She passeth, as it were a skye.

Conf. Am. Lib. iv. Fol. 71. a.

Warton has adopted the same idea. "A shadow, σκια, umbra." It is more immediately connected with Belg. scheye, (Kilian, vo. Schaede) with Su.G. sky, nubes, nebula, or even with skugga, id. whence skygg-a, obumbrare. Seren. derives skugga, from sky, nebula, vo. Shade. Isl. skyat veder, coelum nubibus obductum, sed tamen sine pluvia.

SKY, s. The sky of a hill, the ridge or summit. S.

SKY, s. The red light on the clouds in the East before sunrise, in the West after sunset. S.

1. BETWEEN THE SUN AND THE SKY, a phrase denoting the interval between daybreak and sunrise. S.

2. To LOOK, or To SEE an object, BETWEEN THE SUN AND THE SKY, to bow down the body, bringing the eye as much as possible along the horizon. S.

To SKY, v.n. Perhaps to fly low and steadily, skimming along the horizon. V. SCOPE. S.

To SKY up, v.n. To clear up; applied to the atmosphere when the rain seems to go off, and the sky begins to appear; as, It's like to sky up. S.

SKIACH (gutt.) s. The berry of the hawthorn. S.

SKIB, s. A stroke. S.

SKYBALD, s. 1. Expl. "tatterdemallion," Rams. Gl. S.
Skeibalt, "mean worthless fellow," Sibb. Gl. See S.

"The said Laird perceaving men to faint and begyne to recoule, said, Fy, lat us nevir leive efter this day, that we sall recoule for Frenche skybaldis." Knox's Hist. p. 202.

Poor skybalds! cursed with more o' wealth than wit,
Blyth of a gratis gaudeamus, sit
With look attentive, ready all about

To give the laugh when his dull joke comes out.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 353.

2. Applied to a worn-out horse, or to one that is lazy. S.

3. Used to denote a gelded goat. S.

Dan. skabhals (skabbals, Sibb.) denotes a rogue, a rascal, a base man; allied perhaps to Isl. skeifr, the rabble, skipe, a low fellow, Border. O.Fr. scyale is used by Rabelais, in the sense of merde endurcie, a term undoubtedly expressive of the greatest contempt possible. Hence, SKYBALD, adj. 1. Mean; low. 2. Tattered; ragged.

Blierd babbling bystour-bard obey;

Learn, skybald knave, to know thy sell.

Polwart, Watson's Coll. iii. 6.

SKIBE, s. A niggardly fellow, West and South of S. Skyb, a worthless fellow. V. SKYBALD. See Sup.

SKYBRIE, s. Thin light soil; Skeebrie, Ang. S.

SKYBRIE, adj. Skybrie stuff, bad grain. S.

SKICHEN (gutt.) s. A disgust at food from being too nice in the taste. V. SKEICH. S.

To SKID, v.n. To slide. V. SKYTE, v. S.

To SKID, v.n. To look obliquely at any object. S.

SKIDDIE, adj. Squint; oblique. Syn. Skellie. S.

To SKIFF, SKIFT, v.n. To move lightly and smoothly along; to move as scarcely touching the ground, S.
See Sup.

Use not to skift athort the gait.

V. MUM CHAIRTIS.

Maitland Poems, p. 329.

i. e. Let it not be your custom to move lightly through the streets.

Kind muse, skiff to the bent away,

To try anes mair the landart lay.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 58.

Ye watchful guardians of the fair,

Who skiff on wings of ambient air.—

V. BUSTINE.

Ibid. p. 214.

It may be originally the same with E. skip; Isl. skop-a, discurrere. But Su.G. skifwa sig, is rendered, superbe incedere; and skift seems indeed to include the idea of pride as well as of levity.

To SKIFF, v.a. To cause a flat stone skip along the surface of a body of water, S. V. SCOUP, v. 2.

To SKIFT, v.a. To glide over; to pass any thing in a slight way, S.B.

V. the v.n. and SCOUP, v. 2.

SKIFFIE, s. A name given to the tub or box used for bringing up coals from the pit, S.

"There were employed at least two men at the windlass, putting up the coals in skiffies, termed hutches." P. Campsie, Stirlings. Statist. Acc. xv. 331.

Apparently from E. skiff, as boat is used to signify a tub.

SKIFT, s. A flying shower, S.B.

The idea seems borrowed from that of sudden change; Su.G. skifw-a, mutare, skift, intervallum; as a skift is opposed to rain; or as allied to Skift, v.

SKIFT, s. Art, facility in doing any thing, S.B.

Probably allied to Moes.G. ga-skraft, making, from skapen, facere.

SKIFT, s. A broad ridge of land, as distinguished from Laing, a narrow ridge. S.

To SKIG, v.a. To flog; the same as Skeeg and Skeg. S.

SKIG, s. A stroke on the breech. S.

SKIGGA, s. The sail of a vessel. S.

To SKIGGLE, v.a. To spill. V. SKINKLE. S.

SKY-GOAT, s. A name given in the Highlands and Western Isles of Scotland to the bittern. S.

SKYLAND, part. adj.

Thou skyland skarth, thou has the hurle behind.

Dunbar, Evergreen, ii. 57.

The connexion shews that this term conveys a dirty idea; Dan. skyll-a, Isl. skol-ia, eluere.

SKYLD, s. A species of tax, or land rent, Orkn. S.

To SKYLE, v. a. To hide; to conceal.

Yet nerthelesse within mine orature
I stode, quhan Titan had his bemis brycht
Withdrawin doun, and skyld undir cure,
And faire Venus, the beauté of the nycht, Upraise.

Henryson's Test. Creseide, Chron. S.P. i. 157.

Scyled, Chaucer's Works, Fol. 182, col. i. "Closed,"
Gl. Skyled undir cure, "hid under cover."

Su.G. skyl-a, occultare; Isl. skiol-a, Dan. skyl-er, Belg. schuyt-en, latitare. Ihre views sky-a, celare, tegere, as the origin. Hence, according to this learned etymologist, skoeld, a shield, as being a covering for the body in war; and skiul, tectum, the covering of a house. But it is singular, that Heb. שָׁלַח, shilte, signifies shields.

SKYLE, s. Dispersion. S.

SKILL, s. Return.

"I yield me, schir, and do me nocht to smart,—

"I sauf youris, suppois it be no skill."

—Thy waresoun sould be [richt] smal but skill.

King Hart, i. 51. ii. 7.

Isl. skil, redditio, Pinkerton. It is allied to Su.G. skyll-a, debitum solvere.

SKILL, SKYL, SKYLL, s. 1. Cause; reason. See Sup.

Bot sen thow spekys sa rudly,
It is gret skyll men chasty
Thai proud wordis, till that thou knaw
The rycht, and bow it as thou aw.

Barbour, ix. 751. MS.

Reason is substituted, Edit. 1620.

Oft times is better hald nor len,
And this is my skill and resson quhy;
Full evill to knaw ar mony men,
And to be crabbit settis littil by.

Chron. S.P. iii. 225.

2. Proof; argument.

—Til the knycht the prys gawe thai,
That smate Willame the Ramsay
Throw-owte the hede, and a skyll
Thai schawyt til enfors thare-til,
And sayd, it wes justyng of were,
And he, that mast engrewyt there,
Suld have the grettast prys, wyth thi
That he engrewyt honestly.

Wyntown, viii. 35. 187.

Su.G. skael, skil, ratio, probatio; Anfoera syna skael, to bring forward his reasons; Ihre, Dan. skiel, A.S. scyle, id. Isl. Su.G. skil-ia, disjungere, separare; primarily applied to external objects, and metaph. to the mind.

3. Approbation, or regard. I hae nae skill of him, or it, i. e. no favourable opinion, S.B. See Sup.

This is merely an oblique use of the term as denoting proof. It had originally been employed to signify that one could not judge of a person or thing, as having had no trial, or opportunity of probation. The Isl. v. is used in a similar manner. Mier skilst, sapio, G. Andr. p. 213.

SKILLY, SKEELY, adj. 1. Intelligent; skilful in any profession or art, S.B. pron. skeely.

The king sits in Dumferline town,
Drinking the blude-red wine;
"O whare will I get a skeely skipper,
"To sail this new ship of mine?"

Minstrelsy, Border, iii. 64.

Upon your milk your skilly hand you'll try.

And gee's a feast o't, as we're coming by.

Ross's Helenore, p. 95.

2. Real or supposed skill in curing diseases in man or beast. 3. That kind of knowledge which was supposed to counteract the powers of magic. S.

Su.G. skaelig, rational; Isl. skiallig-ur, prudent; skial-ligr madr, homo disertus et consideratus; G. Andr.

SKILLOCKS, s. pl. Wild mustard. Syn. Skelloch. S.

To SKILT, v. n. To move quickly and lightly; skelp, synon. See Sup.

There Pan kept sheep, and there it was
Where the red hair'd glyed wanton lass
Did skilt through woods owre banks and braes,
With her blind get, who, Poets sayes,
Could shoot as well as those that sees.

Cleland's Poems, p. 59.

To SKILT at, v. n. To drink copiously; to swill. S.

SKILT, s. A draught; Skilts, drinks of any thing. S.

SKILTING, s. The act of drinking deeply. S.

To SKYME, v. n. To glance or gleam with reflected light.

SKIME, s. The glance of reflected light. S.

To SKIMMER, v. n. 1. To flicker, as applied to light.

2. The inconstant motion of the rays of light, reflected from a liquid surface slightly agitated. 3. To have a flaunting appearance; applied to females when lightly and showily dressed. 4. To act or walk quickly; to glide lightly and speedily. Applied also to the flight of a swallow near the surface of smooth water. S.

SKIMMER, s. The flickering of the rays of light. S.

SKIMMERIN, adj. A skimmerin look, that peculiar look which characterizes an idiot or a lunatic, S.B. as perhaps originally descriptive of the faint glare of the disordered eye. See Sup.

Germ. schimmer, a dim or faint glare of light; Su.G. skymm-a, obumbrare, skumm, obscurus. For Ihre justly views A.S. scymr-ian, in this sense, as radically different from the word of the same form signifying to shine. He concludes that the Scythic root denoted something faintly shining, or in an intermediate state between obscurity and brightness, from the use of Moes.G. skeima, for a lantern, Joh. xviii. 3. A.S. scymr-ian, "umbrare, inumbrare. To cast a shadow; Belg. schemer-en, whereof our shimmering, for an imperfect light, like unto that of the twilight;" Somner.

SKIN, s. A particle; a single grain. A small quantity. S.

SKIN, s. A term expressive of the greatest contempt; as, "Ye're naething but a nasty skin." S.

SKINCHEON o' drink. A hearty pull. Syn. Skube. S.

SKINFLINT, s. A covetous wretch; a person who, if he could, would take the skin off a flint. S.

SKINY, s. "Packthread," S. Sir J. Sinclair's Observ. p. 127.

He derives it from Gr. σκινος. It is pron. q. skeengie. E. skain of thread is probably allied.

SKINK, s. 1. A shin of beef. 2. Strong soup made of cows' hams, S. See Sup.

"Scotch skink, which is a pottage of strong nutriment, is made with the knees and sinews of beef, but long boiled." Bacon's Nat. Hist. ap. Johns.

Guid barley broth and skink came next,
Wi' raisins and plumdamis mixt.

Shirrefs' Poems, p. 210.

Su.G. skinka, Belg. Germ. schinck, A.S. sceanc, a gammon. A.S. scenc, however, signifies drink, potus.

SKINK-BROTH, s. Soup made of shins of beef. S.

SKINK-HOUGH, s. The leg-joint or shin of beef. S.

S K Y

- SKINK-PLAIT, s. A plate for holding soup. S.
GANE A' SKINK. Gone to shreds and tatters. S.
To SKYNK, v. a. 1. To pour out liquor of any kind for drinking. See Sup.
 And for thir tithingis in flakoun and in skull
 Thay skynk the wyne, and wauchtis cowpys full.
Doug. Virgil, 210, 6.
 This seems the primary sense; Su.G. skaenk-a, Franc. skenk-en, Dan. skenk-er, Germ. schenk-en, potum infundere. Hence Franc. skinko, Alem. scenke, Germ. schenk, pincerna, a butler; synon. with A.S. byrle; Germ. erz-schenk, the chief butler who presented the cup to the Emperor at the feast on occasion of his coronation; erb-schenk, a hereditary butler; from A.S. scenc, drink.
 2. To make a libation; to pour out in making an offering to the gods.
 Now skynk and offer Jupiter cowpis full,
 And in your prayeris and orisonis in fere
 Do call apoun Anchises my fader dere.
Pateras libate Jovi, Virg. Doug. Virgil, 209, 33.
 3. To serve drink; a sense still retained in E.
 Call on our patroun, common God diuyn is,
 And with gude will do skynk and birll the wynis.
Doug. Virgil, 250, 49.
 4. To skink over, formally to renounce; apparently in allusion to the custom of a vender drinking the health of a buyer, as confirming the bargain, and wishing him prosperity in the enjoyment of what he has purchased.
 "If this had not been, I should have skinked over and foregone my part of paradise and salvation, for a breakfast of dead moth-eaten earth." Rutherford's Lett. P. i. ep. 88.
 5. To crush the sides of any thing, as of an egg, together. 6. To break in pieces by weight or pressure. S.
SKINK, s. Used to denote drink in a general sense. S.
To SKINKLE, v. n. 1. To sparkle; to shine, S.
 The cleading that fair Annet had on,
 It skinkled in their een. Ritson's S. Songs, ii. 190.
 — The gay mantel
 Was skinkland in the sone.
Jamieson's Popular Ball. i. 345.
 Squire Pope but busks his skinklin patches,
 O' heathen tatters. Burns, iv. 360.
 Evidently a frequentative from Moes.G. skein-an, Su.G. skin-a, A.S. scin-an, fulgere.
 2. To make a showy appearance. S.
Skinklin, as a s., is expl., "a small portion," Gl. Burns.
SKINKLE, s. Lustre; shining. S.
SKINKLIN, s. 1. The sparkling of a bright irradiation. S.
 2. A small portion or quantity. S.
To SKINKLE, to SKIGGLE, v. n. To spill liquids in small quantities. Scuttle, synon. S.
To SKINKLE, v. a. To sprinkle. S.
SKINKLING, s. Applied to meat that is nearly cold, and consequently ungrateful to the stomach. S.
SKIO, s. A hut in which fish are dried. V. SKEO. S.
SKIP, term. Denoting state or condition, as in fore-skip, herrieskip, hissieskip, nourishkip, &c.
 This term corresponds to Su.G. skap, Belg. schap, Germ. schaft, A.S. scipe, E. ship; all from the v. denoting action or constitution, Su.G. skap-a, create, &c.
To SKIP, v. a. To make a thin flat stone skim along the surface of water. Syn. Skiff and Squirr. S.
SKIP, s. The person who, in Curling, plays the last of his party; and who is also the judge or director, as to the mode of playing the game, to all on his side. S.
SKYPE, s. A worthless, contemptible fellow. S.

S K I

- SKYPEL, adj. Skypel skate, a tall, ill-made fellow. S.
SKIPPARE, SKIPPER, s. 1. A shipmaster.
 Himself as skippare hynt the stere on hand,
 Himself as maister gan marynaris command.
Doug. Virgil, 133, 23.
 The skiper bad gar land thee at the Bass.
Evergreen, ii. 71.
 "Some of Kirkaldy skippers, Crouner Hamilton also, would have been at the trying of their fire-works on the King's ships." Baillie's Lett. i. 167. V. SKILLY.
 It is still sometimes applied, but rather in a familiar way, to shipmasters of a higher order, S.
 Su.G. skeppare, anc. skipare, A.S. scipar, Belg. schipper, Germ. schiffer.
 2. It is now generally appropriated to the master of a sloop, barge, or passage-boat, S.
 3. In the fisheries, it is used in a sense still lower, as denoting one of the men who superintends other four, having the charge of a coble, S.
 "These [cobles] are used only in the herring fishing, each carrying 4 men and a skipper, with 8 nets." P. Oldhamstocks, Statist. Acc. vii. 407.
 "The skippers, or men who have the charge of the boats, and give directions when to draw the nets, have for their wages during the fishing season 6l. with 4 bolls of oatmeal, &c." Ibid. xi. 93.
SKIRDOCH, adj. 1. Flirting; an epithet applied to a coxcomb, or a coquette.—2. Easily scared or frightened, Fife. Syn. Skeigh. S.
 Allied perhaps to Dan. skierts, a jest, raillery; skierts-er, to jeer, to banter; skerter, a jeerer.
SKYRE, s. A schirrous substance.
 Fy, skowdert skyn, thou art but skyre and skrumple.
Dunbar, Evergreen, ii. 54.
 Fr. scyre, "a hard and almost insensible swelling or kernell, bred between the flesh and skin, by cold, or of thick and clammy phlegm;" Cotgr. Lat. schirr-us.
SKIRE, adj. Pure; mere; as, "a skire fool." S.
To SKYRE, v. n. Skyrit, pret. Perhaps sheered off. S.
To SKYRE, v. n. To be shy; to startle. Syn. Skar. S.
To SKIRGE, v. a. To pour liquor backwards and forwards, from one vessel to another, to mellow it. S.
SKIRGE, s. A flash or dash of water. S.
SKIRGIFFIN, s. A half-grown female. S.
SKYRIN, part. pr. 1. Shining, S.B.
 Simmer an' winter on it kyths,
 And mony a bonny town;
 An' a' the skyrin brins o' light
 That blink the poles aroun'.
Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 29.
 2. Making a great show, in what way soever, S.
 But had you seen the philibegs,
 And skyrin tartan trews man.—
Burns, iv. 363.
 A.S. scir, scyr, Alem. scieri, Su.G. skir, clear, shining; skir-a, Isl. skyr-a, to make luminous, Moes.G. ga-sheir-an, to illustrate. Thre views these terms as derived from the old Goth. word skir, or skior, fire.
SKIRISFURISDAY, SKYIRTHURISDAYE, s. The Thursday before Good-Friday. S.
To SKIRL, SKIRLE, v. n. To shriek; to cry with a shrill voice, S. See Sup.
 And fouk wad threap, that she did green
 For what wad gar her skirle
 And skreigh some day.
V. SKREED, v. Ramsay's Poems, i. 262.
Skrilles is evidently used per metath. for skirls.

- Gawayn bi the coler keppis the knight;
Then his leman on loft skrilles and skrik.
Skrik, i. e. shrieked. Sir Gawan and Sir Gal. ii. 22.
Sibb. derives it from skri-a, vociferari. But although this be the remote source, it is immediately allied to Su.G. skrael-a, id. Dan. skralb-er, Isl. skrall-a, sonum strenuum edere. Hence skrall, vociferatio, Su.G. skoerl, Dan. skraal, skrald, id. This seems to be the origin of E. shrill.
SKIRL, s. A shriek; a shrill cry, S.
With skirllis and with skrekis sche thus beris,
Filling the hous with murnyng and salt teris.
V. the v. Doug. Virgil, 61, 36.
“Ye have g’ien baith the sound thump, and the loud skirl,” Ramsay’s S. Prov. p. 82.
SKIRL-CRAKE, s. The Sand-piper, a bird. S.
SKIRL, s. Wind accompanied by rain or snow. S.
SKIRL, s. Perhaps a stroke; a dunt, — or rather a scouter; a birsle. S.
SKIRL-IN-THE-PAN, s. 1. The noise made by a frying-pan, when the butter, &c. is put in to prepare it for receiving the meat. 2. The dish fried in this manner. 3. A sort of drink called also Merry-meat, made of oat-meal, whisky and ale, mixed and heated in a pan for the gossips at inlyings. S.
SKIRL-NAKED, adj. Stark naked. Syn. Mother-naked.
To SKYRME, v. n. To skirmish; or perhaps to make a feint.
Sum skirp me with scorn, and sum skyrme at myn e.
Houlate, i. 6.
Printed skyrine; but it is skyrme in MS. V. SCRYM, v.
The origin is most probably retained in Isl. skrum-a, fingo; q. to feign a fight.
To SKIRP, v. a. To mock. V. SCORP.
To SKIRP, v. a. To splash. Also used as a v. n. S.
SKIRPIN, s. The gore, or strip of thin cloth, in the hinder part of breeches; more properly kirpin. S.
To SKIRR, v. a. To scour. S.
To SKIRRIVAIG, v. n. To run about in an unsettled way; to wander as an idle vagrant. V. SKURYVAGE. S.
SKIST, s. Chest; box; for kist, Gl. Sibb.
SKIST, s.
Bot scoup, or skist, his craft is all to scayth.
V. SCOUP. King Hart, ii. 54.
SKIT, s. 1. Dancing skit, a contemptuous designation for a female dancer on a stage.
“For incontinent upon sight of him come to hir remembrance that heinous offence that without greit propitiounis culd not be purgeit, forsuith that the Quene had not dancit at the wedding feist of Sebastiane the Minstrell and vyle jester, that scho sat be her husband quha had not yet fully recouerit his deith, that at the banquet of hir domestical parasite scho had not played the dancing skit.” Buchanan’s Detect. Sign. D. 7, a. Histrionicam non egerit, Lat.
Skit is still used for a vain, empty creature; sometimes, proud skit, S.
It may have a common origin with E. skittish, from Su.G. sky, vitare; or be allied to Isl. skats, or skessa, mulier procax; Su.G. skess-a, petulanter se gerere.
2. A piece of silly ostentation, an action that displays much emptiness of mind, S.
The term may allude to the motion of a skittish horse, which frequently starts aside. Isl. ski, convitium, may also be allied to Su.G. sky, vitare, aufugere, whence E. shy. Ski is conjoined with skripi, our skrip, mock, taunt, ski ok skripi; Hervararsag. p. 176.
SKIT, s. 1. An oblique taunt; a sarcasm, S. Squib is - not quite synon., as it does not imply that the reflection is indirect.

2. A kind of humbug, nearly allied to the cant term Quiz. 3. Something tending to expose one to ridicule. S.
This term is used in E., although overlooked in Dictionaries. “A skit,” Mr. Tooke says, “the past participle of scit-an, means (subaud. something) cast or thrown. The word is now used for jeer or jibe, or covered imputation thrown or cast upon any one.” Divers. Purley, ii. 144.
Su.G. skiut-a, to throw.
To SKIT, v. n. To caper like a skittish horse. S.
SKYTCERS, s. pl. Skates. S.
To SKITE, SKYTE, v. a. 1. To eject any liquid forcibly; properly, liquidum excrementum jaculare, S.
Isl. skvett-a, id. Sw. skijt-a, exonerare ventrem. Hence the vulgar designation for a diarrhœa.
2. To squirt, to throw the spittle forcibly through the teeth, S. See Sup.
To SKITE, SKYT, v. n. 1. To glide swiftly; to shoot, S.
Here coachmen, grooms, or pavement trotter
Glitter’d a while, then turn’d to snorter;
Like a shot starn, that thro’ the air
Skyts east or west with unco glare,
But found neist day on hillock side,
Na better seems nor paddock ride.
Ramsay’s Poems, i. 334.
2. To fly out hastily. 3. To rebound in a slanting direction, from a smart stroke; applied to small objects, as hail, pebbles, &c. S.
Su.G. skiut-a, id. Neutraliter usurpatum notat, id., quod cum impetu prorumpit; Ihre.
SKITE, s. 1. The dung of a fowl, S.B. V. the v.
2. The act of squirting, or throwing saliva forcibly through the teeth. 3. A squirt or syringe. 4. A smart and sudden blow, making the thing which strikes rebound in a slanting direction from that which is struck. 5. A trick. “He’s played me an ill skite.” S.
SKYTER, s. A squirt or syringe. S.
HUMLOCK-SKITE, s. A squirt made from the hollow stalk of hemlock. S.
SKYTE, s. 1. A nasty person, S.B. either from the v. in the Goth. sense, or allied to Dan. skyden, sordidus.—
2. A meagre person; a strange-looking ugly person. S.
SKITE of rain. A flying shower. Syn. Skift. S.
SKITIE, s. A small transient shower. S.
To SKYTE, v. n. To slide in a slight degree; to slip. S.
SKITE, s. The act of slipping or sliding in walking. S.
To SKYTLE, v. n. To move from side to side; applied to any liquid which is shaken or moved from side to side of a vessel, in being carried. S.
SKITTER, s. 1. Liquidum excrementum. 2. With the article the prefixed, it denotes the diarrhœa. S.
To SKITTER, v. n. Liquidum excrementum ejicere. S.
SKITTERFUL, adj. Under the influence of a diarrhœa. S.
To SKIVE, v. a. To cut longitudinally into equal slices.
SKIVERS, SKEEVERS, s. pl. The leather now generally used for binding school books, S.
This is only one half of the thickness of the skin, which is sliced into two; the other half being reserved for making gloves. It is nearly as thin as a wafer, and often fails in a few days. I mention this practice, particularly, because it is a gross imposition on the public; as people purchase books, under the notion of their being bound, when boards would be fully as durable.
Su.G. skifva, a slice, pl. skifvar; skaera i skifvar, to cut into slices.
SKIVET, s. A sharp blow. S.

 SKLATER, s. A slater, S. See Sup.
 SKLANDYR, s. Slander. V. SCLANDYR.
 To SKLAVE, v. a. To calumniate. S.
 To SKLAVE, v. n. To utter slander. S.
 SKLEET, adj. Smooth; sleek. S.
 SKLEFF, adj. 1. Shallow. 2. Thin and flat; as, "a skleff cheese," one that is not thick. 3. Applied to one who is not round in the shape of the body. 4. Plain-soled. S.
 "Like a skimming dish, or skel," Gl. Sibb. But the resemblance is far-fetched. It seems radically the same with E. shelvy.
 SKLEFFERIE, adj. Separated into laminae. S.
 To SKLEY, v. n. To slide. V. SKLOY. S.
 SKLENDRY, SKLENDERVE, adj. 1. Thin; slender; lank; as, "a sklenderie lad." 2. Faint; slight. S.
 SKLENIE, adj. Thin; slender. S.
 To SKLENT, v. n. V. SCLENT.
 It may be added, that to sclent sometimes signifies, to deviate from the truth, to fib, S.
 To SKLENT, SKLENT down, v. a. To tear; to rend. S.
 To SKLY, SKLOY, v. n. To slide (as upon the ice.) S.
 SKLY, s. The place on which one slides. S.

 To SKLINT, v. a. To dart askance. V. SCLINT. S.
 To SKLINTER, v. n. To splinter; to break off in laminae.—SKLINTER, s. A splinter. S.
 To SKLYRE, v. n. To slide, Dumfr. Loth.
 Shurl, to slide, as upon ice, A. Bor. (Grose,) has most probably a common origin.
 SKLYRE, s. A slide; the act of sliding on ice; or the place, Dumfr. V. the v.
 SKLYTES, s. pl. Old worn-out shoes. S.
 To SKLOY, v. n. To slide on ice, Loth. See Sup.
 Sibb. writes it skly, and views it as from the same origin with slid, slippery. But it more nearly resembles Fr. escoul-er, to slide.
 SKLOY, s. A slide; the act of sliding on ice, Loth. See S.
 SKLOUT, SKLOUTER, s. Cows' dung in a thin state, Fife. Gael. scloid, filth.
 To SKLUFE, SKLOOF, v. n. To trail the shoes along the ground in walking. Syn. Sklute. V. SCLAFF. S.

S K O

- SKLUTE, s. 1. Used in pl. to denote large clumsy feet, S.B.
 Probably from klute, S. the hoof of cattle.
 2. A lout, an awkward clumsy fellow, S.B. See Sup.
 To SKLUTE, v. n. To set down the feet clumsily; to trail the shoes along the ground in walking, S. S.
 SKODGE, SKODGIE, s. A boy or girl, who is employed as a drudge, or to do the meanest work of the kitchen, such as to clean shoes, &c. See Sup.
 Perhaps corr. from Su.G. skoswen, the person who in ancient times put on the shoes of a prince; q. a shoe-servant. Hence,
 To SKODGE, v. n. To act as a drudge, S.
 To SKOIT, v. n. To peep. S.
 SKOLDIRT, SKOWDERT, part. pa. Scorched. V. SCOWDER.
 To SKOLE, SKOLT, v. n. To drink hard, S.B.
 "From skull [for a bowl] may have come the Scot. Bor. to skole, or skolt, pocula exinanire; and the E. to drink helter skelter, cuppa potare magistra, Horat." Rudd. V. SKUL.
 SKOMER, s. V. SCOMER.
 SKOMIT, adj. Pale and sickly-coloured. S.
 SKON, SCONE, s. 1. A thin cake of wheat or barley-meal, S. "Bread baked over the fire, thinner and broader than a bannock," Shirr. Gl.
 The floure skonnys war set in by and by,
 With vthir messis sic as was reddy.
Adorea liba, Virg. Doug. 208, 41.
 2. Any thing that is round and flat, or resembling a cake.
 3. Metaph., as denoting any thing of a particular kind, considered as a specimen, S.
 "A scone of the baking is enough;" S. Prov. Rudd. It is thus expl. by Kelly; "It is unreasonable to expect two gratuities out of one thing." P. 273.
 Sibb. derives it from Sw. skon-a, parcere. But the relation I cannot perceive; unless it be founded on the idea that scone denotes a thin bannock.
 It would be more natural to deduce it from Isl. skonar, abundance; whence the phrase, All skonar ar, exuberans annona. But our sense of the word may be only secondary. It is perhaps from Isl. skaun, what we call the brat of milk, after it has cooled: Cortex lactis calidi effringentis. It is also used metaph., myke skaun, a cake of hardened dung, from myke, muck, and skaun; fimi portio indurata, G. Andr. p. 210. The word skone is used in this very sense, S. for a hardened cake of cows' dung. The same writer renders skiaene, omentum ventriculo subindutum.
 To SKONCE, v. a. To cover; to guard.
 To—skonce my scalp, and shanks frae rain,
 I bure me to a beil.
Vision, Evergreen, i. 213.
 Evidently allied to E. sconce, a fort, a bulwark. Su.G. skans-a, Teut. schants-en, to fortify, munire.
 SKONCE, s. A thin partition; any wall meant to defend from the wind; a shed for hewing stones. S.

 To SKOOK, SKUIK, v. a. To conceal. S.
 To SKOOK, SKUIK, v. n. To hide one's self. S.
 SKOOKIN-LIKE, adj. Ill-looking; of a bad appearance. S.
 SKOORIE, s. The Coal-fish, fully grown. S.
 To SKOOT, SCOUT, v. a. To squirt any liquid, or throw it forcibly from a tube. S.
 SKOOT, s. A squirt; a syringe. S.
 To SKOOT, v. n. To throw off liquid excrement. S.

S K R

SKORE, s. A line drawn, as marking the goal, or end of a race.

— Had he anis won mare roume, tho in hy,
He suld ful sone haif skippit furth before,
And left in dout, quha come first to the skore.

Doug. Virgil, 138, 31.

The term is used in the same sense, S. at a variety of games; "but most," says Rudd., "at the long Bowls, [or throwing of leaden bullets,] which are sometimes Scot. Bor. called the Scores, because they make draughts or impressions in the ground where they are to begin and leave off."

SKORPER, s. That round kind of bread which in S. is called a cookie, Shetl.

2. A loud or shrill sound, caused by musical instruments.

Let beir the skraichs of deadly clarions,
And syne let of a volie of cannons.

Hume, Chron. S.P. iii. 380.

Isl. skraek-r, clamor, ploratus; Verel.

SKRAN, SCRAN, s. 1. Fine skran. A promiscuous collection of eatables, however collected. It is sometimes used by young people, when they meet with any thing, especially what is edible, which they consider as a valuable acquisition, S.

Isl. skran, supellex leviusculus; G. Andr. p. 215.

2. The offals or refuse of human food, thrown to dogs, Loth.

3. Used in Fife as denoting daily bread. 4. Used apparently as denoting power, or means for accomplishing any purpose. S.

Su.G. skraede signifies refuse, from skraed-a, to cut; also, to bolt, to sift.

To SKRAN, v. a. To make a promiscuous collection of things either by fair or by foul means. S.

SKRAN-POCK, s. 1. A beggar's wallet. 2. A bag for containing the spoil or plunder of the dead who may have fallen in battle, carried by women who follow an army. S.

To SKRAN, v. n. To gang to skran, to be awa skraning, phrases used by boys when they go to spend money on sweetmeats, &c. of which others expect to be partakers. S.

SKRANKY, adj. 1. Lank; slender, S.

2. Applied to an empty purse; q. having a lank appearance.

— Ye—did lament,

Your purses being skranky. Ramsay's Poems, i. 359.

This seems the same with skrinkie, skrinkit, "as if shrunk, too little, contracted," Sibb. Gl.

Germ. schrank-en, to confine, to stint; A.S. scrunc-en, contracted, for-scrinc-an, marcessere, to dry up, to shrink together; Alem. skrenk-en, vincere, clathrare, Schilter.

Skrunty, Fife, synon. is perhaps radically different.

SKRANKY, s. A coarse-featured person. S.

SKRAPIT, pret. Mocked. V. SCORP.

To SKREED, v. n. To cry; to scream. See Sup.

S K R

It made me yelp, and yeul, and yell,

And skirl, and skreed. Watson's Coll. i. 38.

From its connexion with skirl, it seems formerly to have denoted a shrill or piercing sound; perhaps allied to Franc. screiot, clamor, which must certainly be viewed as of the same stock with Scry, q. v. Verel. mentions Sw. skrijt, clamor, vo. Skraekr.

To SKREED, v. n. To lie; especially as denoting that sort of falsehood which consists in fabrication, or magnifying in narration, S.

Su.G. skryt-a, jactare, ostentare, Isl. skreit-a, fingere; skreitín, figmentum. The Su.G. and Isl. terms are nearly akin to ours in signification. For it is often used to denote falsehood employed from a principle of ostentation. Ihre gives skryta as a derivative from skrymma, fingere. But it seems rather from Isl. skraut, ostentatio, pompa.

SKREED, s. 1. A lie; a fabrication, S.

2. A long list or catalogue, S.

To SKRIFT, v. n. To magnify in narration; to fabricate; to fib, S.

Isl. skraf-a, fabulari, nugari, skraef, nugae. Su.G. skraefwa, locutuleius, skarfw-a, to patch, is metaph. used in the same sense with our skrift; because he who mixes falsehood with truth, as it were, adulterates the truth by the addition of rags. (See SCRIPT in Sup.) In the same figurative sense, one is said to cobble, S. when he patches up a story; and a person of this description is sometimes called a cobbler.

SKRYMMORIE, s.

Pluck at the craw thay cryit, deplome the ruik,

Pulland my hair, with blek my face they bruik.

Skrymmorie Fery gaue me mony a clowre.

For Chyppynutie ful oft my chaftis quuik.

Palice of Honour, i. 58.

In the Perth Edit. of this poem, fery is expl. fairy; and these are said to be "vulgar names of mischievous spirits." Fery is printed with a capital letter, Edit. 1579.

Skrymmorie is certainly a designation of Goth. origin. Sibb. renders it "frightful, filling with terror," viewing it as an adj. But it seems rather an appellative, allied to Su.G. skraem-a, to frighten, and a variety of other terms. Skrymma is a v. used to denote the appearance of spectres. Hence, skrymsl signifies both a spectre, and an idol. Liopo their allir upp, oc luto thui skrymsli; They all rose (loupit) up, and did honour by bowing, (lowting) to the idol; Heims Kring. ap. Ihre. Spokeri oc dieffuls skrymmel; spectres and other tricks of the devil; Ibid. Belg. schroom-sel, a bugbear, from schroom-en, to fear, to be filled with horror. See Sup.

Chyppynutie, viewed as a mischievous spirit, might be one of those who fatally wounded the cattle that were believed to be elf-shot, from Su.G. kaepp, a rod, Moes.G. kaupat-jan, to strike, and not, naut, an ox.

SKRINE, s. Unboiled scowens, or flummery, Ang.

"In place of milk, they were necessitated to have recourse to the wretched substitute of skrine, or unboiled flummery, prepared from the refuse of oatmeal soaked in water." P. Ruthven, Forfars. Statist. Acc. xii. 302.

Su.G. skrin, exsuccus, might seem allied, as it is applied to grain; skrin saed, frumentum gracile. But there is greater connexion, in the sense, with Teut. krinse, acus, purgamentum frumenti; krins-en, purgare frumentum; as flummery is made of the seeds of oatmeal, hence called sowen-seeds, when used for this purpose.

 Amang the goistis law and skuggis derne.
Doug. Virgil, 367. 13.
Skuggis, however, is not synon. with goistis, but only denotes the place of their residence. This appears from the epithet derne being conjoined. The phrase is the same with that quoted above, sense 2.
 Su.G. skugga, umbra. Skyggd, tegmen, defensio, is a derivative from this, although immediately from the v. Isl. skuga, skugge, id. which G. Andr. derives from sky, skygg, to overshadow. A.S. scua, id.; Seren. (vo. Shade) from sky, nebula.

The lattir halesing syne loud schoutit thrys.

Doug. Virgil, 69, 20.

As coupis corresponds to pateras in the original, skul is used for cymbia, which Douglas elsewhere renders in this manner;

Tua siluer coppis schapin like ane bote.

Ibid. 136, 35.

We are not, however, hence to conclude that the word skull necessarily denoted a vessel of this form. For he elsewhere uses it, conjoined with flagon, in rendering crateras.

For ioy thay pingil than for till renew
Thare bankettis with al obseruance dew;
And, for thir titthingis, in flakoun and in skull

2. The term has been metonymically used to denote the salutation of one who is present, or the respect paid to an absent person, by expressing a wish for his health; while he who does so at the same time partakes of the drink that is used by the company, in token of his cordiality.

This is what is now called "drinking one's health."

In this sense it occurs in the Account of Gowrie's Conspiracy published by royal authority. "The kinge called for drinke, and in a merry and homely manner sayde to the earle, that although the earle had seen the fashion of entertaynements in other countries, yet hee would teach him the Scottish fashion, seeing he was a Scottish man: and therefore, since he had forgotten to drinke to his Majestie, or sit with his guests and enterayne them, his Majestie would drinke to him his owne welcome, desiring him to take it forth and drink to the rest of the company, and in his Majestie's name to make them welcome."

—"When they had near hand dined, the Earl of Gowrie came from his Majestie's chamber, to drink his scoll to my lord duke, and the rest of the company, which he did. And immediately after the scoll had past about, this deponent raise from the table, to have waited upon his Majestie, conform to his former direction," &c. Pp. 196—227. Perth edition, 1774. In Cromarty's account, there is the following note:—"Scoll, the word used then for drinking a health." The passage itself is also differently expressed in this work.—"The Earl of Gowrie came from his Majesty's chamber, to the hall, and call'd for wine; and said that he was directed from his Majesty's chamber, to drink his scoll to my Lord Duke," &c. Historical Account, p. 40.

Before particularly considering this passage, I may refer to one in another work, in which the term has the same signification.

"Shee that but pitissat, sippes before the sober, can skip at the scols with her commers, till shee bee sicke with healths." Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 340.

As it is said, that "Gowrie came from his Majestie's chamber, to drink his scoll to my Lord Duke," it has been supposed that the king desired them to drink his health in his absence; Gl. Sibb. vo. Scoll. But in what way soever the passage be read, it does not appear that this is the meaning. The relative, his, might be understood in reference to Gowrie himself; as intimating, that the king desired the earl to go and welcome the company to his house, by drinking to them. But although it be viewed as referring to James, as it is immediately connected with these words, "came from his Majestie's chamber;" it will not follow, that it was the king's desire that his own health should be drunk. From what he had previously said to Gowrie with respect to his omission, it is evident that this is not the sense of the language. He, in a jocular way, reprehended the earl for not drinking to him:—"desiring him to take it forth," (that is, the drink formerly mentioned,) "and drink to the rest of the company." Therefore, even admitting that the expression, his scoll, means the king's scoll, we cannot, with propriety, suppose that any thing more is meant, than that Gowrie went to the anti-chamber, to convey to the noblemen and gentlemen, who were there, his Majesty's salutation; or, as expressed in the narrative, "to drink to the rest of the company, and, in his Majestie's name," to give them that welcome which he had neglected to give them in his own.

Even supposing, then, that the writer means to say that Gowrie drank the king's scoll; all that we can conclude from it is, that, "after the Scottish fashion," he welcomed the guests to his house;—with this peculiarity, indeed, that he did so by drinking to them in the king's name. But this is very different from drinking the king's health. It is probable, however, that in paying their respects to their host, when "the scoll passed about," they at the same time expressed their wishes for the health of his master. This they might reckon themselves bound to do, from the peculiar manner in which Gowrie had expressed their welcome. See Sup.

Thus it appears that the term, primarily denoting a vessel for containing liquor, was, in consequence of the customs connected with drinking, at length used to signify the mutual expressions of regard employed by those engaged in compotation, or their united wishes for the health and prosperity of one individual, distinguished in rank, or peculiarly endeared to them all, whether he were present or absent.

I have met with one passage in which that expression, the king's skole, is not only distinctly used, but clearly meant in the sense which has been improperly attached to the phrase already considered. After the bridge of Berwick had been re-built, in the year 1621, "Sir William Beyer, mayor of the town, stayed the taking away of the centries, and putting in the key-stone, till the king's skole were drunk at that part of the bridge." Calderwood's Hist. p. 787. But the expression, although equivalent to what is now called drinking the king's health, seems strictly to signify, drinking the king's cup, or a cup in honour of the king.

For we are not to suppose, that the word skoll has any primary or proper relation to health or prosperity. This would be totally repugnant to analogy. If it be not sufficiently clear, from what has been already said, that this is merely an improper sense; this, we apprehend, will appear indisputable, from a comparison of our term with its cognates in the other Northern languages.

Isl. skal, skaal, skyldi, Alem. skala, Germ. schale, Su.G. and Dan. skaal, (pron. skol), all signify a cup, a bowl, a drinking vessel. From the Gothic nations, this word seems to have passed to the Celtic. For, in the Cornish, skala has the same meaning, being rendered by Lhuyd patera; Gael. sgala, a bowl, Shaw. Rudd., in his Glossary to Douglas's Virgil, mentions the verb, to Skole, or Skolt, as used Scot. Bor. in the sense of pocula exinanire. This verb has undoubtedly been formed from the noun. In the North of Scotland, also, skiel still denotes a tub. Thus a washing-tub is called a washing-skiel. The tubs used by brewers, for cooling their wort, are, in like manner, called skiels. It affords a strong presumption that this is originally the same word with skoll, skull, immediately under consideration, that the goblet employed by the inhabitants of the North, for preparing their ale for immediate use, is called kaltskaal. This seems to intimate, that our use of the term, with respect to the operation of brewing, contains an allusion to its more ancient appropriation. Kalt-skaal, eodem tropo illis quo Sueonibus est patera, in qua frigidus cerevisiae potus in aestate, et calidus in hyeme fieri solet. Loccenii Antiq. Sueo-Goth. p. 96.

It may be added, that skiel is still used in Orkney as the name of a flagon, or wooden drinking vessel with a handle. See Sup.

Skull is a term of general use in Scotland for a basket of a semi-circular form. It was used in this sense so early as the time of Dunbar.

Fish wyves cry Fy, and cast down skulls and skeils.

Evergreen, ii. 59. st. 23.

It is probable that skiel was used by him as if it had been synon., because of the alliteration. Or, from the resemblance with respect to form, it may actually have been used in the same sense in his time. E. skillet, a small kettle or boiler, might appear, at first view, to have some affinity. But it seems immediately formed from Fr. escuelle, a porringer; and this again from Ital. scudella, used in the same sense. This is derived from Lat. scutula, which was a kind of concave vessel, a saucer. The learned Ihre views these Fr. Ital. and Lat. words as allied to Gothic skaal. But it is surprising that he should consider skaal itself as formed, per crasin, from Lat. scutula. The quotations he has himself made, for illustrating this word, certainly supplied him with a far more natural etymon. But before proceeding to this, it may be remarked, as a singular analogy, that, according to Athenæus, Lib. iv. Gr. σκαλλιον is a small cup, and σκαλις is equivalent to σκαφιον, which signifies a drinking vessel.

It is highly probable, that a cup or bowl received this name from the barbarous custom which prevailed among several ancient nations, of drinking out of the skulls of their enemies. Warnefrid, in his work, De Gestis Longobard., says; "Albin slew Cunimund, and having carried away his head, converted it into a drinking vessel; which kind of cup is with us called schala, but in the Latin language it has the name of patera." Lib. i. c. 27. The same thing is asserted of the Boii, by Livy, Lib. xxiii. c. 24.; of the Scythians, by Herodotus, Lib. ix.; of their descendants, the Scordisci, by Rufus Festus, in Breviario; of the Gauls, by Diodorus Siculus, Lib. v.; of the Celts, by Silius Italicus, Lib. xiv.

At Celtae vacui capitis circumdare gaudent,

Ossa, nefas! auro, et mensis ea pocula servant.

Vid. Keyser Antiq. Septentr. p. 363.

Hence Ragnar Lodbrok, in his Death-Song, consoles himself with this reflection; "I shall soon drink beer from hollow cups made of skulls." St. 25. Wormii Literatura Dan. p. 203.

The same word in Su.G. signifies both a skull, (cranium,) and a drinking vessel. This observation is equally applicable to Germ. schale. But Ihre is so unfavourable to this derivation, principally, as would appear, from its exhibiting our Gothic ancestors as so extremely barbarous, that he considers the human skull as receiving the name of skaal from its resemblance to the patera, or bowl. This is surely to invert the natural order. Although the Northern nations were greatly addicted to inebriety, yet we can scarcely suppose, that they found it necessary to borrow a name for their skulls from their drinking vessels. The skull itself seems to have received this designation from its resemblance of a shell; in A.S. sceala, scala; Belg. schaele; Germ. schele; Isl. skael; Su.G. and Dan. skal. Allied to this is Moes.G. skaljos, the tiling of a roof.

Ihre objects to this etymon, not only on the ground of the inhumanity of the custom supposed to be alluded to; but especially, he says, because he does not find that the word skaal is used by ancient writers, as denoting a memorial potation, or the act of drinking in honour of some distinguished personage; adding, that minne and full are the terms used by old Icelandic authors. Even supposing this to be true, it will not disprove the antiquity of the word. Nothing more could reasonably be inferred, than that skaal, in more early ages, had retained its original and proper signification of a drinking vessel; as it is used in the other sense only by a strong metonymy. It was natural to prefer minne; for, as literally signifying memory, it simply and directly expressed the reason of this particular mode of drinking. Nor need we be surprised although they even preferred the other term, full; not only as the figure is less strong, to speak of drinking the fill of a cup, than of drinking the cup itself; but also, because it referred to the established custom with respect to this draught, that the cup must be full, and completely evacuated. This is only to suppose the Isl. word to have been for some time stationary in its meaning, in the same manner with our skull or skoll. For there is not the slightest evidence, that, in the age of Gawin Douglas, it was used in that figurative sense which it bore a century afterwards.

But it is astonishing, that the learned Ihre, after he has quoted Warnefrid, should lay any stress on this circumstance. He "does not find that the word skaal is used by ancient writers." And can he deny this character to Warnefrid, who flourished about the year 774? Does he not say that this kind of cup, made of a human skull, is by the Goths called schale? Can any Scandinavian writer be produced, who uses minne and full, to the exclusion of skaal, in an earlier age? There is no evidence that either of these terms was written for some ages after. Warnefrid was not only a writer of great reputation, but himself a Goth; and his positive testimony is surely far preferable to the negative evidence deduced from posterior writers. Although it could be proved, as it cannot, that the term was not used, in that early period, in the particular sense referred to; it would by no means follow that it was unknown in its simple signification, as denoting a drinking vessel. As the Longobardi were a Gothic nation, it is extremely improbable that a term, which had so singular an origin, would be unknown to other nations belonging to the same race; although, without any particular reason, it might be more used by one nation than by another.

Not only is the meaning of this term, as it occurs in other Northern languages, preserved in ours; but the figurative sense is also the same. As it has been seen that the earl of Gowrie "drunk his skoll to my lord duke," and that "the king's skole" was drunk at the bridge of Berwick; we learn from Loccenius that this very phrase is used in the languages of the North. "Illud nomen in his Septentrionalibus locis adhuc ita remanet, ut dricka skala, i. e. bibere pateram, metonymice dicatur, quando bibitur alicujus honori et memoriae, quod ex hoc vasculo quondam frequentius fieri suetum, notio vocis indicat." Antiq. Sueo-Goth. p. 96. "In computations," says Ihre, "the name of Skaal is given to the memory of the absent, or the salutation of those who are present, which goes round in the time of drinking:" or more fully "dricka ens skaal." As Dan. skaal signifies a bowl, or drinking vessel; at drikka ens skaal, is to drink one's health; voc. Skaal. In Isidore, we find the phrase, Calices et scalae poculorum genera. Origin. Lib. xx. c. 5.

In the same manner did the ancient Goths express their regard to their sovereigns. They drunk the king's skoll. Hence Warnefrid relates, that when Grimaold, king of the Lombards, had determined to kill Bertaridus, after he was overpowered with wine, the ministers of the palace being ordered to bring to him liquors, with dishes of various kinds, asked of him, in the king's name, to drink a full bowl in honour of him. But he, suspecting the snare, secretly procured that it should be filled with water. Immediately, promising that he would drink it off in honour of the king, he made a libation, by pouring out a little of the water. De Gestis Longobard. Lib. v. These skolls, in honour of the king, as we learn from Loccenius, they used also to drink standing. Ubi sup.

Sturleson gives a particular account of this custom, when describing the manners of the Scandinavians before the introduction of Christianity. From this it appears, that it had been originally an act of worship to their false gods. The passage presents so minute a picture of the rites of the ancient Goths, that I shall be excused for giving it at large.

"It was a received custom with the ancients," he says, "that, when the sacrifices were to be offered, the people gathered together in great multitudes, every one bringing with him food and those things which were necessary during the continuance of their festivals. Every one also brought ale with him, to be used during the feast. For this purpose, all kinds of cattle, and horses also, were slaughtered. All the blood of these victims was called Hlaut; and the vessels in which the blood was received and preserved were denominated Hlaut-bollar. They gave the name of Hlaut-tynar to those utensils which were employed for sprinkling with this blood all the altars and footstools of their gods, the walls of the temple, both within and without, and also the worshippers. The flesh was boiled, that it might be more grateful food to man.

"In the midst of the pavement of the temple fires were kindled, over which the kettles were suspended: and cups filled with drink were made to pass through the midst of the flames. It belonged to him who presided at the feast, to consecrate the cups and all the food used at the sacrifices. Fyrst Odins full, first, a cup consecrated to Odin must be drunk off, for procuring victory to the king, and felicity to the kingdom. Then, another in honour of Niordr and Freyr, for a good harvest and peace. This being done, it was usual to drink the cup called Braga-full, in memory of the heroes and princes slain in battle. Nor was it thought decorous to neglect the drinking of a cup in honour of their deceased relations, of those especially who had been interred in the tumuli: and this was called Minne." Heimskringla, Hakonar Goda S. c. 16. It may be observed, that, what in the Isl. is called Odins full, is, in the Danish version, rendered Odens skaal. In the same manner Niarthar-full, and Freys-full are translated Niords skaal and Freys skaal.

The old S. phrase of invitation, Tak aff your horn, being equivalent to the modern one, Drink your glass; it may deserve notice, that drinking a full, or the contents of a cup, and drinking off a horn, are used as synon. by Sturleson. "When the first cup was handed," he says, "Earl Sigurd, having consecrated it to Odin, drack aff hornino til kongs, drank off the horn to the king;" in this manner inviting him to follow his example. Ibid. c. 18.

As it appears, that the custom of giving toasts, to use the modern phrase, originated in the rites of our ancestors, while in a heathen state; it deserves notice, that this custom has, from its very introduction, been abused to intemperance. The idea entertained by many in our own times, that it is a token of disrespect to the person whose health is drunk, if the glass be not filled to the brim, and then emptied, may be traced to the same source. Even at their solemn sacrifices, the ancient Scandinavians, as Ihre has observed, placed some degree of sanctity, in scyphis strenue evacuandis, or, as we would say, in hard drinking. This custom, as it originated in the idolatrous worship of Thor and Odin, was continued after the introduction of Christianity. The names were changed; but the rites, and the morals of the people, were, in a great measure, the same. Presuming to invoke the true God, or the Saviour, the pretended worshipper reckoned himself bound to empty a full cup. The like honour was done to the Virgin Mary. Then, they in a similar manner expressed their veneration for the Saints, and for the particular Patrons of the place. Needs it seem surprising, that such acts of religion, like various convivial and friendly meetings in later times, where similar ceremonies have been enforced, frequently terminated in tumults and in blood? V. Ol. Tryggvason S. c. 38. and Ihre, vo. Minne.

There is a striking similarity between these customs of the barbarous Scandinavians, and those of the ancient nations that have been called civilized. The Romans, at their feasts, not only made a libation to their gods, by pouring out part of the cup before they drank of it; but emptied it, in honour of them. "It was customary," says Potter, speaking of the Greeks and Romans, "to drink to persons absent. First the gods were remembered, then their friends; and at every name one or more cups of wine, unmixed with water, were drunk off.—It was their custom to drink unmixed wine as often as they named the gods or their friends. They did also, ἐπιχειν τῇ γῇ, pour forth some of the wine upon the earth, as often as they mentioned any person's name;—which being the manner of offering libations, it seems to have been a form of adoration, when any of the gods were named, and of prayer for their friends, when they mentioned them. Amongst their friends they most commonly named their mistresses. Examples of this custom are very common. Thus, in Tibullus:

Sed bene Messalam sua quisque ad pocula dicat,
Nomen et absentis singula verba sonent."

Potter's Archaeol. Graec. ii. 394.

Sometimes the number of cups equalled that of the letters in the name of the person whose health was drunk.

Naevia sex cyathis, septem Justina bibatur.—Martial.

Of this custom we find some of the more enlightened heathen complaining, as what necessarily led to the vilest intemperance. It was particularly reprobated by Seneca and Juvenal. V. Rosin. Antiq. Rom. p. 387. a.

The custom of saluting, first the gods, and then their friends by name, the Romans called "drinking after the Grecian manner;" as they had borrowed it from the Greeks. They seem to have had at least three cups, to which they ascribed a peculiar solemnity. They are indeed differently reckoned by different writers. According to some, the first was drunk in honour of Jupiter Olympius, the second in honour of the Heroes, and the third to Jupiter Soter, or the Saviour; who, it is said, was so called on this occasion, because it was supposed that this third cup might be taken, without any disorder of mind, or injury to the health. Others mention the cup of Mercury, of Jupiter Charisius, and of Good Genius, by which designation some understand Apollo as meant, and others Bacchus. V. Rosin. pp. 389, 390.; Potter, ii. 398, 399.

I need scarcely add, that both as to the number, and the designations, of these cups, we may observe a striking analogy in the skolls of our Northern ancestors. From Snorro we learn, that, at all their great conventions, three cups were especially accounted sacred. No constraint was put on any to exceed this number. But it was reckoned necessary that they should go thus far. One was dedicated to Odin, who was not less honoured by the Northern nations, than was Jupiter by the Greeks. The Bragabikar corresponded to the Grecian cup in honour of the Heroes: and we have seen that as the Greeks paid their respects to the Good Genius, the Scandinavians also dedicated a cup to the Patrons, or Guardians, of the place where they were assembled.

S K U

The learned Keysler has observed, that the Apostle Paul is to be understood as referring to these cups, when he says, (1. Cor. x. 21.), "Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord, and the cup of devils," or "of demons," i. e. the cup drunk in honour of departed men, who have been deified by their deluded votaries. Keysler also refers to the language of the prophet, as containing the same allusion: "Ye are they—that prepare a table for that troop, Gad; and that furnish the drink-offering unto that number, Meni;" Isa. lxxv. 11. V. Antiq. Septent. p. 352. As both these are unquestionably proper names, a sanguine etymologist might view both as of Northern origin. For as Minne was the name of one of the cups employed in the drink-offerings of the heathen, Isl. Gaud was the designation of the object of their worship. Numen Ethnicum, Christianis execratum, hodie pro re abjectissima et nauci usurpatur; G. Andr. Lex. But Gad, it would seem, in the passage referred to, denotes the Sun; and Meni, the Moon. We must, therefore, be satisfied with the analogy, as it respects the drink-offerings.

To SLAIGER, v. n. 1. "To waddle in the mud;" Gl. Sibb. 2. To walk slowly; used contemptuously. S.

This seems radically the same with Laggery, Laggerit, q. v., although Sibb. views it as allied to Slairg.

To SLAIGER, v. a. To besmear with mud; to beslabber. S.

SLAIGER, s. 1. The act of bedaubing. 2. A quantity of some soft disgusting substance; as, "a slaiger o' dirt."

SLAIGERER, s. One who bedaubs. S.

SLAIGERIN', s. A bedaubing. S.

To SLAIGER, v. a. To eat in a slow careless way. S.

To SLAIK, v. n. 1. To carry off and eat any thing clandestinely, applied especially to confections, sweetmeats, &c. S.

It is exactly synon. with Germ. schleck-en, ligurire, suavia et dulcia appetere. This Wachter derives from Gr. γλυκός, dulcis, the sibilation being prefixed. But both the Germ. v. and Teut. slick-en, vorare; lurcare, ligurire; must be viewed as properly signifying to lick; analogous to Su.G. slek-a, slick-a, Isl. sleik-ia, lambere, q. to lick one's fingers, as is said of one who has this propensity. Our use of the word seems indeed to have been borrowed from the nasty habits of sweet-toothed cooks. That this is the true origin both of the S. and Germ. terms is evident from this, that, in the language last mentioned, a person of this description is indiscriminately denominated schlecker, and lecker-maul, os cibi lautioris appetens, Wachter. Su.G. slikiare, in like manner, signifies a smell-feast, also, a flatterer, a parasite; from leck-en, Moes.G. laigw-an, A.S. liccian, &c. to lick. Ihre views Heb. לקק, lahhak, id. as the common origin.

2. To lounge like a dog, and be content to feed on offals.

3. To bedaub, S. This seems merely an oblique use of the same v. See Sup.

4. To kiss in a slabbering manner, S.

Slip down thy hoiss, me think the carle is glaikit,

Sett thow not by howbeid sche kist and slaikkitt.

Lyndsay, S.P.R. ii. 73.

SLAIK, SLAKE, s. A small portion of any thing laid hold of clandestinely. A small quantity of any thing in a half fluid state; as conserves, &c. A slight bedaubing; the act of bedaubing or besmearing, as with butter, &c. A slabbering kiss. A low, mean, sneaking fellow. S.

SLAIKER, s. A person who bedaubs. S.

SLAIK, s. A stroke; a slap. V. SLAKE. S.

SLAIN, SLANE, s. A wooded cleugh or precipice. S.

SLAINES, SLAYANS. Letters of Slaines, letters subscribed, in case of slaughter, by the wife or executors of the deceased, acknowledging that satisfaction had been given, or otherwise soliciting for the pardon of the offender; Erskine's Instit. B. iv. Tit. 4. s. 105.

"His Hienesse—sall close his handes, and cease fra granting onie respites or remissiones, for ony maner of slauchter,—except the said respit or remission sall be craved to the offender, be the wife, bairnes or nearest friende, of the person that hes received the offense: Or that a sufficient letter of slaines, seene and perfitey considered be his Hienes councell," &c. Acts, Ja. VI. 1592. c. 155.

"He obtained easily a letter of Slayans from the party." Baillie's Lett. i. 307.

A.S. slaegen, slain; q. letters concerning one slain, or the act of slaying.

Robertson, in his Hist. of Charles V., has shewn that this custom is perfectly analogous to the feudal laws which existed on the continent. Vol. I. 362. N. xxiii.

SLAINGE, s. One who carries off clandestinely any thing that seems palatable. Syn. a slaiking creature. S.

SLAIRG, SLAIRK, SLERG, s. A quantity of any thing in a half-fluid state; as, "a slerg o' parritch." S.

To SLAIRG, SLERG, v. a. To bedaub. S.

SLAIRGIE, SLARGIE, adj. Unctuous; adhesive. S.

To SLAIRG. V. next word.

To SLAIRY, SLARY, v. a. To bedaub, S.B. It properly denotes the effect of carelessness. See Sup.

Sibb. writes slairg, slerg, deriving the term from Teut. slijck, coenum. But it must rather be deduced from sloore, sordida ancilla, serva vilis, ignava; Belg. slorig, sordidus. Kilian refers to E. slorie, sordidare, mentioned by Junius, which is evidently the same word. The latter refers to Dan. slor, colluvies hominum, the dregs of the people. Lye properly adds, that Isl. slor, the filth of fishes, (piscium sordes), appears to be the common origin. Sw. slarft-a, to be careless in doing any thing; Wideg. V. SLERG.

SLAIRY, SLARIE, s. A small portion of any thing, especially food, taken in a dirty way, so as to bedaub one's clothes, &c. S.

SLAIRT, s. A silly dastardly fellow. Syn. Coof, Cufe. S.

To SLAIRT, v. a. To outdo; to outstrip. S.

To SLAIRT about, to go about in a sluggish manner, S.B.

Teut. sloordigh, sordidus, incultus, incomtus. V. SLAIRY.

To SLAISTER, SLYSTER, v. n. To do any thing in an awkward and dirty way; especially applied to working in any thing moist or unctuous, S.—To move clumsily through a miry road. S.

Su.G. sluskig, slovenly, from slusk, a sloven. It may, however, be viewed as allied to SLUSH, q. v.

To SLAISTER, v. a. To bedaub, S. nearly synon. with E. plaster.

Look at his head, and think of there

The pomet slaister'd up his hair!

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 96.

SLAISTER, SLYSTER, s. 1. A heterogeneous composition, a mass producing nausea, S. synon. soss. See S. Ye lowns that troke in doctor's stuff, You'll now hae unco slaisters.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 64.

2. The act of bedaubing. 3. A dirty slut. S.
SLAISTERY, SLAISTRY, adj. Applied to what is unctuous or defiling. Slaistry weather, wet weather, with miry roads. S.

SLAISTERY, s. 1. Dirty work. 2. The offals of a kitchen. S.

SLAISTER-KYTE, s. A foul feeder; a gormandizer. S.

SLAISTERS, s. A slovenly dirty person. S.

SLAIT, pret. Slitted; cut.

Duke Hannibal, as mony authors wrait,—

Brak down hie walls, and hiest mountains slait.

Vertue and Vyce, Evergreen, i. 45.

To SLAIT, v. a. 1. Literally, to level.

Su.G. slaet-a, slaett-a, laevigare, to level, Seren. from slaet, planus, aequus; Belg. slecht-en, id.

2. Metaph. to depreciate. A slaitin tongue, a tongue that depreciates others, W. Loth.

3. Expl. "to abuse in the worst manner."

"It is much to be lamented, that people professing his name, should be so slaited and enslaved by transgression as many are." Guthrie's Trial, p. 143. 144.

4. It seems used, in an oblique sense, as signifying to wipe; perhaps rather to whet. See Sup.

Now he has drawn his trusty brand,

And slaited on the strae;

And thro' Gill Morice' fair body

He's gart cauld iron gae.

Ritson's S. Songs, ii. 163.

In Pink. Select Ball. i. 40, it is slaided: He expl.

slaid, "to move speedily."

SLAIT, s. The track of cattle among standing corn. S.

SLAIT, adj. Slovenly and dirty. S.

SLAITIT, part. pa. Exhausted or worn out with fatigue.

Therefore had bound thocht scho be found,

Or dreid thy dogs be slaitit.

Balnevis, Evergreen, ii. 201.

In allusion to hunting; perhaps from Teut. slete, tritus, slet-en, terere, atterere. Moes.G. ga-sleithan, to lose. Slate, however, is expl. by Sibb., "to set loose (spoken of hounds);" and it is undoubtedly used in this sense. V. SLATE, v.

SLAYWORM, s. The slow-worm or blind-worm. S.

SLAK, SLACK, SLAKE, s. 1. An opening in the higher part of the same hill or mountain, where it becomes less steep, and forms a sort of pass, S.

This in sense resembles glack, S. and Gael., to which Mr. Macpherson refers. But it conveys a different idea; as the latter more properly signifies a dell or larger opening between distinct mountains. Nor is swyre exactly synon. It denotes a hollow that is not so deep as the slack.

He tuk with him a gud mengne,

On horss ane hundre thai mycht be;

And to the hill thai tuk thair way;

And in a slak thaim enbuschyt thai.

Barbour, xiv. 536. MS.

Himself ascendis the hie band of the hill,

By wentis strate, and passage scharp and wil.—

Tharfor ane prattik of were deuyse wyl I,

And ly at wate in quyet enbuschment
At athir pethis hede or secret went,
In the how slake be younder woddiss syde
Full dern I sal my men of armes hyde.

Doug. Virgil, 382, 10.

Red Ringan sped, and the spearmen led,
Up Goranberry slack. Minstrelsy, Border, ii. 366.

2. A gap or narrow pass between two hills or mountains. "Slack, a valley or small shallow dell;" A. Bor. Sir J. Sinclair defines it, "a narrow pass between two hills;" Observ. p. 193.

Fra slak til hyll, oure holme and hycht,
He trawalyd all day. Wyntown, vi. 16. 17.

Here it seems to denote an opening between distinct hills, or as rendered, Gl. Wynt., "a deep narrow valley."

Thus it is used by Doug. as synon. with vail, i. e. vale.

Not fer from thens Rome cieté ekit he,
Quhar by ane new inuention wounder sle,
Sittand into ane holl vail or slak,
Within the listis for the triumphe mak,
War Sabyne virginis reuist by Romanis.

Doug. Virgil, 266. 8.

In a slake thou shal be slayne.

Sir Gawun and Sir Gal. i. 23.

3. The slack of the hass, the narrowest part of the throat; a metaph. borrowed from a hill, Loth. 4. A morass. See Sup.

Rudd. certainly refers with propriety to Belg. slaech, laxus, remissus. For the term seems properly to signify that the ground slackens in its steepness. Su.G. slak, id. is used metaph. to denote the hollow of the side, or that part in animals which intervenes between the ribs and loins. This is called slaksidan, q. the slak of the side, in the same manner in which we speak of the slot of the breast, S.

SLAKE, SLAIK, SLEEGH, SLOKE, s. 1. The oozy vegetable substance in the bed of rivers, S.B. pron. q. slauk.

"This ware is of three kinds, obtained at different seasons. The first is the green slake, which grows in the river, is washed down by the summer floods, and is brought ashore at the harbour-mouth." P. Nigg, Aberd. Statist. Acc. vii. 201.

"Some trials of sleech [for manure] from the shore have been made, but it did not seem to answer." P. Dornock, Sutherl. Ibid. ii. 19.

2. A kind of reddish sea-weed, S.B.; Navel laver, Ulva umbilicalis, Linn. In some places the term slake is also applied to the Ulva compressa, and Conferua bullosa. The latter abounds in all stagnate ponds.

"Ulva umbilicalis, Navel Laver, Anglis. Sloke or Slake, Scotis." Lightfoot, p. 967.

"Scot. Bor. call a kind of sea-weed, very soft and slippery, slake, which they also eat;" Rudd. vo. Slike.

This, I am informed, when boiled, forming a jelly, is eaten, by some of the poor people in Angus, on bread, instead of butter.

Green Sloke, Ulva lactuca, Linn. "Lettuce-Laver, or Oyster-Green, Anglis. Green Sloke, Scotis." Lightfoot, p. 970.

Rudd. views this as derived from slike, slime. But it seems rather denominated from Su.G. slak, &c. laxus, remissus, because of its being soft and flaccid to the touch or taste. V. SLAUKIE. It may be added that Fucus vesiculosus is in some parts of Sweden called slake; Linn. Fl. Suec. N. 1145.

SLAM, SLAMMACH, s. A share, or the possession, of any thing, implying the idea of some degree of violence or trick in the acquisition, S.B. It is often applied to food.

Su.G. slam-a, congerere, coacervare. This word is sometimes used as synon. with slagga, per fas et nefas corradere, Ihre. Slem also denotes cunning, dishonest gain; Teut. sluym-en, furtim, clanculum, et tecte prorepere; slemm-en, comessari, graecari.

To SLAMMACH, v. a. To lay hold of any thing by means not entirely fair or honourable, S.B.

To SLAMMACH, SLAMACH, v. n. To slabber, S.B. synon. slash.

To SLANGER, v. n. To linger, Berwicks.

Teut. slingh-en, slingher-en, serpere; Su.G. slingr-a, repere (Seren. vo. Slender;) q. to creep in action or motion.

SLANK, adj. Thin; lank. S.

SLAP, s. 1. "A gap or narrow pass between two hills,"

Shirr. Gl. S.B. See Sup.

In this use of the term, we may perceive an analogy to that of Slak, synon. For Su.G. slapp, like slak, signifies remissus.

2. A breach in a wall; a gap in a fence; a slap in a dike, S.

"The use the fishers made of the last-mentioned dike, — was for the men to pass up and down at hauling up their cobbles, and felling their shots; and when a slap broke out in it, it was mended by the fishers." State, Leslie of Powis, &c. 1805, p. 120.

Not from Teut. slap, vietus, fluidus, withered, decayed; but Su.G. slapp, which is not only rendered remissus, but vacuus. Now what is a slap, but a vacuity? It may be from this source that Belg. slop is used to denote an alley.

Either from Su.G. slik-a, repere, q. to creep into one's good graces, or slek-a, lambere, Germ. schleich-en, to insinuate one's self.

Su.G. sleker, homo blandus, qui suis blanditiis alios captat; Isl. slikiare, parasitus. Ihre seems uncertain whether to derive these terms from sleka, lambere, or slika, repere. The last is most probable, if we regard analogy. For Teut. sleyck-en signifies repere, reptare, serpere humi; to creep on the ground. Hence sleycker, a fox.

In one place, the term sloith is used singly.

The sloith stoppyt, at Fawdoune still scho stude,
No forthir scho wald, fra tyme scho fand the blud.

Ibid. ver. 137.

This has been improperly written slough, and southound.

"The inhabitants of the marches were obliged to keep such a number of slough dogs, or what we call blood-hounds: for example, 'in those parts beyond the Esk, by the inhabitants there were to be kept above the foot of Sark, 1 dog. Item, by the inhabitants of the insyde of Esk, to Richmond Clugh, to be kept at the Moot, 1 dog. Item, by the inhabitants of the parish of Arthuret, above Richmond Clugh, to be kept at the Barley-head, 1 dog; and so on throughout the border.' Nicolson's Border Laws, p. 127. — Persons who were aggrieved, or had lost any thing, were allowed to pursue the hot trode with hound and horn, with hue and cry, and all other accustomed manner of hot pursuit." Pennant's Tour in Scot. A. 1772, pp. 77, 78.

"Lewis, in his History of Great Britain, Lond. 1729, fol. p. 56, says, 'In the south of Scotland, especially in the countries adjoining to England, there is another dog of a marvelous nature, called southounds, (that is sooth hounds, true hounds) 'because, when their masters are robbed, if they tell whether it be horse, sheep, or neat, that is stolen from them, immediately they pursue the scent of the thief, following him or them through all sorts of ground, and water, till they find him out and seize him; by the benefit whereof the goods are often recovered again. But now of late' (a mistake) 'they have given this beast the name of slouth-hound, because the people living in sloth and idleness, neither by themselves, or by good herdsman, or by the strength of a house, do preserve their goods from incursions of thieves and robbers, then have they recourse to their dog for the reparation of their sloth.' " Maitland Poems, Note, p. 423.

The idea, that this hound derives its name from sooth, is not much more natural than the other.

According to Sibb., it is from "Teut. sloch, canis vorax et rapax; in its primary sense, gula, gurgus, vorago, helluo;" Gl. But there is no foundation for this idea. The term, although somewhat disguised by a capricious and variable orthography, is undoubtedly the same with E. slot, "the tract of deer," or, more strictly, of a hart. For the treading of a buck, and all other fallow deer, is called the vewe; Manwood's Forrest Laws, Fol. 27, b. This identity appears by the use of sleuth, by itself, for tract or scent. The origin may be Isl. sloð, callis, semita, vestigia; G. Andr. Via in nive complanata; vestigia ferarum in nive indagatarum; Verel. This learned writer gives diur-sporr as the Sw. synonyme. Jonaeus derives sloed, tractus, vestigia, from sloed-a, spargere; Gl. Orkneyinga S. Ir. sliocht, a tract or impression, has undoubtedly a common origin; as well as Gael. slaodan, id. See Sup.

The only word in A.S., which seems to have any relation, is slaetinge, vestigia ferarum, Lye. But Mr. Tooke very ingeniously derives E. slot from A.S. slit-an, findere, q. the mark of a cloven hoof. Divers. Purley, ii. 147. For the same reason for which a bloodhound is called slouth-hund, S. in Belg. it is denominated speur-hond, Germ. spur-hund, from Belg. speur-en, na-spur-en, to trace out, Germ. nach-spur-en. Thus speur-hond is literally a tract-hound. V. SPERE.

In the Lat. of Reg. Maj. the term used is Canis trassans, which Du Cange renders, vestigium prosequens, adding; Tracer enim, est perquirere vestigiis insistendo: trace, seu trasse, vestigium.

Mr. Pinkerton says; "They were of a Gelder-breed, as Blind Harry hints,

'A slouth hound is of Gelderland,' b. 5."

The passage referred to, I suppose, as the foundation of this assertion, adopted by Sibb., is that in Edit. 1648, 1758, &c.

In Gelder-land there was that bratchel bred.

B. v. 25.

But it is otherwise in MS.

In Gyllisland thar was that brachell brede,
Sekyr off sent to folow thaim at flede;
So was scho vsyt on Esk and on Ledaill,
Quhill scho gat blude no fleyng mycht awaill.

Gillsland, in the North of England, seems to be meant. This appears from the circumstance mentioned in connexion, that the hound has been accustomed to the pursuit on Eshdale and Liddale. This seems to be the only proof that our bloodhounds were of a Gelder-land breed.

Both Boece and Lesley describe these dogs in their histories. But neither insinuates that they are a foreign breed. Lesley speaks of a shaggy species of dog imported from Germany. He distinguishes this, however, from those which he calls odorisequi. V. Boeth. Descr. Alb. Fol. 12. Lesl. Scot. Descr. p. 13.

It is slipped, Edit. 1648, and 1673. V. SLEIF.

Slewyt, however, might be viewed as allied to Su.G. slaa, jacere, jactare, mittere, as signifying, that they cast the cord over his head. The same v. slaa is also used in another sense which has great affinity. Sensus connectendi habet, uti—slaa knut, nodum nectere, (Ihre;) to run a knot, as we use to express it.

Hence the Belg. phrase, Een stadt slechten, to throw down a town; Wachter. Het kasteel wierdt tot den grond toe geslecht; The castle was levelled with the ground, or demolished; Sewel.

SLIGHT, adj. Worthless; applied to character. S.
 SLYGOOSE, s. The Shieldrake, Anas Tadorna, Linn., Orkn.

"The wild fowl of these islands are very numerous. Among these we may reckon—the dunter or eider duck, the sly goose, the awk, the lyre and the tyste." P. Kirkwall, Orkn. Statist. Acc. vii. 546.

"When a person attempts to take their young, the old birds shew great address in diverting his attention from the brood: they will fly along the ground as if wounded, till the former are got into a place of security, and then return and collect them together. From this instinctive cunning, Turner, with good reason, imagines them to be the chenalopez, or fox-goose of the ancients: the natives of the Orknies to this day call them the slygoose, from an attribute of that quadruped." Penn. Zool. p. 590.

Teut. slych, coenum, lutum, Germ. schlick, which Wachter inclines to view as the same with A.S. slog, E. slough.
 SLIK, adj. Perhaps, smooth, slippery, for sleek.

The swerd swapped on his swange, and on the mayle slik. Sir Gawan and Sir Gal. ii. 22.

Teut. sleych, planus et aequus. It may, however, be viewed as a v. in the pret. q. slipped, slid; as in the same st. strik, lik, shriek, are all verbs. Su.G. slink-a signifies to slip, although rather in a different sense, from slik-a, to creep.

SLIM, adj. 1. Slight; not sufficient; applied to workmanship, S.

2. In a moral sense, transferred to character, naughty; worthless. A slim fellow, a man of a very indifferent character, S.; "wicked; mischievous; perverse," A. Bor. See Sup.

Germ. schlimm denotes what is oblique; metaph., what is bad. But we receive more light from the Goth. dialects. Sw. slem signifies refuse; Isl. slaem-r, vilis, invalidus. Ad slaem-a til, opus aliquod leviter et invalidè attrahere. In the very same sense we say, To slim o'er, to do one's work in a careless and insufficient way, S. Perhaps E. slim, slender, thin of shape, has the same origin; although Lye could find no etymon, but by supposing that it had been formed from Belg. slinder, slender; Addit. Jun. Etym.

To SLIM O'ER, v. a. To work carelessly. V. the adj.

SLIMMER, adj. Delicate; easily hurt. S.

To SLING, v. n. To walk with a long step, S. See S.

This seems merely an oblique sense of the E. v. sling, Su.G. slaeng-a, jactare, valide movere, q. to throw one's self forward. Wachter observes concerning Germ. schleng-en, that although it originally denoted the throwing of a stone, it has obtained a more extensive application, as expressive of any kind of projectile force.

SLING, s. A long walk, Loth. V. the v.

To SLINGE, v. n. To sneak; to slink away. S.

To SLINGER, v. n. To move unequally; to reel; to be in danger of being overset. S.

SLINK, s. 1. The flesh of an animal, most commonly of a calf that has been cast by its dam before the time; properly, one calved before the hair is grown, S. See Sup.

When this is palmed on an ignorant purchaser for veal, it is called slink.

It is sometimes used adjectively.

"There are besides these, a good many small and slink kid, and mert lamb-skins dressed here, which are got from the north-west of Scotland." P. Perth, Statist. Acc. xviii. 520. For mert l. mort, as it is afterwards printed.

2. Transferred to ill-fed veal in general, S.

3. A tall limber person; expressive of contempt when preceded by the adj. Lang; as, "Ah, ye lang slink!"

4. Metaph. a worthless person; as, "He's but slink, I doubt." S.

Sw. slyn-a, carion, Seren. Or it may be denominated from its flaccid quality; Teut. slank, tenuis, gracilis; vacuus, solutus. Or from Germ. schlenk-en, abjicere; as the phrase used to denote such an abortion is synon., a cow being said to cast her calf, S.

SLINK, adj. Lank; slender. S.

SLINK, s. A greedy starveling; one that would slily purloin, and devour every thing. A cheat. S.

To SLINK one, v. a. To gull; to deceive one. S.

SLINKIN', s. Deceit; adj. cheating; deceitful. S.

SLINKIE, adj. Tall and slender; lank, S. A person of this form is called a slunkie.

Dan. slunken, thin, lank, scraggy; Teut. slank, Germ. schlank, id. Teut. lanck seems the more simple form, which is mentioned by Kilian as synon. with langh, long.

SLIP, s. A certain quantity of yarn, as it comes from the reel, containing twelve cuts, S. V. Cut. See Sup.

Wallace, ix, 1622. 1630. MS.

It is not long since the slype was used in Loth. for carrying hay out of the field.

Germ. schleife, id. (traha,) from schleif-en, to draw, so denominated because dragged on the ground; as a drag-net is called Teut. sleyp-net. Perhaps the origin is Su.G. slaep-a, to creep on the ground, reptare humi; also, to drag something lying on the ground, aliquid humi reptans trahere; Ihre.

 That bottell sweet—serued at the first
 To keep the life, bnt not to slocken thirst.
Hudson's Judith, p. 37.
 3. Metaph., to assuage the heat of passion.
 The sweit savour of the swairde, and singing of fewlis,
 Micht confort any creature of the kyn of Adam,
 And kyndil agane his curage, tho it war cauld sloknit.
Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 64.
 4. Used in a juridical sense, as signifying to extinguish the claims of an opponent. S.
 This word is purely Gothic. Su.G. slochn-a, extinguer, an inceptive v., says Ihre, from slaecck-a, id. Isl. sloeck-a, slauck-va.
 SLOMIE, adj. Flaccid; blown up. S.
 SLONG, SLOUNG, SLUNG, s. A sling; slung, S.B.
 "Efter thaym followit men with licht harnes, and schot incredibill nowmer of stanis & ganyeis with corsbowis and slongis." Bellend. Cron. B. vi. c. 13.
 With dartis thay assale the cieté fast,
 And thay defend with slungis and stane cast.
Doug. Virgil, 318, 15.
 Like a slung stane, a metaph. phrase, proverbially used in reference to a person who is treated with disregard, S.B.
 Tho' I'm amang you cast like a slung stane,
 I was like ither fouk at hame ye ken.
Ross's Helenore, p. 84.
Isl. slunga, sloengwa, Su.G. sliunga, id.

 To SLOOM, SLOUM, v. n. To slumber, S.B. See Sup.
 I seemit to sloom, quhan throw the gloom
 I saw the river shake.—
Minstrelsy, Border, iii. 357.
 I laid my haffet on Elfer Hill,
 Saft slooming clos'd my ee.
Jamieson's Popular Ball. i. 225.
 Teut. sluym-en, dormitare; leviter dormire. As sluym-en, the other form of the word, is synon. with luym-en, it is not improbable that this use of the term is borrowed from luym-en, to walk with the head bowed down; because the head drops when one begins to slumber. A. Bor.
 "sloom, slaum, a gentle sleep or slumber;" Gl. Grose.
 SLOOM, s. A slumber; an unsettled sleep. S.
 To SLOOM, v. n. 1. To become powerless; applied to the human body. 2. To become flaccid; as flowers and plants touched by frost. 3. To waste or decay. S.

SLOOMIE, adj. 1. Relaxed; enfeebled, in relation to animals. 2. Damp, and in an incipient state of putrefaction; applied to vegetables. S.
 SLOOMY CORN, a phrase used with respect to grain, when it is not well filled, S.
 Callander, (MS. Notes on Ihre, vo. Strid.) derives it from Su.G. sloo, exilis. Strid, robustus, is opposed to it. Perhaps the term is metaph., q. sleepy; as we speak of deaf corn, a dead pickle, &c. V. SLOOM, v.
 To SLOOP down. To descend in an oblique way. S.
 SLOOT, s. A sloven; a low fellow. V. SLOIT or SLUTE. S.
 SLOP, s. A breach; a gap, S. slap.
 Bot sloppys in the way left he,
 Sa large, and off sic quantité,
 That v c. mycht samyn rid
 In at the sloppys, sid be sid.
Barbour, viii. 179. 182. MS.
 —The hard burdis he hakkis,
 And throw the yet ane large windo makkis:
 By the quhilk slop the place within apperis.
V. SLAP, s. 1. Doug. Virgil, 55, 8.
 To SLOP, v. a. 1. To make a gap or breach.
 —The army of the Troyanis side
 Was thynnest skatterit on the wallis wyde,
 And bricht arrayit cumpany of the men
 War diuidit or sloppit.—
Doug. Virgil, 295, 14.
 2. Metaph., to hew down.
 The quhilk Turnus, as in his speddy chare
 The myd routis went sloppand here and there,
 Beheld his feris debatyng wyth Pallas.
Doug. Virgil, 332, 25.
 3. To slop throw, to pierce, to stab.
 "Mony of thaym sloppit throw the body fel downe aboue thair slaaris." Bellend. Cron. B. iv. c. 16. Con-fossi, Boeth. q. having slops made through their bodies.
V. SLAP, v.
 SLOP, s.
 Patrik and Beik away with Bruce thai ryd.
 V thousand held in till a slop away
 Till Noram House, in all the haist thai may.
Wallace, viii. 383. MS.
 In to a slop, is the reading of Edit. 1648, and 1758. The term may signify a compact body. Barbour and Doug. use sop, as denoting a crowd. It may, however, be merely the s. expl. above, used obliquely, as signifying a division; denominated from the gap or breach made by their departure.
 SLOPED GAW. An open drain. V. GAW. S.
 To SLORK, v. n. To walk through half-dissolved snow, making a sound from the regorging of the water in one's shoes. S.
 To SLORK, v. n. To make a disagreeable noise in eating; to eat up in large mouthfuls. Syn. Slorp. S.
 To SLORP, v. a. 1. To swallow any thing ungracefully, by making a noise with the mouth or throat, S.
 Aust. synon. slubber. 2. To bungle. S.
 Sibb. renders it merely, "to sup greedily," from Teut. slorp-en, sorbeo. V. SLORPING.
 To SLORP, v. n. To Slorp and Greet, to cry bitterly, drawing in the breath, and almost swallowing the tears as they fall. S.
 SLORP, s. 1. A sop; as much food taken with a spoon as one can swallow at once. 2. A spoonful thrust into the mouth hastily and ungracefully. 3. A sloven. S.
 SLORPING, adj. "Tawdry. Slorping hussie, a girl who is sluggishly dressed;" Gl. Sibb. See Sup.

Su.G. slurfwig, dirty, one who does his business carelessly; incuriosus, sordidus; slurfw-a, negligenter negotium aliquod perficere.

SLORPIE, adj. Slovenly. V. SLORP, v. and SLERP, s. S. To SLOT, v. a. To bolt; to fasten by a bolt, S. See S. "Scot. to slot, claudere, pessulum obdere;" Rudd.

Belg. sluyt-en, id. Su.G. slut-a, claudere; Alem. bislozzen, clausus; Teut. ver-sluyt-en, obstipare. Hence sluys, E. sluice, properly, that which shuts up a body of water. As Lat. claud-o, anc. clud-o, signifies both to shut and to finish, this analogy is to be observed in the Su.G. v. The transition is indeed very natural. For what is the conclusion of a business, but the act of shutting it up?

SLOT, s. 1. A bar; a bolt, S. See Sup.

Grete lokkis, slottis, massy bandis square,
Dartis and scheildis hyngis here and thare.

Doug. Virgil, 211, 34.

Teut. slot, Belg. sluyt, sera, obex, pessulus.

2. Metaph. applied to the mind.

"He has means in his hand to open all the slots and bars that Satan draws over the door." Rutherford's Lett. P. iii. ep. 22.

3. The cross-spars which fasten what are called the bulls of a harrow, passing through them, are denominated slots, Ang. 4. Slots in a cart are not only the long cross spars, as in a harrow, but also the short upright bars which support the Shelments. The slots are distinguished from rungs by being square, while the rungs are round. S.

SLOT, s. 1. The slot of a hill, a hollow in a hill, or between two ridges, S.

Isl. slod-r, res humilis et depressa. V. SCHLUCHTEN.

2. Slot of the breast, the pit of the stomach; where the breast-bone slopes away on each side, leaving a hollow, resembling that between two ridges, S.

3. The hollow in the throat above the breast-bone. S. SLOT, s.

And syne Lawyne, and all his slot,
Disputusly discumfyt he. Barbour, iii. 456. MS.

This may signify camp; Teut. slot, Germ. schloss, castrum. In the MS., however, the first letter seems rather to be f. In this case it must signify fleet; and Egrymor, the town referred to, must have been a sea-port.

SLOT, s. A sum of money, S.B.

To SLOTH, v. a. To neglect. V. SLEUTH, v.

To SLOTTER, v. n. To pass the time idly or sluggishly; to slumber, S.

Slotterin, shutterin, acting in a slovenly manner, Loth.
Thou auld hasard leichoure, fy for schame,
That slotteris furth euermare in sluggardry.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 96, 27.

Teut. slodder-en, flaccescere, slodder, homo sordidus;

Isl. O.Sw. sladd-r, vir habitu et moribus indecorus. E.

slattern and slut are from the same fountain. See Sup.

SLOTTRY, adj. Slumbering; drowsy; inactive, Loth.

There was also the laithly Indigence,—
The slottry Slepe, Dedis couising of kynd.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 172, 52.

To SLOTTER, v. n. To make a noise like a duck gobbling in swallowing food; to slabber up. Syn. Slorp. S.

SLOTTER, s. The noise made in this operation. S.

SLOTTERHODGE, s. A nasty beastly fellow, taking pleasure in feeding in a filthy way. S.

SLOUAN, SLUAN, s. Sleuth-hund, a bloodhound. S.

SLOUCH, (gutt.) s. A deep ravine or gully. S.

SLOUCHED, part. Drenched. Slouching, a wetting. S.

SLOUGH,* (gutt.) s. A husk. S.

SLOUGH, SLUGH, (gutt.) s. 1. A voracious eater and drinker. 2. A person of mean character, who would do any thing for his own interest. S.

SLOUM, s. The scum that gathers on stagnant pools. S.

SLOUN, s. A useless indolent person; a slow-hound. S.

To SLOUN, v. a. To idle away one's time. S.

SLOUNG, s. A sling. V. SLONG.

To SLOUNGE, v. n. 1. To go about, in an indolent way, from place to place; especially as catering for a dinner, S. Sleenge, id.

2. To hang the ears; to look sour. S.

E. lounge seems originally the same; allied to Su.G. lunk-a, tarde incedere, ut solent defatigati. Hence, SLOUNGIN-LIKE, adj. Having a downcast look; or moving like one much fatigued, S.

SLOUNGE, SLUNGE, s. 1. "A greedy slounge," a dog that goes about hanging his ears, and prying into every corner for food. 2. A sneaking fellow; a skulking vagabond; a glutton; a stupid dull-looking fellow. S.

SLOUNGER, s. An indolent fellow; a plate-licker. S.

To SLOUNGE, v. n. To make a noise in falling, or being thrown into water. S.

SLOUNGE, s. 1. The splash made by a heavy body in falling into water. 2. A great fall of rain. 3. The state of being completely drenched. S.

SLOUPE, s. "A stupid silly fellow," S.A. Gl. Compl. S. vo. Slop. It is there supposed to be derived from Belg. slap, latus, remissus. See Sup.

SLOUPER, s. A sloven who is a little knavish. S.

SLOUSSIS, Barbour, xiii. 20. V. FLOUSS.

SLOUSTER, s. 1. Food ill-prepared. 2. A sloven. S.

To SLOUSTER awa', v. n. The same with Slaister. S.

SLOUTH-HUND, s. A bloodhound. V. SLEUTH-HUND.

SLOWAN, s. A sloven. V. SLOUAN. S.

SLOW-THUMBS, s. A person who works but slowly. S.

To SLUBBER, v. a. 1. To swallow any thing hastily, so as to make a noise with the throat; applied to substances that are soft and pulpy, S. Slorp, synon. See S. 2. Metaph., to do any thing carelessly. Slubbert, part. pa.

"My custome euer was to post ouer my sinnes in the lump, with a generall slubbert confession." Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 332. V. Errata, preceding p. 748.

Su.G. slabbr-a, auide deglutire; Teut. slabber-en, ligurire jus tepidum; Belg. slobber-en, to sup up.

SLUBBER, s. 1. The act of swallowing as described above, S.—2. Food over-boiled, when flaccid. S.

SLUBBERY, adj. A term applied to that loose or flaccid kind of food, in swallowing which a noise is made by the throat, S.

Teut. slabber-en, to sup warm broth, seems immediately formed from slabb-en, to lick, to sup. But Teut. slobber-en corresponds in signification to the adj.; laxum sive flacidum esse.

SLUBBER, SLOBBER, s. Half-twined, or ill-twined woollen thread. S.

To SLUDDER, (pron. sluther), v. a. To swallow one's food with a noise in the throat, S.; synon. slubber.

SLUDDERY, adj. Soft; flaccid, Fife. pron. sluthery; synon. with SLIDDERY, 2.

Teut. slodder-en, flaccescere.

To SLUDDER, v. a. To sludder one's words, to pronounce indistinctly, S.B.; E. slur. V. SLIDDER. It may, however, be a metaph. use of the v. SLUDDER.

SLUG, s. A loose wrapper, or upper covering, worn for dirty work; a short gown or wrapper for women. S.
SLUG, SLUG-ROAD, s. A road passing through a narrow defile between two hills. V. SLOUCH. S.

SLUGGIED, pret. v. Swallowed greedily, Moray.

The cathel cam in in a bicker;

Wi' cutties they sluggied it roun'.

Jamieson's Popul. Ball. i. 296.

Sicamb. slocke, gula, Teut. slock-en, vorare, glutire; Su.G. sluk-a, deglutire. V. SLAG.

SLUGH, s. A mean fellow. V. SLOUGH. S.

SLUGHAN(gutt.), s. A lazy, good-for-nothing person. S.

SLUGHORNE, SLOGGORNE, SLOGAN, s. 1. The watchword used by troops in the field, by which friends are distinguished from enemies, S. See Sup.

The draucht trumpet blawis the brag of were;

The slughorne, ensenye, or the wache cry

Went for the battall all suld be redly.

Doug. Virgil, 230, 36.

2. Designation; appellation.

"The pepill dwellyng in the hie land and ilis thairof, at electioun of thair capitane, haldis vp thair handis to be leil and trew to hym. And als sone as the capitane is chosyn, thay past to the nyxt mote, and defendis vnder pane of deid, that nane of thaym name thair capitane with ony vthir sloggorne, bot with the auld name of that tribe." Bellend. Cron. Fol. 20. a. b. Trito vetustoque tribus rectoris nomine deinceps appellitet; Boeth.

"Probably from A.S. slege, clades, sleg-an, interficere, slethe, pugna, q. cornu bellicum;" Rudd. Perhaps from Ir. sluagh, an army, and corn, a horn, in composition gorn.

Rudd., however, has observed that this word is "sometimes used figuratively for a peculiar property or quality that seems inherent in those of one family or race." It may be connected with Ir. Gael. sliocht, a tribe, a race; Su.G. slag, slaegt, id. genus, prosapia. Isl. slekte, genus, stirps; whence slaegt-as, Germ. schlacht-en, genus suum referre, prosapiae naturam imitari; slaegtinge, cognatus, slaegtskap, cognatio; Alem. slahta, generatio.

SLUIP, SLYPE, s. A lazy, clumsy fellow. Syn. Slute. S.

SLUIST, s. A large heavy person. S.

SLUIT, SLUTE, s. A big, clumsy, lazy fellow; a glutton. S.

SLUITER, s. A male sloven. SLUT, a female. S.

To SLUMMISH, v. n. To trifle away one's time. S.

SLUMP, s. A remnant. A silly slump, a petty fragment, S.B.

Sw. slump, that which is left, the remainder, Wideg.

SLUMP, s. By slump, a large quantity of any thing; altogether, not separately.

"The brae farms, and the pasture land, are let by slump; it is impossible to say what they rent per acre." P. Campsie, Stirlings. Statist. Acc. xv. 344.

Su.G. slump, massa informis, totum aliquod, nondum in ordinem redactum. Koepa slumpwis, to buy all together, without selection; as is said, S., coft by slump.

The term is also used as an adj. Slump wark, work taken in the lump, S.

"The slump number he has taken, as the list is ill printed, from the Scots Mist." Wodrow's Hist. ii. 215. Hence, SLUMPERT, s. A large quantity of any thing; properly, what is not measured, S.B.

SLUMP, s. A marsh; a swamp. S.

To SLUMP, v. n. To sink in a mire. To go down as a person through ice, or in a bog. To stick in the mire. S.

SLUMP, s. A dull obtuse noise produced by an object falling into a hole. S.

SLUMPIE, adj. Marshy; swampy. S.

SLUNEOCH, s. A person of brutish disposition, but without the ability to project much mischief. S.

SLUNG, s. A sling, S.B. V. SLONG.

SLUNG, s. A tall lank booby; a low fellow. S.

SLUNGE, s. A sneaking fellow. V. SLOUNGE. S.

SLUNK, s. A slough; a quagmire. V. SLONK. S.

SLUNK, s. The veal of a calf cut out of the mother. S.

SLUPE, s. A male sloven. V. SLUIP. S.

To SLURE, v. a. To swallow ungracefully. S.

SLURICH, (gutt.) s. Flaccid food, in swallowing which a noise is made by the throat. S.

SLUSCH, SLUSH, s. 1. A pool; plashy ground, S. Rudd.

"A dirty plash;" Gl. Sibb. See Sup.

2. Snow, in a state of liquefaction, S.; synonym. glush.

"It sometimes happens that a fall of snow in the night-time will cover the deep water where the feiths are, with a scurf of snow and slush, that prevents the fishers from going to their feiths by water, in order to draw them out." State, Leslie of Powis, &c. 1805. p. 120.

"A rush of water, and a rush of slush in a thaw, are common expressions for a torrent of water, a torrent of half-melted snow." Gl. Compl.

Rudd. derives the term in sense 1. from Belg. sluys, a sluice, Teut. schleuss, cataracta, emissarium; Sibb., in sense 2., with still less probability, from Teut. sljck.

In both, it seems deducible from Su.G. slask, humor quicunque sordidus; slask-a, humorem vel sordidum vel ingratum effundere; Thet slaskar, imbres cadunt, Ihre. V. SLASHY. It may, however, be merely a corr. pron. of E. sludge, "mire, dirt mixed with water."

SLUSHIE, adj. Abounding with half-dissolved snow. S.

SLUSH, s. A person kept about farm-houses to do all the dirty disagreeable work. S.

SLUST, s. A sluggish person. V. SLUIST. S.

SLUT,* s. A dirty, worthless woman. S.

To SLUTCH, v. n. To move heavily, as in a deep road. S.

SLUTCH, s. A hanger on; a parasite. V. SLOATCH. S.

SLUTE, adj. Slovenly; E. sluttish.

Mony slute daw, and slepy duddroun,

Him servit ay with sounyie.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 29.

Teut. slodde, sordida et inculta mulier. See Sup.

SLUTTRIE, adj. Slovenly, Loth. V. SLOTTY.

SLUTE, s. A slow, lazy animal; either man or beast. S.

SLUTHER, s. A quagmire. S.

To SLUTHER, v. a. To do work carelessly and hurriedly. S.

To SLUTTER, v. n. To spill or slabber in cooking or eating victuals. V. SLUDDER. S.

SLUTTERIN, part. pr. Making an interrupted kind of noise through the nostrils when half-asleep. S.

SMA', adj. Small, S. Not grown up; in a state of childhood. Sma' Family, a family of young children. S.

Alem. sma, Su.G. smaa, tenuis. Hence smack-a, to lessen, to diminish.

SMACHRY, s. Trash; a hodge-podge, or farrago, of whatever kind, S.B.

"They sent in some smachry or ither to me, an' a pint o' their scuds." Journal from London, p. 9.

As this generally denotes a dish of various materials, it may be from Su.G. smaeck-a, to diminish, from smaa, little, q. to mince, to make an olio. Isl. smaelke, minuta quaequae, ut paleae ramenta.

S M A

SMACK, s. A smart stroke. S.

SMACLE, s. As much; corr. from as mickle. S.

To SMAD, v. a. To stain; to discolour. Smaddit, blackened.

The bard, smaddit lyke a smaik smokit in a smiddie, Ran fast to the dur, and gaif a grit raire.

Houlate, iii. 15. MS.

Mr. Pinkerton inadvertently renders this maddened. But the word is still in common use, especially, S.B.

Belg. smett-en, to stain, to soil, Isl. Su.G. smet-a, Germ. schmitz-en, A.S. smit-an, id. Perhaps Moes.G. ga-smit-an, to anoint, may be the original word. V. SMOT.

SMAD, s. A stain of any kind, S.B.

Belg. smette, A.S. smitta, Dan. smitt, id. Teut. smadde, convitium, q. a moral stain. If I mistake not, our word is sometimes used in the same sense.

SMA' DRINK. Nae sma' drink, not to be despised; no mean person; often applied to a conceited person. S.

SMA'-FAIRNS, s. pl. The guts; the intestines. S.

SMAICHER, s. (gutt.) A fondling term addressed to a child, S.B.

Allied perhaps to Su.G. smekr-a, blandiri, which is derived by Ihre from smaa, parvus, Teut. smeek-er, adulator; or A.S. smicer, tenuis. Isl. smock-r, pulcher, formosus; hilaris.

To SMAICHER, v. n. To eat in a clandestine manner, something, especially, that is agreeable to the palate, Ang.

Alem. smechare, delicatus; or perhaps smak-a, gustare, q. to be still tasting.

SMAIK, s. A silly mean fellow; a minion. See Sup.

Quoth he, Quhair ar yon hangit smaiks

Rycht now wald slane my bruder?

Chr. Kirk, st. 23.

Quod I, Smaik, lat me slepe; Sym skynnar the hing.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 239. a. 38.

Rudd. thinks that it may be from Teut. schmach, contumelia. If so, Isl. smaa, to contemn, may be viewed as the root. Or it may be more immediately allied to Su.G. smaeck-a, to diminish, a derivative from smaa, little. Hence, Magnus Ericson, king of Sweden, was contemptuously denominated Smaek, as being a weak, contemptible prince, who suffered the Danes to deprive him of the province of Scania. Loccenii Hist. Suec. p. 106. Ihre, however, says that he was denominated Smaecker. Su.G. smaa also signifies vilis; Alem. smah, Germ. schmach, id.

SMAIK, adj. Small; puny; contemptible; despicable. S.

— The smy on me smirks with his smaik smollat.

V. the s. Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 48.

SMAIKRIE, s. Pusillanimity; poltroonery; roguery. S.

Bot how this discharge was gotten,

When Holieglass is deid and rotten,

His smaikrie sall not be forgett.

Legend, Bp. St. Androis, Poems 16th Cent. p. 315.

SMAIR-DOKEN, SMEAR-DOKEN, s. An herb; so named from a salve or ointment being made of it. S.

From Teut. smaer, Isl. smyr, unguentum. For, in former times, in our country, this species of dock was much used for making a healing ointment.

To SMAIRG, v. a. To bedaub. V. SMERG. S.

To SMAIRIE, v. a. To besmear, S.B.

Teut. smeer-en, &c. linere, ungere.

SMALE FOLK, SMA' FOLK. People of the lower class.

In Ingland syne thai made a rade

S M A

Wyth the smales folk, that thai hade.

Wyntown, viii. 30. 118.

Isl. smelinge, a derivative from smaa, parvus, is used in a similar manner; è plebe humili, tenuis, pauper.

SMALIE, SMALLY, adj. Little; puny, S.B. See Sup.

Isl. smalig, Germ. smalih, id.

SMALL,* adj. Low in rank; inferior in station; contrasted with greit. S.

SMALL DRINK. Beer of the weakest quality. S.

SMALLIS, s. In smallis, in small quantities; in smaaws. S.

To SMASH, v. a. 1. To break to shivers, S. See Sup.

This is also used as a cant E. word.

2. To hew down, in battle, S.

You'll hear of us far better news,

When we attack like Highland trews,

To hash and slash, and smash and bruise.

Ritson's S. Songs, ii. 71.

And thro' they dash'd, and hew'd and smash'd,

Till fey men died awa, man.

Burns, iv. 363.

3. To beat severely, S. See Sup.

Germ. schmeiss-en, to smite, to beat; Die fenster einschmeissen, to throw stones into one's windows; S. to smash them.

SMASH, s. 1. The state of being broken to pieces, S.

Dung a-smash, broken in shivers.

"I wou'd na gang into the coach agen, far fear I shou'd hae—some of my banes broken or dung a-smash." Journal from London, p. 6.

2. The shreds, fragments, or separate pieces of any thing broken, S.

3. The sound of breaking; a crash, S.

Germ. schmeiss, a stroke. Gael. smuais, in pieces, broken in shivers.

SMASHING, adj. Large; strapping; vast. S.

SMA' STILL. A name for whisky, supposed to be of the best kind, as the produce of a Small Still. S.

SMATCHET, SMATCHED, s. 1. An appellation given to a child, expressive of contempt and displeasure, S.; perhaps from small and chit. See Sup.

Ay offered thay that undought fra one to another:

Where that smatched had suked, sa sair it was to shed it,

But believe it began to buckle the brother.

Montgomerie, Watson's Coll. iii. 21.

2. As applied to a man, a Scurvy fellow.

To SMATTER, v. n. 1. To be busily engaged about trivial matters; or, to smatter about, to go about, under a pretence of work, doing very little, S.

2. To deal in small wares, S.

3. To smatter awa', to spend in a trifling way, to expend on a variety of articles of little value, S.

4. To smatter awa', to consume victuals, by eating often, and little at a time, S. See Sup.

Su.G. smaa, Isl. smaa, smatt, small.

SMATTER, s. A heap of small objects in motion. S.

SMATTERS,* s. pl. 1. Trifles; things of little value, S.

2. Small sums, S.

SMATTIS, s. pl. "Small beer," Pinkerton; "probably the same with swatts, new ale," Sibb.

The lairds that drank guid wyn, and ail,

Ar now faine to drink smattis;

Thay top the beir, and cheips the meil,

The ladie sawis the aitis.

Maitland Poems, p. 189.

The second is the most probable sense; from Teut. smets, praedulcis, mulseus; nauseam provocans nimia dulcedine;

S M E

- as Sibb. has observed. We may add Isl. smedia, nauseabilis sapor, G. Andr. The same writer, however, mentions smolltz, liquamen, from smell, liqueat.
- To SMEAR, v. a. To Smear Sheep, to apply a liniment of tar, butter, &c. to the skins of sheep to preserve the wool, and protect them from the cold in winter. S.
- SMEAR, s. The mixture used in smearing. S.
- SMEARY, s. 1. A sheep that has been smeared or salved. S.
2. A person all besmeared. S.
- SMEARING, s. The act of anointing sheep. S.
- SMEARING-HOUSE, s. The hut used in smearing sheep. S.
- SMEARING-STOOL, s. A stool with a spoked bottom, so as to admit the sheep's legs, and keep it steady during the operation of smearing. S.
- SMEAR-DOKEN, s. An herb. V. SMAIR-DOKEN, S.
- SMEDDUM, s. 1. The powder or finest part of ground malt; also called malt smeddum, Ang. S.
2. Powder, of whatever kind, S.O.
O for some rank, mercurial rozet,
Or fell, red smeddum !
Burns, iii. 229.
3. Sagacity; quickness of apprehension, S.
Wa wi' your stuff, he has nae smeddum;
He publish! — Morison's Poems, p. 4.
4. Metaph. used to denote spirit, mettle, liveliness, S.
See Sup.
5. Smeddum,—good sense and spirit united. S.
6. Vigour and liveliness as an author. S.
- SMEDY, s. A smithy; a smith's shop. S.
- SMEEG, s. A kiss. S.
- To SMEEK, v. a. 1. To smoke, S.
But thof this town be smeekeit sair,
— Than ours there's nane mair fat an' fair.
Fergusson's Poems, ii. 114.
2. To kill by smoke. S.
- SMEEK, s. Smoke, S. especially S.B. See Sup.
I sat and ey'd the spewing reek,
That fill'd, wi' hoast-provoking smeeke.
The auld clay biggin.
Burns, iii. 100.
- SMEEKY, SMEEKIE, adj. Smoky. S.
- SMEERIKIN, s. A hearty kiss. V. SMIRIKIN, S.
- SMEERLESS, adj. Pithless; silly; insipid. V. SMERGH, S.
- SMEETH, adj. Smooth, S.B. A.S. smethe. Smeeth in the mou, a phrase applied to a horse that has lost mark of mouth. Wyntown uses smeth.
- SMEETHLY, SMETHELY, adv. Smoothly, S.B.
And he, as burdand, sayd smethely,
'Man, will thow have of me justyng?'
Wyntown, viii. 35. 162.
- SMEETHNESS, s. Smoothness. S.
- To SMEIK, SMEEK, v. a. To dry by smoke, S.B.
- SMEIK, SMEEK, s. Smoke, S.B.
I grein to sie thy silly smiddy smek.
V. REIST, v. 1. Montgomerie, Chron. S.P. iii. 500.
Perhaps here metaph. used for a visage discoloured by smoke.
- SMELT, s. A name sometimes given in S. to the fry of salmon. In E. it denotes the Salmo eperlanus, our Spirling, or Sperlin. V. SMOLT, S.
- To SMERG, SMAIRG, v. a. To bedaub or smear in any way; often applied to the salving of sheep. S.
- SMERGH, s. 1. Marrow; pith, S.B.
2. Vigour of body, in general, S.B.

3. Transferred, in the same sense, to the mind, S.B.
Our sells are neiber-like, I warran,
For sense and smergh;
In kittle times, when faes are yarring,
We're no thought ergh.
Beattie's Address, Ross's Helenore, st. 8.
Yet, gin I thought that ye were fit,
Or that ye had ha'f smergh or wit—
Shirrefs' Poems, xx.
- A.S. mearg, Su.G. merg, Teut. merghe, medulla, with the sibilation prefixed. It would appear that Isl. smior, Germ. schmer, &c. omnis generis pinguedo, as extended to butter, ointments, &c. have been, in the same manner, formed from this root; as marrow would be the first fat substance known.
- SMERGHLESS, SMEERLESS, SMEARLESS, adj. 1. Pithless; unhandy, S.B.
Gin he 'bout Nory lesser fyke had made,
He had na been sae smeardless at the trade.
Ross's Helenore, p. 17.
2. Insipid; languid; respecting manner, S.B.
"The uther wis a haave colour'd smeardless tapie, wi' a great hassick o' hair hangin in twa-pennerts [pennyworths] about her haffats." Journal from London, p. 7.
It is transferred to the mind and its actings.
For they had gien him sik a fleg,
He look'd as he'd been doited;—
Syne wi' my targe I cover'd him,
Fan on the yerd he lies,
And sav'd his smeardless saul; I think
'Tis little to my praise.
Poems in the Buchan Dialect, pp. 8, 9.
My smeardless sangs hae ne'er had hap
Her notice to engage. Shirrefs' Poems, p. 352.
3. Senseless; incapable of reflection, S.B.
Bat fat use will they be to him,
Wha in hudge-mudge wi' wiles,
Without a gully in his hand,
The smeardless fae beguiles?
Ibid. p. 11.
- SMER-KERIEN, s. The spinal marrow. S.
- SMERVY, adj. Savoury, S.B. See Sup.
Nae huney beik that I did ever pree,
Did taste sae sweet and smervy unto me.
Ross's Helenore, p. 108.
Perhaps from Isl. smior. V. SMERGH.
- SMETH, adj. Smooth. S.
- SMETH, s. A smith; a blacksmith. S.
- SMEUCH, (gutt.) s. Fume; smoke. S.
- SMEWY, adj. Savoury, S.B. Gl. Shirr.
This seems allied, as Sibb. observes, to Teut. smaeckelick, grati saporis.
- SMY, s. "Pitiful fellow," Pinkerton.
— The *sm*y on me smirks with his smaik smollat.
Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 48.
— Thou subteil *sm*y—
Quhat wenis thow to degraid my hie estait,
Me to decline as judge, curst creature?
Palice of Honour, i. 64.
The lown may lick his vomit, and deny
His shameless sawsse, like Satan slavish *sm*y;
Whose manners with his mismade members here
Doth correspond, as plainly doth appeir.
Polwart, Watson's Coll. iii. 23.
- If the sense given by Mr. Pinkerton be just, it is synon. with Smaik, q. v. It may, however, signify flatterer, parasite, especially as conjoined with subteil; from Su.G. smyg-a, reptando se insinuate, Germ. schmiegen, to creep; also, to humble one's self, to present an humble petition. Dan. *sm*y-er, to fawn, to flatter; Isl. smiug-a, to insinuate gradually by artful means. Ihre views smaa, parvus, as the origin; sese exiguum veluti facere.

SMICK, s. Expl. "ashot, [qy. errat. spot] a tincture." S.
SMIDDY, SMIDDIE, s. A smith's work shop, S. Rudd.

Sw. smedia, id. A.S. smiththe, fabrile; from Su.G. smid-a, A.S. smith-ian, cudere, to strike. Junius (Gl. Goth.) derives the v. from smith, planus; because one part of a smith's work is, by beating or otherwise, to make things smooth. See Sup.

To SMIDDLE, v. a. To conceal; to smuggle. S.

To SMIDDLE, v. n. To work by stealth. S.

SMIETH, s. A bird; perhaps errat. for Snyth, a coot. S.

To SMIKKER, v. n. "To smile in a seducing manner," Sibb. Gl. See Sup.

Teut. smeek-en, blandiri; whence smeecker, adulator, blandiloquens. Sw. smikr-a, blandiri, Seren. A.S. smere-ian, may be different in form, merely from transposition. Although this word is not mentioned by Johns., Bailey and Seren. give it as E.

SMIOK, s. A dish of good food. S.

To SMIOK, v. n. To feast on the best. S.

SMIRCELIN, s. The Mya Truncata, a shell-fish. S.

To SMIRD, v. a. To gibe. S.

SMIRIKIN, SMEERIKIN, s. A hearty kiss, S. smurachin, Fife. Perhaps from Su.G. smirk-a, to caress.

To SMIRK, v. a. To beat; to swinge. S.

To SMIRK, * v. n. To smile, S. "To look affectedly soft or kind," E. Johns. S.

SMIRKIE-FACED, adj. Having a blithe good-natured, smiling countenance. S.

To SMIRKLE, SMIRTLE, SMURTLE, v. n. To laugh in a suppressed way, S.

"As this was said, Lethingtoun smirklit, and spack secretlie to the Quene in hir ear, quhat it was the Tabill hard not." Knox's Hist. p. 342.

Experience then smyrkling smyld,

We are na bairns to be begyld,

Quod he, and schuke his heid.

Cherrie and Slae, st. 77.

Away they went, then Wallace did revive,

And leugh, and smirtld at them in his sleeve.

Hamilton's Wallace, p. 12.

And now I think I may be cocky,

Since fortune has smurtld on me.

Song, Ross's Helenore, p. 150.

Smirkle is most commonly used; smirtle is merely a corr.

This is evidently a deriv. from A.S. smere-ian, subridere; of which it retains the sense, more than the E. v. smerk, at least as rendered by Johns. "to smile wantonly."

SMIRL, s. A roguish or mischievous trick; a pliskie. S.

SMIRR, s. Butter. S.

To SMYSLE, v. a. To sear. S.

SMYSTERIN', part. adj. To sit smysterin', to sit beside the fire, brooding over it idly or triflingly. S.

SMIT, s. A clashing noise, from E. smite.

— She heard a smit o' bridle reins,

She wish'd might be for good.

Lord William, Minstrelsy, Border, iii. 265.

To SMIT, SMYT, v. a. 1. To stain; to pollute; to contaminate.

— Bot Memprys

Smyttyd wes wytht mony wys.

Wyntown, iii. 3. 124.

i. e. Stained with many a vice.

Of Edw. I., in reference to his false conduct in pretending to act as arbiter in choosing a king for Scotland, it is said;

Thare he heycht thame, wyth lawtè

Thare cas to ger decleryt be.

Hys lytil lawtè nevyrtheles

He smyttyd thare in his process. Ibid. viii. 5. 92.

2. To infect, as with a contagious disorder, S.

"That the Bischopis, Officialis, and Denis inquirye diligentlie in thair visitatioun of ilk parochie kirk, gif ony be smittit with lipper." Acts, James I. 1527, c. 118. Ed. 1566.

A.S. smit-an, Su.G. smitt-a, Belg. smett-en, polluere, inquinare. The original idea is to besmear, Moes.G. bismait, inunxit. Su.G. smitt-a also signifies, to infect. Hence smittosam, contagious, A.S. smitting, id.

SMITTLE, adj. Infectious; contagious, S. See Sup.

The covetous infatuation

Was smittle out o'er all the nation.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 331.

Belg. smettelick, id. A. Bor. smittleish.

SMIT, SMYT, SMYTE, s. 1. A stain, literally used.

Thair men also mon be bot smyt or smoit.

Bannatyne Poems, p. 142.

Smaill sweit smaragde, smelling but smit of smot.

Ibid. p. 202.

2. A stain, in a moral sense.

Bot quhat at sal be put in write

Of falsheid sall bere nakyn smyte.

Wyntown, ix. 20. 54.

A.S. smitta, Belg. smette, macula. V. SMOT.

SMITCH, s. A stain; a speck. In a moral sense, a slur. S.

SMYTCH, s. A little impudent boy. S.

SMITCHCOCK, s. A grilled or broiled chicken. S.

SMYTCHER, s. A contemptuous term for a child. S.

SMYTE, s. A small bit; a particle; a jot; a grain. S.

SMITH, * s. A blacksmith. S.

SMYTRIE, s. A numerous collection of small individuals, Aysrs.

Himself, a wife, he thus sustains,

A smytrie o' wee duddie weans,

An' nought but his han' darg, to keep Them right and tight in thak an' rape. Burns, iii. 4.

Nearly allied to smatters, and from the same source.

To SMIT THOUMS. To form a contract by each party wetting the fore-part of his thumb with the point of his tongue, and then smiting, or pressing the thumbs together. "Weet (wet) thumbs" is also used. S.

SMIT-THUMBS, s. An ancient pledge for the fulfilment of a bargain. S.

SMITTIN', adj. Infectious; contagious. S.

SMITTLENESS, s. Infectiousness. S.

Avis anate domestica minor, piscibus victitans. Smle-fanger dicta est, dorso nigricante. Sibb. Scot. p. 22.

This term is most probably printed erroneously. It has been conjectured, that the first syllable should be read Smee, which nearly resembles Smew, the name of the Mergus albellus, Linn., to which the description might correspond pretty well. But the name seems characteristic; for the last part of it is evidently fanger, i. e. catcher, like Holland's description of the Scarth.

— The Scarth a fysh-fangar,

And that a perfyte.

Houlate, i. 14.

SMOCH (gutt.), s. The stifling smoke arising from the burning of wet rotten wood. S.

To SMOCH, v. n. To burn and smoke like rotten wood. S.

S M O

To SMOCHER (gutt.), v. n. To breathe with difficulty. S.
SMOGHIE, adj. Close; moky; misty and sultry. S.
SMOIT, s. A smutty person; one who talks obscenely. S.
SMOKE, s. A beautiful figure used, in some Northern counties, to denote an inhabited house, S.

"In 1680, — so many families perished for want, that, for 6 miles in a well inhabited extent, within the year, there was not a smoke remaining." P. Duthill, Morays. Invern. Statist. Acc. iv. 316.

The idiom, if I mistake not, is Gael.

But it is also used in Su.G. Roek not only denotes smoke, but a dwelling. Notat domicilium, focum; unde betala foer hwarie roek, pro quavis domo vel familia vectigal pendere; Ihre.

SMOLT, SMOUT, adj. Fair; clear; mild; applied to the weather.

— Mirrie madinis, think not lang;
The wedder is fair and smolt.

Peblis to the Play, st. 6.

Syne gyf brycht Titan list to schaw his face,—
Makand the heuinny's fare, clere and schene,
The weddir smout, the fyrmament serene.—

Doug. Virgil, 472, 28.

A.S. smolt, serenus, placidus; smolt weder. Teut. smoel weder, aura tepida. Belg. smout, blandus. A similar phraseology is used in Su.G. waedret smylter sig; from smylta, serenari.

SMOLT, SMELT, SMOLTE, s. 1. The term used to denote the fry of salmon, S. smout.

"His Grace — ratifies and apprieves the former actes maid for punishing of slayers of read fish, smoltes, and frie of all fishes in forbidden time." Acts, James VI. 1597, c. 261.

"They [salmon fry] are called samlets, and sometimes smelts, but are generally known among our country people by the name of salmon smouts." Dr. Walker, Prize Essays Highland Society for S. ii. 351.

Is not this learned naturalist mistaken in applying to them the name samlet, which properly denotes a distinct species? V. PAR.

Perhaps from Su.G. smol-a, to cramble, because of the smallness of their size.

2. Metaph. used to denote a child, S.

To SMOO, v. n. To smile placidly or benignantly. S.

SMOO, s. A placid or benignant smile. S.

To SMOOK, SMUİK, v. n. To suffocate by means of sulphur; a term applied to the barbarous mode of destroying bees in order to gain their honey. S.

To SMOOK about, v. n. To go about clandestinely, seeking to pilfer any thing that is exposed. S.

SMOOKE, adj. Pilfering; addicted to petty thieving. S.

To SMOOL, SMYLE, v. a. To secure by underhand means or fraudulently; to filch. S.

To SMOOST, v. n. To burn away gradually without breaking into a flame. V. SMUIST. S.

SMOOTRIKIN, adj. Tiny and active; a fondling epithet.

My little wee smootrikin mous. Old Song.

To SMORE, SMURE, SMOIR, v. a. 1. To smother; to suffocate with smoke, S. Smoar, Westmorel.; smoore, Lancash. See Sup.

"He was sae browden'd upon't [his pipe,] that he was like to smore us a' in the coach wi' the very ewder o't." Journal from London, p. 21.

2. To suffocate; to choke; to suppress.

"The carefulnes of this world, and the desaitfulnes of riches, smoris the word that it beris na frute." Abp. Hamiltoun's Catechisme, 1552, Fol. 72, b. By this term he renders suffocat in the Vulgate.

S M O

3. To extinguish. Smure the candle, put it out, Aberd.

4. To conceal; to hide, S.

— I sal help to smore your falt, leif brother.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 272, 37.

Therefoir gif thou has ene, behald

How they wald smoir thy fame.

Cherrie and Slae, st. 42.

A.S. smor-an, Teut. smoor-en, suffocare, extinguerere.

5. Applied to the prevention of legal prosecution or punishment. To smoir the law. S.

To SMORE, SMURE, v. n. To suffocate. I was like to smore: I was in danger of being suffocated, S.

He suld haue place amangis the laif,

That his hie honour suld not smure,

Considering what he did indure.

Lyndsay's Squyer Meldrum, 1594, A. ii. b.

SMORE of rain. Close small rain without wind. S.

SMORIE, adj. A smorie day, a day distinguished by close small rain without wind; a close atmosphere. S.

SMOR'D THOW. V. THOW.

SMOT, SMOTE, SMOIT, s. 1. A stain, in a general sense, synon. smad, S.B.

Thair men also mon be bot smyt or smoit.

Bannatyne Poems, p. 142.

"Smot, corruption occasioned by mildew;" Lord Hailes. But this sense seems too much limited, as the term is here used. The phrase appears to have been proverbial, denoting pollution of any kind.

2. Apparently, the mouldiness which gathers on what is kept in a damp place. V. SMIT, s.

3. The distinguishing mark put on sheep, by means of ruddle or otherwise, S.A.

4. Transferred to the objects marked in this manner. S.

5. Moral pollution; a stain affecting the character. See S.

— "Thay haue runge in thei parts evir trew and obedient bothe to God and the Prince, without ony smote in thair dayis in ony maner of sort." Knox's Hist. p. 102.

Su.G. smuts, Germ. schmutz, macula, sordes. V. SMAD.

To SMOT, SMOTT, v. a. 1. To stain, in whatever way.

— Behald thame smottit quite

Of his red blude, and harnys theron out smyte.

Doug. Virgil, 141, 23.

— Luvaris suld be leill and trew;

And ladeis suld all thingis eschew,

That ma thair honor smot.

Scott, Chron. S.P. iii. 154.

2. To mark with ruddle, tar, &c. S. V. SMAD, v.

SMOTTRIT, part. pa. Besmeared.

His smottrit habit ouer his schulderis liddir,

Hang peuagely knyt with ane knot togidder.

Doug. Virgil, 173, 47.

Sordidus, Virg. V. BESMOTTRIT.

SMOUPSIE, s. A stripling; a youth; one not fully grown, S.B.

To SMOUSTER, v. a. To eat clandestinely. S.

SMOUT, adj. Clear; mild; applied to the weather. S.

SMOUT, s. 1. The fry of salmon. V. SMOLT. 2. A small trout of the speckled kind. 3. Any small creature. S.

To SMOUTTER, v. n. To eat often, although little at a time, S.B.

Su.G. smutt-a, pitissare, to taste by little and little. Ihre derives the v. from smaa, parvus; "for what," says he, "is it to sip, but by small though frequent tastings to prolong the pleasures of the appetite?"

SMUDDOCH, s. An ill-burning, smoky fire. S.
To SMUDGE and LAUCH. To try to suppress laughter. S.
SMUDGE, s. A suppressed laugh; a smudge o' a laugh. S.
To SMUE, or SMUDGE, v. n. To laugh in one's sleeve;
 to laugh in a clandestine way, Loth. See Sup.

Germ. schmuts-en, subridere, blande et placide ridere.
 Wachter seeks a Gr. origin; μειδίαφω, id. But it is undoubtedly allied to Su.G. smyst-r-a, renidere, subridere.
 The radical term seems to be mys-a, id.

SMUGLY, adj. "Amorous; sly, being at the same time well dressed;" Sibb. Gl.

He refers to Teut. smeeckelick, blandus. From the latter idea, however, it might seem allied to Su.G. smuck-a, or-nare, Belg. smuyck-en, Germ. schmuck-en; Su.G. smuch, Alem. smug, Isl. smock-r, pulcher, elegans, E. smug.

To SMUG, v. n. To toy amorously; to embrace. S.
To SMUIL, v. n. To sneak; to smuil awa', to sneak away.

To SMUIST, SMOOST, v. n. 1. To be in a smouldering state. 2. To emit smoke. SMUISTED, smoked. S.

SMUIST, SMOOST, s. 1. The act of burning in a smouldering way. 2. A smouldering smell; a smell that threatens suffocation. Smuist, disagreeable smoke. S.

To SMUISTER, v. a. To smother; applied to air. S.

To SMUKE, SMUIK, v. a. and n. To smoke; as, to smuik bees. V. SNOOK.—SMUKE, smoke. S.

SMULACHIN, adj. Puny, looking poorly, S.B.

Perhaps from Su.G. smola, a crumb, the smallest part of any thing, Dan. smule, Isl. mole, id. from mol-a, contundere, confringere; whence our mulin, a crumb. Or it may be allied to Belg. smeul-en, to smoke hiddenly; also, to soil, to besmut, Sewel; q. having a smoked or smutted appearance. Gael. smeilag, however, is expl. "a pale puny female."

To SMULE in, v. n. To use wheedling or cajoling means. To smule in wi' one, to curry favour. S.

To SMULT, v. a. To crop very short; as, "to smult a tree;" to cut off the branches above the cleft; "to smult the head of a bairn," to cut its hair too close. S.

SMURACK, s. A light summer shower of rain. S.

SMURACHIN, s. A stolen kiss, Fife. V. SMIRIKIN.

SMURAGH, s. The dust or dross of peats. S.

To SMURE, v. a. To smother. V. SMORE.

SMURLIN, s. A species of shell-fish, Shetland.

"The smurlin or smuthlin is the Mya truncata, remarkable for a shrivelled leathery process at one end." Neill's Tour, p. 93.

SMURR, s. 1. A drizzling rain, Ayrs. 2. Light rain, rather heavier than dew. Syn. Dagg. See Sup.

It's SMURRIN, v. impers. It rains slightly. S.

Teut. smoor, fumus, vapor; smoor-en, vaporare.

To SMURTLE, v. n. To smirk. V. SMIRTLE.

SMUSH, s. 1. A disagreeable sulphurous smell, occasioned by smoke and dust, Fife. Smudge, a suffocating smell, A. Bor. Gl. Grose. 2. Dirt; filth. See Sup.

SMUSH, s. A slight drizzling rain. S.

To SMUSH, v. a. To bruise; to reduce to small particles; to grind to powder. Syn. Smash, q. v. S.

SMUSH, s. Gane to smush, reduced to a friable or crumbled state, like potatoes too much boiled, &c. S.

To SMUSH, v. a. To devour any thing clandestinely which has been got in an underhand manner. S.

SMUSH, adj. Perhaps, filthy, or bruised. V. v. and s. S.

SMUSHAGH, s. A suffocating smell arising from a smothered fire. The same with Smush, s. S.

To SMUSHLE, v. n. To drizzle. S.

SMUSTER, s. A large cluster of things. Syn. Muther. S.

SMUTCHACK, s. A term for a child. Syn. Smatchet. S.

SNAB, s. 1. The projecting part of a rock or hill, a rough point; a term used both in the North and South of S. See Sup.—2. The bank, rock or hill itself that projects. The brow of a steep ascent. S.

"There is a tradition universally prevalent through this part of the country that formerly the river Tay occupied a very different bed from what it does at present;—that at the Snabs of Drimmie, it sent off a portion of its waters, which entered this parish between the hills of Forgan and Dron." P. Longforgan, Perth. Statist. Acc. xix. 554.

Perhaps from Belg. snabbe, snebbe, a beak or snout, Isl.
snoppa, id.; just as Su.G. nabb, a promontory, is from naebb, a beak.

SNAB, s. 1. A cant term for a shoemaker's or cobbler's boy, S.A. snob, S.B. allied perhaps to Teut. snipp-en, to cut.—2. Also a cant term for a shoemaker. S.

SNACHEL (gutt.), s. A puny contemptible bantling. S.

SNACK, adj. 1. Clever; alert; quick in action. Be snack, be quick, do not lose time, S.

In grit affairs ye had not bein sae snack,
 About the ruleing of the common-weil.

Semple, Evergreen, i. 77.

"Ye're very snack, i. e. very nimble, ready, quick, Scot," Rudd, vo. Snak.

By this time Lindy is right well shot out;—
 Nae bursen bailch, nae wandought or misgrown,
 And snack, and plump, and like an apple round.

Ross's Helenore, p. 16.

Snack is evidently opposed to bursen bailch, q. one who is so lusty as to be unfit for exertion.

This is the primary sense; not, however, as Rudd.
 thinks, from Snak, s. q. v., or as Sibb. conjectures, from snauw, scomma, dictum amarum, q. snauwick. The term is beyond a doubt radically the same with Isl. snogg, celer, citus; whence snogge, cito. This seems formed from snu-a, verti, which Ihre views as including the idea of celerity, and as allied to A.S. snude, celeriter, snell, citus; Mod.
 Sax. sneidig, celer, Isl. snudur, snott, id. Sw. sno, cito auferre, snugg-a, clanculum subducere, snafw-a, praepropere eundo titubare, &c. V. Ihre, vo. Snabb.

2. Acute, quick of apprehension, S.

The knack I learned frae an auld aunty,
 The snackest of a' my kin. Ramsay's Poems, ii. 288.

3. Applied to the product of genius; but improperly.

These keep my fancy on the wing,
 Something that's blyth and snack to sing,
 And smooth the runkled brow.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 452.

SNACKLY, adv. 1. Cleverly; adroitly, S.

2. With intelligence, S.

How snackly cou'd he gi'e a fool reproof,
 E'en wi' a canty tale he'd tell aff loof!

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 14.

SNACKIE, adj. "Full of tricks and quirks."

This seems to be nearly peculiar to Moray.

Tam Tod was an ald-farran birkie,
 Weel versed i' the gawds o' the sex;
 Slee, snackie, and wilie, and quirkie,
 And famous for pliskies and tricks.

Jamieson's Popul. Ball. i. 297.

This seems merely a dimin. from SNACK.

SNACK, s. A morsel swallowed hastily, a slight repast,

S. Provinc. E. See Sup.

Ramsay speaks of them,
 — that drink and dinna pay,
 But tak' a snack and run away.

V. SNAK.

Poems, i. 302.

S N A

To SNACK, v. n. "To snap or bite suddenly, as a dog,"
Gl. Sibb. V. SNAK.
SNACKUS, s. A fillip.
To SNAG, v. n. To snarl; to banter, Fife. See Sup.
Teut. snack-en, latrare, gannire, garrire. Isl. snecke, ringere, to grin, to shew the teeth, as a dog doth.
To SNAG, v. a. To chide in a taunting way; to repre-hend with both severity and scorn. S.
SNAGGY, adj. Sarcastical, Fife. used as an adv.
Quo' Maggy fell snaggy,
"Ye lie, you loun, an' joke."
A. Douglas's Poems, p. 130.
Snaggy, testy, peevish, A. Bor. Gl. Grose.
SNAGGIN, s. "Biting; raillery."
Sic hablin' an' gablin',
Ye never heard nor saw;
Sic snaggin an' braggin,
An' raudy-beggar jaw.
A. Douglas's Poems, p. 121.
Sw. snackare, Germ. schnak, gerro, a droll, a buffoon;
schnak-en, jocularia loqui.
To SNAGGER, v. n. To snarl, or grin like a dog.
"Scot. etiam dicimus to snagger, hirrire;" Rudd.
SNAG, s. A branch or broken bough of a tree. S.
To SNAG, v. a. To cut off branches with an axe or bill. S.
AIK-SNAG, s. The broken bough of an oak. S.
SNAGGEREL, s. A puny contemptible bantling. S.
SNAGGER-SNEE, s. A large knife. S.
SNAIG, s. 1. An old flash word used to denote the obtaining of money whether by fair or by foul means.
2. A worthless fellow. S.
SNAK, s. The gnashing of a dog's teeth together, when he aims at his prey. S.
Bot than the swypper tuskand hound assayis
And neris fast, ay reddy hym to hynt,—
Wyth hys wyde chaftis at hym makis ane snak.
Doug. Virgil, 439, 33.
"Belg. snack, a gasp; or rather, q. d. a snatch, or aim to snatch;" Rudd. But it is evidently allied to Teut. snack-en, captare, capitare, hianti ore captare, Kilian. This perhaps may be traced to Isl. snogg, celer, citus.
To SNAM, s. To snap at any thing greedily. S.
To SNANG, v. n. To twang. S.
To SNAP up, v. a. 1. To eat hastily, to devour, S.
2. To lay hold of suddenly, S.
"The people carried all out of his way; stragglers were snapped up; the hills made many both horse and men sicken and die." Baillie's Lett. ii. 382.
Dr. Johns. says that snap is the same with knap. But the former has certainly a different origin; Belg. snapp-en, to catch hastily, to seize with violence; Su.G. snapp-a, id.
Belg. op snappen, to devour.
To SNAP, v. n. To make a hasty attempt to speak.
If some auld swinger snap to speak
Of pink-ey'd queans, he gives a squeek.
A. Nicol's Poems, p. 22.
This may be the preceding v. used metaph. Belg. snapp- en, however, signifies, to tattle impudently, Sewel; prae-rapide multumque loqui, interciperre verba alterius, Kilian.
SNAPSY, adj. Tart, S.B. snappish, E.
The snapsy karles grain in ease;
They sleep and eat when e'er they please.
A. Nicol's Poems, p. 22.
SNAPPERT, adj. Tart; hasty. A snappert answer, a tart reply, S.B.
Germ. schnapp-en, to snatch, to snap; Isl. snaef-ur, tart, austere. Snapur also denotes a person who is foolish and impudent; who makes no account of what he says.

Teut. snapper, garrulus, loquax.
SNAP. In a snap, in a moment; immediately, S.B.
And now the fead is soften'd, and alang
They march, and mix themsells amang the thrang.
The face of things is alter'd in a snap.
V. the v. Ross's Helenore, p. 123.
Belg. met een snap, in a moment; in a crack, synon.
SNAP, s. A small brittle cake of gingerbread. S.
SNAP, adj. Quick; smart; eager to find fault. S.
SNAP DYKE. A species of enclosure, S.O.
"A kind of stone fence called Snap-dykes, peculiar to Carrick and the north parts of Galloway, is admirably fitted for sheep parks; being from 4 to 6 feet in height, strong and firmly locked together at the top." P. Kirk-michael, Ayr. Stat. Acc. vi. 104.
Teut. snap, interceptio, snapp-en, interciperre; q. a fence that checks the sheep.
SNAPGUN, s. A gun that strikes fire without a match. S.
SNAP-HAUNCE, s. A firelock. Syn. Snapgun. S.
SNAPPLY, adv. Hastily; quickly, S.B.
Whan he's ca'd hame, they shot him in before,
In a black hole, and snapply lock'd the door.
Ross's Helenore, p. 47.
— Ilka morning by the scream o' day,
They're set to wark, and snapply ca'd away.
Ibid. p. 51.
Teut. snap, raptus. V. SNAP up.
To SNAPPER, v. n. 1. To stumble; slightly to trip, S.
"A horse with four feet may snapper by a time;" S.
Prov. Kelly, p. 26. See Sup.
2. To err in conduct; to get into a scrape, S.
Neidful it is thairfoir to gang warlie,
That rakleslie thow snapper nocht, nor slyd.—
He reulis weil that weil in court can guide.
Maitland Poems, p. 277.
Su.G. snafw-a, titubare: Det ar en god hast som aldrig snafwar; It is a good horse that never stumbles, Seren.
Belg. sneu-en, id. Ihre thinks that the Su.G. word is derived from snabb, celer, because it is generally from going too quickly that one stumbles. This does not hold, as to a horse at least. For it is generally from going too slowly, and of consequence carelessly, that he stumbles.
SNAPPER, s. 1. A stumble, S.
2. A failure as to moral conduct, S.
"Quhat is thy parte in thir slippes and snappers?— Sleepe not there quhere thou hes fallen." Bruce's Eleven Serm. O. 8. a.
"I am not like these sinners which but trip and stumble, and rise again after a snapper, my fall is with my full weight." Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 190.
3. A perplexity; an entanglement; a snare. S.
4. An unforeseen accident; a misfortune. S.
SNAPPY, adj. Keen in business; disposed to take the advantage of another. V. SNAP up, v. S.
SNAPPOUS, adj. Hasty in temper; testy; snappish. S.
SNAP-WORK, SNAPWARK, s. A firelock.
But those who were their chief commanders—
Were right well mounted of their gear;—
With durk, and snap-work, and snuff-mill,
A bagg which they with onions fill.
Cleland's Poems, p. 12.
Some were chasing hens and cocks,
Some were loosing horse from yocks,
Some with snapwarks, some with bowes,
Were charging reers of toops and ewes. Ibid. p. 34.
O.E. "snap-haunce, a firelock, a gun that strikes fire without a match;" Phillips. This is from Belg. snaphaan, id. q. a cock that snaps.

SNARE, adj. Prudent and diligent; as, "A snare wife," a good housewife; one who manages her family well. S.

SNARRE, adj. 1. Tart; severe. A snarre mistress, a mistress who is severe to her servants, S.B.

2. Rigid; firm to the grasp; as, snarre corn, grain that feels firm and hard, when pressed in the hand, S.B.

3. Applied to one who is so sharp in his dealings as to indicate a disposition to overreach others. S.

This term, in the first sense, seems to have a very extensive affinity. Isl. snar, celox, acer; whence snar-a, celeriter auferre; snerra, snaera, fight, snaerumz, I fight, Snerrir or Snorri, a man's name, denoting one addicted to fighting, Gunnlaug. S. Snarrlind-r, sharp-witted; Su.G. snar, quick; Belg. snar, snappish, snarling; Teut. snarr-en, jurgare, fremere.

SNAR-GAB, s. Acrimonious prating; abusive language; perhaps rather the mouth which emits it. S.

To SNASH, v. n. To talk saucily; to bandy insolent language, S.

This may be allied to Su.G. snack-a, nugari, to talk in a trifling manner, q. snacks-a; snack, nugae, frivolous discourse; especially as Belg. snaaksch (from snaak, a droll) signifies "burlesque, cold," Sewel. But it more nearly resembles snaes-a, increpare, verbis asperioribus corripere. Isl. snefs-a, increpo, (G. Andr. p. 219.) Ihre derives the v. Snaes-a from naesa, the nib, the nose; "either because this, in birds, is the instrument of fighting, or because it is chiefly opposed to the fist of a person who is enraged, so that a similar mode of expression is used concerning one who loads another with curses, hugga en oefwer naesan," i. e. literally, to strike one over the nose. Isl. snaegg-ia is synon., duris et asperis verbis aliquem excipere. Verel. further expl. it by these Sw. phrases; snaesa, bijta en oefwer naesan. Isl. snaegd, importunior et durior increpatio, Sw. snaesande, S. snashin. We may add Isl. snefs-a, increpo; G. Andr. V. SNISTY.

SNASH, s. "Abuse, Billingsgate," Gl. Burns, S. pert or snarling language.

I've notic'd, on our Laird's court-day,
An' mony a time my heart's been wae,
Poor tenant bodies, scant o' cash,
How they maun thole a factor's snash.
He'll stamp an' threaten, curse an' swear,
He'll apprehend them, poind their gear.

Burns, iii. 5.

SNASH, adj. Pert; saucy, S.

The tane crys, "Gie me't, mind I brought the cash;"
The tither says, "I'll hae't," and that right snash.

It is here used as an adv. Morison's Poems, p. 189.

SNASH-GAB, s. 1. Prating; petulant talking. 2. A prattling, forward boy or girl. S.

SNASHTER, s. Trifles. S.

SNASTRY, s. Low chat. S.

SNATCH, s. A hasty repast, S.

"Our kind host and hostess would not let us go without taking a snatch, as they called it; which was in truth a very good dinner." Boswell's Journ. p. 326. V. SNACK, s.

To SNAUCHLE (gutt.), v. n. To walk in a slow and lingering mode; to saunter. S.

SNAUCHLE, s. One of a weak habit of body; a dwarf. S.

SNAW, s. Snow, S. snauw, S.B. See Sup.

The red, that's on my true love's cheik,
Is like blood drops on the snaw.

V. SNYP. Minstrely, Border, ii. 7.

A.S. snaaw, Moes.G. snaaws, Belg. sneeuw. Hence,
VOL. II. 433

SNAW-BRUE, SNAW-BROO, s. Snow-water; snow in a dissolved state; melted snow. S.

"Fishermen observe, and I think justly, that they [salmon] do not like to leave the estuaries or mouths of rivers, until the melted snow (snaaw bru) is out of the water." Prize Essays, Highland Society of S. ii. 400.

In mony a torrent down the snaaw-broo rowes.

Burns, iii. 55.

SNAWIE, adj. Snowy, S.

—Thy snaawie bosom sun-ward spread,

Thou lifts thy unassuming head. Burns, iii. 202.

To SNAW, v. n. To snow; used impersonally; It's snaawin'.

SNAW-BIRD, s. The Snow-Bunting or Snow-Flake. S.

SNAW-BRACK, s. A thaw which dissolves the snow. S.

SNAW-FLAIGH, SNAW-FLECK, s. The Snow-Bunting. S.

SNAW-FOWL, s. The Snow-Bunting or Snow-Flake. S.

SNAW-POWTHER, s. Fine snow. S.

SNAW-WRIDE, s. A heap of snow blown up by the wind. S.

SNAWDOUNE HARRAT. Snowdoun Herald. S.

To SNEAR, v. n. To emit a hissing sound; to snort. S.

To SNECK, SNEG, v. a. 1. To cut with a sudden stroke of a sharp instrument, S. See Sup.

—Some aft, their leeful lane,
Bring to the warld the luckless wean,
And sneeg its infant thrapple.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 360.

2. Metaph. to sneeg off at the web's end, to cut off one's hopes, S.; in allusion perhaps to the cutting of a web out of the loom.

Kind Jove has play'd a parent's part,
Wha did this prize to Pallas send,
While we're sneeg'd off at the web's end.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 465.

Teut. snoeck-en, Germ. schneck-en, scindere. Wachter mentions as synon. A.S. threo-snaecce, trisulcus; Isl. snaugg klaede, vestes laceratae. Hence perhaps the E. phrase, to go snacks, to have a share or portion, from the idea of the article being previously divided by cutting.

Su.G. snygg, Isl. snogg-r, brevis, curtus, would seem to have had a similar origin. Verel. expl. the latter, pilis brevis et curtis, q. having the hair cut or cropped.

3. To sneck with lime, to make indentations in a wall, filling the blanks with lime; or, in building, to insert a small quantity between the stones in the outer side, Aberd. synon. to teeth with lime, S. V. STOB-THACKIT.

SNECK, SNEG, s. A small incision or notch; a cut suddenly given; a stroke of the scissors, S. See Sup.

Gin we the gully guide na now with can,
'Tmay chance to gee's a sneck into the hand.

Ross's Helenore, p. 89.

SNECK, SNICK, s. 1. The latch of a door, S. Provinc. E. denominated perhaps from the notch by which it is fastened. See Sup.

The door's wide open, nae sneck ye hae to draw.

Ross's Helenore, p. 77.

—Click! the string the snick did draw!

And jee! the door gaed to the wa! Burns, iii. 101.

Swith, sneck and bar and bowt she drew.

Jamieson's Popular Ball. i. 234.

I know not the origin, if it be not Teut. snack-en, capture, capitare, q. what catches; as E. latch, Isl. loka, from lyck-ia, to shut; Belg. klink, id. from the noise it makes, expressed, in the extract from Burns, by the cognate term click.

2. Also used for a small bolt. 3. A portion of a wall built with single stones, or stones which go from side to side. V. THROUGH-BAND. S.

To SNECK, v. a. To secure by a latch or bolt. S.
To SNECK the door, to fix it by a latch, S. A. Bor.
"To snick the door; to latch, or shut, the door;" Sir J. Sinclair's Observ. p. 19.
Sae out she slips, and snecks the door behin'.
Ross's Helenore, p. 42.
SNECK-DRAWER, SNICK-DRAWER, s. An auld sneck-drawer, one who, from long experience, has acquired a great degree of facility in accomplishing any artful purpose, S. See Sup.
And mony a lie was there,—
Whan the tittlin auld snick-drawers fell to,
And they wi' the creature were flush.
Jamieson's Popular Ball. i. 295.
"A sly, cunning person, that can remove locks and bolts, and raise latches, without being heard;" Gl. ibid.
The allusion is evidently to the practice of one who makes way for himself into any place that is shut up and secured, by forcing the bolt.
It has been observed, that S. pawky corresponds to Lat. astutus, q. arte tutus, Fest., and that the stronger term callidus may be fitly rendered, an auld sneckdrawer.
SNECK-DRAWIN, adj. Crafty; trick-contriving, S. See S.
Then you, ye auld snick-drawing dog!
Ye came to Paradise incog. Burns, iii. 74.
SNECKER, s. A sharper. S.
To SNECK-PIN, v. a. To put small stones between the larger ones in a wall, covering the seams with lime. S.

 2. To lop off, in a general sense, S.
Clap in his walie nieve a blade,
He'll mak it whistle,
An' legs, an' arms, an' heads will sned,
Like taps o' thrissle. Burns, iii. 220.
 3. To hew or polish stones with a chisel. S.
 4. To remove excrescences; used in a moral sense.
"It is good that God snedde the vnfruitfull and rotten branches of our life." Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 218.
"We wrote a free admonition to the Parliament, of their jealousies and divisions; which, although it took not away the root, yet did it sned many of the branches of the evils complained of." Baillie's Lett. ii. 94.
 5. To emasculate, S. Teut. snijd-en, castrare, evirare.
Sibb. is mistaken in viewing this word as originally signifying to hew, to polish, from Teut. snyd-en, sculpere, caelare. The primary sense of this very v., as given by Kilian, is, to prune; putare, secare. This corresponds to the sense of Germ. schneid-en, A.S. Franc. Alem. snid-an, Belg. snyd-en. Gl. Keron. abasnid-an, amputare. Hence SNOD, q. v.
SNEDDINS, s. pl. The prunings, or twigs, lopped off from trees, S.
Germ. abgeschittene, id. Teut. snede, Belg. sneed, a cut, a slice.
SNED, s. A branch pruned off. S.
SNEDDER, s. A pruner; one who lops off branches. S.
SNED-KAIL, s. Coleworts or cabbages, the old stalks of which, after they have begun to sprout, are cut off, and left in the earth for future product. S.
SNED, SCYTHE-SNED, s. The shaft or pole of a scythe. S.
SNED, s. The link of hair to which the hook is tied that is fastened to a cord-line, or set-line. S.

Doug. Virgil, 360, 55.

Rudd. is uncertain whether this signifies handsome, straight, or white as snow, Belg. sneeachtigh, niveus; Sibb. prefers the latter sense. The term seems rather to signify bare, naked, Isl. snaud-r, Su.G. snoed, nudus. Or, shall we suppose, that it has been originally written smeith, i. e. smooth, as more immediately allied to the other epithet, slekit?

SNELL, adj. 1. Keen; sharp; severe; as, a snell straik, S. It is used in this sense adverbially by Blind Harry. See Sup.

SNISTY, adj. Saucy in language or demeanour. A snisty answer, an uncivil reply, given with an air of haughtiness or scorn, S.B.

From Su.G. snæs-a, Isl. snefs-a, to chide with severity; unless it be rather allied to Su.G. snyst-a, to draw the breath frequently through the nose, to sniff; which is often an expression of contempt.

It is observable, indeed, that many of the terms denoting displeasure, are borrowed from the nose. E. and S. snib, snub, Su.G. snubb-a, from nabb, S. neb, the nose; Isl. snæf-ur, austere, from nef, nasus; Su.G. snæs-a, to chide, from nasa; Germ. anschnautz-en, to snub, to grumble, from schnautze, the beak; S. snifter, a cutting repartee. This analogy may be remarked in the same term, as denoting a severe blast, especially in relation to one whose face is exposed to it. This also may be from Isl. nef, nasus.

Some of the words, which denote a blast, or gale in the face, seem to have the same origin. Thus snifter and snister may be traced to nef and nasa, the nose; as being much exposed to the cold, and often severely affected by it.

Ihre, vo. Snaesa, makes a curious conjecture as to the reason of this derivation, of terms denoting displeasure, from the nose. This has been mentioned under SNASH, v. He adds another, which has greater probability; that birds express displeasure by pecking with their beaks.

I am convinced that the metaphor, in some instances at least, owes its origin to the dilation of the nostrils, and the violent breathing through them, when one is enraged. This origin of the metaphor, we know, is very ancient. Heb. אף, aph, signifies the nose; אפם, appim, in the dual, the nostrils; hence, metaph., anger, wrath.

To SNITE, v. a. This is used, not only like the v. in E., in relation to the nose, but also as to a candle, S. Snite the candle, snuff it.

Su.G. snyt-a, emungere; snyta liuset, emungere lucernam; Germ. das licht schneut-zen, id. A.S. candelsnytels, emunctorium.

SNYTE, s. A smart blow. S.

To SNYTE, v. n. To walk feebly. S.

SNYTH, s. The Coot, Fulica atra, Linn.

"The Coot, (fulica atra, Linn. Syst.) which we call the Snyth, remains with us the whole year, and is found in several places." Barry's Orkn. p. 300.

It most probably receives this name from its bare or bald head, (Su.G. snoed, Isl. snaud-ur, nudus,) in the same manner as, on this account, it is called, Sw. blaes-klacka, from blaes, white, blæsa, white forehead; Germ. weiss-blaessig wasserhuhn, q. the white-foreheaded water-hen; S. beld kyte, i. e. bald coot.

To SNIVEL,* v. n. 1. To breathe hard through the nose. 2. To speak through the nose; to snuffle. S.

To SNOCKER, v. n. To snort; to breathe high through the nostrils; properly, to throw out the breath, or respire violently, S.

— "It may signify, smells or snuffs, by sucking in the breath at the nose; which Scot. also we call snotter-ing, or snokering." Rudd. vo. Snokis.

2. To go about from place to place, prying into every corner, S.; a term applied to those who manifest a jealous curiosity. Not, as Sibb. says, from Teut. snutt-en, to snuff; but from Su.G. snok-a, which conveys the very idea expressed by this word as metaph. used; insidiose scrutari, Ihre. Snoka efter en, to dog one, Seren. Hence, Ihre remarks, the lowest sort of custom-house officers, who are still prying into the repositories of passengers, are contemptuously called Tullsnokar, from the v., conjoined with tull, custom, duty.
- SNOKER*, s. 1. One who smells at objects like a dog. 2. Often used in a bad sense, as denoting a rake. S.
- SNOOD*, s. A short hair-line, to which a fishing-hook is tied, S. "The quantity of line found sufficient for a man to manage at sea and shore, contains 36 scores, 720 hooks, (in summer a few more,) one yard distant from each other, on snoods of horse hair, value 15s." P. Nigg, Aberd. Statist. Acc. vii. 204. V. FLAUCHTBRED.
- Su.G. snod, a small rope, funiculus, Ihre; Isl. snaede, id. Perhaps from Su.G. sno, to twist, to twine; snodt, twisted; as, snodt garn, twisted yarn.
- SNOOD*, SNOID, SNUDE, s. A head-band; a fillet or riband with which the hair of a woman's head is bound up, S. "The single women wear only a ribband round about their head, which they call a snood." Pennant's Tour in S. 1769. p. 212.
- A.S. snod, id. vitta; which Ihre views as the same with Su.G. snod funiculus. V. the preceding word.
- To TYNE one's SNUDE. A phrase applied to a young woman who has lost her virginity. S. The lassie lost her silken snude, That cost her mony a blirt and bleirie. Old Song.
- To SNOOD, v. a. To bind up the hair with a fillet, S. "At home they [the young women] went bare-headed, with their hair snooded back on the crown of their head, with a woollen string, in the form of a garter." P. Tongland, Kirkcudb. Statist. Acc. ix. 325. See Sup.
- SNOOFMADRUNE*, s. A lazy or inactive person. S.
- To SNOOK v. n. To smell at. V. SNOKE.
- To SNOOL, v. a. To subjugate or govern by authority, to keep under by tyrannical means, pron. snule, S. Our dotard dads, snool'd wi' their wives, To girn and scart out wretched lives. — Ramsay's Poems, i. 357.
- Dan. snool-er, to snub, to snuffle at, to give a tart or crabbed answer, might seem the origin. But this is only the v. signifying, to speak through the nose, used metaph. Were it not to suppose a change of idea as to the means employed, I would therefore prefer Su.G. snill-a, to deceive, from snille, ingenium; which Ihre derives from snell, celer. Snool may, indeed, be immediately derived from snell, as signifying, severe. For from Germ. schnell, id. is formed anschnell-en, praeropere aliquem invehere durioribus verbis, ut excandescens solent; Wachter.
- To SNOOL, v. n. 1. To submit tamely, S. See Sup. Is there a whim-inspired fool, — Owre blate to seek, owre proud to snool? Let him draw near. Burns, iii. 344.
2. To act in a mean and spiritless manner. S.

S N O

To GAE about SNOOLIN'. To go from place to place with an abject and depressed appearance: S.

SNOOL, s. One who meanly subjects himself to the authority of another; "one whose spirit is broken by oppressive slavery;" Gl. Burns.

Thus a henpecked husband is said to be a mere snule.

"Ye'll wind a pirn! ye silly snool,

"Wae worth ye'r drunken saul;"

Quoth she, and lap out o'er a stool,

And caught him by the spaul.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 277.

How shall I be sad when a husband I hae,

That has better sense than ony o' thae

Sour, weak, silly fellows, that study, like fools,

To sink their ain joy, and make their wives snools?

Ibid. ii. 80.

To SNOOVE, (pron. snuve), v. n. 1. To move smoothly and constantly.

A boy's top is said to snuve, when it whirls round with great velocity, preserving at the same time an equal motion, S.; to spin, synon. V. SNOIF.

2. To walk with an equal and steady course, S.

The steyst brae thou wad hae fac't it;

Thou never lap, and sten't and breastit,

Then stood to blaw;

But just thy step a wee thing hastit,

Thou snoov't awa.

Burns, iii. 144.

3. To snuce awa', to withdraw one's self in a clandestine sort of way; to sneak off, S. 4. To walk with the head bent downwards towards the earth; to walk carelessly, or in a slovenly manner. S.

Moes.G. sniv-a, ire, venire. Su.G. sno implies the idea of celerity, celeritate uti inter agendum vel eundum; sno sig, festinare, Ihre. It is also used in sense 3. Han snodde sig undan; He withdrew himself clandestinely. Isl. snu-a admits a signification allied to this; to turn back; reverti, terga dare, Ihre; snu-a aptur, retroverti, G. Andr. vo. Aptan; snu-ast à flotta, in fugam verti. Perhaps Su.G. sno-p-a is allied; re infecta, cum pudore abire. Junius mentions Ir. snoimh-am, nere, torquere, which corresponds to sense 1. V. SNACK, and SNOIF.

To SNOOZE, v. n. To sleep. S.

To SNORK, v. n. 1. To snort. 2. To hawk; to endeavour to force up phlegm, or clear away huskiness from the throat. S.

SNORK, s. The snort of an affrighted horse. S.

SNORL, s. A snare; a difficulty; a scrape, S.B.

Probably a dimin. from Su.G. snoere, Teut. snoer, funis, chorda; q. a gin.

SNORT of Thread. A hank of entangled thread. S.

SNOSH, SNUSH, adj. Fat and contented; applied to a thriving chubby child. S.

SNOT, SNOTTIE, s. A dunce; a booby; a dolt. S.

SNOTTER, s. 1. The snot that hangs from a child's nose, S. See Sup.

2. Metaph. used to denote any thing that has no weight or value.

Hence I inferr, though I'm no plotter,

No help nor gloss can weigh a snotter.

Cleland's Poems, p. 109.

Teut. snot, defluxio capitis ad nares; Fland. snotter, snotteringe, rheuma, catarrhus, Kilian.

To SNOTTER, v. n. 1. To breathe through an obstruction in the nostrils; "to snort," Rudd. vo. Snokis. See S.

2. To blubber.

Close by the fire his easy chair too stands,

438

S N U

In which all day he snotters, nods, and yawns.

V. SNOCKER.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 96.

To SNOTTER and LAUGH. To laugh good-humouredly. S.

SNOTTER, s. A laugh of this description. S.

SNOTTER-BOX, s. A cant term for the nose. S.

SNOTTER-CAP, s. A dull, stupid, boorish fellow. S.

SNOTTER, s. The proboscis of a turkey-cock. S.

SNOUT,* s. 1. Used metaph. for impudence. 2. Formerly used in S. to denote the stem of a ship. S.

SNOUTHIE, adj. Drizzly, dark, and rainy. S.

SNOW-FLAKE, SNOW-FLIGHT, SNOW-FOWL, s. The Snow-bunting, S. Orkn.; Emberiza nivalis, Linn.

"The migratory birds are—the swallow, mountain-finch, or snow-flake, and sometimes the Bohemian chatterer." P. Dingwall, Ross, Statist. Acc. iii. 6. Snow-flight, P. Hamilton, Lanarks. ibid. ii. 210.

"Snow-fowl,—Snow-bunting.—It is the sneefugl of Norway." Neill's Tour, p. 204.

Sw. snosparf, q. snow-sparrow; Isl. snee-kok.

To SNOWK, v. n. To smell about; a variety of Snoke. S.

SNOWK, s. A smell; used in a ludicrous way. S.

SNUBBERT, s. A loose knot or lump; the nose, in contempt; the snout. S.

SNUDE, s. A fillet. V. SNOOD, s. 2.

SNUFFE, s. A disorder in the nostrils.

—The Snuffe and the Snoit, &c.

V. CLEIKS.

Montgomerie, Watson's Coll. iii. 13.

Most probably a superabundant discharge of mucus; Teut. snof, snuf, rheuma, defluxio capitis ad nares, Kilian; to which A.S. snofel, defined precisely in this manner by Somner, is allied.

SNUFFIE, adj. Sulky; displeased; often Snuffie-like. S.

SNUFFILIE, adv. In a sulky manner. S.

SNUFFINESS, s. Sulkiness. S.

To SNUG, v. a. 1. To strike; to push; applied to an ox or cow that strikes with the horn, or pushes with the head, Ang.

2. To chide; to reprimand with severity, Ang.

The latter is perhaps the primary sense; from Isl. snaegg-ia, duris et asperis verbis aliquem excipere, Verel.

SNUG, s. A stroke; a push, Ang.

SNUGS, s. pl. Small branches lopped off from a tree,

S.B. V. SNECK, SNEG, v.

SNUIFIE, adj. Sheepish; awkward. S.

To SNUIST, v. n. To sniff. S.

To SNUISTER, or SNUITTER, v. n. To laugh in a suppressed or clandestine way through the nostrils. S.

SNUISTER, SNUITTER, s. A laugh of this kind. S.

To SNUIT, v. n. To move carelessly and inactively, conjoined with the appearance of stupor. S.

SNUITTIT, part. adj. Having the foolish and glimmering look of a half-drunk person. S.

SNUK, SNUKE, s. A small cape or promontory. See S.

Befor the ost full ferdly furth thai fle

Till Dwnottar, a snuk within the se;

Na ferrar thai mycht wyn out off the land.

Wallace, vii. 1043. MS.

Swak, Perth Ed. Former editors, not understanding the term, have substituted strength.

The same word is used in The Bruce.

To Scotland went he than in hy,

And all the land gan occupy:

Sa hale that bath castell and toune.

War in till his possessione,

Fra Weik anent Orkenay,

To Mullyr snuk in Gallaway. Barbour, i. 188. MS.

S O B

And giff he seis we land may ta,

On Turnberys Snuke he may

Mak a fyr, on a certane day,

That mak takynnyng till ws, that we May thar arywe in sawfté.

Ibid. iv. 556. MS.

In Edit. Pink. Turnberys Inuke, from an error of the copyist, who read (long) f for I. Turnberysenuke, Edit. 1620.

Isl. nuk-r, vulgo hnuk-r, signifies a little mountain, a higher kind of rock, G. Andr. The s may have been prefixed, as in many words of Goth. origin. Teut. snoecks, nasutulus, q. a little nose. I need scarcely observe, that ness, synon. with snuke, has a common origin. Isl. snok-ur is rendered exporrectus scopus, G. Andr.; q. a mark stretched out.

To SNURKLE, v. n. To run into knots, as a hard-twisted thread; to run into kinks. S.

To SNURL, v. a. "To ruffle or wrinkle;" Gl. Rams.

— Northern blasts the ocean snurl,

And gars the heights and hows look gurl.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 349.

To SNURL, v. n. To be entangled or ravelled; applied to thread, ropes, &c. E. to snarl. S.

SNURLIE, adj. Knotty, S.B.

Perhaps allied to Su.G. snoere, Teut. snoer, a cord.

SNUSH, s. Snuff; still used by old people. S.

SNUSH, adj. Fat and contented. V. SNOSH. S.

To SNUVE, v. n. V. SNOOVE. S.

To SO, v. a. To smooth the water by oily substances, in order to raise small fish to the surface. S.

SOAKIE, adj. Plump, in full habit, Loth. See Sup.

SOAKIE, s. A ludicrous designation for a lusty female. S.

SOAM, s. The rope or chain by which a plough is drawn. V. SOWME.

SOAM, s. Herring soam, the fat of herrings. S.

SOAPER, s. A soap-boiler. S.

SOAPERIE, s. A place where soap is made. S.

SOB, s. A gale of wind, a land-storm, S.B. V. SUMMER-SOB.

To SOB,* v. n. A term used to denote the palpitating motion of green wood, or of any moist body in the fire; also perhaps including the sound emitted. S.

SOBIR, SOBYR, SOBER, adj. 1. Poor; mean, S. See S.

— From distruction delyuer and out scrape

The sobir trumpis, and meyne graith of Troyanis.

Doug. Virgil, 150, 55.

"Oftimes we fynd innocent pepyll and passingeris murtherd be the theuis for sobir geir in thair vaiage." Bellend. Cron. B. xiii. c. 4. Ob pauculam rem, Boeth.

Thyself appleis with sobir rent.

Bannatyne Poems, p. 186.

Thus sobir diet denotes mean fare.

"By the present system, it requires the utmost exertion of his industry, and an almost uninterrupted succession of crops, to pay his rent and servants, and afford a maintenance, very sober indeed, to his family." P. Killearnan, Ross, Statist. Acc. xvii. 343.

2. Applied to money it denotes what is low in price; as, "He has got but a sober sum for his horse." S.

3. Little; small, S. See Sup.

"If he had not respect to himselfe & his Christ, if we tooke neuer so great paines, we would find but a sober success." Rollocke on the Passion, p. 482, id. 483.

4. Weak; feeble.

Allace! so sobir is the might

Of wemen for to mak debait,

Incontrair menis subtell slicht,

439

S O D

Qubilk ar fulfillit with dissait.

Bannatyne Poems, p. 156.

5. Ailing, in a poor state of health, S.

Very sober, ailing a good deal.

6. Sometimes used as denoting a moderate state of health, S.

7. Denoting any thing not good of its kind; or applied to a person who does not merit commendation, S.

A sober servant, a very indifferent one.

This is evidently the E. word, although used in a variety of peculiar senses.

To SOBER, SOBYR, v. a. To compose; to keep under, S.

Bathe ire and luff him set in till a rage;

Bot nocht for thi he soberyt his curage.

Sobyrit, Edit. Perth.

Wallace, v. 682. MS.

SOBERLY, adv. Sparingly; frugally. S.

To SOBER, v. n. To become less boisterous; to grow more calm. S.

SOBERSIDES, s. A creature of sober habits. S.

SOC, SOCK, SOK, s. The right of a baron, to hold a court within his own domains, S. V. SAK.

SOCCOMAN, SOCKMAN, s. 1. One who holds lands by soccage, or on condition of performing certain inferior services in husbandry; E. socman.

"Gif ane man deceissis, leaueand behind him moe sonnes nor ane, ane distinction is to be observed, quhither the father was ane Knicht, haueand lands halden be knichts service,—or ane Socco-man." Reg. Maj. B. ii. c. 27. s. 1.

2. A tenant of a particular district, subjected by his lease to certain restrictions, and bound to perform certain services, Aberd.

"The parish is accommodated with seven corn-mills, to some one of which the tenants of a certain district, called the sockcom, or sockmen, or sucken, are astricted." P. Turreff, Aberd. Statist. Acc. xvii. 407.

A.S. soc, jurisdictio. V. SAK.

To SOCHER (gutt.), v. n. To make much of one's self, to be careful of one's health to an extreme, particularly by the use of warm potions, palatable draughts, &c. S.

SOCHER (gutt.), adj. Lazy; effeminate; inactive from delicate living. S.

SOCHT, part. pa. of Seek. Exhausted; wasted; drained. S.

SOCY, s. A person who walks with a manly air. S.

SOCK, SOK, s. A ploughshare, S. A. Bor. See Sup.

I saw Duke Sangor thair, with mony a knob

Six hundreth men slew with ane pleuchis sok.

Palice of Honour, iii. 26.

Peace to the husbandman and a' his tribe,

Whase care fells a' our wants frae year to year!

Lang may his sock and couter turn the gleyb!

And bauks o' corn bend down wi' laded ear!

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 59.

Fr. soc, id. vomer. This has been derived from Lat. sulc-us, a furrow, because this is the effect of the former. In Dict. Trev., however, it is said that soc is an old Celt. word, which has passed into Fr. from the Bas Bretagne. As Alem. sahs, Germ. sachs, A.S. seax, denote a knife, or any instrument for cutting; Germ. saeg-an, to cut; there may possibly be some radical affinity.

SOCKIN-HOUR, s. The portion of time between daylight and candlelight. S.

SOCK-MANDRILL, s. A fac simile of a plough-head cast in metal, left with the smith as a model. S.

SOD, adj. 1. Firm; steady. To lay sod, to make secure.

2. As applied to the mind or conduct, douce; canny. S.

SOD, adj. Singular; odd; unaccountable; strange. S.

SOD, s. 1. A species of earthen fuel, used for the back of a fire on the hearth. 2. Used to denote a heavy person or any dead weight. S.

SOD, s. A species of bread. S.

SODDIS, SODDS, s. pl. A sort of saddle used by the lower classes in the country, made of cloth stuffed, S.; synon. sonks, sunks. A. Bor. Sods, a canvass pack-saddle stuffed with straw.

For thai, that had gude hors and geir,
Hes skantlie now ane crukit meir;
And for thair sadils thai have soddis.

Maitland Poems, p. 322.

Next, like Don Quixot, some suppose,
He had a lady Del to Bose,
Who never budged from his side,
Upon a pair of sodds astride.

Colvil's Mock Poem, i. 17.

If I mistake not, the generality of farmers, little more than half a century ago, used sodds for riding. Many of the pendiclers, who keep only one horse, still have no better equipage.

They were also formerly used, in some of the southern counties at least, for supporting the loads on the backs of horses.

Allied perhaps to A.S. seod, pl. seodas, a sack, satchel, or budget.

To SODGERIZE, v. n. To act as soldiers; to be drilled. S.

SODGER-THEE'D, adj. Having little or no money. S.

SODICK, s. A dull, clumsy, heavy woman. V. SOUDIE. S.

SODIOUR, s. A soldier.

For a knycht, Schyr Gawter the Lile,
Said it wis all to gret perile

Swa ner thir sodiourys to ga. Barbour, v. 205. MS.

SODROUN, SUDROUN, SOTHROUN, s. 1. Used as a collective name, equivalent to Englishmen.

He saw the Sothroun multipliand mayr,
And to hym self oft wald he mak his mayne.

Wallace, i. 188. MS.

2. The English language, as distinguished from the Scottish.

— Forsoith I set my besy pane
(As that I couth) to make it brade and plane,
Kepand na sodroun, bot oure awin langage,
And spek as I lerned quhen I wes ane page:
Na yit so clene all sudroun I refuse,
Bot sum worde I pronunce as nychboure dois.

Doug. Virgil, Pref. 5, 5, 7.

It is merely southern, A.S. sutherne; Su.G. soeder, Isl. sudur.

SODROUN, SOTHROUN, adj. Of or belonging to England. S.

To SOFT, v. a. To assuage. S.

SOFT, adj. Wet; rainy; a soft day, a rainy day. S.

SOY, s. Silk. Fr. soye, id. See Sup.

His stockings were of silken soy,
Wi' garters hanging doune.

Gilderoy, Ritson's S. Songs, ii. 24.

Silken soy must be a tautology; unless some particular kind of silk be meant; as podesoy, S. is the name given to a rich species of cloth of this quality.

To SOILYE, v. a. To solve; to resolve. S.

SOILYE, s. Soil. V. SULYE.

SOYME, s. A rope. V. SOWME.

SOIND, s. A court. V. SHYND.

To SOYNDA, v. a. To see. S.

SOYNDECK, s. The eye. S.

SOYNE, s. A son. S.

To SOIORNE, v. a. To quarter; to lodge forcibly. S.

"The Parliament statutis, and the King forbidis: that na cumpanies pass in the countrie, to ly vpone ony the Kingis liegis: or thig or soiorne hors outhur on kirkmen or husbandis of the land." Acts, James I. 1424, c. 7. Edit. 1566.

To SOIR, v. n. To complain. S.

SOIT, SOYT, s. 1. An assize.

"Gif ane man mutilats ane other, or wounds, or beates him, be forthocht felonie: and the partie grieved persewes him before ane judge, either be soyt (be an assise) or be complaint; sic forme and order of proces salbe ledde,—as is ordained agais ane manslayer." Stat. Rob. II. c. 11. s. 1.

2. Attendance on an overlord by his vassals, in the court held by him.

"He quha is oblished to giue soyte in the courte of his over-lord, suld doe the samin, conforme to the tenour of his infestment, and na vther-waies." Skene, Verb. Sign. vo. Sok. L.B. secta, secta curiae; Fr. suite, i. e. sequela.

SOYTOUR, SOYTER, SUITAR, s. 1. Any person appearing in a court of law, as the vassal of another.

"The soytes suld be first called, with their lords and maisters; for albeit the soytouris compeir, nevertheles their lords and maisters, likewaies are oblished to compeir, and to giue presence to the Iustice, in his air." Skene, Crimes, Tit. ix. c. 28.

2. It was afterwards used to denote one employed by another to manage his business in court, and regularly admitted by the court as an agent.

"Ilk soytour, before he is admitted and receaved be the judge, sould be examinat in thrie courts, gif he can make recorde of the courte," &c. Quon. Attach. c. 36. s. 3.

3. The term is sometimes used as equivalent to Dempster, as it was part of the office of a suitar to pronounce the judgment of court. S.

SOITH, s. Truth.

King Priamus son made answere; Soith is it,
Na thing, my dere frende, did thou pretermyt.

Doug. Virgil, 181, 47.

For thoch scho spayit the soith, and maid na bourd,
Quhat euer scho said, Troianis trowit not ane wound.

A.S. soth, veritas.

Ibid. 47, 6.

SOITHFAST, adj. True; certain. V. SUTHFAST.

To SOKE, v. n. "To slacken," Pink.

Ryse, fresch Delyte, lat nocht this mater soke.

King Hart, i. 20.

Let it not rest, or be delayed. It may be only a metaph. use of E. soak, because things are said to soak, when allowed to remain a considerable time in a moist state. Or perhaps from Teut. swijck-en, to subside, to fall.

SOLACE, s. Sport; recreation.

— Or with loud cry folowand the chace

Efter the fomy bare, in thare solace.

Doug. Virgil, 23, 10.

SOLACIOUS, adj. Cheerful; gay.

In cumpany solacious

He was; and tharwith amorous.

Barbour, x. 290. MS.

i. e. He was a cheerful and loving companion. For amorous seems simply to signify affectionate; as it immediately follows;

And gud knychtis he luffyt ay.

V. SOLACE.

SOLAND, SOLAND GOOSE, s. The Gannet, Pelecanus

Bassanus, Linn.; S. pron. solan.

It receives its trivial name from the Bass isle, where it incubates every year, as it does also on Ailsa rock.

Syne all the lentren but les, and the lang rede,

And als in the advent,
The Soland steward was sent;
For he coud fra the firmament
Fang the fische deid.

Houlate, iii. 5.

"In it ar incredible noumer of soland geis, nocht vnlik to thir fowlis that Plinius callis see ernis." Bellend. Descr. Alb. c. 9.

Martin observes, that "some derive the name of this bird from the Irish word Sou'l-er, corrupted and adapted to the Scottish language;" as denoting its remarkable power of vision, in spying its prey from a great distance. Voyage to St. Kilda, p. 27. This species of goose, according to Shaw, is in Gael. called Suilair.

Sibb. derives the name "from Sw. solande, lingering, loitering, sottish; part of the verb soela, procrastinare." There is, however, a bird that breeds in the Feroe islands, which is called Sula, and which may be the same with this. V. Encyclop. Britann. vo. Pelicanus.

According to Pennant, this is the same bird which the Norw. call Sule, Hav-Sul. He also views it as the Sula of Clusius, in his Exot.; Zool. p. 612.

"Gannets — breed chiefly on the Stack of Suliskerry. Sule is the Norwegian name for a gannet, and sherry means rock." Neill's Tour, pp. 199, 200.

To SOLD, v. a. To solder. See Sup.

"It is ordanit, that the said gold or siluer salbe ressaifit be all his liegis, sa that it keip all the wecht, and be gude trew mettell, suppois it be with crak or flaw, or soldit." Acts, Ja. IV. 1489, c. 34. Edit. 1566.

Fr. soud-er, Ital. sold-are, Arm. sout-er, id. from Lat. solid-are.

SOLD, s. 1. "A weight, ingot, Scot. sowd, as a sowd of money, i. e. a great sum," Rudd.

With ane grete sold of gold fey Priamus
Secretly vmquhile send this Polidorus,
Quhilk was his son, to Polymnestor king
Of Trace, to keip and haue in nurissing.

Doug. Virgil, 68, 41.

2. Money in general.

O der Wallace, wmquhill was stark and stur,
Thow most o neide in presoune till endur.
Thi worthi kyn may nocht the saiff for sold.

Wallace, ii. 208. MS.

According to Rudd., from Teut. sold, soud, Fr. solde, stipendium, merces; L.B. sold-us, sold-um, from solid-us, the chief gold coin used in the Roman empire. Hence Fr. soldat, E. soldier, i. e. one who serves for pay, miles stipendiarius. It may be observed, however, that A.S. seod signifies not only a sack, but a box, a purse. Hence cyninga seod, the royal treasury. Su.G. siud, siod, Isl. siod-ur, crumena, pera, marsupium; Ol. Lex. Run.

As Isl. soel denotes a pension, a gift, pl. soelur, from Su.G. sael-ia, to deliver, to pay, Ihre supposes that Lat. salaria, used to signify the stipend both of magistrates and soldiers, has been borrowed by the Romans from the Scythians, to whom they were indebted for a variety of other military terms.

2. To be anxious or uneasy, as implying a fearful apprehension of the future.

Than graithit thai thaim till harnes hastely ;
Thar sonyeit nane of that gud chewalrye.

Wallace, iii. 110. MS.

i. e. They were not dismayed at the approach of the enemy. In Perth Edit. erroneously fenzeit ; but rightly in Edit. 1648, sonyied.

3. To be diligent ; to be at pains.

Richt sa thai think that prelats suld nocht sunyie
Be way of deid defend thair patrimonie.

Lyndsay, S.P. Repr. ii. 248.

4. Sometimes it implies the idea of hesitation or demur, as the consequence of anxious thought.

"Quhy sonye ye, maist vailyeant campionis ? quhy pas ye nocht forthwart with gret spreit ?" Bellend. Cron. B. xi. c. 15. Quid statis ? Boeth.

Fr. soign-er, to care ; also, to be diligent about any thing.

SONYHE, SUNYE, s. 1. Care ; regard ; concern.

A huntyn staff in till his hand he bar,

As proud as you prunyie, your pens shal be plucked.
Montgomerie, Watson's Coll. iii. 5.

Fr. soing, care, diligence.

SONYIE, s. Excuse ; improperly printed Sonzie. S.

To SONK, v. n. Apparently, to drivel, to loiter ; or to be in a low or dejected state.

— There's no glee to give delight,
And ward frae spleen the langsome night.
For which they'll now have nae relief,
But sonk at hame, and cleck mischief.

Ramsay's Poems, i. Life, xliv.

If not from E. sink, Su.G. siunk-a, q. depressed ; perhaps allied to sink-a, retardare ; sinka sig, tempus terere. Ei laenger saenken ; Diutius non tardate ; Hist. Alex. Magn. ap. Ihre. Isl. seink-a, id. from sen, tardus, serus.

SONK, SUNK, s. 1. A seat of that form and quality that it may be used as a couch.

Thus Doug. uses the term as corresponding to torus in Virg., to denote that kind of couches on which the ancients reclined during their meals.

Syne eftir endlangis the sey coistis bray,
Vp sonkis set and desis did array,
To meit we satt with haboundance of chere.

Virgil, 75, 12.

This seems the primary sense ; not only from the use of the word by this venerable writer, but from its affinity to A.S. song, Su.G. saeng, siang, Isl. saeng, seng ; a bed, a couch ; also, a pillow. For G. Andr. renders the Isl. word by culcitra. Both Lye, (Add. Jun. Etym.,) and Ihre have remarked the affinity between these terms and S. sonk.

2. A green turf, or seat made of it, S.

Tho gan the graue Aceste with wordes chyde
Entellus, sat on the grene sonk him besyde.

Doug. Virgil, 140, 31.

The term has most probably come to be applied to a green turf, or grassy seat, because of its softness, and consequent fitness for being used as a couch or place of rest. This idea receives confirmation from the following passage.

S O N

Eneas and vtheris chiftanis glorius—
Vnder the branschis of ane semelie tre
Gan lenyng down, and rest thare bodyis fre :
And to thare dinnare did thame al addres
On grene herbis, and sonkis of soft gres.

Ibid. 208, 40.

Gang in and seat ye on the sunks all around,
And ye'se be sair'd with plenty in a stoun.

Ross's Helenore, p. 125.

3. "A wreath of straw, used as a cushion, or a load-saddle," Gl. Evergreen. See Sup.

Godscroft has preserved part of a satirical rhyme, on the defeat of Argyle by the Kerrs, A. 1528, in which the term occurs in this sense.

The Earle of Argyle is bound to ride
From the border of Edge-bucklin bray,
And all his Habergeons him beside,
Each man upon a sonke of stray.—
They made their vow that they would slay, &c.

Hist. Doug. p. 260.

This name, in the pl., is still given to the cushion, or substitute for a saddle, used by some of the lower classes in S.

"Towards the beginning of November this year, a party of soldiers apprehended about twelve persons in that parish, most of them merely for not keeping the church, and carried them prisoners to Hamilton.—To morrow being to be carried in to Edinburgh, some horses were provided for them, and a guard of dragoons. The horses had all sunks laid on them when brought ; but the commander, Bonshaw, caused remove them, and two men were put upon each of the dragoons lean horses, without any thing under them ; yea, the men were first tied one to another by their arms, and then had their legs twisted with cords, cross the horse's belly, so hard, that their ancles were galled to the effusion of their blood," &c. Wodrow, ii. 291.

The whole passage would deserve to be transcribed, to give a taste of the tender mercies of that period.

Saeccing being the term which occurs in the A.S. version, Mark vi. 55, for a couch, Ihre thinks that Su.G. saeng may be traced to this as its origin. Here he seems mistaken. But he subjoins an observation, which may assist us in discovering the reason of this name being given to the sort of saddle used by the poor in this country. "The ancients," he says, "had for their beds, or cushions and pillows, sacks stuffed with straw." This is just the description of that kind of saddle now called sonks, synon. soddies. It is a piece of strong sacking cloth, stuffed with straw, wool, or some substance of this kind.

SONKIE, s. A man like a sonk, or a sackful of straw. S. SONOUNDAY, s. Sunday, the first day of the week.

The folk upon the Sonounday
Held to Saynct Bridis kyrk thair way.
Sermoun day, Pink. Edit. Barbour, v. 335. MS.

A.S. sunnan-daeg, Dies Solis, sunnan being the genit. of sunna, the sun.

SONS, SONCE, s. 1. Prosperity ; felicity, Loth. "Sonce fa' me," May prosperity betide me ! See S.

To sonce and seil, solace and joy,
God and Sainct Jeil heir you convoy.

Dunbar, Evergreen, ii. 44.

Sonce fa' me, witty, Wanton Willy,
Gin blyth I was na as a filly —

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 328.

2. It seems to be used, as Mr. Ellis conjectures, in that old Ballad on the death of Alexander III., preserved by Wyntown, as signifying abundance.

Quhen Alysandyr oure kyng wes dede,

That Scotland led in luwe and le,
Away wes sons of ale and brede,
Of wyne and wax, of gamyn and gle.

Wyntown, i. 401.

I have sometimes been inclined to think that this, with the adj., might be traced to Teut. soen, reconciliatio, expiatio; soen-en, reconciliare, propitiare; Moes.G. saun, Su.G. Isl. sona, atonement. But both in sense and form it is more allied to Gael. Ir. sonas, prosperity, happiness; Ir. sonos, chance, fortune; sona, prosperous, blessed, happy; sonsa, in favour, Bullet. Teut. sanse, augmentum, prosperitas, seems radically the same. Kilian refers to deghe, salus, sanitas, vigor, as synonym.

SONSY, SONSE, adj. 1. Lucky; fortunate; happy, (canny, synonym.) as opposed to what is accounted ominous or ill-boding, S.B.

This seems to be the primary sense, as it is the only one in which the term is used by our old writers.

Gif thow be gude, or evill, I cannot tell;

They ar not sonsy that so dois ruse thame sell.

Lyndsay, S.P.R. ii. 15.

"This spirit they called Brownie in our language, who appeared like a rough-man: yea, some were so blinded, as to beleue that their house was all the sonsier, as they called it, that such spirits resorted there." K. James's Daemonologie, p. 127.

It is a good old sonsie saying,

That little wit makes meikle straying.

Cleland's Poems, p. 105.

"Its no sonsie to meet a bare foot in the morning;" S. Prov. Kelly, Intro.

"Better be sonsy than soon up;" Ramsay's Prov. p. 19.

"Three is ay sonsy;" ibid. p. 73.

"To gyue thame the more esperance of permanent & sonse weird, he send with thame the fatale chier of marbyll." Bellend. Cron. Fol. 5. b. Perhaps q. sonsé.

"O'er hally [holy] was hang'd; but rough and sonsie wan away;" S. Prov.; spoken against too precise people." Kelly, p. 271.

2. Good-humoured; well-conditioned; manageable; applied both to man and beast, S.

A sonsie horse, one that is peaceable. V. DONSIE.

3. "Having sweet engaging looks;" Gl. Burns. See S.

He was a gash an' faithful tyke,

As ever lap a sheugh or dyke.

His honest, sonsie, baws'nt face

Ay gat him friends in ilka place. Burns, iii. 3.

4. Plump; thriving; en bon point; as, a sonsie bairn, S. See Sup.

But I've twa sonsy lasses, young and fair,

Plump, ripe for men: I wish ye cou'd foresee

Sic fortunes for them might bring joy to me.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 124.

5. It seems also used to denote fulness with respect to provisions, conjoined with cordiality in the host.

"Better rough and sonsie, than bare and donsie;" S.

Prov. Kelly, p. 68. V. DONSIE, and SONS.

To SOO, v. n. To smart. V. SOW, v. S.

To SOOCH, (gutt.) v. n. To swill; to swallow drink in large draughts, S.

It seems originally the same with E. swig, which, as Lye (Add. Jun.) supposes, may be derived either from Isl. siug-a, sorbeo, or as nearly of the same signification with swill, from A.S. swilg-an. Seren. prefers the former etymon.

SOOCH, s. A copious draught of any kind of liquor, S. To SOUGH, v. n. To emit a whizzing sound. V.

SOUCH, v.

To SOOK, v. a. To suck. V. SOUK. S.

SOOKER, s. A horseleech; from the v. Sook to suck. S.

SOOKER, s. A play of children with a round piece of leather, to the centre of which a cord is attached, and which being wetted and pressed upon a stone adheres so firmly by suction as either to carry the stone, or come off with a smack. S.

SOOKIN' TURKEY. A vulgar designation for a fool. S.

SOOLEEN, s. The sun. S.

SOON,* adj. Near. The soonest gait, the nearest road. S.

To SOOP, v. a. To sweep. S.

SOOPING, s. The act of sweeping. S.

SOOP-THE-CAUSEY, s. A scrub; a person who would do the meanest thing for money. S.

SOOPER, s. A bunch of feathers for sweeping. S.

OORLONG, s. A noted liar. S.

To SOOSH, v. a. 1. To beat; to flog. 2. To tease a person with taunting or upbraiding language. S.

SOOSHIN', s. 1. A beating. 2. Abusive language. S.

SOOTH, adj. True, S.

"A south bourd is no bourd; S. Prov.; spoken when people reflect too satirically upon the real vices, follies, and miscarriages of their neighbours;" Kelly, p. 3.

"It is a sooth dream that is seen waking;" Fergusson's S. Prov. p. 20.

"There are many sooth words spoken in bourding." Ibid. p. 30.

SOOTHFOW, adj. Honest; worthy of trust. S.

SOOTIE, s. An old term for the devil. S.

SOOTIPILLIES, s. A moss plant, having a thick stalk like a willow-wand, with head half a foot long and of a sooty colour. S.

SOOTY-SKON, s. A cake baked with soot, to be eaten on Fastern's-e'en.

This is one of the foolish superstitions used by young people, S.B. The intention is, that they may dream of their sweethearts. For a particular account of the ceremonial, See Sup.

SOP, s. A slight meal; a hasty refreshment.

The Scottis men, quhen it wes day,

Thair mes devoutly gert thai say.

Syne tuk a sop; and maid thaim yar.

Barbour, xii. 409. MS.

Mr. Pinkerton conjectures that this slight meal might be "of Scottish pottage, oatmeal and water boiled." Ibid. N.

This most probably refers to sorbile food, what is vulgarly called spoon-meat, S. One is said, in relation to this, to tak a soup, when it is meant that he takes a very slight repast. V. SOUP.

SOP, s. Juice; moisture.

Springand herbis, eftir the cours of the mone,

War socht, and with brasin hukis cuttit sone,

To get thare mylky sop and vennom blak.

Doug. Virgil, 118, 9.

Teut. sop, liquamen, liquor; Isl. sope, haustus.

SOP, SOPE, s. 1. A crowd; a group.

Then thai withdrew thaim halely;

Bot that wes not full cowardly,

For samyn in till a sop held thai.

Barbour, iii. 47. MS.

S O R

Sa did thai all that euir wes thar;

I trow thai war thre hunder ner.

Ibid. vii. 567. MS.

2. Any body; consisting of a variety of parts or particles conjoined, as E. cloud is metaph. used; as, a sope of mist, Doug. Virgil, 25, 42., a dusty sope, 264, 15.; also, 274, 47.

Be this the Troianis in thare new cieté
Ane dusty sop uprisand gan do se,
Full thik of stoure vpthingand in the are.

What metaph. analogy, as Rudd. imagines, it can have to Fr. soupe, soup, or porridge, is not easily conceivable. It seems the same with Isl. sopp-ur, a ball, pila, Verel. Now, Rudd. expl. sop, by globus. Isl. sop-a, to scrape or rake together; sopa til um fefaung, commeatum undecunque corraderet. Su.G. swaef-ia denotes a train or retinue.

To SOPE, SOUP, v. n. To become weary; to droop; to faint; sopit, sowpit, fatigued; exhausted.

Sum dele or than walxis dolf this syre,
Seing his hors begyn to sope and tyre.

Doug. Virgil, 433, 29.

So was I sopit and overset.

Cherrie and Slae.

And for no sair,

Nor sorrow, can I soup. Maitland Poems, p. 264.

Rudd. is at great pains to shew how this use of the word may come from E. sope, to drench, steep. But there are many Goth. words which are evidently cognates. Moes.G. swaif, cessavit; A.S. swaef-ian, to fail, deficere; Belg. suff-en, to dote, to mope, suf, doting, pensive, versuff-en, to pine away with heaviness of mind; Su.G. foersoffad, stupid, soefw-a, sopire; Mod. Sax. versuff-en, to be stupefied.

Sir Gawan and Sir Gal. ii. 11.

This seems to have been three sops of some favourite cordial; denominated perhaps from the idea of its strength or powerful effects. V. MANE.

SORD, s. Apparently filth. V. SUDDL, adj. S.

SORD, s. The long bar, which crosses the other bars obliquely in a reclining gate or Liggat, q. v. S.

SORDANE, adj.

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 63.

This might be understood of secret instruction; Fr. a la sourdine, privately. But it is sovrane, in Edit. 1508.

SORDES, s. Filth, S.B.

"It ought and should be found and declared that the said Alexander Fraser, or any person deriving right from him, have no right or title, by means of any operations or manufactures on the banks of the river, to throw or convey into the said river, corrupted water, the filth, sordes, dregs or refuse of a distillery or manufactory, or any other substance of a nauseous quality." State, Leslie of Powis v. Fraser of Fraserfield, p. 36.

S O R

Lat. sordes, id. This term might be introduced by the monks or clergy in their charters. Isl. saur, however, signifies filth, and saurd-a, to defile; Verel. Ind. p. 217. Thus the Lat. word might itself have a Gothic origin. The term is also used in E.

SORDID, pret. Defiled.

To SORN, SORNE, v. n. 1. To obtrude one's self on another for bed and board, S.

"Whenever a chieftain had a mind to revel, he came down among the tenants with his followers, by way of contempt called in the lowlands giliwitfitts, and lived on free quarters; so that ever since, when a person obtrudes himself upon another, stays at his house, and hangs upon him for bed and board, he is said to sorn or be a sorner." Macbean, Johns. Dict. vo. Sorchon. See Sup.

2. Used, in an improper sense, to denote the depredations made by an invading army.

All things perplexed were, the Baliol proud,
With English forces both by land and flood
In Scotland came, arrived at Kinghorne,
And through the country mightily did sorne.

Muse's Threnodie, p. 96.

Sibb. properly enough refers to Fr. sejourn-er, com-morari. For the S. word is merely the E. one according to the old mode of writing it. It would appear that the j was sounded as i.

For thought me tharfor worthit dey,

I mon soiourne, quhar euyr it be.

Barbour, iii. 323. MS.

Wallace than said, We will not soiourne her.

Wallace, iii. 79. MS.

It is also used actively, with respect to the practice of sorning.

SORNARE, SORNER, s. One who takes free quarters, S.

"Quhair euer sornaris be ouertane in tyme to cum, that thay be deliuerit to the Kingis Schireffis, and that furthwith the Kingis justice do law vpone thame as vpone a thief or reuar." Acts, James II. 1455. c. 49. Edit. 1566. V. the v.

This severe act was put in force, about fifty or sixty years ago, upon two brothers of the name of M'Farlane, who were executed at Forfar; if I remember right, by the sentence of the sheriff. They were habit and repute notorious thieves; but nothing could be proved against them. This cruel expedient was therefore fallen upon, of trying and condemning them on the Sornare Act. They broke prison, and escaped, a day or two before that appointed for execution. But such was the rigour of justice, that, the country being raised, they were caught at the head of a Glen, in the entry to the Highlands, making crowdie in their bonnets at the side of a brook ; carried back, and executed. I have conversed with persons who witnessed their death.

SORNING, s. Spunging ; exacting free lodgings. S.

SORNE, part. pa. Sworn. S.

To SORPLE, v. a. To scrub with soap and water. S.

SORPLINS, s. Soap-suds ; or the liquid in which clothes have been washed. S.

SORROW,* s. A term unwarrantably used in imprecations, or strong asseverations, S.

Alace, the porter is foryett,
But sorrow mair the men mycht gett.

Legend, Bp. St. Androis, Poems 16th Cent. p. 384.

"No," Gl. But this is by no means a simple negative. It is often used, although by some persons ignorantly, yet in the same unlawful way as fiend, i. e. fiend, de'ill, &c. when meant to express a strong negation ; and, in imprecation, like, E. pox, plague, deuce, &c. The term would seem indeed sometimes to denote a personification ; as the vulgar speak of the muckle Sorrow, in the same manner as they speak of the devil.—"The Sorrow tak him, and a' his crew o' rotten Bishops thegither." Tennant's Card. Beaton, p. 25. See Sup.

MUCKLE SORROW. The devil. S.

SORROW-RAPE, s. A rope or strap slung across the shoulders of persons carrying a hand-barrow, and attached to its handles to relieve the arms. S.

To SORT, v. n. To depart ; to go forth. S.

SORT,* s. A term applied to persons or things when the number is rather small. When is nearly synon.S.

To SORT, v. a. To supply or furnish to one's satisfaction ; to fit ; to suit ; as, "I can sort you wi' a knife now." S.

To SORT, v. n. To agree ; to come to a bargain. S.

To SORT,* v. a. To chastise ; to correct by stripes. S.

SORTING, s. Correction,—with the hand or the tongue.S.

SORTS, s. pl. That's your sorts ! an exclamation used when one is highly pleased with an action or thing. S.

SOSH, adj. 1. Addicted to company and to the bottle. A sosh companion, social and sappy. 2. Frank ; conversible ; free, not reserved. 3. Canny ; sober ; quiet, though cheerful. 4. Snug ; comfortable ; as applied to the external situation ; Syn. Cosh. 5. Lazy ; indolent. 6. Plump ; broadfaced. S.

SOSHERIE, s. Social intercourse. S.

SOSS, s. A mixture of incongruous kinds of food, or any heterogeneous mass, S. "a mucky puddle," A. Bor. Ray. See Sup.

Sibb. expl. it, "a large dish of flummery," calling it Fr., but on what authority I cannot find. It may be from saulce, Teut. sausse, condimentum, sauss-en, condire, the idea being borrowed from the variety of ingredients often mingled in saucers.

To SOSS, v. a. To mix in a strange manner ; or, v. n. to make use of incongruous aliments or medicines mixed together, S. V. the s.

SOSSING, s. Mixing up in an incongruous way. S.

SOSS-POKE, s. A low word signifying the stomach. S.

SOSS, s. Properly, the flat sound caused by a heavy but soft body, when it comes hastily to the ground, or squats down, S. See Sup.

And wi' a soos aboon the claiiths,

Ilk ane their gifts down flang.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 271.

This seems to have the same origin with the E. v. souse, to strike with sudden violence, or the adv. souse, conveying the same idea. Dr. Johns. views Fr. sous or dessous, down, as the root.

445

To SOSS, v. n. To fall down as a dead weight ; to come to the ground as it were all in a piece. S.

SOT, s. A fool, S.

"The Scots use sot, as the French do un sot, not for a tippler, but a fool." Sir J. Sinclair's Observ. p. 128.

SOTHROWN, s. A collective term for Englishmen. S.

To SOTTER, v. n. 1. To boil slowly ; to simmer, S. evidently a deriv. from A.S. seoth-an, Su.G. siud-a, Isl. siod-a, to boil. See Sup.

2. It properly denotes the sputtering or bubbling noise of any half-liquid substance, when boiling. 3. The crackling and bubbling noise made by a piece of flesh or any greasy substance before the fire. S.

SOTTER, s. The act of boiling slowly. S.

To SOTTER, v. a. 1. To scorch any part of the body, or any fleshy substance before the fire. 2. To burn slightly. S.

SOTTER, s. An indefinite number of insects, or other small animals, collected together. "A great sotter." S.

To SOTTER, v. n. To cluster closely ; as the small-pox or any cutaneous eruption. S.

To SOTTER, v. a. To saturate. S.

To SOTTLE, v. n. A term expressing the sound emitted by any soft substance, as broth, &c., when boiling. S.

To SOUCH, SOUGH, SWOUCH, (pron. sooch gutt.), v. n.

1. To emit a rushing or whistling sound. It properly denotes those low melancholy tones of the wind, which precede and prognosticate rain, S.

The wattir lynnys rowtis, and euery lynd,
Quhislit and brayit of the souchand wynd.

Doug. Virgil, 201, 24.

Vpraxit him he has amyde the place,
Als big as Athon, the hie mont in Trace,—
Or than the fader of hillis in Italy,
Clepit mont Apenninus, quhen that he Dois swoich or bray with roky quhynnis hie.

Ibid. 437, 7.

— See the royal Bowmen strive,
Wha far the feather'd arrows drive,
All sooghing thro' the sky.

Ramsay's Works, i. 123.

2. To breathe long as one does in sleep, S. also, Souf, q. v.

Syne down on a green bawlk, I trow,
I took a nap,
And soucht a' night balillilow,
As sound's a tap.

Ramsay's Works, i. 219.

Jhone keikit up at screik o' day,
And fand hir sowchand sound.

Jamieson's Popul. Ball. i. 285.

I hear your mither souch and snore. Ibid. ii. 338.

To SOUGH, v. a. To con over a tune, S.A. synon. souf.

— I, 'mang many merry fouk,
Can draw my fiddle frae the pock,
An' sough a tune, an' crack a joke.—

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, ii. 133.

A.S. sweg-an, swog-an, sonare, tinnire ; part. pr. swogend, S. souchand. This word is often used to denote the noise made by the wind. Swegthe wind. cum strepitu irruit ventus ; S. the wind souch't. It denotes the noise which is made when the ears ring. Id thone sweg, on earum haefde ; sonum in auribus habui ; Lye. S. I had a soughing in my lugs. It also signifies the sound of trees moved by the wind. Tha wudubeamas swegdon ; sylvae arbores sonuerunt ; S. the trees were souchin. See Sup.

S O U

To SOUGH out, v. a. To utter in a whining tone. S.
 SOUGH o' THE SEA. The moaning sound of the sea. S.
 SOUCH, SOWCH, SUGH, SWOUCH, s. 1. A rushing or whistling sound, S.

Ilk souch of wynd, and euery quhisper now,
 And alkin sterage affrayit, and causit grow.

Doug. Virgil, 63, 6.

November chill blaws loud wi' angry sugh;
 The short'ning winter day is near a close.

Burns, iii. 174.

Ane sound or swouch I hard thare at the last,
 Lyke quhen the fire be felloun wyndis blast,
 Is driuen amynd the flat of cornes rank,
 Or quhen the burne on spait hurlis down the bank.

Doug. Virgil, 49, 14.

2. The sound emitted by one during profound sleep.

Ouer all the landis war at rest ilkane,
 The profound swouch of slepe had thame ouertane.

Doug. Virgil, 240, b. 30.

3. It is used to denote a deep sigh, S.O.

I saw the battle sair and tough,
 And reekin-red ran mony a sheugh,
 My heart for fear gae sough for sough.

Burns, iv. 362.

4. A canting or whining mode of speaking, especially in preaching or praying. 5. A flying report; a vague rumour. Auld soogh. When any person or thing retains the same character, temper, or mode, without variation, it is said, "He, or It, has aye the auld soogh yet." S.

Chaucer uses swough for sound, noise, from A.S. sweg, swege, sonus, clangor; strepitus flammorum. Hence swege denotes any kind of musical instrument, as a trumpet, an organ.

SOUCH, SOUGH, adj. Silent; quiet; tranquil, S. To keep souch, to be silent. He grew quite souch; he became entirely calm, so as to make no disturbance. See S.

Alem. suwig-en, Germ. schweig-en, to be silent, still or quiet; A.S. swig-an, swug-an, suw-ian, suwig-an, id. Ne swugu thu; Be not silent. Belg. zwyg, silent, zwygt, silence, verzwyg-en, to conceal; Sw. swyght, hush, Gr.
σιγᾶν, silere.

SOUCH, s. Silence. Keep a calm souch; Be silent, S.
 A.S. swig, silentium. V. the v. See Sup.

SOUCH, pret. v.

Thair gudis haiff thai lesyt all;
 And souch the houss euirilkane.

Barbour, x. 759. MS.

Left by Mr. Pinkerton for explanation. It seems to signify, deserted, forsook; A.S. swic-an, to deliver up; or, Su.G. swig-a, loco cedere. This may be formed from the latter, as souch, silent, from A.S. swiga.

SOUCHT, pret. Attacked in a hostile manner; assailed by arms.

Had thai bene warnyt wele, I wate,
 Thai suld haiff sauld thair dedis der;
 For thai war gud men; and thai wer
 Fer ma than thai war that thaim soucht.
 Bot thai war scalyt, that thai moucht
 On na maner assemblyt be.

Barbour, xvii. 117. MS.

This is a Su.G. idiom. Soek-a, Ihre observes, usurpatur de violenta invasione. Nu soekir man hem til annan; Si quis in alterius aedes impetum fecerit. This he views as the origin of Hemsoekn, our Hamesucken. For hemsoek-a properly signifies, to invade the house of another with violence. He also derives ransak-a, to ransack, from ran, a house, and sack-a. Isl. adsoka, atsoka, a warlike assault; sokn itself signifying a battle, praelium; G. Andr.

S O U

SOUCYE, s. The old name in S. for the herb helytropium. V. APPIN.

SOUD, s. A quantity.

"The tradesmen are paid for the piece, or with a certain sum or quantity of victual annually agreed on, called soud."
P. Daviot, Moray, Statist. Acc. xiv. 74. N. V. SOLD.

To SOUDER, v. a. 1. To solder. 2. To unite; to combine. 3. To make up a variance, or to unite those who have been alienated. S.

To SOUDER, v. n. To unite. S.

SOUDERING, s. An act of union. S.

SOUDY, s. A heterogeneous mixture; a hodge-podge. S.

SOUDIE, s. 1. A gross heavy person; one who is big and clumsy; a term generally used as to women, S.
 2. A dirty woman, partaking much of the nature of a sow. S.

Perhaps allied to Su.G. sod, soid, an animal, any individual of the larger kind of cattle; sometimes, a sow.
Moes.G. saud seems to have signified cattle; hence transferred to a sacrifice. Isl. saude, small cattle.

This word is perhaps part of that designation used, Evergreen, ii. 20. Sowdy-mowdy. The latter part may be merely alliterative; or from Teut. moede, muede, wearied, fatigued.

SOUDLAND, s. One who comes from the south country, S.B.

SOUDLY, adj. Soiled; dirty.

A roussat gown of hir awn scho him gaif
 Apon his weyd, at couryt all the layff,
 A soudly courche our hed and nek leit fall.

Wallace, i. 241. MS.

In Edit. 1648, suddled, synonym. V. SUDDLE.

SOUDOUN LAND. The land of the Soldan or Sultan.

Sé ye not quha is cum now,——

A sargeand out of Soudoun land.

Bannatyne Poems, p. 173.

SOVER, SOUIR, adj. Safe; sure. See Sup.

Thus sall thow stand in no degré

Sover forout perplexitie. Bannatyne Poems, p. 188.

Fr. seur, secure.

SOUERANCE, s. 1. Assurance.

Sotheroun marwell'd giff it suld be Wallace,
 Without souerance come to persew that place.

Wallace, viii. 498. MS.

i. e. Without being assured of support, as he had only a handful of men with him.

2. Safe conduct.

The consaill sone condeyt gaiff him till,
 Agayn he past with souerance till his King.

Ibid. ver. 1498. MS.

SOVERTIE, s. Surety. Vpon sovertie, upon security. S.

SOVERANIS, s. "Difference of degree," Pink.

For, tho I say it myself, the soveranis wes meikle
 Betwix his bastarde blude, and my birth nobill.

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 56.

According to Ed. 1508, severanis; O.Fr. sevr-er, to separate.

To SOUF, SOUFF, v. n. 1. To slumber; to sleep in a disturbed manner, S.B.

Su.G. sofw-a, Isl. sof-a, Dan. sov-er, A.S. swef-an, id.
Geswef-od, consopitus, laid asleep; Isl. sof-r, sleep. Junius thinks that the v. may be traced to Moes.G. swaif, ces-savit. Lat. sop-ire, to set at rest or asleep, seems to have had the same origin. Belg. suff-en, to dote. V. SUOUFFE.

2. To breathe high in sleep; properly, as the effect of disease, S.B.

This is the more common sense. It seems doubtful, indeed, whether this be not radically a different v. from Teut. soeff-en, Germ. schopf-en, spirare, which seem to have some affinity to Heb. שָׁאָף, shaaf, anhelavit. One might almost suppose, that A.S. seof-ian, lugere, to mourn, to moan, had some affinity to the word in this sense; as it denotes a sort of moaning anhelation.

3. "To whistle in a low tone," Sibb. Gl. See Sup.

I sigh at hame, a-field am dowie too,
To souf a tune I'll never crook my mou.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 1.

4. "To con over a tune on an instrument."

Thus I—
Bang'd up my blyth auld-fasion'd whistle,
To souf ye o'er a short epistle.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 360.

5. To sing; used in a general sense. S.

SOUFF, SOUFF, s. 1. A slumber; a disturbed sleep, S.B.

2. High breathing in sleep, especially that of a sick person; expressive of the sound emitted, S.B.

3. "Low whistle," Shirr. Gl.

4. Corresponding to E. strain; as, we'll hear his souff, we will learn what strain he is on, what humour he is in, what terms he has to propose, S.

To SOUFF, v. n. To strike. One stone is said to souff on another, when dashed upon it, S.B.

Teut. sweep-en, flagellare.

To SOUFF, v. a. To quaff. S.

SOUFF, SOWFF, s. A stroke. S.

SOUFFLE, s. A stupid, silly person; a lazy, idle, drunken fellow. S.

SOUFLET, s. A stroke; a blow. S.

SOUFFT, part. pa. Exhausted. S.

SOUGH, s. A stroke; a blow. S.

To SOUGH, v. n. To emit a rushing sound, &c. V. SOUCH.

To SOUK, SOOK, v. a. 1. To suck; as, a sookin bairn, a sucking child. 2. Metaph. used, to denote the power of wheedling or flattery in the old S. proverb: "He has a tongue in his head that could souk the laverocks out of the lift." S.

SOUKKYR, SUCCUR, s. Sugar. S.

SOUKIT, part. adj. Fatigued; exhausted. S.

SOUKS, s. pl. The name given to the flower of red clover, S. also suckies, from being sucked by children because of their sweetness.

"His mete was hony soukes, and hony of the wode," Wiclif, Matt. iii.

SOULDIER CRAB. The Cancer Bernardus, Linn.

"Cancellus in turbine degens, the Souldier Crab." Sibb. Fife, p. 132.

Denominated perhaps from his occupying the shell of the periwinkle as a tent, or centry-box.

SOULE, SOLE, s. A swivel, Gl. Sibb. V. CULPIT.

SOUN, SOUME, s. A term expressing the relative proportion of cattle or sheep to pasture, or vice versa, S.

1. A soum of sheep, five sheep; or, in other places, ten. See Sup.

"There are 36 freeholders in the burgh, whose freeholds at present are reckoned, at an average, at 50s. yearly, with a privilege of pasturage for 72 soums of sheep upon the common, 5 sheep being reckoned to the soum." P. Monkton, Airs. Statist. Acc. xii. 396.

"One cow makes a soum, a horse two; ten sheep (and in some places fewer) are considered as a soum." P. Sattel, Argyles. Ibid. p. 477. N.

2. A soum of grass, as much as will pasture one cow, or five sheep, S.

"It is statute and ordeined, that in all tyme comming, there be designed to the Minister serving at the cure of sik Kirks where there is na arrable land adjacent thereto, foure soumes grasse for ilk aiker of the saids foure aiker of gleib land, extending in the haille to sextene soumes, for the saids foure aikers." Acts, James VI. 1606. c. 7. Murray.

"The glebe—is supposed to be legal as to extent, with 4 soums grass, in common with the cattle of the farm." P. Kilmartin, Argyles. Statist. Acc. viii. 104.

Sw. sum is equivalent to tal, number. V. Sowme, number; as this is evidently the same word used as also denoting quantity.

To SOUM land, to calculate and fix what number of cattle or sheep it can properly support, S.

"Where there are several small tenants upon one farm, the farm is (what they call) soumed; which means, that the number of cattle it can properly maintain or pasture, is ascertained, that none of the tenants may exceed his just proportion, nor over-stock his farm." P. Balquhider, Perth. Statist. Acc. vi. 93.

To SOUM and ROUM. See Sup.

"It seems probable, that the land outfield, in many places, was occupied in common, each proprietor or tenant, in a certain district, parish, or estate, having been thereby entitled to soum or pasture on the outfield land in summer, in proportion to the number and kinds of cattle he was thus able to roum or fodder in winter, by means of his share of infield land." P. Bedrule, Roxburgh, Statist. Acc. xv. 473, N.

To roum, to find place for. V. ROWME, v.

To SOUM, v. a. To surmise. S.

To SOUME, v. n. To swim. S.

SOUME, s. A load. V. SOWME. S.

SOUMS, s. pl. The sounds of the cod dried for food, Shetland. V. SOUNDS.

SOUN', adj. Smooth; level; a soun' road, a smooth road.

SOUN, s. Son. "His soun & apperand air." S.

To SOUND, v. n. To swoon. S.

SOUND, s. A swoon; a faint. S.

To SOUND, v. a. To spin a top. S.

To SOUND, v. n. To spin, as expressive of the motion of a top. S.

SOUNDS (of a fish,) s. pl. The swimming bladder, S.

"The greatest part of the cod's sounds, in this parish, are permitted to remain and rot on the sea beach, or are cast into the dunghill, though the use and value of them as an article of food and delicacy at table have been known here for many years." P. Peterhead, Aberd. Statist. Acc. xvi. 549.

Isl. sund, natatio.

To SOUNYE, v. n. To concern one's self about; to take interest in. V. SONYE. S.

To SOUP, SOOP, v. a. To sweep, S.

Quhair euer thay go it may be sene,

How kirk and calsay thay soup clene.

Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592. Contemptioun of Syde Taillis, p. 307.

Su.G. sop-a, id.

SOUP, SUP, s. 1. A spoonful; the quantity taken into the mouth at once of any food that requires the use of a spoon, S.

2. A small draught, or mouthful of liquor, S. sup, E. See S.

Thai twa, out of ane scopin stoup,

Thai drank thre quartis soup and soup.

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 114.

3. A considerable quantity of drink, or of any thin food, such especially as is taken with a spoon; as, a soup milk, a soup broth, a soup drink;—a considerable quantity of any intoxicating liquor, S.

Wae worth that weary sup of drink

He lik'd so well,

He drank it a', left not a clink,

His throat to sweel.

Forbes's Dominie Depos'd, p. 27.

Here it is printed like the E. word.

"I wish you had drank water, when you drank that soup drink;" S. Prov., "Spoken when people say something out of the way, upon a jocose supposition that they are drunk, or they would not say so;" Kelly, p. 179.

4. A small portion of sustenance, such as is taken with a spoon. A bite and a soup, slender support. S.

Isl. sope, a draught, saup, pottage, or any spoonmeat; sofe, as much of this kind of food as the mouth receives at once. E. sup, is used as in sense 2. But we extend the signification. For notwithstanding the general prejudice which prevails among our southern neighbours, as to the poverty of our country, we have, in the use of food, a greater variety of gratification than themselves. They eat all, or drink all; whereas we not only eat and drink, but sup.

To SOUP, v. n. To sob; to weep convulsively. S.

To SOUP, v. n. To become weary. V. SOPE. S.

SOUPAND, part. pr. Seems to signify sobbing, or groaning, complaining.

The tane to the tother cold complaine;

Sichand, and soupand, can scho say,

'This lang Lentrune hes maid me lene.'

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 113.

A.S. seof-ian, lugere, ingemiscere, queri.

SOUPIE, s. A sling. S.

SOUPLÉ, s. 1. The lower part of a flail, which strikes the grain; the upper being called the handstaff, S.

See S.—2. A stout piece of wood used as a cudgel. S.

The hollin souples, that were sae snell,

His back they loundert, mell for mell.

Jamieson's Popular Ball. ii. 238.

Probably from Fr. souple, E. supple, because of its flexibility; if not rather from Isl. swipa, Su.G. sweep-a, a scourge, scutica, flagrum; from the idea of beating; as thrash is used metaph. to denote beating with a scourge or otherwise. This in Su.G. is called slagwal and drapwal.

SOUPLÉ, adj. 1. Flexible; E. supple. 2. Cunning. S.

SOUPLÉ TAM. A child's toy which, upon being pulled by a string, shakes its limbs, and seems to dance. S.

SOUR,* SOURE, adj. 1. Used in the sense of bitter.

Asoure reek. 2. Frequently applied to a cold, wet soil. S.

SOUR, SOURE, s. Metaph. any thing acid or bitter. S.

"—Thai maid grit cheir of euyrie sort of mylk baytht of ky mylk & youe mylk, sueit mylk and sour mylk, curdis and qubaye, sourkittis." Compl. S. p. 66.

"Kit, cap, and can," as Dr. Leyden observes, "is a phrase used to express all kinds of meat and drink," S. He defines kit, which is indeed a term also used in E. "a small kind of wooden vessel hooped and staved. A cap," he adds, "is turned out of one piece of wood. Can is a wooden decanter." Gl. Compl. p. 373.

SOUR-LAND, s. Land which, when left untilled, either bears no sward, from too much moisture, or yields nothing but sedge-grasses and other worthless aquatic plants. S.

SOURMILK, s. Buttermilk, S. A. Bor. See Sup.

Sw. sur mioelk, id. Wideg.

SOUR-MOU'D, adj. Having a sulky look. S.

SOUROCK, SOURACK, SOURAK, s. Sorrel, S. See S.

"Rumex acetosa. The Sowruch. Scot." Lightfoot, p. 1131.

Originally the same with E. souse, v.

SOUT, s. The start or bounce of a plough when it meets with a stone. S.

SOUTAR, SOUTER, s. 1. A shoemaker, S. See Sup.

Yone are soutars that thou seis,

Kneiland full lawly on thair kneis.

Evergreen, i. 118.

A.S. sutere, Isl. sutar, Lat. sutor, from su-o, to sew or stitch.

2. A name distinctively given to one who makes brogues or shoes of horse-leather, Ang.

SOUTER'S BRANDY, a cant phrase for Buttermilk, Aberd. V. CLOD.

To SOUTAR, SOUTER, v. a. To obtain so complete a victory, in any game, as to leave the opposite party without one favourable move or stroke. S.

SOUTER-CLOD, SOUTER'S-CLOD, s. A kind of coarse black-bread used in some parts of Fife. V. CLOD. S.

SOUTH, s. A whistling sound.

The soft south of the swyre, and sound of the stremes,

The sweet savour of the swairde, and singing of fewlis,

Might confort any creature of the kyn of Adam.

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 64.

V. SOUCH, and SOWTH.

To SOUTHER, v. a. To solder. V. SOUDER. S.

SOUTHLAND, adj. Of or belonging to the South. S.

SOUTHTRON, SOTHERON, SOUDRON, s. A contemptuous designation for an Englishman, anciently used in S. a corr. of Southern.

"Thir landis are mine!" the Outlaw said;

"I ken nae king in Christentie;

"Frae Soudron I this foreste wan,

"When the king nor his knightis were not to see."

V. SODRON.

Minstrely, Border, i. 11.

SOUTRIE, s. A miscooked liquid dish. S.

To SOUTT, v. n. To sob, S.B.

Teut. sucht-en, suspirare, gemere, ducere suspiria. Perhaps A.S. siccet-an, id. and sogetha, palpitatio cordis, are radically allied.

SOW, s. A military engine anciently used in sieges. See Sup.

Of gret gestis a sow thai maid,
That stalwart heildyne aboyn it had.
With armyt men inew tharin,
And instrumentis for to myne.

Barbour, xvii. 597. MS.

Mr. Pinkerton, in his Notes on K. Hart, p. 377, says; "They shattered the walls with sows or battering rams.—The sows were arietes." In his note on this passage of The Bruce, he throws out a different idea; "A sow was a military engine resembling the testudo of the Romans." But neither of these descriptions is accurate. It is evident, that the sow was not a battering ram. For it was not employed for battering down walls, but for covering those who were employed to undermine them. Hence, Barbour says, it had stalwart heildyne, or covering above.

Such is the account given by William of Malmesbury, Hist. L. iv. Unum fuit machinamentum, quod nostri Suem, veteres Vineam vocant, quod machina levibus lignis colligata, tecto, tabulis, cratibusque contexto, lateribus crudis coriis communitis, protegit in se subsidentes, qui quasi more suis ad murorum suffodienda penetrant fundamenta. He here assigns as likely a reason for the name as we can find. It was thus denominated, because it protected those who sat in it, who after the manner of a swine, dug under the walls. This account exactly corresponds with that given by Barbour in the passage quoted. The armed men, which it contained, were employed for the purpose of mining. Other authors are quoted by Du Cange, who give the same description of the instrument, and the same origin of the name.

The word is used in this sense by R. Glouc. p. 410.

A gyn, that me clupeth sowe, hii made ek wel strong,
Muche folc inne vor to be, bothe wyde & long.

This agrees with the account given by William of Malmesbury. No notice is taken of this term in the Gl. to R. Glouc.

Fordun calls the sow, ingentem testudinem, a large testudo or tortoise; Scotichron. L. xiii. c. 40. But he uses the term improperly. For the sow differs also from the testudo. For this, although distinguished by Vegetius from the Aries, and different in its construction, was also meant for battering down walls. According to him, it received this name, because it resembled the tortoise: and as this animal now draws back its head, and then pushes it forward, this instrument was so contrived, that the beam, intended for battering, was sometimes drawn back, and sometimes thrust forward, that it might strike with the greater force. Testudo autem a similitudine verae testudinis vocabulum sumpsit, quia sicut illa modo reducit, modo praeferit caput, ita machinamentum interdum reducit trabem, interdum exerit, ut fortius caedat. De Re Militar. Lib. iv. cap. 14.

As William of Malmesbury says, that the sow was the same instrument which the ancients called Vinea, he describes it almost in the same words which are used by Vegetius concerning the latter. E lignis levioribus machina colligatur, alta pedibus octo, lata pedibus septem, longa pedibus sexdecim. Hujus tectum munitione duplici, tabulatis, cratibusque contextitur.—Istae, cum plures factae fuerint, junguntur in ordinem, sub quibus subsidentes tuti ad subruenda murorum penetrant fundamenta. De Re Mil. lib. iv. cap. 15. It seems to have been called vinea, from the resemblance which a number of these joined together bore to a vineyard. This machine was also in Latin denominated scrofa, scrophæ. V. Du Cange. The French gave it the name of truie, truye, (Du Cange, vo. Troia.) which, according to Cotgr. signifies, "a sow; also, a warlike engine used in old times for the beating down of walls." This last word had still the same meaning. For Pomponius Sabinus observes on the Æneid, that a sow is in Latin called Troia. Hence Teut. truye; sus, scrophæ, troia apud veteres: ita Troiani Troiam, id est, scropham, in sua moneta dicuntur habuisse expressam; Kilian.

On this head the learned Camden observes: "As the ancient Romans had their Crates, Vineæ, Plutei, and such like to make their approaches; so had the English in this age their Cat-house and Sow for the same purpose. This Cat-house, answerable to the Cattus mentioned by Vegetius, was used in the siege of Bedford Castle, in the time of King Henry the Third. The Sow is yet usual in Ireland, and was in the time of King Edward the Third used at the siege of Dunbar, which when the Countess, who defended the castle, saw, she said merrily, That unless the Englishmen kept their sow the better, she would make her to cast her pigs." Remains, pp. 266, 267.

The history of this engine supplies us indeed with a sample of the wit that prevailed among our warlike ancestors. At the siege referred to by Camden, where the Countess, commonly called Black Agnes, displayed such undaunted courage in defending the castle, when the Earl of Salisbury brought up the sow, with many armed men and warlike instruments within it, to batter the walls; she cried to him;

O Montagow, Montagow,

Be war, for ferry sall thi sow.

And her prediction was not false. For immediately she caused a huge stone to be thrown aloft from a machine ingeniously constructed within the castle, which, falling from a great height on the sow, shattered it to pieces, and so stupified many of those that were within, that with difficulty they escaped with their lives. Fordun, Scotichron. L. xiii. c. 39. But it would seem that this witticism of the Black Countess, like many smart sayings of later times, was not original. She had most probably heard of its being used at the siege of Berwick, in the reign of R. Bruce. For Barbour, when giving an account of the sow prepared by the English, says;

Thai pressyt the sow toward the wall;
And has hyr set tharto gentilly.
The gynour than gert bend in hy
The gyne, and wappyt out the stane,
That ewyn toward the lyft is gane,
And with gret wecht syne duschit down
Rycht be the wall, in a randoun;
And hyt the sow in sic maner,
That it that wes the mast sower,
And starkast for to stynt a strak,
In sundre with that dusche it brak.
The men than owt in full gret hy.
And on the wallis thai gan cry,
That thair sow wes feryt thar.

Barbour, xvii. 688. MS.

The sow is distinguished both from our awblasters, and from the battering ram, in an elegant Norwegian work, believed to have been written in the 12th century. "If the awblasters cannot overturn or strike a wall, it is necessary to bring on these machines; a Ram having its front covered with iron, the force of which walls can seldom resist; but if the walls are not overthrown, tha ma Graf-suin til thessarar velar leida; you may bring forward the Sow." Spec. Regal. pp. 410—412. The awblaster or cata-pulta, is called Isl. valslaungur, from val, Su.G. wal, apparatus bellicus, and slaenga, jactare, q. the weapon-thrower. The Ram is denominated vedur, or the wedder; and the name graf-suin seems literally to signify the digging sow, from its use already mentioned, as meant to cover those who dug under the wall: from graf-a, fodio, whence E. grave.

Grose thinks that "it derived its name from the soldiers under it lying close together, like pigs under a sow."—"Two machines, the one called the boar, the other the sow, were employed by the parliamentarians in the siege of Corse castle, Dorsetshire." Milit. Antiq. pp. 387, 388.

I may add, that Gael. muc, which signifies a sow, is also expl., "an instrument of war, whereby besiegers were secured in approaching a wall, like the pluteus of the Romans, covered over with twigs, hair-cloth, raw hides, and moving on three wheels;" Shaw. This writer does not seem to have observed, that the instrument referred to was in E. denominated a sow.

SOW, HAY-SOW, s. A large stack of hay erected in an oblong form, S. pron. soo.

"In Scotland a long hay-stack is termed a sow; probably from a traditionary remembrance of the warlike engine, which went under that name; hence we may have a distinct notion of the figure of that engine." Annals, Scot. ii. 89.

But there is no evidence that the military engine, thus denominated, was so frequently used in the wars between Scotland and England, as to lend its name to one of the common fruits of husbandry. Although a few individuals, returning from a siege, might be struck with the resemblance, it is scarcely conceivable that the name would be received through a whole country. The peasantry are more attached to ancient names, than to give them up out of compliment to a few who have returned from warfare. For it cannot be supposed, that in S. there was no name for a large stack of hay, till its inhabitants became acquainted with the military engine referred to.

Besides, it seldom happens, that any thing common and generally known, is denominated from what is rare, or has been seen only by a few of those who use the designation.

The term is allied perhaps to Teut. soeuw, soye, which signifies the ground on which a heap or pile of any kind is erected; gleba qua agger conficitur, Kilian. Hence,

To Sow, Soo, v. a. To stack, S.

SOW, s. 1. A term applied to one who makes a very dirty appearance, S.B. See Sup.

Perhaps a figurative sense of the E. term. Teut. souwe, soye, however, signifies a common shore.

2. Any thing in a state of disorder; as, a ravelled sow, something that cannot be easily extricated, S.B. 3. A great cluster of objects, properly in a disordered state. S. To SOW, v. a. To pierce; to gall; applied to the act of pouring in arrows upon an enemy.

— And than thai suld schut hardely

Qubill that he throw thaim passyt war.

Barbour, xvi. 391. MS.

The sense is changed in Edit. 1620, p. 303. Saile them sar, i. e. assail.

Sow sar, or sare, seems to have been a common phrase; as it is also used by Wyntown, viii. 40. 174; but apparently in a neut. sense.

It occurs in O.E. as synon. with smert.

When he sailed in the Swin it sowed him sare;

Sare it thaim smerted that ferd out of France.

V. next word.

Minot's Poems, p. 18.

To Sow, Soo, v. n. To smart; to feel acute or tingling continued pain, S. gell, synon.

Quhen he a qwhile had prekyd thare,

And sum of thame had gert sow sare,

He to the battaylis rade agayne. Wyntown, vii. 40. 174.

It occurs in the same sense in Maitland Poems, p. 201.

Scho gars me murne, I bid nocht seyn,

And with sair straiks scho gars me sow.

It is a strange idea that Sibb. gives of the sense of this term. "In Wyntown it probably means sleep; sow sare, sleep for ever. Swed. sofwa, dormire."

Allied perhaps to A.S. se-on, effervescere; Teut. soye, soeuwe, fervor; or Sw. swid-a, to smart; Saret swider, the sore smarts, Wideg. Hence, SOWING, s. The act, or effect, of piercing or galling, S. sooin, tingling pain.

SOWME, s. Number, E. sum, applied to men.

— Of hys folk war mony slayne,
That in that place nere samyn lay,
(The sowme of thame I can noucht say.)

Wyntown, ix. 2. 36.

It is used in the same sense, Barbour, xvii. 67.

SOWME, s. A load; that which is laid on a horse. See Sup.

The horss thai tuk for awentur mycht befall,
Laid on thar sowme, syne furth the way couth call.

Teut. somme, A.S. seom, Alem. saum, Germ. som, Fr. somme, Ital. soma, L.B. sauma, id. onus, sarcina. Su.G. some not only denotes a burden, but, by a very natural transition, a pack-saddle, or that on which a horseload is borne. As the A.S. word is also written seam, the origin is undoubtedly sem-an, sym-an, onerare. Symath eowre assan; Load your asses; Gen. xlv. 17.

Hence Fr. sommier, Ital. somaro, E. a sumpter-horse, and sowmir, as used in the passage quoted.

SOWME, SOYME, s. 1. The rope or chain that passes between the horses, by which the plough is drawn, S. pron. soam. The traces for dragging ordnance. See Sup.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 238, a. 10.

I hard a peteous appeill, with a pure mane,
Sowlpit in sorrow, that sadly could say,
'Woes me wreche in this warld wilsum of wane!'

Houlate, i. 4.

3. One is said to be sowpit, S. who is much emaciated.

Teut. sopp-en, intingere; A.S. sip-a, macerare; syp, watering, moistening.

It is possible, however, that sense second may be borrowed from Fr. soupi, dull, heavy, s'assoup-ir, to grow dull; immediately allied to Lat. sop-ire. But this is radically one with Su.G. sofw-a, Isl. sof-a, dormire, and Moes.G. swaif, cessavit.

SOWP, s. A term used by washerwomen; apparently Graith, q. v. sense 6. S.

And sing't when we hae done. Burns, iii. 157.

It is evidently the same with Souch and Souf, sense 3.

SPAAD, s. A spade, Aberd. Dan. spaad, A.S. spad, id.

To SPACE, v. a. 1. To measure by paces, S.

2. To take long steps; to walk with a solemn air, or as one does when the mind is deeply engaged.

"The said Mr. George [Wisheart] spacit upe and down behind the hie alter mair than half an hour, his verie countenance and visage declarit the greif and alteration of his mind." Knox's Hist. p. 48, (erron. 52.)

Perhaps from Belg. pass-en, to measure, with s prefixed; or originally the same with Isl. spiss-a, deambulare.

SPACE, s. A pace; a step including three feet, S.B.

"The biggest leauws there for felling at does not exceed one space and one half in breadth from the declivity of the brae to the margin of the water; but they extend several paces in length along the margin of it." State, Leslie of Powis, &c. p. 102.

"Spae well, and hae well;" Ramsay's S. Prov. p. 63. Kelly expl. it by "Eng. Hope well, and have well. That is, hope and expect good things, and it will fall out accordingly." P. 290.

My ingenious namesake is entirely mistaken, in asserting that spell "is the real word, which, in Scotland, has now taken the form of spae." Popul. Ball. ii. 27, N. He also expl. spae-man by spell-man; Ibid. i. 235. It is perfectly obvious, that these are from different origins. The words allied to spell, in various dialects, all simply signified, to declare, to narrate, without the slightest reference to prophecy. But spae is evidently the same with Isl. ek spae, I foretel, Dan. spaa-er, to foretel. Alem. spae-h-en, when applied to the mind, primarily signifies to consider; then, to investigate; and last of all, to divine. V. Wachter. As the word originally means, to see with the bodily eye, he views this as the radical idea; referring, in confirmation of his opinion, to the scriptural designation of seer as given to a prophet, because he sees future events, in dreams and visions, as in a mirror.

Hence the Voluspa, an ancient work containing the Scandinavian mythology, received its name; from vola, art, and spa, a poem or speech; or, according to others, Vola, Sibylla, and spa, vaticinium. Hence also Alem. spaeher, Isl. spak-r, Su.G. spak, a wise man; the denomination originating from a supposed knowledge of future events.

The term is still used in a similar sense. One who has been hurtful to another by his company or counsel, is said to have been an ill spaik to him; perhaps as pretending to give support, in allusion to the bar of a wheel, or as we speak of a limb of the church, law, &c. As, however, it is perhaps as frequently pron. spoke, there may possibly be an allusion to one's being haunted by an evil spirit; Teut. spooch, a ghost, a hobgoblin.

That wont to spayn gret speris war,

Swa spaynyt aris, that men mycht se

Full oft the hyde leve on the tre.

Barbour, iii. 582. MS.

i. e. grasped oars. Doug. uses it in the same sense; q. to enclose in the span.

SPAINYIE, s. A West-Indian cane used for the reeds required for bagpipes, hautboys, and other wind instruments; weavers' reeds are also made of it. S.

SPAINYIE FLEES. Spanish flies; cantharides. S.

To SPAIRGE, v. a. 1. To dash; as, to spairge water, S.

2. To bespatter by dashing any liquid, S.

3. Metaph. to sully by reproach, S.

An' Will's a true guid fallow's get,
A name not envy spairges. Burns, iii. 95.

4. To cast a wall with lime. S.
Fr. asperg-er, to besprinkle; whence aspergés, a holy water stick or sprinkle. Lat. sparg-o, asperg-o.

SPAIRGE, s. 1. A sprinkling; or the liquid that is sprinkled or squirted, S.

2. A dash of contumely, S.

SPAIT, SPATE, SPEAT, s. 1. A flood, an inundation, S. See Sup.

—The burne on spait hurlis down the bank,
Vthir throw ane wattir brek, or spait of flude,
Ryfaund vp rede erd, as it war wod.

Doug. Virgil, 49, 17.

I now behald, and Tybris the grete flude
For grete haboundance of flude on spate wox rede.

Ibid. 165, 47.

Wyntown applies the term to the universal deluge.

In this chapitere rede, and se

The arke and the spate of Noe. Cron. i. Rubr. c. 6.

Mr. Macpherson is certainly right in his conjecture, that spate vii. 5, 171, should be read as spat, (spot.) Sense cannot otherwise be made of the passage. For the shallowness of the river must have been removed by a spate.

The term occurs in a mode of expression analogous to the E. one, a flood of tears.

And doun the water wi' speed she rins,
While tears in spaits fa' fast frae her e'e.

Minstrelsy, Border, i. 174.

2. A great fall of rain; "a spait o' rain." S.

3. Metaph. used for any thing that hurries men away like a flood. See Sup.

God proves them, who transported with this spait
Of madnesse, basely doe crouch downe before
The craftsmans worke, which ought to have no more Respect, than as much mettell, timber, stone,
Appointed for the basest use, or none.

More's True Crucifixe, p. 91.

4. Also used metaph. for fluency of speech, S.

"Eodem sensu — Cic. dixit, flumen ingenii; Juvenal, ingenii fons; nos, a speat of language." Rudd. vo. Flum.

Rudd. derives this from A.S. spett-an, spaeth-ian, spumare. But spett-an signifies merely to spit, spuer; and the word rendered spumare is spætl-ian.

SPALD, SPAULD, SPAWL, s. 1. The shoulder. Hence S. the spule bane, the shoulder-blade.

The remanent of the rowaris euey wicht,
In popill tre branchis dycht at poynt,
With spaldis nakit schene of oile anoint,
Apoun thare setes and coistis al atanys
Thare placis hint, arrayit for the nays.

Doug. Virgil, 132, 3.

Nudatosque humeros—Virg. Æn. v. 135.

Thou puts the spaven in the ferder spauld,
That useth in the hinder-hogh to be.

Polwart, Watson's Coll. iii. 28.

2. Any joint or member.

Sum vthir perordour caldronis gan vpset,— Vnder the spetis swakkis the roste in threte,
The raw spaldis ordanit for the mulde mete.

Viscera torrent. Virg. Æn. v. 103. Doug. Virgil, 130, 47.

Syne soon and safe, baith lith and spaul,
Bring hame the tae haff o' my saul.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 201.

Thus we vulgarly speak of lang spauls, S. strictly referring to the limbs.

Fr. espaule, C.B. yspolde, the shoulder. L.B. spall-a, armus, quasi lamella humeri. Ihre views Fr. espaule as radically allied to Su.G. spiaell, segmentum. It sometimes denotes a small portion of ground; segmentum vel portiuncula agri, a corpore suo separati; from spiael-a, dividere.

"Reading the speal or spule bane" of a leg of mutton well scraped, as Sibb. observes, was "anciently a common mode of divination." It most generally prevailed in the Highlands, and is not yet extinct. After the bone is thoroughly scraped, they hold it between them and the light; and looking through it, pretend to have a representation of future events, as of the arrival of strangers, battles, &c. This species of divination the Highlanders call Steinachd. V. Pennant's Tour in S. 1769, p. 198. See S.

BLACK SPAULD. A disease of cattle, S. synonym. Quarter-ill, q. v.

"Mr. J. Hog says, — that it [the sickness] is the same disease with the Black Spauld, which prevails among the young cattle in the west of Scotland, when the grasses fail, and they begin to feed on fodder and dry herbage." Prize Essays Highl. Soc. s. iii. 368.

SPALDING, s. A small fish split and dried. S.

SPALE, SPAIL, SPEAL, s. 1. A lath or thin plank used in wooden houses for filling up the interstices betwixt the beams, S.B.

Rudd. derives it from Teut. spalt-en, findere. But it is immediately allied to Su.G. spiaell, segmentum, lamina; from spiala, to cleave, whence Teut. spalt-en has been formed, and Dan. spalt-er, id.

2. A splinter or chip; also, a shaving of wood, S. Spales, spalls, chips, A. Bor.

Sum stikkit throw the coist with the spalis of tre

Lay gaspand.—

Doug. Virgil, 296, 40.

V. SPAIL.

It seems uncertain whether the term does not here denote a pole or stake, referring to the shafts of spears.

V. SPYLE.

"He that hews above his head, may have the speal fall in his eye;" S. Prov. "He that aims at things above his power, may be ruined by his project." Kelly, p. 128. It is thus expressed in D. Ferguson's Prov.

He that hews over hie,

The spail will fall into his eye.

It occurs in another S. Prov.; "He is not the best wright that hews maist speals." Ibid. p. 14.

It is sometimes applied to metallic substances, as denoting the splinters which fly from them, when struck.

The spalis, and the sparkis, spedely out sprang.

Gawan and Gol. ii. 25.

Schir Wawine, wourthy in wail,

Half ane span at ane spail,

Quhare his harnes wes hail,

He hewit attanis.

Ibid. iii. 26.

Expl. "blow." Gl. Sw. spiaela, a splinter.

Spells O.E. is used for splinters.

There men might see spears fly in spells,

And tall men tumbling on the soil.

Battle Flodden, st. 91.

Fr. spolla denotes the shavings of wood.

SPALE-HORN'T, adj. Having thin and broad horns. S.

SPALEN, s. Man of spalen, perhaps, defender; shield. S.

To SPALLER, v. n. To sprawl. S.

SPALLIEL, s. A disease of cattle. S.

To SPAN, v. a. To grasp. V. SPAYN.

To SPAN, v. a. To yoke horses to any sort of carriage. S.

SPAN, SPANN, s. A dry measure in Orkney. S.

To SPANG, v. n. 1. To leap with elastic force; to spring, S. See Sup.

Sum presis thik the wyld fyre in to slyng,

The arrowis flaw spangand fra euey stryng.

Doug. Virgil, 318, 17.

Fan I came to him, wi' sad wound
He had nae maughts to gang;
But fan he saw that he was safe,
Right souple cou'd he spang.
Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 9.

2. In an active sense, to cause to spring.
—Hys swyft stedis huffis, quhare thay went,
Spangit vp the bludy sparkis ouer the bent.
Doug. Virgil, 421, 15.

3. To spang o'er, metaph. to overleap, S.
But when they spang o'er reason's fence,
We smart for't at our ain expence.
Ramsay's Poems, ii. 386.

Rudd. derives this word from span, or Ital. sping-ere, violenter impellere. But he has not observed, that Isl.
spenn-a, Germ. spann-en, signify, to extend; spannende, elasticity; spangen, the clasps of a book, because they extend from one side of it to another. The latter is nearly allied to the most common use of the S. word, a definite intermediate space being generally mentioned in connexion with it; as, He spang'd o'er the burn; he leaped from one side of the rivulet to the other, i. e. he included the rivulet within his leap. Wachter derives spanne, a span, in measurement, from the v.

SPANG, s. 1. The act of springing with elastic force;
a leap, S.

And nethes to schute he was begun,
And threw ane arrow in the are on hycht,—
That lousit of the takill with ane spang.
Doug. Virgil, 145, 10.

2. "Scot. also we use the word for a fillip," Rudd.
I have never heard it used in this sense. V. the v.
To SPANG, v. a. To grasp with both hands put together. V. SPAYN, SPAN. S.

SPANG, s. The act of grasping in this manner. S.

SPANGIE, s. A game played by boys with marbles or halfpence. A marble or halfpenny is struck against the wall. If the second player can bring his so near that of his antagonist, as to include both within a span, he claims both as his.

This in E. is called Boss out, or Boss and Span. V.
Strutt's Sports, p. 287. Perhaps the E. game span-counter or span-farthing, was originally the same, although described differently. V. Johns. Dict.

SPANGIE, s. An animal fond of leaping. S.

SPANGIE-HEWIT, s. A barbarous operation of boys.
V. YELDRING.

SPANG-TADE, s. A cruel sport of children. V. YELDRING.

SPANGIS, s. pl. Spangles.

—And on hir hede a chaplet fresch of hewe,
Of plumys partit rede, and quhite, and blewe:
Full of quaking spangis brycht as gold.
King's Quair, ii. 27. 28.

Teut. spanghe, Isl. spaung, lamina. Germ. spange, a bracelet or locket.

SPANGNEW, adj. Applied to any thing quite new. S.

To SPANHEW, v. a. To place any thing on one end of a board, the middle of which rests on a prop, and strike the other end smartly, so as to make it start up suddenly, and throw what is upon it violently aloft. S.

SPANYEART, s. A spaniel.

The cur or mastic he haldis at smale auale,
And culyeis spanyeartis, to chace [artrik or quale].
Doug. Virgil, 272, 2.

This has the same origin with the E. designation; as the dog is originally of Spanish breed. V. Jun. Etym.

SPANYIE, s. Spain. S.

SPANYE, adj. Spanish; of or belonging to Spain. S.

To SPANYIS, v. n. To blow fully; applied to a flower.

I seek the sawoure of that ros,
That spanysys, spredys, and evyre spryngis
In plesans of the Kyng of Kyngis.

Wyntown, i. Prol. 127.

Chauc. spannishing, Fr. espanouissement, the full blow of a flower, Tyrwhitt. Ihre views the Fr. v. espanouir as allied to Su.G. spann-a, to extend.

To SPANK, v. n. 1. To move with quickness and elasticity; to take long steps with apparent agility. A spanking horse, one that moves in this manner, S. See S.

It seems to be a frequentative from Spang, v. q. v.; or allied to Isl. spink-a, decursitare.

2. "To sparkle or shine. Teut. spange, lamina;" Sibb. Gl.
To SPANK off, v. n. To move or set off in this manner. S.

SPANKER, s. 1. One who walks in a quick and elastic way, S. 2. A tall, well-made woman. 3. A fleet horse. S.

4. Spankers, in pl. a term used to denote long and thin legs, S. V. the v.

There is a resemblance in Isl. which seems purely accidental. As spaung, lamina, metaph. denotes any thing erect and delicate; spengilmenni, spengiligr madr, are expl., homo staturae tenuis et lepidae; Gunnlaug. S. Gl.

SPANKERING, adj. Nimble; agile. S.

SPANKY, adj. Sprightly; frisking. Dashing; gaudy. S.

SPANKER-NEW, adj. Quite new; never before used. S.

SPAR. A-SPAR, in a state of opposition; against, S.B.

To set one's foot a-spar, to oppose any thing, S.B.

Quo' Jeany, I think, 'oman, ye're in the right;

Set your feet ay a spar to the spinning o't.

Song, Ross's Helenore, p. 135.

Perhaps from Germ. gesperre, straddling; or from E.
spar, to close, to shut, because denoting opposition; q.
using one's foot as a spar, or bar, in the way of another.

A SPAR-WAIES, adv. The same with A-spar. S.

To SPAR, SPER, v. a. To shut; to fasten a door, by means of a bar of wood called a bolt. S.

SPARE, s. 1. An opening in a gown or petticoat. See S.

"That parte of weemens claihs, sik as of their gowne, or petticoat, quhilk vnder the belt, and before is open, commonly is called the spare." Skene, Verb. Sign. vo.
Bastardus.

He derives this from Gr. σπορος, which he there explains. But it is evidently allied to Su.G. sparr-a, to open, to expand; Teut. sperr-en.

2. The slit or opening, formerly used in the forepart of breeches, S. spaiver, S.B.

SPARE, adj. 1. "Barren," Gl.

The tothir drew hym on dreigh in derne to the dure;
Hyit hym hard throu the hall to his haiknay,
And sped hym on spedely, on the spare mure.

Gawan and Gol. i. 9.

It might, however, signify wide, extensive; from Germ.
sperr-en, extendere, whence sparrweit, late patens.

2. This term is still used to denote what is lean or meagre.

A mim mou'd maiden jimp an' spare,
Mistook a fit for a' her care.—Morison's Poems, p. 25.

To SPARGE, v. a. To dash, &c. V. SPAIRGE. S.

To SPARGEON, v. a. To plaster. S.

SPARGINER, s. A plasterer. S.

SPARK, s. A small particle of fire. Prov. "The smith has ay a spark in his hawse," (throat;) a mode of accounting for want of sobriety, from the nature of one's occupation. S.

SPARKLIT, part. adj. Speckled, S.; sparkled, A. Bor. id. V. SPRECKLED.

SPARLING, SPIRLING, s. A smelt, S. A. Bor. It is sometimes called spurling, E. Salmo eperlanus, Linn.

"The smelt or sparling, a very rare fish, is also found in the Cree. It is found only in one other river in Scotland, viz. the Forth at Stirling." P. Minnigaff, Kirkcudb. Statist. Acc. vii. 54.

"They have a very particular scent, from whence is derived one of their English names Smelt, i. e. smell it. That of Sparling, which is used in Wales, and the north of England, is taken from the French Eperlan." Penn. Zool. iii. 265.

The etymon here given of smelt seems fanciful. For its A.S. name is the same. Seren. derives it from Su.G. smaa, smal, parvus, exilis. The Germ. name is spiering, spierling; Lat. eperlan-us.

Isl. sperling is perhaps the same. G. Andr. gives it as the name of a fish. The Su.G. name is nors, which Ihre views as derived from nor, a strait, because these small fishes crowd into narrow friths.

To SPARPALL, SPARPELL, SPERPLE, v. a. To disperse; to scatter. V. SPERFLE. See Sup.

Houlate, i. 8. MS.

Mr. Pinkerton renders this wise; probably viewing it as allied to Alem. spach-en. V. SPAE. It might denote both freedom and latitude of discourse, as expl. by what follows; from Germ. spaun-en, span-en, Su.G. spann-a, to extend. But it seems rather allied to A.S. spaen-an, speon-an, span-ian, to entice, to allure, to persuade; speonde, alluring, enticing; Somner. Thus to speik speanlie, may be, to speak persuasively. It may, however, signify boldly; as speonde is also rendered, "provoking, stirring up."

The term speanle occurs ibid. st. 11.

Doug. Virgil, 417, 24.

Speid hand, man, with thy clitter clattar.

Lyndsay, S. P. Repr. ii. 187.

Rudd. follows Skinner in deriving this v. from Ital. spedire, Lat. expedire; although it is a Goth. word of very general use; A.S. sped-ian, Alem. spud-en, Sw. spod-a, Belg. spood-en, to speed; A.S. sped, Belg. spood, expedition. Seren. derives it from Goth. spo sig, festinare.

SPEDE, s. To cum spede, to have success, S.

There sate three lords at the lordes end,

Were drinking of the wine so free.

Ritson's S. Songs, ii. 136.

From the use of this aperture, the term might seem derived from the v. spere, speer, to inquire. Whatever be the origin, it is apparently the same with SPIRE, q. v.

SPEER-WUNDIT, part. pa. Quite overcome with exertion, so as to be out of breath. V. SPIREWIND. S.

SPEG, s. A pin or peg of wood. S.

SPEICE, s. Pride.

I. 1525. c. 69. Ed. 1566.

This is analogous to A.S. spedig, lucky, prosperous; from sped, prosperity, success. V. SPEDE.

SPEIK, s. Speech. V. SPEK.

SPEIKINTARE, s. A bird, supposed to be the Sea Swallow, Sterna hirundo, Linn. Perhaps a corr. of its vulgar name PICTARNIE, q. v.

To SPELD, v. a. To spread out; to expand.

And as he blent besyde hym on the bent,

He saw speldit a wondir wofull wicht,

Nailit full fast, and Theseus he bicht.

Henryson's Traitie of Orpheus Kyng, Edit. 1508.

"Scot.—they say, He spelded himself on the ice; and, a spelded herring;" Rudd.

Germ. spelt-en, spalt-en, to cleave, to divide; from Su.G. spial-a, id. Gael. spealt-a, to split.

SPELDING, SPELDEN, SPELDIN, s. A split haddock, or other small fish, dried in the sun, S.

And there will be partons and buckies,

Speldens and haddocks anew.

Ritson's S. Songs, i. 211.

Swith hame, and feast upon a spelding.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 574.

"Speldings,—fish (generally whittings) salted and dried in a particular manner, being dipped in the sea, and dried in the sun, and eat by the Scots by way of a relish.—My friend, General Campbell, Governor of Madras, tells me that they make speldings in the East Indies, particularly at Bombay, where they call them Bombaloes." Boswell's Journ. p. 50.

To SPELDER, v. a. 1. To split; to spread open; as, to spelder a fish, to open it up for being dried.—2. To rack the limbs in striding. S.

To SPELDER, v. n. To toss the legs awkwardly in running. V. SPELD. S.

To SPELE, SPEIL, v. n. To climb; to clamber, S.

—Thai preis fast ouer the ruf to spele,

Thomas, thu shal never make lye:

Wher so ever thu goo, to frith, or felle,

I pray the spake never non ille of me.

True Thomas, Jamieson's Popul. Ball. ii. 27.

The editor renders this "prophecy," Gl. But there is no proof, I apprehend, that the word was ever used in this sense. V. SPAE, v.

SPELL, SPELLE, s. Speech; narrative.

Henryson, Evergreen, i. 149.

Fr. despence, id. Skinner gives this as an E. word;
and it is used by Chaucer in sense 1.

2. The interior apartment of a country-house, although not appropriated as a larder; ben-house, synonym. It bears this sense, Lanarks. See Sup.

3. The place where the family sit and eat, S.B.

"The spence, or dispensary, in which the family sit and SPENTACLES, s. pl. The vulgar name for Spectacles. S.

To SPERE, SPEIR, SPYRE, v. n. 1. To trace or search out; applied to a way.

Off rapys a leddre to me mad I;

And thar with our the wall slaid I.

A strayt roid, that I spere had,

In till the crage, syne down I went.

Barbour, x. 559. MS.

Sometimes the prep. to is joined.

How now, Panthus, quhat tything do ye bring?

In quhat estate is sanctuarie, and haly geir?

To quhilk vthir fortres sall we spere?

Doug. Virgil, 49, 55.

Quam prendimus arcem? Virg.

This is very nearly allied to the original sense of the v.
A.S. spyr-ian, "investigare,—explorare; to search out by the track or trace; Lanc. to spirre;" Somner. Germ.
spur-en, to trace, to spy the footsteps, Belg. speur-en, Su.G. spoer-ia, Dan. sporg-er; from A.S. Isl. Alem. spor, a footstep, a track or tread, Germ. spur, Belg. speur, id.
Hence Germ. spurhund, a dog that follows the track, or by the scent.

In this sense spire is used by R. Brunne, p. 112.

In Huntingtongschire the kyng in that forest

A moneth lay, to spire for wod & wilde beste.

2. To investigate; to make diligent inquiry; to use all means of discovery.

And quhen he hard sa blaw and cry,

He had wondir quhat it mycht be;

And on sic maner spyryt he,

That knew that it wes the king. Barbour, iii. 486.

In Edit. 1620, spyed. But spyryt is the reading of MS.

"To try, search, and speir out all excommunicates, practisand and uthers Papists quhatsumever within oure boundis and schyres quhair we keep residence." Band of Maintenance, Collect. of Confessions, ii. 111.

Spire is also used in this sense by R. Brunne, p. 327.

He spired as he gede, who did suilk trespas,

Brak his pes with dede, tille he in Scotlond was.

In this sense some understand the following passage in Chaucer.

—He so long had ridden and gone,

That he fond in a privee wone

The contree of Faerie.

Wherein he soughte North and South,

And oft he spirid with his mouth,

In many a forest wilde,

For in that contree n'as ther non,

That to him dorst ride or gon,

Neither wif ne childe.

Sir Thopas, v. 13733.

This is the reading in Urry's Edit. In others it is spied. Mr. Tyrwhitt observes; "The emendation is probable enough; as the expression of spying with the mouth seems to be too extravagantly absurd even for this composition." N.

There is, however, a difficulty which both these learned writers have overlooked. How could Thopas spere with his mouth, in a country in which he found no inhabitant? Urry does not expl. spird as Tyrwhitt does. For he views it as signifying, blowed. V. his Gl.

3 M

3. To ask; to inquire, S.

My fader exhortis vs to turn agane our fludis
To Delos, and Appollois ansuere spere.

Doug. Virgil, 72, 19.

Abp. Hamiltoun uses this word, in a passage in which he finds an easy way of avoiding the force of a pretty strong objection to the invocation of departed saints.

"And quhairto will thou, O christin man, be sa curious, as to speir gif the sanctis of heuin kennis our prayars or na? Put away that vaine curiositie, & belief as the haly catholyk kirk of God beleiffis, quhilk, as S. Paule sais, is the house of God, the fundament and pillar of veritie." Catechisme, Fol. 197. b.

Speir at is commonly used in this sense, S.

Of this progeny gyf yhe will mare,

Yhe spere at othir forthirmare. Wyntown, viii. 7. 96.

It is also used actively.

"Mony ane spears the gate they ken fu' well;" Ferguson's S. Prov. p. 25.

A.S. spyr-ian also signifies to inquire; Isl. spyr-ia, id. It has the same form in which our v. is frequently used; Ad spyria han ad, Mark ix. 32. To speir at him. Dict. Run. Jon. spurull, avidus quaerendi.

We also say to speir after, S. to inquire for; A.S. spyr-ian aefter; A. Bor. to sparre, speir, or spurre.

Spyrre afstyr occurs in a poem viewed by Sibb. as of Scottish, "or at least of North country, extraction."

And yf he spyrre afstyr me,

Say, thou sawe me wyth non eye.

Chron. S.P. i. 147.

To spier for, is used in the same sense, especially as denoting an inquiry concerning one's welfare.

When ye gae hame to my sister,

She'll speir for her brother John:—

Ye'll say, ye left him in Kirkland fair,

The green grass growin aboon.

Jamieson's Popular Ball. i. 62.

I spier'd for my cousin, fu' couthy and sweet,

Gin she had recover'd her hearin.

V. SPURE.

Burns, iv. 250.

4. To scrutinize any article; as to investigate any legal deed, by applying it in the way of comparison with matters of fact libelled. S.

To SPEER the price of a young woman, to ask her in marriage. "I was thirty before man speer't my price." S.

To SPEIR about. To make inquiry concerning; often as indicating interest, anxiety, or affection. S.

SPEIR, SPEER, s. Inquiry. S.

SPEYING, s. Information in consequence of inquiry.

Tharfor he thocht to wyrk with slycht;

And lay still in the castell than,

Till he got speryng that a man

Off Carrik, that wes sley and wycht,—

Wes to the King Robert maist priué.

Barbour, v. 490.

Teut. speuringhe, indagatio, investigatio.

SPEIRINGS, SPEIRINS, SPERINS, SPEERINGS, s. pl. 1. Inquiry; interrogation; investigation. 2. Prying inspection of conduct. 3. Intelligence; tidings. S.

SPERE, s. A small hole in the wall of a house. V.

SPEERE, and SPIRE, s.

SPERE, SPEIR, s. A sphere.

Bellend. also speaks of "the speir of the moon," Descr. Alb. c. 1.

L.B. spaer-a, Lat. sphaer-a.

SPERTHE, s. A battle-axe. See Sup.

At his saddle-gerthe was a good steel sperthe,

Full ten pounds weight and more.

Minstrelsy, Border, ii. 337.

Sparth, securis, Brompt. Securim, i. Sparthe, in manu quasi pro baculo bajulant, qua sibi confidentes praeoccupant. Otterbourne Chron. Angl. p. 16.

Brompton says, that the Norwegians carried the use of that kind of axe, which in E. is called sparth, into Ireland. Ap. Du. Cange.

SPES, s. Species; synon. with Kynd. V. SPACE. S.

SPETIT, part. pa. "Pierced, as with a spit," Rudd.

Syne ane Halys vnto the corporis dede

In company he eikit in that stede,

And Phegeas doun brittynnyis in the feild,

Spetit throw out the body and the scheild.

Doug. Virgil, 305, 39.

But although spete is used by Doug. for a spit, this is not to be viewed as the origin. For it is only a secondary sense. The primary idea is that expressed by Su.G. spets, any thing sharp-pointed; whence spiuts, a spear, a lance. Spets itself is used in this sense; sometimes softened into spes, spis; Franc. spiet, Isl. spiot, Mod. Sax. spet, speet, Germ. spitze, spiess; Ital. spiedo, hasta, lancea; and most probably, spada, a sword. Hence Su.G. spisseri, hastiludium, a just or tournament. Thus spetit properly signifies, pierced with a sharp instrument, without restriction to one of any particular description. Teut. spet-en, fodicare.

SPEUG, s. A tall meagre person. Syn. Spaig. S.

SPEUGLE, s. An object that is extremely slender. S.

SPEWEN, s. Spavin.

This is certainly the meaning of the term in the following verse;

— Bock-blood, and Benshaw, spewen in the spald.

V. CLEIKS.

Montgomerie, Watson's Coll. iii. 13.

i. e. Spavin in the shoulder.

SPY-ANN, s. The game of Hide and seek. S.

SPICE, s. 1. This term is appropriated to pepper, S.

The yungest sister to her butrie hyed,

And brocht furth nuts and peis insteid of spyce.

Henryson, Evergreen, i. 146.

Here, however, it may denote spiceries in general.

— "It is now perceived, by the leaves and sheets of that book [the Scots Common-Prayer Book] which are given out athort the shops of Edinburgh, to cover spice and tobacco, one edition at least was destroyed." Baillie's Lett. i. 14.

2. Metaph. applied to pride, S. V. SPEICE. Hence,

SPICY, adj. Proud; testy, S.

SPICE, s. A blow; a thwack. S.

To SPICE, v. a. To beat; to thwack. S.

SPICE-BOX, s. A pepper-box. S.

SPICE-BUST, s. A pepper-box. S.

SPIDER. When spiders creep on one's clothes it is viewed as betokening good luck. S.

SPYLE, s. A stake; a palisado.

Eschame ye not, Phrigianis, that twyis tak is,
To be inclusit amynd ane fald of stakis?
And be assegeit agane sa oft syis,

Doug. Virgil, 298, 53.

Sibb. views this as a variation of pile. But it seems to be the same with Spale, spail, q. v. From Su.G. spiaele, lamina lignea, Ihre deduces L.B. spalliera, Fr. espalier, the lath to which a vine is fixed.

SPILGIE, s. Long and slender, Ang. Also used as a s., a tall meagre person; a lang spilgie. Long limbs are called spilgies.

Allied perhaps to Teut. spil, a spindle, as nearly of the same sense with spindle-shanked; spill-en, attenuare; or Su.G. spial-a, spialk-a, to divide, from spiaell, lamina; q. something which, from its meagreness, seems to be only the half of what it ought to be.

To SPILK, v. a. To shell pease. S.

SPILKINS, s. pl. Split pease. S.

To SPILL, SPYLL, v. a. 1. To destroy, in whatever way; to spoil; to mar; to lay waste, S. In this sense it frequently occurs in E.

2. To kill.

—Quham Turnus lansand lichtly ouer the landis,
With spere in hand persewis for to spyll.

Doug. Virgil, 297, 17.

And at ane hie balk teyt vp sche has
With ane loupe knot ane stark corde or ane lace,
Quharewith hir self sche spilt with achameful dede.

Ibid. 432, 47.

A.S. spyll-an not only signifies consumere, perdere, but interficere. Thaer spilde; Ibi interfecit, Chron. Sax. 204. 16.

3. To defile; to deflower.

Both wiffis, wedowis, thai tuk all at thair will,
Nounys, madyns, quham thai likit to spill.

Wallace, i. 164. MS.

A.S. spill-an, corrumpere, vitiare, Su.G. spill-a, violare; Isl. spille, corrumpo, spilte, corrumpti.

To SPILL, SPILLE, v. n. 1. To perish; to go to wreck.

“Em,” he seyde, “Y spille,
Of lond keep Y na mare.”

—God in Trinité,
No lat thou me nought spille.

Sir Tristrem, p. 74. 88.

Sauf vs lattir wardis of Troy that we ne spill,
Leuying of Grekis and of the fers Achill.

Doug. Virgil, 70, 13.

It is used by Chaucer in the same sense.

—Veraily him thought that he shuld spille.

Man of Lawes T. 5007.

2. To corrupt; to putrify.

Meat is said to spill, when it begins to become putrid, S.

3. To be in a fretted or galled state; as denoting the effect of heat, of friction, or of violent motion, on any part of the body, S.

To SPYN, v. n. To run; to glide, S.

Vnder thy gard to schip we vs addres,

Ouer spynnand many swelland seyis salt.

Doug. Virgil, 72, 46.

“By a metaphor taken from spinning, as sweepit & raik,” Rudd. Spin, E. and S., is indeed used with respect to velocity of motion. But it denotes that which is of a rotatory kind. This term seems properly to signify extending, from A.S. spann-an, extendere, to which spend, Loth., seems allied, as denoting the quick motion of a horse.

Or it may be allied to Su.G. spaenn-a, to measure with the hand, which might seem to agree with permensi.

S P I

Nos tumidum sub te permensi classibus aequor.

Virgil.

But it must be acknowledged that the usual sense of the v. Spynner gives probability to Rudd. etymon.

To SPYNNER, v. n. “To run or fly swiftly, S.” Rudd.

Ane vthir part syne younder mycht thou se

The heirdys of hartis wyth thare hedis hie

Ouer spynnerand wyth swyft cours the plane vale.

Doug. Virgil, 105, 14.

The term, as commonly used, signifies, to ascend in a spiral form, S.B. It therefore seems formed from spin, the idea being borrowed from the motion of the distaff.

SPYNDILL, adj. Thin; slender.

And to the rude scho maid ane vow,

‘For I sall hit thy spyndill schyn.’

Maitland Poems, p. 201.

q. resembling a spindle, like E. spindle-shanked.

SPYNDLE, SPINDLE, s. A certain quantity of yarn, including four hanks, or slips; each hank consisting of six heers, each heer of two cuts, each cut of 120 threads, the legal length of the thread being the circumference of the reel, S. pron. q. spynle. See Sup.

“The spinners are paid at the rate of 1s. per spynle, and the agents or factors employed to give out the flax, and take in the yarn, have 2d. per spynle for their trouble.” P. Thurso, Caithn. Statist. Acc. xx. 517.

“It is a common and an easy task, for one of these two-handed females, to spin three spindles in the week; which, at the rate of 1s. 3d. the spindle, comes to 3s. 9d.” P. Ecclesgreig, Kincard. Ibid. xi. 114.

This is most frequently spelled, as if it were the same with spindle. But although both are formed from the v. Spin, they seem quite different. Spynle is perhaps q. spin-del, from A.S. spinn-an, and del, pars, portio, q. a certain portion of labour in spinning.

SPINDLE-SHANKS, s. pl. 1. Thin limbs. 2. A person with very thin legs, having legs like a spindle. S.

SPINDRIFT, s. Spray. V. SPEEN-DRIFT. S.

SPYNIST, part. pa.

Off ferliful fyne favour war thair faces meik,
All full of flurist fairheid, as flouris in June,—

New upspreed upon spray as new spynist rose.

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 45.

“Spynist (rose) prickly. Fr. spineux,” Gl. Sibb. But it seems to signify, fully spread, q. spanyst. V. SPANYS.

SPINK, s. 1. The Maiden pink, S. Dianthus deltoides, Linn.

2. Often used to denote pinks in general, S.

Countless spinks an’ daisies springin,

Gaily deckt ilk vale an’ hill.

A. Douglas's Poems, p. 99.

SPINK, s. The Goldfinch. Syn. Goudspink. S.

SPINKIE, s. A dram; a glass of ardent spirits, Fife.

SPINKIE, adj. Slender, and at the same time active, Fife.

Su.G. spinkog, id. gracilis; Ihre. Some derive the word from spinde, a spider.

SPINLY, adj. Tall and slender. V. SPINNLE. S.

SPINNIN-JENNY, SPIN-MARY, SPINNIN-MAGGIE, s.

The long-legged fly, said to be produced from the grub.

To SPINNLE, v. n. To shoot out; applied to grain. S.

SPINTIE, adj. Lean; thin; lank, Loth.

This seems originally the same with Spinkie.

SPIRE, s. 1. “The spire in a cottage, is properly the stem or leg of an earth-fast couple, reaching from the floor to the top of the wall, partly inserted in, and partly standing out of, the wall.” Gl. Jamieson's Popular Ball.

S P I

2. A wall between the fire and the door, with a seat on it, S.B.; hallan, synon. See Sup.

I've no seek near the fire;
Let me but rest my weary banes,
Behind backs at the spire.

Song, Ross's Helenore, p. 142.

"From the circumstance of the partition beginning at the couple-leg, or spire, the name has been transferred from the wooden post—that supports the pillar, and commences the partition, to the partition itself." Gl. Popular Ball. ubi sup.

This is also called the spire wa'. This word in Chesh. signifies, the chimney-post, Ray. C.B. yspyr, id. Chaucer uses spire for a stake.

3. The lower part of a couple or rafter. S.

A different etymon has been given, from Spere, to inquire. V. SPERE, s.

To SPIRE, v. a. To wither, or cause to fade.

Thus heat, or a strong wind, is said to spire the grass, Loth. Hence, SPIRY, adj. Warm; parching.

It is said to be a spiry day, when the drought is very strong, Loth.

I know no origin, unless it be a metaph. use of A.S. spyr-ian, to search, in the same sense in which we speak of a searching wind.

SPIRE, s. A small tapering tree, generally of the fir kind, and of a size fit for paling. S.

SPIRE, s. Sea-spire, the spray of the sea. S.

SPIREWIND, SPEARWIND, SPELLWIND, s. A violent gust of passion; a gust of rage. S.

SPIRIE, adj. Slender; slim. Syn. Spirlie. S.

SPIRITY, adj. Lively; full of life; spirited. S.

To SPIRL, v. n. To run about in a light lively way. S.

SPIRLIE, SPIRLEY, adj. Slender; slim. Syn. Spirie. S.

SPIRLIE, s. A slender person; often "a lang spirlie." S.

SPIRLIE-LEGGIT, adj. Having thin legs. S.

SPIRLING, s. A smelt; also, a small burn-trout. V.

SPARLING. S.

SPIRLING, s. Contention; a broil, Perth. allied perhaps to Germ. sperr-en, to oppose; to resist.

SPIRRAN, s. An old ill-tempered female. S.

To SPIT, v. n. To rain slightly, but not closely. S.

To SPIT.* Among boys, to spit in one's hand and then draw that hand down the buttons of his antagonist's coat is equivalent to placarding him for a poltroon. S.

To SPIT in confirming a bargain. Among children it is accounted a very solemn confirmation of any engagement into which they enter, if each of the party follow it up by spitting on the ground. S.

To SPIT AND GIE OUER. A vulgar mode of expressing that all one's exertions to accomplish any object will prove inadequate. S.

SPITALL, Barbour, ii. 420. Leg. pitall, as in MS. V. PETTAIL.

To SPITE, v. a. To provoke.

"Rather spill your jest, than spite your friend;" S. Prov. Kelly, p. 283.

SPITE,* s. A vexation; as, "a great spite." S.

SPITHER, s. Spume; foam. S.

SPITTEN, s. A puny worthless creature. S.

SPITTER, s. 1. A very slight shower; whence the imp. v. It's spitterin, i. e. a few drops of rain are falling, S. from spit, spuere.—2. SPITTENS. Snow in small particles forcibly driven by the wind. S.

SPITTERY, adj. Denoting what spirits or flies out irregularly without connexion of parts. S.

SPITTIE, s. A designation for a horse. V. SPAVE. S.

SPITTINS, s. pl. Spittle. S.

To SPLAY, SPLAE, v. a. To sew down the edges of two pieces of cloth after they have been run up in a seam. S.

SPLAE, SPLAY, s. The hem thus made. S.

SPLAE-SEAM, SPLAY-SEAM, s. What in England is called a hem-seam, one side only being sowed down. S.

DUTCH-SPLAY, s. The same with Splay-seam. S.

SPLAY, s. A squabble. S.

To SPLAY, v. a. To flay. "He has splayed the skin off his leg." S.

SPLAY, SPLAE, s. A stroke. S.

To SPLAIRGE, v. a. To bedaub; to besprinkle. S.

SPLASH-FLUKE, s. The plaice, a fish. S.

To SPLATCH, v. a. To bedaub; to splash. S.

SPLATCH, s. 1. A splatch o' dirt, a clot of mud. 2. Any thing so broad or full as to have an awkward appearance. "What a great splatch of a seal's on that letter." S.

To SPLATTER, v. n. To make a noise among water. S.

SPLATTER-DASH, s. An uproar; a splutter. S.

SPLECHRIE, s. Furniture of any kind; but most generally, used to denote the clothes and furniture provided by a woman, in her single state, or brought by her to the house of her husband, when married, S.

It is also used for the executory of a defunct person, or the moveable goods in his house left by him to his heirs, S.

This is perhaps merely a corr. of Lat. supellex, or supellectilis, the terms used by civilians to denote all the household-goods which are daily used by a family. V. Alexand. ab Alexand. Genial. Dies, Lib. i. c. 19.

Or shall we view it as more immediately allied to Isl. plagg, supellex? G. Andr. p. 192. It is sometimes pron. sprechrie; which might indicate affinity to Ir. spre, Gael. spre, spreidh, a marriage portion or dowry, literally cattle; because anciently this was always given in cattle. This, however, may be radically a different word. V. SPRAYGH-ERIE and SPREITH.

To SPLEET, v. a. To split. S.

SPLENDIS, s. pl. Armour for the legs. V. SPLENTIS. S.

SPLENDRIS, s. pl. Splinters.

Thair speris in splendris sprent,
On scheldis schonkit and schent.

Gawan and Gol. ii. 24.

Speris full sone all into splendrys sprang.

Wallace, ix. 918. MS.

Belg. splenters, Dan. splinde, Su.G. splinta, id. splint-a, Dan. splint-er, to splinter: from Isl. splint-a, to tear.

To SPLENNER, v. n. To stride. S.

SPLENTIS, s. pl. Leg-splents, a sort of inferior greaves, or armour for the legs; so denominated from their being applied as splints.

"—Vthers simpillar of x pund of rent, or fyftie pundis in gudis, haue hat, gorget,—breist plate, pans, and leg splentis at the leist, or gif him lykis better." Acts, Ja. i. 1429, c. 134. Edit. 1566.

These were in like manner used for the arms.

"A defence for the arms, called splints, constituted part of the suit denominated an almaine ryvett." Grose's Milit. Antiq. ii. 252, 253. Expl. "harness or armour for the arms;" Philips's New World of Words.

SPLENTS, s. pl. As applied to a gown, loose cloth used instead of sleeves; hanging sleeves. S.

SPLEUCHAN, s. 1. "Gael. a tobacco-pouch;" Gl.

Sibb. S. 2. Used in a ludicrous sense for a fob. S.

To SPLINDER, v. n. To be shivered; to splinter. S.

SPLINKEY, adj. Tall and lank. S.

SPLINT COAL. A species of coal that splinters. S.

SPLIT, s. A term used by weavers denoting one thread in plain linen work. E. Dent. S.

SPLIT-NEW, adj. A term applied to what has never been used or worn, S. span-new, spick and span, E.

"In a word, they had, as it were, a split-new systeme of government, to temper and establish." Account Persecution of the [Episcopalian] Church in Scotland, p. 32.

Germ. splitter-neu, id. q. as new as a splinter or chip from the block. The Germ. term, of the composition of which there can be no reasonable doubt, although not observed by the learned Ihre, affords a strong collateral confirmation of the etymon which he has given of E. span-new, and its Su.G. synon. sping spaangande ny, Isl. spanosa, span y-r. He deduces them all from Su.G. spinga, assula, segmentum ligni tenuius, from spaan, id. V. SPON. Thus split, and span, equally denote a splinter or chip.

Lye (Addit. to Jun. Etym.) traces spick to spike, a nail. Johnson adopts the idea. But it rests on the correlative idea, that span is from Germ. spann-en, to extend; both being supposed to refer to the work of a fuller, in stretching cloth on the tenter-hooks. Perhaps spick and span may be a corr. of the Su.G. reduplication, sping spaangande.

SPLOY, s. A frolic. Syn. Ploy. S.

To SPLOIT, v. n. 1. To spout; to squirt. 2. To splash. S.

SPLOIT, s. A little liquid filth. S.

SPLORE, s. 1. "A frolic; a noise; a riot; Gl. Burns.

Lament him, a' ye rantin core,

Wha dearly like a random-splore,

Nae mair he'll join the merry roar. Burns, iii. 215.

2. A quarrel ending in blows. S.

Perhaps from Ital. esplor-are, to explore, q. the act of exploring, or a party engaged in searching out something for sport. It seems nearly synon. with Ploy, q. v.

To SPLORE, v. n. To show off; to make a great show. S.

To SPLUNG, v. a. To carry off any thing clandestinely; to filch. A seeming variety of Spung. S.

To SPLUNT, v. n. 1. "To court," S.A.—2. To make love under the shade of night. S.

The lovers comin there to splunt.——

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, ii. 9.

SPLUNTING, s. Running after girls under night. S.

To SPLUTE, v. n. To exaggerate in narration. S.

To SPO, v. n. To foretell; the same with Spae, q. v. S.

To SPOATCH, SPOACH, SPOTCH, v. n. 1. To poach. 2.

To sponge about for a meal, or some drink. S.

SPOACHER, s. 1. A poacher. 2. One who sponges about for food, drink, &c. S.

SPODLIN, s. A child learning to walk. S.

SPOIG, s. A paw; ludicrously used for the hand. S.

To SPOILYIE, v. a. To plunder; to despoil. S.

SPOYN, SPOYNE, s. A spoon.

His fostyr modyr lowed him our the laiff,

Did mylk to warme, his liff giff scho mycht saiff;

And with a spoyne gret kyndnes to him kyth.

Spayn erroneously, Perth. Edit. Wallace, ii. 271. MS.

SPOKESHAFE, SPOKESHAVE, s. V. CHAVELING. S.

SPON, s. Shavings of wood.

Tristrem was in toun;

In boure Ysonde was don;

Bi water he sent adoun

Light linden spone.

Sir Tristrem, p. 115.

i. e. Chips or shavings of the linden tree.

A.S. spone, assula, "a chip or splenter of wood;" Somner. Teut. spoen, Germ. span, Su.G. spaan, (pron. spone), Isl. spann, id. Hence Su.G. laero-spaan, tyrocinium, the rudiments, that in which one first exercises himself; "a mode of speaking," says Ihre, "adopted, when it was common to write on shavings or chips of wood, the use of paper either not being discovered, or very infrequent." I need scarcely add, that this throws light on the circumstance mentioned in the narration of our celebrated Thomas of Ercildoun.

SPONK, s. Spark of fire, &c. V. SPUNK.

SPONNYS, s. pl. Spoons. S.

SPONSEFU', adj. The same with Sponsible, q. v. S.

SPONSIBLE, adj. 1. Capable of being admitted as a surety, or of discharging an obligation, S. like E. responsible. See Sup.

"Mr. Archer, his wife, and five small children, the eldest not ten years of age, were carried to Kirkcaldy prison. Next day, the provost of the town hearing of this severity, liberate the mother and the infants; yet not till caution was found, by two sponsibile persons, she should present herself to the sheriff when called, under the penalty of 2000 merks." Wodrow's Hist. ii. 284.

2. Respectable; becoming one's station. S.

Lat. spond-eo, spons-um, to undertake, to be surety, for another; whence spons-or, a surety.

SPOONGE, s. 1. A low sneaking fellow; one who employs any means, however despicable, to get his belly filled. 2. A wandering dog that prowls about for his food. 3. A person disposed to filch. S.

To SPOONGE, v. n. To go about in a sneaking or prowling way, so as to excite suspicion. S.

SPOOTRAGH, s. Drink of any kind, Loth.

Gael. sput, a word of contempt for bad drink.

To SPORNE, v. n. Apparently, to stumble.

Oft in Romans I reid,

"Airly sporne, lait speid." Gawan and Gol. iii. 18.

Mr. Pinkerton leaves this word for explanation. But there seems little difficulty. It certainly means, to stumble; as stumbling in the beginning of a journey, or of any undertaking, has been generally accounted a bad omen.

Chaucer uses the term, as signifying to strike the foot against any thing.

The miller sporned at a ston,

And down he fell backward.—— Reves T. v. 4279.

A.S. sporn-an, primarily to kick, to wince, whence E. spurn; and secondarily, to stumble at, or hit against. Su.G. spiern-a, Isl. spirn-a, to kick. Ihre gives sporre, a spur, as the root.

SPORNE, part. pa. v. to spare. Spared. S.

SPORRAN, s. The leathern pouch, or large purse, worn by Highlanders in full dress, hanging before. S.

SPOURLIT, part. pa. Speckled; spotted. V. SPRU-TILLIT.

To SPOUSE, v. a. To put out one's fortune to nurse. S.

SPOUSING, part. adj. Of or belonging to a bride. S.

SPOUT, s. The Sheath, or Razor-fish, S.; Solen vagina, Linn.

"Solen, the sheath, or razor-fish; our fishers call them spouts." Sibb. Fife, p. 135.

"The razor, (solen, Linn. Syst.) or, as we call it, the spout-fish, is also found in sandy places." Barry's Orkney.

SPOUT, s. A sort of boggy spring in ground, S.

"The land abounds with bogs and springs, or what husbandmen call spouts." P. Lunan, Forfars. Statist. Acc. i. 443.

SPOUTY, s. Springy; marshy, S. See Sup.

"Where the soil was spouty, at the skirts of the hills, covered drains have been made; but in the clay land drains are all open." P. Lecropt, Perth. Stirl. Statist. Acc. xvii. 48.

SPOUTINESS, s. State of having many boggy springs. S.

SPOUTIE, adj. Vain; foppish. S.

SPOUTROCH, s. Weak thin drink. S.

SPOUT-WHALE, s. A name for the porpoise. S.

SPRACK, adj. Lively; animated. S.

To SPRACKLE, v. n. To clamber, S. V. SPRATTLE.

SPRAICH, SPRACH, SPREICH, s. 1. A cry; a shriek; the noise made by a child, when weeping, S. B.

Before him cachand ane grete flicht or oist
Of foulis, that did hant endlang the coist,
Quhilkis on thare wyngis sore, dredand his wraik, Skrymmis here and thare with mony spreich and craik. Doug. Virgil, 417, 1.

Anone thay hard sere vocis lamentabill,
Grete walyng, quhimpering, and sprachis miserabill.

Ibid. 178, 41.

This, as Rudd. observes, notwithstanding the obliquity, is perhaps from A.S. spraec, Belg. spraec, speech, discourse, Germ. sprech-en, Su.G. spraek-a, to speak, to converse. The A.S. term is itself used nearly with as great latitude. For it also signifies, strife, controversy, plea; hence sprec, the forum, or place of public controversy; all from the idea of speaking, as mall, the place of meeting, from Su.G. mael-a, loqui, maele, vox, sermo. It must be observed, however, that Su.G. sprak-a signifies strepere. It is properly used as to the fire, while it makes a noise on the hearth, and throws forth sparks, Ihre; to crackle, Wideg.

2. A collection; a multitude; the term being used obliquely, from the idea of the noise made.

A spraich of bairns, a great number of children, Ang.

To SPRACH, v. n. To cry with a voice of lamentation, Ang.

To SPRACKLE, v. n. To clamber. S.

SPRAIGHERIE, SPREAGHERIE, SPRECHERY, s. Moveables of a rather inferior kind, such, especially, as, from the original signification, may have been collected in the way of depredation. S.

SPRAYNG, SPRAING, s. 1. A long stripe or streak, used in relation to streaks of different colours, S.

Up has scho pullit Dictam, the herbe swete,
Of leuis rank, rypit, and wounder sare,
Wyth sproutis, spraingis, and vanyis ouer al quhare.

Doug. Virgil, 424, 28.

The twynkling stremouris of the orient
Sched purpouir sprayngis with gold and asure ment.

Ibid. Prol. 399, 27.

2. A ray. 3. A tint; Spraisings, tints; shades of colour. S.

"There was seen in Scotland, a great blazing star, representing the shape of a crab or cancer, having long spraisings spreading from it." Spalding's Troubles, i. 41.

In Gl. expl. "rays." But this does not exactly express the meaning.

Rudd. thinks that it may be deduced from spray, a twig, q. sprayings, as the Lat. call such garments virgata, Virg. Æn. 8, 660, virgata sagula, i. e. tartan plaids. Propert. virgatae braccæ, i. e. tartan trews.

But it is evidently from A.S. spraeng-an, to sprinkle, Teut. spreng-en, id.; also, variare, variegare; Su.G. spreng-a, conspergere, whence Ihre derives isprengd, variegatus, maculis conspersus. Alem. kispranet, aspersus, variegatus. Hence also O.E. sprene, spreyne, conspergere; sprant, sprent, spreyned, conspersus. V. Lye, Addit. Jun. Etym. vo. Sprene. Also vo. Sprinkle, it is observed that Belg.

sprengel-en, signifies variegare; and Dan. sprinkled, guttatus, variegatus.

According to the most simple form of dyeing, this diversity of colours is produced by sprinkling.

SPRAING'D, SPRAINGIT, part. adj. Striped; streaked, S. V. the s. See Sup.

"I had nae mair claise but a spraing'd faikie." Journal from London, p. 8.

To SPRRAINT, v. n. To run, or rather spring forward. S.

To SPRANGLE, v. n. To struggle to spring away. S.

SPRAT, SPREAT, SPRETT, SPRIT, SPROT, s. A coarse kind of reedy grass, that grows on marshy ground, S.; jointed-leaved rush. See Sup.

"Juncus articulatus.—Sprett. Scot. Aust." Light-foot, p. 1131. This name is common in S.

"That species of grass, which grows on marshy ground, commonly called spratt, is much used for fodder. It is somewhat remarkable, that the land where it grows, though not subject to be overflowed with water, bears annual cropping, without being manured or pastured, except in the latter end of the year." P. Kirkpatrick-Juxta. Dumfr. Statist. Acc. iv. 518.

"On part of it grows a coarse kind of grass called sprett, which is cut by the farmers for hay." P. New Luce, Wigtons. ibid. xiii. 583.

"The floors [were] laid with green scharets and spreats, medwarts and flowers, that no man knew whereon he yeid, but as he had been in a garden." Pitscottie, p. 146.

They are called sprotes, Ang. Shirr. writes sprit.

Perhaps from A.S. sprauta, sprote, surculus, virgultum, a twig; or rather, Isl. sproti, a reed, which occurs in the comp. term gunn-sproti, arundo bellica, Gl. Gunnlaug, S. Hence, SPRITTY, adj. Full of sprats or sprits, S.

Till spritty knowes wad rair't and risket.

Burns, ii. 143.

To SPRATTLE, v. n. To scramble; to sprawl, S. See S.

There ye may creep, and sprawl, and sprattle,
Wi' ither kindred, jumpin cattle. Burns, iii. 229.

— Why sould they then attempt to sprattle,
In doggrel rhyme?

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, i. 190.

Sprackle is used in the same sense.

Sae far I sprackled up the brae,
I dinner'd wi' a lord.

Burns, i. 138.

Perhaps from Teut. spertel-en, Belg. spartel-en, to shake one's legs to and fro; in reference to the exertion of the limbs in scrambling.

SPRATTLE, s. A scramble; a struggle; a sprawl. S.

SPRAUCH, s. A sparrow. V. SPRUG. S.

To SPRAUCHLE, SPRAUGHLE (gutt.), v. n. To climb with difficulty. 2. To force one's way through under-wood or any similar obstruction. 3. To sprawl. S.

To SPREAD bread. To make bread and butter. S.

SPRECHERIE, s. V. SPRAIGHERIE. S.

SPRECKL'D, adj. Speckled, S.

Alas! it's no thy neebor sweet,
The bonnie lark, companion meet!
Bending thee 'mang the dewy weet!

Wi' spreckl'd breast.

Burns, iii. 201.

The spreckl'd mavis greets your ear.

Su.G. sprecklot, id. Fergusson's Poems, ii. 92.

SPRECKLY, adj. Speckled. V. SPRECKL'D. S.

SPREE, s. 1. Innocent merriment, Loth. See Sup.

2. Sport a little riotous or disorderly; an uproar. S.

This, like a variety of other words peculiar to this district, has most probably been introduced by the French during their long residence here; from esprit, spirit, vivacity, smartness of humour.

SPREE, adj. Trim; gaudy, S.B.; a term exactly corresponding to E. spruce. Sprey, id. Exm. See Sup.

It may be deduced from the origin given by Seren. to E. spruce, and with more verisimilitude. Sw. spraeg, formosus. Spraecht et spraeg, clarus et splendens (de pannis.)

Junius derives spruce from A.S. sprytt-an, Belg. spruyt-en, germinare, pullulare, q. bene pasti ac validi, spruze and lustie young fellows. But this is a deviation from the dress, to the bodily habit of the wearer.

SPREITH, SPRETH, SPRAITH, SPREATH, SPREICH, s. Prey; booty; plunder.

Stude tho
Phenix and dour Vlixes, wardenis tway,
For to obserue and keip the spreith or pray.
Togidder in ane hepe was gadderit precius gere,
Riches of Troy, and vthir jowellis sere,
Reft from all partis.— Doug. Virgil, 64, 12.

Swne eftyr thai
Held downwart in-to the town thare way,
And tuke thare spreth and presoneris.
— Of that spreth mony war rychd thare.

Wyntown, viii. 42. 51. 57.

"A party of the Camerons had come down to carry a spreath of cattle, as it was called, from Morray." P. Abernethy, Moray, Statist. Acc. xiii. 149, N.

Spraith occurs, Barbour, v. 118. Edit. 1620, instead of reff in MS.

We come not hidder with drawin swerde in handis,
To spulye templis, or richis of Libia,
Nor by the coist na spreich to drive away.

Doug. Virgil, 29, 38.

Rudd. gives spreith as S., observing, that it is probably the same originally with E. prey, Fr. proye, Arm. preidh, all from Lat. praeda, with the sibilant prefixed. Perhaps immediately from Ir. and Gael. spre, spreidh, cattle. V. SPLECHRIE.

To SPREITH, SPRETH, v. a. To take a prey; to plunder.
Thai folk ware all that nycht sprethand;
Thai made all thairis that thai fand.

Wyntown, viii. 42. 55.

To SPREND, v. n. To dart forward with a spring. S.
SPRENT, pret. v. 1. Did spring; leaped; started.

As quha vnwar tred on ane rouch serpent,
Ligand in the bus, and for fere bakwart sprent,
Seand hir reddy to stang.— Doug. Virgil, 51, 47.

2. Did run; darted forth.

Sprent thai samyn in till a ling.

Barbour, xii. 49. MS.

And nethes fast eftir hir furth sprent
Enee, perplexit of hir sory case.

Doug. Virgil, 180, 29.

3. To rise up; to ascend.

Redolent odour vp from the rutis sprent.

Ibid. Prol. 401, 37.

A.S. spring-an, Teut. spreng-en, to spring.

Thair speris in splendris sprent.

Gawan and Gol. ii. 24.

It seems doubtful, whether this signifies, did spring, or did split. If the latter, allied to Su.G. spraeng-a, diffundere; part. spraengd; a derivative from spring-a, salire. It may be observed, however, that lhre gives the following as one sense of spring-a itself. Dicitur etiam springa de rebus, quae subita vi dissiliunt.

SPRENT, s. 1. A spring; a leap.

Bot the serpent woundit and all to schent

Ylowpit thrawis and writhis with mony ane sprent.

Doug. Virgil, 392, 7.

2. "Scot. we use the word sprent, for the spring, or elastick force of any thing;" Rudd.

3. Any elastic body.

The back sprent of a clasp knife, is that spring which rises up in the back part of the knife when it is opened, S. Hence,

4. Metaph. The back-bone is called the back-sprent, as producing the elastic motion of the body, S.

5. The clasp of iron that fastens down the lid of a chest or trunk, entering an aperture through which the bolt of the lock passes, S.

"In December this year a key and sprent band were added to the Locksmith's essay." Transact. Antiq. Soc. Edin. p. 174. V. STENT, s. 2.

This is evidently the same with Su.G. sprint, a bolt, bar, or any thing that shuts in, to prevent separation. lhre mentions splint as the same; and expl. it as properly denoting the nail which joins the axle of a carriage to the beam. He derives splint from split, separation, disjunction. But as the signification of the word is directly the reverse, it is more natural to view splint as corr. from sprint, and the latter as a derivative from spring-a, to spring; especially as it appears from the use of the part., that S. sprent has undoubtedly this origin.

To SPRENT, v. n. To spring; still in common use. S.

Annas, I grant to the, sen the diceis

Of my sory husband Sycheus, but leis,

Qubare that our hous with broderis deid was sprent;

Onlie this man has moued mine entent.

Doug. Virgil, 100, 3.

Chaucer, spreint, id. from A.S. spreng-an, Teut. spreng-en, spargere.

SPRENT, s. An opening. S.

SPRET, s. Jointed-leaved rush. Also Sprit. S.

SPRETE, s. Spirit.

— Him bereft was in the place richt thare

Bayth voce and sprete of lyffe.—

Doug. Virgil, 328, 6.

SPRETY, adj. Sprightly; spirited, S. sprity.

Ful eith it is for til assale and se,

Quhat may our sprety force in the mellé.

Doug. Virgil, 376, 23.

SPRETIT, adj. Spirited; inspired.

"This victorie wes sa plesand to all the army of Scottis, that every man was spretit with new curage." Bellend. Cron. B. xiv. c. 10.

SPRETT, s. Jointed-leaved rush. V. SPRAT.

To SPREUL, v. n. To sprawl; to scramble.

Doun duschit the beist dede on the land can ly,

Spreuland and flychterand in the dede thrawis.

Doug. Virgil, 143, 51.

To SPREWL, v. n. To sprawl; to struggle. S.

SPREWL, s. 1. A struggle. 2. One who is not easily overcome with difficulties, who makes a hard struggle. S.

SPRIG, s. A thin nail, without a head, S.; apparently from its resemblance to the point of a sprig or shoot. S.

To SPRIG, v. a. To fix with nails of this description. S.

To SPRIKKLE, v. n. To flounce; to flounder about. S.

SPRING, s. 1. A quick and cheerful tune on a musical instrument, S. See Sup. 2. The music of birds. S.

— Orpheus mycht reduce agane, I gess,

From hell his spouses goist with his sueit stringis,

Playand on his harp of Trace sa plesand springis.

Doug. Virgil, 167, 6.

Than playit I twenty springis perqueir.

Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 263.

Hence the proverb, "Auld springs gie nae price;" Ramsay's S. Prov. p. 17.

Thus denominated, either from its exhilarating influence, or because it is customary to dance to a tune of this description; Germ. spring-en, salire, saltare.

SPRINGALD, SPRINGEL, s. A youth, or stripling. See S.

Seis thou yone lusty springald or yonkere,
That lenys hym apoun his hedeles spere.

Doug. Virgil, 192, 30.

Chaucer, springold, Spenser, springal; from spring, germinare, q. viri germen vel surculus; Lye Addit. Jun. Etym.

SPRINGALL, adj. Belonging to a state of adolescence. S.

SPRINGALD, SPRYNGALD, s. 1. An ancient warlike engine, supposed to have resembled the cross-bow in its construction, used for shooting large arrows, pieces of iron, &c.

He gert engynys, and cranys, ma,
And purwayit gret fyr alsua;
Spryngaldis, and schot, on ser maneris,
That to defend castell afferis,
He purwayit in till full gret wane.

Barbour, xvii. 247.

This, in Edit. 1620, is altered to fyre-galdes.

Hence spryngald gaynyhè, the shot of a large cross-bow.

Willame of Dowglas thare wes syne

Wyth a spryngald gaynyhè throw the thè.

Wyntown, viii. 37. 59.

This, in Scotichron. ii. 331., is telo albalastri. Godscroft, when giving an account of the same fact, says; "He returned to the siege of Saint Johnstoun, where (as he was ever forward) he was hurt in the leg with the shot of a crossbow going to the Scalade." Hist. Dougl. p. 72.

2. Improperly used, as denoting the materials thrown from this engine.

Stanys and spryngaldis thai cast out so fast,
And gaddys of irne, maid mony goym agast.

Wallace, viii. 776. MS.

In Edit. 1648, it is changed to, "Stones of springholds."

There can be no doubt that this term is immediately from Fr. espringalle, "an ancient engin of warre, whereout stones, pieces of iron, and great arrowes were shot at the wals of a beleagured towne, and the defenders thereof;" Cotgr.—Froissartes, Vol. i. cap. 144. Et fit le chastel asseoir droit sur le ville, du costé de la mer, et le fit bien pourvoir de Pringalles, de bombardes, d'arcs et d'autres instrumens. Ubi legendum Espringalles, ut cap. seq. et 191. Du Cange. L.B. springald-us. Charta Edw. II. Reg. An. 1325, ap. Rymer. Tom. iv. p. 140. Victualium, ingeniorum, springaldorum, et aliarum rerum nostrarum, &c. P. 142. Springaldos, balistas, arcus, sagittas, ingenia, et alias hujusmodi armaturas, pro munitione castrorum et villarum.

Springolds is used in the same sense by Chaucer, Rom. Rose, v. 4191.

The origin is uncertain. It seems to have been written, in a more early period, springardus, springarda. V. Du Cange, vo. Spingarda. This learned writer, in explaining the word Muschetta, says; Ut a falconibus venaticis machinas tormentarias Falcones et Falconia appellarunt; ita et muschetas, quo nomine dicuntur sparvarii masculi, vulgo mouchets: Germanis vero Sprintz, unde Springalles et Espringales, ejusmodi machinae, quibus emitti muschetas, innuit Guignevilla.

Grose has observed, to the same purpose, that "the espringal was calculated for throwing large darts, called muchettae; sometimes, instead of feathers, winged with brass; these darts were also called viretons, from their whirling about in the air." Milit. Antiq. i. 382.

The idea mentioned by Du Cange, is at least highly probable; that, as some kinds of artillery were called Falcons, from the birds of prey of this name, that of Muschetta was borrowed from the Fr. designation of the Sparrow-hawk. It has been suggested to me by a friend, not less distinguished by his learning than by his rank, that here perhaps we have the origin of the E. term musket, as denoting one species of fire-arms. At first it denoted what was thrown from an engine; and by a common metonymy, the term may have been transferred from the effect to the cause. We have a similar change in the use of the very term under consideration: for we have seen that spryngalds is sometimes used to denote the materials thrown from the engine of this name.

It seems most probable, that the spryngald has been denominated from its elastic force, as throwing out missile weapons with a spring; especially as Germ. spreng-en, a v. formed from spring-en, saltare, is used in relation to military operations, signifying, to spring a mine, to blow up, pulvere pyrio evertere.

To SPRINKIL, SPRYNKIL, v. n. To move with velocity and unsteadiness, or in an undulatory way.

Al thoct scho wreil, and sprynkil, bend and skip,
Euer the sarer this Erne strenis his grip.

Doug. Virgil, 392, 10.

This refers to the motions of a serpent.

For to behald it was ane glore to se

— The siluer scalit fyschis on the grete,

Ouer thowrt clere stremes sprinkilland for the hete.

Ibid. 400, 6.

Rudd. expl. sprinkilland, "gliding swiftly with a tremulous motion of their tails; Scot. Bor. call it spartling."

Either a deriv. from Teut. sprenghen, salire; or allied to sprengkel-en, in the sense of variegare, because of the inconstant motion referred to. Spartle is evidently synon. with Teut. spertel-en, agitare sive motare manus pedesque; et palpitare.

SPRIT, s. Jointed-leaved rush. S.

SPRITTY, adj. V. under SPRAT.

SPRITHY, adj. Full of sprats or sprits. Syn. Spritty. S.

To SPROSE, v. n. 1. To make a great show, to have an ostentatious appearance, S. 2. To commend one's self ostentatiously, and at the expense of truth. 3.

To magnify in narration; to lie from ostentation. S.

This is evidently allied to E. spruce. V. SPREE.

SPROSE, s. 1. Ostentatious appearance. 2. A bravado. S.

SPROSIE, adj. Ostentatious in language; much given to commendation of one's self; bragging. S.

SPROT, s. A kind of grass. V. SPRATT.

SPROT, s. Refuse of plants; broken grains of trees, or chips of wood struck off by the tool of a carpenter, gathered for fuel. S.

SPROTTEN, adj. Made of sprots. S.

SPRUCE, s. A name for Prussia in our old writers. S.

SPRUSSE, adj. Of or belonging to Prussia. S.

SPRUG, s. A sparrow. S.

Ibid. 211, 46.

From Teut. sproetel, lenigo, a freckle: or Fland. sprietel-en, spargere, dispergere; according to the idea remarked in the formation of the synon. term Sprayng, q. v.

SPUDYPOCH, s. 1. Any sputtering produced by ignition. 2. A small quantity of moistened gunpowder, in form of a pyramid, to be ignited at the top. 3. One of diminutive size, who speaks or acts with rapidity. S.

SPUG, s. A sparrow, S.B. perhaps rather a cant term for this bird, used by children.

SPULE, SPOOL, s. A weaver's shuttle, S. See Sup.

Spool is used in E. for the reed on which the yarn is winded, and which is inserted in the shuttle.

Su.G. spole, Isl. L.B. Ital. spola, Belg. schiet-spoel, Ir. spol, Fr. espaulée, Ital. espolin, a shuttle. Germ. spule is synon. with the E. word.

SPULE-FITTED, adj. Splay-footed; having the feet turned outwards, twisted out like a weaver's spool. S.

SPULE-BANE, s. The shoulder-bone, S. V. SPALD.

To SPULYE, SPULYIE, v. a. 1. To spoil; to lay waste, S. 2. To carry off a prey, S. See Sup.

Of silly Troy, quhilk is to rewyne brocht.

Doug. Virgil, 154, 26.

Fr. spol-ir, Lat. spol-iare.

SPULYE, SPULYIE, SPULYIE, s. 1. Spoil; booty, S.

Ane huge honour and laud ye sall of this Report, and richt large spulye bere away.

Doug. Virgil, 102, 55.

2. The taking away, or intermeddling with, moveable goods in the possession of another, without either the consent of the other, or the order of Law. S.

SPULYIEMENT, s. Spoil. S.

SPULYEAR, s. A depredator.

—“Quhether gif the persoun spulyeit and hereit, hes just action to persew sic Scottismen spulyearis, for restorance of thair gudis agane, and satisfioun for the dampnageis done to thame, or not?” Acts, Mar. 1551. c. 13. Ed. 1566.

SPUNG, s. 1. A purse; properly, one which closes with a spring, S.

In this sense Lord Hailes is inclined to understand the word as used, Bannatyne Poems, p. 160.

Ane pepper-polk maid of a pedell,
Ane spounge, ane spindill wantand ane nok.

V. Note, p. 294.

— Wickedly they bid us draw
Our sillar spungs.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 307.

2. A fob or breeches pocket, S.

This man may beet the poet bare and clung,
That rarely has a shilling in his spung.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 353.

“In Scotland the word spung is still used for a fob.” Bannatyne Poems, Note, p. 294.

This is radically a very ancient word; being evidently from Moes.G. pugg, apparently pron. like A.S. Su.G. pung, a purse, a pouch. Purses of old were generally worn before; as the watch-pocket is in our time.

What if this should be the origin of the E. v. sponge, rendered, “to suck in as a sponge, to gain by mean arts,” Johns.? Thus its proper sense would be, to empty one's purse.” V. the v.

To SPUNG, v. a. To pick one's pocket, S.

Another set, of deeper dye,
Will try your purse to catch;
And, if you be not very sly,
They'll spung you o' your watch.

R. Galloway's Poems, p. 94.

SPUNGE, s. The putrid moisture, resembling saliva, which issues from the mouth, nostrils, eyes, ears, &c. after death. Syn. Dive. S.

To SPUNGE, v. n. To emit this moisture. S.

SPUNK, SPUNKE, SPONK, s. 1. A spark of fire, or small portion of ignited matter, S. See Sup.

Of the fals fire of purgatorie,
Is nocht left in ane sponke.

Spec. Godly Sangs, p. 17.

“The coolness of the good old General, and diligence of the preachers, did shortly cast water on this spunk, beginning most untimeously to smoke.” Baillie's Lett. i. 210.

Sibb. derives it from Sw. spinga, segmentum ligni tenuius. But its origin undoubtedly is Teut. vonck, id. scintilla, strictura; Kilian. Germ. funck, funk, scintilla, igniculus, Wachter: P and F being often interchanged, and S prefixed in some Goth. dialects, although wanting in others. Both Wachter and Ihre derive these terms from Moes.G. fon, fire; as in Germ. K is often used as a termination forming a diminutive. V. Wachter, Proleg. s. vi. also before Letter K.

2. A very small fire is called a spunk of fire, S. Gl. Sibb.

— We'll light a spunk, and, ev'ry skin,
We'll rin them aff in fusion

Like oil, some day. Burns, iii. 67.

I see thee shiverin, wrinklet, auld,
Cour owre a spunk that dies wi' cauld.

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, i. 18.

3. A match; a bit of wood, the ends of which are dipt in sulphur, S. Gl. Sibb. Tinder, Gl. Shirr. See Sup.

“Spunk, a word in Edinburgh which denotes a match, or any thing dipt in sulphur that takes fire: as, Any spunks will ye buy?” Johns.

This is the only sense in which it is allied to the E. term spunk, expl. “rotten wood, touch-wood;” Johns.

Teut. voncke, any thing which easily catches fire; vonckehout, a match, q. spark-wood.

4. Life; spirit; vivacity. One is said to have a great deal of spunk, who possesses much liveliness, S. See S.
The term is used indeed in a variety of senses, the same as those in which E. spirit occurs. It denotes activity, mettle; sometimes, laudable elevation of spirit, as opposed to meanness; also, quickness of temper, that sort of irritability which will not brook an insult, S.
5. Used as a personal designation, denoting quality. A mere spunk, a lively creature; especially applied to one who has more spirit than bodily strength, or appearance of it, S.
6. A small portion of any principle of action, or intelligence, S. as containing an allusion to a spark hid among ashes. Thus we say of a dying person, "He has the spunk of life, and that is all," S.
And loe, while ev'n his lifes last spunke is spent,
The temples vaile is to the bottome rent.
More's True Crucifixe, p. 56.
And gif this Sait of Senetours gang down,
The spunk of justice in this regioun,
I wait not how this realme sall rewlit be.
Maitland Poems, p. 336.
"That sworne enemie of Christ Jesus, and unto all in quhome ony spunk of knawlege appeirit, had about that same tyme in prisoun divers." Knox's Hist. p. 40.
"If wee haue na other knawledge, but the knawledge quhilk we haue by nature, & be the light and spoonkes that are left in nature, our conscience will answere na farder, but to that knawledge." Bruce's Serm. on the Sacr. 1590. Sign. N. 8, a.
"As there are some spunkes of light left in nature, sa there is an conscience left in it." Ibid. N. 8, b.
"I dare not say, but all this time Peter caried a good heart towards his Lord, & a spunke of faith & a spunke of loue in the heart, albeit his faith and loue were choked; —& this litle spunke of loue in the man was smothered." Rollocke on the Passion, p. 41.
7. A very slender ground or occasion.
"Be this slauchter thir two pepyll that was so lang confiderat togidder fra the tyme of Fergus the first kyng of Scottis to thir dayis ay risyng vnder ane blude, amite and kyndnes, grew in maist hatrent, aganis otheris for ane spunk of small occasioun of vnkindnes, throw quhilk nane of thame apperit to ceis fra vter exterminiou of other." Bellend. Cron. B. vi. c. 6.
Nulla, aut levi admodum occasione; Boeth.
To SPUNK out, v. n. To be gradually brought to light, S.
This phrase is used as to any thing, kept secret for a time, which at length comes to be known, as it were insensibly, by whispers or insinuations. It contains an obvious allusion to a spark, at first hid among ashes, which, being fanned by the air, begins to shew itself. Teut. vonck-en, scintillare. See S.
- SPUNKIE, s. 1. A small fire. S.—2. The name vulgarly given to Will i' the wisp, or an ignis fatuus, S. evidently from its luminous appearance.
That bards are second-sighted is nae joke,
And ken the lingo of the spiritual folk;
Fays, Spunkies, Kelpies, a', they can explain them.
Burns, iii. 53.
An aft your moss-traversing Spunkies,

3. Transferred to an erroneous teacher, who misleads souls by false doctrine. S.—4. A lively young fellow, S.
An' frae his bow, the shafts, fu' snack,
Pierc'd monie a spunkie's liver.
Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, i. 148.
5. A person of an irritable temper. S

Burns, iii. 23.
- To SPUR, v. n. To scrape, as a hen or cock on a dunghill. S.
- SPUR-BAUK, s. A cross beam in the roof of a house. S.
- SPURDIE, s. Any thin object that is nearly worn out, S.B.
Su.G. spord, Isl. spord-ur, the extremity; or rather, spiaur, a worn out garment; detrita vestis; G. Andr. p. 221.
- To SPURE, v. a. "To spur," Rudd.
Ane fare bricht sterne, rynnand with bemes clere,

First saw we licht, syne schynand went away,
And hid it in the forest of Ida,
Merkand the way quhiddir that we suld spure.
Doug. Virgil, 62, 10.
Rudd. is evidently mistaken. For it has the sense of A.S. spur-ian, spyr-ian, investigare, explorare. Signan-temque vias, Virg. Nolit ille ullam semitam unquam relinquere, aer he gehede thaet he hwile aefter spyrede; priusquam ille deprehenderet quod ille prius insectatus est. Boet. ap. Lye. V. SPERE.
- SPURE, pret. of v. SPERE, SPEIR. Asked; inquired. S.
- SPURGYT, pret. Sprung; spread itself.
Fra a Sotheroune he smat off the rycht hand.—
Than fra the stowmpe the blud out spurgyt fast,
In Wallace face aboundandlye can out cast.
Wallace, vi. 164. MS.
This seems from the same source with S. Spurge, q. v.
- SPUR-HAWK, s. The Sparrow-hawk, Loth. Falco nisus, Linn.
Spurre-hoeg, Brunnich; Dan. spurve-hoeg, id.
- SPURKLE, s. A sort of spatula; a broad-mouthed stick used for beating flax, or in thatching. S.
- To SPURL, v. n. To sprawl. S.
- SPURMUICK, s. A particle; an atom. S.
- SPURTILL, SPURTLE, s. 1. A wooden or iron spatula, for turning bread, is called a spirtle, Ang. a bread spaad, i. e. spade, Aberd.
— Ane spurtill braid, and ane elwand.
Bannatyne Poems, p. 159.
"Flat iron for turning cakes," Lord Hailes. Note, p. 292. The epithet braid confirms this definition.
Perhaps it is used in the same sense in the following passage.
"For the Priest, said he, whose dewtie and office it is to pray for the pepill, standis up one Sondag, and cryis, 'Ane hes tint a spurtill; thair is a flaill stoun beyoind the burne; the Gudwyif of the uthir syid of the gait hes tint a horne spone; Godis malesoun and myne I give to thame that knawis of this geir, and restoiris it not.'" Knox's Hist. p. 14.
The Eng. Editor, not understanding the term, has substituted spindle, Ed. 1644. p. 17.
2. A circular stick with which pottage, broth, &c. are stirred, when boiling, S. a theivil, S.B.
It's but a parridge spurtle
My minnie sent to me. Ritson's S. Songs, i. 234.
Apparently from A.S. sprytle, assula, a splinter or slice of wood. This properly applies to the term in sense 1., which seems the original one. Sibb. however, refers to Teut. spatel, spatula.

This seems synon. with E. squash, q. to keep down the clover by cropping it. Squash is from the same fountain with quash; A.S. cwys-an, to press. Perhaps Su.G. ques-a, quis-a, to wound, and Alem. quezz-en, allidere, are allied.

S. sweesh signifies to beat. But this seems a corr. of E. switch.

To SQUISS, v. a. To beat up. A squissed egg, apparently, one that is beaten up, as for a pudding.

About their ears, and burnt them stab and stow.

Hamilton's Wallace, p. 259.

Stab is used in the sense of stake, as expl. above. Stow may be synon. with Isl. stoo, Su.G. sto, A.S. stow, a place, a mansion; from Su.G. staa, stare. Thus, the phrase stab and stow may signify, not merely the burning of the stakes used in erecting a house, but the total destruction of the mansion or place itself.

Or it may be the same with Su.G. stuf, the remaining part of any thing cut off. Thus stubbe, corresponding to our stab, signifies a stake or the trunk of a tree; stuf, the remaining part of the stock with the roots, Isl. stofn; from stufw-a, amputare. V. Ihre, vo. Stufwa, p. 805. The S. use a similar phrase, Stick and stow; also, Stoop and roop, q. v.

STAB-CALLANT, s. A short thick fellow. S.

STAB-GAUD, s. A set line for catching fish, fixed to a small stake (stab) of wood pushed into the bank to preserve the line from being carried off. S.

STABLE, s. "Seems station, where the hunters placed themselves, to kill the animals, which were driven in by the attendants;" Gl. Wynt.

The stable, and the setis sete,

Hym-self wyth bow, and wyth werslete,

Fra slak til hyll, oure holme and hycht,

He trawalyd all day. Wyntown, vi. 16. 15.

Stablestand, i. e. stabilis statio, vel potius stans in stabulo; hoc est, in loco ad stationem composito. Spelm. Gl. in vo.

"Stable stande is, when a man is found in any forrest at his standing, with a crosse bowe bent, ready to shoote at any deere, or, with a long bow, or els, standing close by a tree with greyhounds in his lease, ready to let slip, this is called by the auncient Forresters Staple stand." Manwood's Forrest Laws, ch. 18. s. 9.

STABLE, s. That part of a marsh in which, if a horse is foundered, he is said to be stabled for the night. S.

STABLER, s. A stable-keeper. S.

STACK, s. A columnar rock, Caithn. A precipitous rock rising out of the sea, Shetl. S.

"Near Freswick castle the cliffs are very lofty. The strata that compose them lie quite horizontally in such thin and regular layers, and so often intersected by fissures, as to appear like masonry. Beneath are great insulated columns, called here Stacks, composed of the same sort of natural masonry as the cliffs." Pennant's Tour in S. 1769. p. 196.

"Near Wick is the creek of Staxigoe, deriving its name from a pyramidal rock, commonly called here a stack, formed in the mouth of a creek." P. Wick, Statist. Acc. x. 5.

Teut. staeck, column. Isl. staksteinar, prominentes lapides; G. Andr. Gael. stuaic seems used nearly in the same sense; "a little hill or round promontory," Shaw.

To STACKER, STAKKER, STACHER, v. n. To stagger. It is now pron. in the last mode, S. See Sup.

STADGE, s. A pet; a fit of ill-humour. S.

STAFF AND BATON. A symbol of the resignation of property or feudal right into the hands of another, according to the laws of Scotland. S.

STAFF AND BURDON. To be at the Staff and the Burdon, with one,—to quarrel, or come to an open rupture, with one. V. BURDON. S.

STAFF AND STING. To pay with Staff and Sting,—to beat severely; to give a complete cudgelling. S.

STAFF. To set up one's Staff,—to take up one's residence in any place. S.

STAFFAGE, STAFFISCH, adj. 1. Obdurate; obstinate; applied to a horse that throws his rider.

—Thymetes, ane man of full grete fors,

Casting from his staffage, skeich, and hede strang hors. Doug. Virgil, 422, 18.

Equus sternax, Virg.

Rudd. derives it from Ital. staffeg-iare, to be dismounted, or lose the stirrup, from staffa, a stirrup; Sibb. from Teut. stief, rigidus, durus, stief-hals, obstinatus.

It seems the same with S.B. Stivage, q. v.

2. "Dry in the mouth, or not easily swallowed, like pease meal bannocks;" Gl. Sibb.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 400, 21.

Rudd. derives it from Fr. estage, a storey of a house. But perhaps we ought to refer to Germ. steg, Isl. stigi, gradus, scala; steig-en, ascendere.

To STAGE,* v. a. To accuse without formal trial. S.

To STAGE about, v. n. To saunter; to walk about rather in a stately or prancing manner. S.

STAGGERIN' BOB. The veal of a newly dropped calf, or the animal itself. V. SLINK. S.

STAGGERS, s. pl. A disease of sheep. S.

STAGGIE, adj. Applied to grain when it grows thin. S.

STAGGRELL, s. A person who staggers in walking. S.

To STAGHER (gutt.), v. n. To stagger. V. STACKER. S.

STAY, STEY, adj. 1. Steep; difficult of ascent, S.

The dale wes strekyt weill, lk hycht;

On athyr sid thar wes ane hycht;

And till the watre doune sum deill stay.

Barbour, xix. 319. MS.

Ane port thare is, quham the est fludis has

With rochis set forgane the streme full stay.

Doug. Virgil, 86, 22.

"We say Scot., a stay brae, i. e. a high bank of difficult ascent," Rudd.

In cart or car thou never reestit;

The steyest brae thou wad hae fac't it.

Burns, iii. 144.

Mr. Tooke quarrels with Rudd. for the account he gives of this term, but without the least reason. The precise meaning of stay, as still used, is steep. This corresponds to the sense Mr. Tooke has given of his radical word A.S. stig-an, ascendere; and to the use of O.E. stye, in many of the passages he has quoted. V. Divers. Purley, ii. 276—280. 285.

Teut. steygh, steegh, acclivus, leviter ascendens cum acumine, praeceps; Moes.G. staigs, A.S. stige, stie, Dan. stie, Su.G. stig, Teut. steghe, stijghe, Germ. steg, semita, a footpath; A.S. stey, a bank, Gl. Aelfric. Moes.G. steig-an, Germ. Su.G. stig-a, steig-en, primarily to go; in a secondary sense, to ascend. Belg. stijg-en, saepius est scandere, designatque nisum ascendentium descendendumve; Jun. Gl. Goth. Isl. stig, ste, scando.

2. Lofty; haughty; metaph. applied to demeanour.

Be ye humane, our humill thai will hald you.

Gif ye beir strange, thai yow esteme owr stay;

And trows it is ye, or els sum hes it tald you.

Maitland Poems, p. 158.

Teut. steegh is rendered pertinax, obstinatus. But it is probably abbreviated from stedigh, of which it is given by Kilian as the synonyme.

STALE, STAILL, STEILL, STALL, s. 1. A body of armed men, stationed in a particular place; such especially as lie in ambush.

Thom Halyday in wer was full besye;
A buschement saw that cruell was to ken,
Twa hundreth haill off weill gerit Inglissmen.
Wncle, he said, our power is to smaw,

Quhare oft in stail or enbuschment may ly,
Quhidder men list the bargane to abyde,
Owthir on the richt hand or on the left side;
Or on the hicht debate thame for the nanys.

Doug. Virgil, 382, 37.

This seems the primary sense. Rudd. derives it from Fr. estal, a stall, as a stall in a fair, &c. But it is more nearly allied to A.S. stall, Germ. stall, stelle, Su.G. staell, locus; especially as the Germ. word is used to denote a military station, a permanent camp. Hence herstall, Franc. heristal, castra, from her, an army, and stal, a station; Vi vocis est mansio, vel statio exercitus, locus castrorum vel castrametationis. Nam stall haec omnia significat; Wachter. L.B. heristall-us. V. Du Cange; Schilt. p. 454.

I need scarcely observe, that the terms mentioned above are nearly allied to Germ. stell-en, Su.G. staell-a, ponere, collocare. That stail properly denotes a body of armed men posted in a particular station, appears from its connexion with stolling, in the second extract. V. STOLLING.

2. The centre, or main body, of an army, as distinguished from the wings.

"Our Scottish men placed themselves very craftily. For George Earl of Ormond was in the steill himself, and the Laird of Craigie-Wallace, a noble knight of sovereign manhood, was upon the right wing; the Lord Maxwell and the Laird of Johnstoun on the left wing." Pit-scottie, p. 30.

"The Scottish army assembled upon the west side of Esk, above Musselburgh, and were mustered to the number of forty thousand men, whereof ten thousand were in the vanguard under the Earl of Angus; other ten thousand were in the rear with the Earl of Huntley. The Governor himself commanded the Steil or Battle, wherein were twenty thousand men." Ibid. p. 193.

"Against them a number went out of Maxwell's army, who, encountring with a great company, were beaten and chased back to the stall or main host, which by their breaking in was wholly disordered." Spotswood, p. 401.

3. Any ward or division of an army, in battle array.

To seik Wallace thai went all furth in feyr;
A thousand men weill garnest for the wer,
Towart the woode rycht awfull in affer,
To Schortwode Schaw, and set it all about,
Wytht v staillis that stalwart was and stout;
The sext thai maid a fellone range to leid.

Doug. Virgil, 385, 32.

4. A body of armed men keeping close together in array, as distinguished from scattered parties.

—And ordaynyt that the maist party
Off thair men suld gang sarraly
With thair lordis, and bald stale;
And the remanand suld all hale

Hence,

5. In stale, in battle array.

—Kyng Pentheus, in his wod rage dotand,
Thocht he beheld grete routis stand in stale
Of the Eumenides, furies infernale.

Doug. Virgil, 116, 21.

And hendmest wardis swarmed all yferis;
So thik in stale all merrit wox the rout,
Vneis mycht ony turne his hand about.

Ibid. 331, 53.

6. Transferred to hunting, as denoting the principal body employed in the chase.

"At last quhen he [David I.] was cumyn throw the vail that lyis to the gret eist fra the said castell, quhare now lyis the Cannogait, the stail past throw the wod with sic noyis & din of rachis and bugillis, that all the bestis wer rasis fra thair dennys." Bellend. Cron. B. xii. c. 16.

7. Stail, or adj. stail skep of bees, S. denominated perhaps as being the principal skep, or mother-hive, from which all the other swarms have, as it were, been sent off only as flying parties.

It may, however, be merely the E. adj. stale, as signifying old, long kept.

STALE, s. A place of confinement; a prison.

—Thou has fund in stale

This mony day withoutin werdis wele,
And wantis now thy veray hertis hele.

King's Quair, v. 18.

The ingenious annotator views it as the same with stail, Doug. Virgil, 382, 37. V. preceding word, sense 1. It seems rather allied to A.S. horsa steal, carceres, Gl. Aelfr. p. 68. V. STELL.

Wandris, as ane stirkin hynd, quham the stalkar,
Or scho persaif, from fer betis with his flaine
Amyd the woddis of Crete. Doug. Virgil, 102, 6.

2. More commonly, one who ranges, illegally killing deer.

"The Justice Clerk sall inquire of Stalkaris, that slayis deir. — And alsone as ony stalkar may be conuict of slaughter of deir, he sall pay to the king xl. s. And the halders and mantenaris of thame sall pay ten pundis." Acts, Ja. I. 1524, c. 39. Ed. 1566.

Ye lyke twa stalkers steils in cocks and hens.

Dunbar, Evergreen, ii. 55.

A.S. staalc-an signifies, pedetentim ire. But the term seems immediately formed from E. stalk, "to walk behind a stalking horse or cover."

The following description of a stalking horse may perhaps be acceptable to some readers.

"The stalking horse was a horse originally trained for the purpose, and covered with trappings, so as to conceal the sportsman from the game he intended to shoot at. It was particularly useful to the archer, by affording him an opportunity of approaching the birds unseen by them, so near that his arrows might easily reach them; but as this method was frequently inconvenient, and often impracticable, the fowler had recourse to art, and caused a canvass figure to be stuffed, and painted like an horse grazing, but sufficiently light, that it might be moved at pleasure with one hand. These deceptions were also made in the form of oxen, cows and stags, either for variety or for convenience sake. In the inventories of the wardrobe belonging to King Henry VIII. we frequently find the allowance of certain quantities of stuff, for the purpose of making 'stalking coats and stalking hose for the use of his majesty.' STALLANGER, s. 1. A foreign merchant, who sets up a stall in a burgh for the sale of his goods during a fair or market.

"Ilk stallenger sall either agree with the Provost of the burgh, in the best forme as he may, or else ilk mercat day sall pay to him ane halfepennie." Skene, Verb. Sign. vo. Stallangiatores. L.B. stallangiar-ius is also used, Iter Camerar. c. 39, s. 63.

2. A person who, for a small consideration, is allowed to carry on business by a corporation for one year. S.

STALLINGER SYLVER. Money payable for the privilege of erecting a stall in a market. S.

STALLYCH, s. A single thick stalk of grain. S.

STALLIT, part. pa. Set; placed.

Wele maistow be a wretchit man callit,
That wantis the confort that suld thy hert glade,
And has all thing within thy hert stallit,
That may thy youth oppressen or defade.

V. STELL, v. King's Quair, v. 19.

STALWART, adj. 1. Brave; courageous.

It seems to admit this sense in the following passage.

And now Amycus harme complenis he,
Now him allone the cruell fate of Licus,
Now strang Gyane, now stalwart Cloanthus.

Doug. Virgil, 19, 52.

—Fortemque Gyan, fortemque Cloanthum. Virg.

The only difficulty as to this sense is that fortem, as applied to Gyan, is rendered strang.

According to the learned Hickes, either from A.S. stal-ferhth, chalybei animi homo, sive fortis; or stathol-ferhth, stabilis et firmi animi vir; or stolt-ferhth, magnanimus.

Perhaps the word might have its origin from A.S. stalwort, stalwyrth, captu dignus, ejus estimationis ut operae pretium sit surripere; from stael-an, to carry off clandestinely, and weorth, worth. Thus the Sax. Chron. speaks of stalwart ships. They brought to London, tha the thaer stael-wyrthe waeron, i. e. those ships that were worth carrying off. In like manner, stael-herge, stael-herige, denote a praedatory troop. Drehtan tha hergas West-Seaxna lond mid stael-hergum; Vexarunt praedatores West-Saxonum terram cum praedatoriis turmis; Chron. Sax.

2. Strong; powerful.

— This wourthy stalwart Hercules,
That on this wise had Cacus set in pres,—
Eftir al kynd of wappinnis can do cry.

Doug. Virgil, 249, 45.

3. Strong; like wicht, applied to inanimate objects.

— With wapynnys stalwart of stele
Thai dang apon, with all thair mycht.

Barbour, xiii. 14. MS.

Ful lichtlie vp he hynt his stalwart spere.

Doug. Virgil, 409, 38.

We the beseik that schaw also thou wald
To vs irkit sum strenth and stalwart hald.

Moenia, Virg.

Ibid., 70, 10.

4. Hard; severe. As we say, hard fighting, in modern language.

He fand thare stalwart barganyng.

Nevyretheles thare duelt he,

And oft in gret perplexyté. Wyntown, viii. 38. 194.

5. Violent, as applied to stormy weather.

I met dame Flora in dull weed disguised;

Which, into May, was dulce and delectable,

With stalwart storms her sweetness was surprised;

Her heavenly hues were turned into sable.

Lyndsay's Dream, Ellis, Spec. ii. 24.

The word occurs in O.E., either in the first or second sense.

For Godes loue, staleworthe men, armeth yow faste.

R. Glouc. p. 18.

The kyng adde by hys vorste wyf one stalwarde sone,
That, vor his stalwardhed, longe worth in mone.

Ibid. p. 293.

STALWARTLY, adv. Bravely; courageously.

Owtakyn thair mony barownys,

And knychtis that of gret renowne is,

Come, with thair men, full stalwartly.

Barbour, xi. 234. MS.

Oure king and his men held the felde

Stalworthly, with spere and schelde.

Minot's Poems, p. 15.

To STAM, v. n. To strike down the feet with violence in walking. To gang stammin' forward. S.

STAMFISH, STAMPHISH, adj. 1. Strong; robust; coarse. 2. Unruly; unmanageable. S.

STAMMAGER, s. A busk; a stomacher. S.

STAMMAGUST, s. A disgust at any kind of food, S.B.

The first part of the word is evidently from stomach, S. stammack, often pron. q. stamma. May gust be traced to Fr. goust, a taste, as it is common in S. to speak of an ill gust?

STAMMAREEN, s. The helmsman's seat in a boat. S.

STAMMEL, adj. A coarse kind of red. S.

To STAMMER, v. n. To stagger, S. See Sup.

"The horse stammers;" Sir J. Sinclair's Observ. p. 94.

Isl. stumr-a, collabi; stumra yfer, Verel.

STAMMERAL, s. One who falters in speech. S.

STAMMEREL, s. Friable stone, S.B.

STAMMERERS, s. pl. Detached pieces of limestone. S.

STAMMYNG, adj. Of or belonging to taminy. S.

To STAMMLE, v. n. To stumble into a place into which one ought not to have gone. S.

STAMP, s. A trap; as, a rotten-stamp, a trap for rats; a fowmart-stamp, a trap for catching polecats, S. See S.

Su.G. stampa, also stappa, Dan. stomp, id. It appears that the term has been originally applied to the traps or snares laid for larger animals. Hence Dan. reffestomp, a snare for foxes, G. Andr. p. 38. vo. Boge. Ihre derives the Su.G. term from stamp-a, to stamp or tread, because it is by treading on the snare that the animal is caught. In the same manner Su.G. falla, S. faw, a trap, receives its name from something falling, so as to confine or catch the prey.

STAMP, s. 1. The cramp. 2. A qualm of conscience. S. —“There was many noblemen of both kingdoms that were not on this course, nor privy to the same, while about this council-day, this clandestine band began to break out and be divulged, whilk took some stamp in their stomachs, thinking they were not tied to this privy covenant, and would rather follow the king nor the chief leaders of this covenant.” Spalding’s Troubles, ii. 15.

Perhaps stop, demur, Belg. Fris. stemp-en, sistere; or struggle, qualm, Isl. stymp, lucta levis.

To STAMP out, v. a. To bring any business to an issue. S.

STAMP-COIL, s. A small rick of hay. S.

To STAMPLE, v. n. To walk in a tottering way. S.

STANCE, s. 1. A site; a station, S.

Thence to the top of Law-Tay did we hie,
And from the airie mountaine looking down,
Beheld the stance and figure of our town.

Muses’ Threnodie, p. 152.

“He very judiciously remarked, that every man’s house was built upon a rock, meaning that every man had a dry gravelly stance whereon to found his house.” P. Cromdale, Moray, Statist. Acc. viii. 253.

2. An area for building. S.—3. A pause; a stop, S.

But here my fancie’s at a stance;

Are we to have a war with France?

Cleland’s Poems, p. 11.

To put to a stance, to stop, to suspend.

Their sad misfortunes, and unlucky chance,

—Had put their measures to a stance.

Hamilton’s Wallace, p. 167.

The term is Fr. evidently from Lat. sto, stare, to stand.

STANC’D, part. pa. Stationed.

For he ne’er advanc’d

From the place he was stanc’d,

Till no more to do there at a’ man.

Ritson’s S. Songs, ii. 66.

To STANCHE, v. a. To assuage; to pacify.

O stanche your wraith for schame, or al is lorne.

Fr. estanch-er, id.

Doug. Virgil, 420, 3.

STANCHELL, s. A kind of hawk.

The tarsall gaif him tug for tug,

A stanchell hang in ilka lug.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 21.

Thair wes the herraldis foe the hobby but fable;

Stanchellis, Steropis, scrycht to thair sterne lordis.

Houlate, iii. 2.

This seems to be the Kestrel, falco tinnunculus, Linn., the Steingal of Turner, the Stannel, Stone-gall, of Willoughby.

It is the same species, I suspect, which in Ang. is called Willie-whip-the-wind, from the action of its wings on the air. For Pennant observes concerning the kestrel; “This is the hawk that we so frequently see in the air fixed in one place, and as it were fanning it with its wings; at which time it is watching for its prey.” For the same reason it seems to be denominated in Germ. Windwacht, Wannenweher, and by Willoughby Windhover. V. Penn. Zool. pp. 195, 196. V. WINDCUFFER.

The origin of the name is uncertain. It seems the same with Stainyell, q. v.

STANCH-GIRSS, STENCH-GIRSS, s. Perhaps Yarrow or Millfoil; used for closing green wounds. S.

Richt swiftly on thare rasis can thay rak,

The stand thay leif, and flaw furth with ane crak,

As wyndis blast, ettland to the renkis end.

Teut. stand, statio.

Doug. Virgil, 138, 17.

2. A stall; as, a stand in a market, a book-stand, &c. S.

“The stranger merchand, quha hes ane covered stand in the market day, or ane buith in the market day; for his custome sall giue ane halfe pennie.” Burrow Lawes, c. 40.

3. Also the goods exposed for sale at a stand. S.

STAND, s. A barrel set on end for containing water, or salted meat, S.; as, a water-stand, a beef-stand. See S.

Sibb. refers to Gael. stannadh, a tub.

STANDFULL, s. A tubful of any thing. S.

STAND, s. An assortment, consisting of various articles, necessary to make up a complete set in any respect; as, “A stand of armour,” “a stand of harness,” &c. S.

STAND of claise. A complete suit of clothes. S.

“Proclamation was made at the cross of Aberdeen, commanding both Newtown and Oldtown to furnish out to General Lesly’s army, and to ilk soldier thereof, their share of a stand of gray cloaths, two shirts, and two pair of shoes, under the pain of plundering.” Spalding’s Troubles, i. 289.

To STAND one, v. a. To cost; as, It stood me a groat, it cost fourpence, S.

This is a Germ. idiom; Mir hoch zu stehen; it costs me a great price.

To STAND at. To feel such disgust at any food as not to be able to take it; as, My stammak stude at it. S.

To STAND, v. n. To cost. “This house stood me £900.” S.

To STAND our, or o’er, v. n. 1. To remain unpaid, or undetermined. 2. To go on without adjournment; used in relation to a court. S.

To STAND up, v. n. 1. To hesitate; to stickle; to be irresolute. 2. To trifle; to spend time idly. S.

To STAND yon, or yont, v. n. To stand aside; to get out of the way. Stand yont, and let them pass. S.

STAND, s. To have Stand, to continue; to remain. S.

STANDAND STANE. An obelisk of stone. S.

STANDAST, adj. Perhaps standing upright. S.

STAND BED, STANDAND BED, STANDING BED. A bed with posts; not one which is folded up. S.

STANDFORD, s. An opprobrious designation, of uncertain meaning.

—Foryeing the feris of ane lord,

And he ane strumbell, and standford.

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 111.

Perhaps q. one of so mean extract, that he must stand at a distance in the presence of men of rank; A.S. stand-an feoran, stare procul.

STAND HARNES. Perhaps, armour of mail. S.

STANE, s. A stone, S. steen, S.B.

Sum straik with slings; sum gadderit stanis;

Sum fled and weil eschenit.

Chr. Kirk, st. 15.

Moes.G. stains, A.S. stan, Su.G. sten, anc. stain, id. The S.B. pron. corresponds more to Alem. Isl. stein, Belg. steen.

STANECAST, s. The distance to which a stone may be thrown, S.

STANE-CHAKER, STONE-CHECKER, s. 1. The stone-chatter, S. Motacilla rubicola, Linn.—2. The Wheat-ear. S.

The "Stonechecker arrives about the first of May; disappears about the middle of August." P. Campsie, Stirlings. Statist. Acc. xv. 326.

It seems to have borrowed the northern name of the Motacilla oenanthe, or Wheat ear; Sw. stensquette, Norw. steen squette, Germ. steinschwaker. The form of the word refers us to Sw. squaett-a, to squirt. But perhaps the name was formed from squattra, to chat, to chatter. V. CHACK, CHECK, s. and SCHAKER-STANE.

STANERAW, STEINRAW, s. Rock-liverwort, S.

The term Steinraw is appropriated S.B. and Orkn. to the Lichen Saxatilis, Linn.

"In some places it is covered with lichen saxatilis,—throughout the north of Scotland called Steinraw." Neill's Tour, p. 50.

"Lichen saxatilis. Grey blue pitted Lichen, Anglis. Staneraw, Scotis australibus." Lightfoot, p. 816.

From A.S. stan, or Isl. stein, stone, and rawe, hair, q. the hair of stones; or Belg. ruyg, mossy.

STANE-BARK, s. Liverwort. S.

STANE-BITER, s. The cat-fish. S.

STANE-CLOD, s. A stone-cast. S.

STANE-DEAD, adj. Quite dead; having no sign of life. S.

STANE-DUMB, adj. Totally silent. S.

STANEDUNDER, s. An explosion of fire-arms. S.

STANEGRAZE, s. A bruise from a stone. S.

STANE OF PILLAR. V. PILLAR. S.

STANE-STILL, adj. or adv. Totally without motion. S.

STANEWARK, s. Building of stone; masonry. S.

STANE-WOD, adj. Stark mad. S.

STANERIE, adj. Gravelly. V. STANNERY.

STANERS, STANNERS, STANRYIS, s. pl. The small stones and gravel on the margin of a river or lake, or forming the sea-beach; applied also to those within the channel of a river, which are occasionally dry, S.B. See S.

Even when the gravel is mingled with larger stones, the term is applied in common to both.

"I socht neir to the see syde. Than vndir ane hingand heuch, I herd mony hurlis of stannirs & stanis that tumlit doune viht the land rusche, quhilk maid ane felloune sound, throcht virkyng of the suelland vallis of the brym seye." Compl. S. p. 61.

— The new cullour alichting all the landis,
Forgane the stanryis schene and beriall strandis.

Doug. Virgil, 400, 10.

"Dugar—hastily takes both the ferry-boats, and carries over his men to the staners whilk is in the midst of the water of Spey." Spalding's Troubles, i. 198.

"Interrogated, Whether, when they fish upon the south side of the Allochy Inch, they do not draw their nets in general upon the stanners, and not on the grass-grounds? depones, That at low water the net comes ashore on the stanners, and at high water on the grass." State, Leslie of Powis, &c. 1805. p. 94.

"The whole of the poles are fixed on stanners, flooded over at the lowest tides." Ibid. p. 109.

Sibb., without the slightest reason, views stannirs and stanryis as essentially different, expl. the latter as probably signifying "small pools." The term is used not only S.B., but in E. Loth. Ayr. and some other parts of the W. of S.

Rudd. views it as perhaps q. standers, i. e. standing or lying within the current, or from stane, stone, q. a collection of stones. But the term is purely Su.G. Stenoer, gravel; glarea, locus scrupulosus, Ihre; comp. of sten, a stone, and oer, gravel, literally, gravel-stones. Ihre remarks, that oer was anciently written eir, which forms the last syllable of our word; and aur, which also denotes stones thrown into the water for making a ford. Teut.

oever, litus, ripa, seems to have a common origin. This nearly corresponds to Isl. eyre, as defined by G. Andr. p. 60. Ora campi vel ripae plana et sabulosa.

Basnage, in his History of the Jews, during the fourth century, says, that they were dismissed from the city of Constantinople, and that a place was given them "in the Stenor, that is, in the space that was left void betwixt the city and the sea." He adds, that here they remained in the year 1204, when the Crusaders went into the Holy Land; and quotes Harduin, as saying that they "lived in a place called Stanor;" B. vi. c. 14.

As it is evident that this is not a Gr. word, there seems to be little reason to doubt that it is Gothic. Not only is this the very term by which a Scandinavian, or any native of the N. of Scotland, would describe such a situation; but we learn from Ihre, that it is very ancient. We are not less certain, that the language of the Thracian Bosphorus, where this designation occurred, was Gothic; as that of Crim Tartary still is, according to Busbequius and other writers.

STANNER-BED, s. A bed of gravel, S.B.

STANNERY, STANERIE, adj. Gravelly, S.

The beriall stremis rinnand our stanerie greis,
Maid sober noyis.

Palice of Honour, ii. 42. Edit. 1579.

"Depones, That at low water the said dike is dry: That it lies towards the river, and then turns up by the margin of it, and it lies upon a stannery and sandy bed." State, Leslie of Powis, &c. 1805. p. 109.

"One meets with boggy, stannery, croft, and clay grounds, almost in every farm." P. Campsie, Stirlings. Statist. Acc. xv. 316.

To STANG, v. a. To sting, S.

As quha vnwar tred on ane rouch serpent,
Ligand in the bus, and for fere bakwart sprent,
Seand hir reddly to stang, and to infek.

Doug. Virgil, 51, 48.

Sw. staang-a, to gore with horns, seems radically the same, as derived from sting-a, to prick. Isl. stanga is rendered not only, impeto, but, pungo, transpungo, G. Andr. p. 223.

To STANG, v. n. To thrill with acute pain, S. A. Bor. My teeth's stangin, my tooth is thrilling, a phrase used with respect to the toothache.

STANG, s. 1. A sting, the act of stinging, S.

2. The sting of a bee, serpent, &c. the instrument of stinging, S.

First athir serpent lappit like ane ring,
And with thare cruell bit, and stangis fell,
Of tendir membris tuke mony sory morsell.

Doug. Virgil, 45, 52.

3. An acute pain; as, a stang of the toothache, stound, synon.

The lady was leech, and had skil,
And spared not, but laid him till,
Both for the stang, and for the stound,
And also for his bloody wound. Sir Egeir, p. 26.

4. The beard of grain, S.B. synon. Awn, q. v.

To STANK, v. n. To ache smartly; to thrill, Fife; synon. stound.

This seems to be a frequentative from A.S. stin-gan, Su.G. sting-a, pungere; or more immediately from S. stang, to thrill with pain. In the same manner Su.G. stick-a, pungere, has been formed from sting-a, id.

STANG, s. "A long pole or piece of wood, like the staff of a carriage," Gl. Sibb. S. A. Bor. See Sup.

Isl. staung, Su.G. staang, Alem. Dan. stang, Belg. stange, A.S. staeng, steng, styng, Ital. stanga, C.B. ystang, id. These terms have been generally traced to Su.G. sting-a, Moes. G. sting-an, pungere, ferire, as originally denoting a sharp-pointed pole, (contus.) Hence the phrase, To RIDE THE STANG. The man who beats his wife, is sometimes set astride on a long pole, which is borne on the shoulders of others. In this manner he is carried about from place to place. See Sup.

Grose mentions the same custom as remaining in Yorkshire; where the woman, who beats her husband, is also punished in the same way. Prov. Gl. in vo.

It is also mentioned by Brand.

"There is a vulgar custom in the North, called riding the stang, when one in derision is made to ride on a pole, for his neighbour's wife's fault. This word Stang, says Ray, is still used in some colleges in the University of Cambridge, to stang scholars in Christmass time, being to cause them to ride on a colt-staff, or pole, for missing of chapel." Popular Antiq. pp. 409, 410.

This, as Callander observes, "they call riding the stang," and is a mark of the highest infamy.—"The person," he subjoins, "who has been thus treated, seldom recovers his honour in the opinion of his neighbours. When they cannot lay hold of the culprit himself, they put some young fellow on the stang, or pole, who proclaims that it is not on his own account that he is thus treated, but on that of another person whom he names." Anc. Scot. Poems, pp. 154, 155.

I am informed that, in Lothian, and perhaps in other counties, the man who had debauched his neighbour's wife, was formerly forced to ride the stang.

But very frequently, another is substituted, who is said to ride the stang on such a person.

They frae a barn a kabar raught,
Ane mounted wi' a bang,
Betwixt twa's shoulders, and sat straught
Upon't, and rade the stang
On her that day.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 278.

— On you I'll ride the stang.

R. Galloway's Poems, p. 12.

Here we have evidently the remains of a very ancient custom. The Goths were wont to erect, what they called Nidstaeng, or the pole of infamy, with the most dire imprecations against the person who was thought to deserve this punishment; Isl. nidstong. He, who was subjected to this dishonour, was called Niding, to which the E. word infamous most nearly corresponds; for he could not make oath in any cause. The celebrated Islandic bard, Egill Skallagrim, having performed this tremendous ceremony at the expense of Eric Bloddox, King of Norway, who, as he supposed, had highly injured him; Eric soon after became hated by all, and was obliged to fly from his dominions. V. Ol. Lex. Run. vo. Nijð. The form of imprecation is quoted by Callander, ut sup.

To STANG, v. a. To subject a person for some misdemeanour to the punishment of riding the stang. S.

STANG of the trump. A proverbial phrase, used to denote one who is preferred to others viewed collectively; as the best member of a family, the most judicious or agreeable person in a company, S.B. synon. tongue of the trump, S.

It is apparently borrowed from the small instrument called a trump or Jew's harp; of which the spring, that causes the sound, seems formerly to have been denominated the stang.

STANG, or STING, s. The Shorter Pipe fish, Syngnathus acus, Linn.

"Acus vulgaris Oppiani, the Horn-fish or Needle-fish;" Sibb. Fife, p. 127. "Our fishers call it the Stang or Sting;" Note, ibid.

In Sw. it has a similar designation; Kantnaal, the border pin or needle.

STANGRIL, s. An instrument for pushing in the straw in thatching; synon. stobspade, Ang. also Sting, q. v.

STANGILLANÉ, s. A saint anciently honoured in S. S.

STANIRAW, adj. A term to denote the colour produced by dying with Rock-liverwort. V. STANERAW, S.

STANK, s. 1. A pool or pond, S.

Thay boundis, coistis, and the chief cieté,
Diuers spyes send furth to serche and se,
And fand ane stank that flowit from an well,
Qubilk Numicus was hait.—

Doug. Virgil, 210, 15.

Rudd. derives it from Lat. stagn-um, L.B. stangn-um. Su.G. staang, Arm. stanc, Gael. stang, Fr. estang, Ital. stanga. A.S. stanc, pluvicinatio, seems allied.

It is used to denote a fish-pond.

"All thay that brekis—stankis, and takis or steilis furth of the samin—pykis, fische—salbe callit and punist thair-foir, as for thift at particular diettis." Acts, Ja. V. 1535. c. 13. Edit. 1566.

Stagne is synon. in O.E.

They gatte eche daye, with nettes & other wile,
The fishe in stagnes and waters suffiance.

Hardyn's Chron. Fol. 8, b.

2. The ditch of a fortified town.

Into this toune, the qubilk is callt Berwik,
Apon the se, it is na uther lyk,
For it is wallit weill about with stone,
And dowbil stankis cassin mony on!

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 65.

STANKED, part. pa. Surrounded with a ditch. S.

STANK-HEN, s. Supposed to be the Common Water-Hen. S.

STANK-LOCHEN, s. A stagnant lake. S.

To STANK, v. n. To have long intervals in respiration; to gasp for breath; to be threatened with suffocation, S.B. Also, to pant. See Sup.

Isl. Su.G. stank-a, to pant for breath, to fetch the breath from the bottom of the breast, as persons in sickness use to do, Verel.; a frequentative from staen-a, sten-a, Germ. sten-en, suspirare; to breathe, to sigh.

To STANK, v. n. To thrill with pain. V. under STANG, s. 2.

To STANK, v. a. To fill; to satisfy; to sate with food. S.

STANNYEL, s. A stallion. S.

STANNING GRAITH. The posts and other fixtures of a mill, in contradistinction to Gäin gear, q. v. S.

STANSSOUR, s. An iron bar for defending a window, S. stenchin; A. Bor. stansion.

Out off wyndowis stanssouris all thai drew,
Full gret irn wark in to the wattr threwe.

Wallace, iv. 507. MS.

"They brake down beds, boards, cap ambries, glass windows, took out the iron stenchens," &c. Spalding's Troubles, i. 157.

Fr. estançon, a prop.

STANT, s. A task; a stint. V. STENT, s.

To STANT, v. n. To stand; to be situated.

The houssis of famell, or the nobyl stede
Of thy kynrent stant vnder mont Ida.

Doug. Virgil, 430, 13.

Now grave I stant in Naplis the cieté. Ibid. 486, 9.

Sometimes it is used for standeth, as in Chaucer.

It stant not with the as thou wald, perchance.

King's Quair, v. 16.

STAP, STEPPE, s. A stave, S. Su.G. staaf, id. See S.

"I'll tak a stap out of your coag;" S. Prov.; I will put you on shorter allowance.

"That the sieppes of the said firlot, be of the auld proportion, in thicknesse of baith the buirdes, ane inche & ane halfe." Acts, Ja. VI. 1587. c. 114.

To FA' A' STAPS. To become extremely debilitated. S.
To STAP, v. a. 1. To stop; to obstruct, S. 2. To thrust; to insert. 3. To cram in; to stuff, S.

Then I'll bang out my beggar dish,
And stap it fou o' meal.

Song, Ross's Helenore, p. 143.

— The meal kist was bienly stappet.

R. Galloway's Poems, p. 10.

Su.G. stopp-a, obturare; metaph. farcire. See Sup.

To STAP, v. n. To step; to move slowly. S.

To STAP forward. To advance. S.

STAPALIS, s. pl. Fastenings.

Throw the stuf with the straik, stapalis and stanis,

— He bewit attanis. Gawan and Gol. iii. 26.

Teut. stapel-en, stabilire; allied perhaps to A.S. stapul, stipes, a log set fast in the ground. Here it denotes the nails of the helmet. Stapalis and stanis, both the fastenings and the precious stones.

STAPPACK, s. Meal mixed with cold water; Syn. Drammack. S.

STAPPIL, s. The stopper of any thing; as, the stappil of a mill, the stopper of a horn for holding snuff, S.

Sw. stopp, id. Belg. siopsel, E. stopple.

STAPPIN-STANE, s. A stepping-stone. To stand on stepping-stanes, to hesitate on trifling grounds. S.

STAPPIT HEADS. The same with Crappit Heads. S.

STAPPIN, s. The stuffing prepared for filling those heads.

STAPPLE, s. A handful of thatch for thatching. S.

STAPPLE, STAPPLICK, s. The stalk of a tobacco-pipe. S.

STARE, adj. Stiff; rough.

Bot at the last out ouer the flude yit than Saulfie sche brocht bayth prophetes and man,
And furth thame set amyde the foule glare,
Among the fauth rispis harsh and stare.

Doug. Virgil, 178, 17.

Rudd. inclines to trace it to the same origin with E. stern. Sibb. views it as probably for sture. But it is synon. with Su.G. Germ. starr, rigidus, durus. The Carex in Su.G. is denominated starr, Isl. staer, quum herba sit perquam rigida; Ihre. Starr korn, barley, either, says Ihre, because it abounds with awns, or as distinguished from softer grain, and especially from oats.

STARF, pret. v. Died. V. STERUE.

STARGAND, adj. Perhaps err. for sterand, q. v.

Gawyn was gaily grathed in grene,—

On a stargand stede that strikes on stray.

Sir Gawan and Sir Gal. ii. 14.

STARGLINT, s. A shot star. S.

To STARK, v. a. To strengthen.

And Jhon Wallang was than schyrreff off Fyff,

Till Wallace past, starkyt him in that stryff.

Wallace, xi. 892. MS.

Sw. staerk-a, Teut. starck-en, to strengthen, to confirm, to fortify.

STARK, adj.* Potent; intoxicating; applied to liquors.

"Stark mychty wynis, and small wynis."

STARN, STERNE, s. 1. A star, S.B.

Fyrst as a sterne, syne as a mone,

And weill bradder thareftir sone.

Barbour, iv. 127. MS.

Lanterne, lade sterne, myrrour, and A per se.

Doug. Virgil, Pref. 3, 11.

Stern, id. O.E. Minot, p. 10.

Sum lay stareand on the sternes.

Moes.G. stairno, Isl. stiorn-a, Su.G. stierna, Precop. stern, Dan. stierne, id. The S. word has less affinity to the A.S., which is steorra. Rudd. thinks that all these may be deduced from Gr. αστηρ, id. Vossius views Pers. ster, id. as the root. But it seems highly probable, that, as in early ages, mariners had no other means of directing or steering their course, but by the stars, the very name given to these heavenly bodies might originate from this circumstance. A.S. steorra, stella, might thus be formed from steor-an, regere, gubernare. Isl. stiorna, equally denotes a star, and the rudder of a ship, whence E. stern; and both seem to be formed, as well as Su.G. stierna, a star, from styr-a, gubernare, and Moes.G. stairno, from sciur-an, regere.

2. A single grain; a particle.

No a starn meal, not a particle of meal, S. It is sometimes applied to liquids.

"Nocht twa mylis fra Edinburgh is ane fontane dedicat to Sanct Katrine, quhair sternis of oulie [oil] springis ithandle with sic abundance, that howbeit the samyn be gaderit away, it springis incontinent with gret abundance." Bellend. Descr. Alb. c. 10.

This term is not now applied to liquids.

3. A small quantity of any thing, S.

A little starnie, a very small quantity, Gl. Shirr.

4. The outermost point of a needle, S.B.

It seems to be merely the term, denoting a star, used metaph., to signify any thing that is very small. Sterne is synon. A. Bor. "Have you a shilling in your pocket? Answ. Sham a sterne, i. e. not one." Lambe's Notes, Battle of Flodden, p. 70.

STARNY, STERNY, adj. Starry, S.

A starny nicht, a clear night, in which the stars are visible.

STARNIE, s. 1. A little star. 2. A very small quantity of any thing dry; as, A starnie o' saut or meal. S.

STARN-LIGHT, STERN-LIGHT, s. 1. The light of the stars.

2. Metaph. the flash of light seen in darkness, when the eye receives a slight stroke. S.

STARNOTING, part. pr. Sneezing.

As wearie men will do.

Burel's Pilgr. Watson's Coll. ii. 34.

Lat. sternut-are; whence Fr. esternu-er. id.

STARR, s. Carex caespitosa, a sedge. S.

START, s. 1. An upright post mortised into the shafts of a cart, into which the boards of the side are nailed.

2. In pl., the pieces of wood which support the aws of a mill-wheel. S.

START, s.* A moment. In a start, in a moment. S.

STARTY, adj. Apt to start; skittish. "A starty horse." S.

To STARTLE, v. n.* To run wildly about, as cows do in hot weather; to be in a mighty bustle. S.

STARTLE-O'-STOVIE, JOCK-AN-STARTLE-O'-STOVIE.

The same with SUMMER-COUTS, q. v. S.

STASHIE, s. Uproar; disturbance; a quarrel. S.

STASSEL, STATHEL, s. 1. The props or supporters used for stacks of grain, to keep them from touching the ground, that they may be out of the reach of vermin, are called stassels or stathels, S.B.

2. The stathel of a stack, the corn which lies undermost, and supports the rest, S.B.; staddle, A. Bor. See S.

Stassal most nearly resembles Belg. stutsel, a support; stathel, A.S. stathel, stathol, a foundation; Isl. studrell, basis, columna. V. STUT, v. and s.

Burns, iii. 219.

Weel staw'd wi' them, he'll never spear
 The price o' being fu'.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 52.

Probably from Belg. staa-n, Su.G. staa, to stand, metaph. used. We have an example of a similar use of the Belg. v. Het tegen me staat; I am disgusted at it, I have an aversion at it. In like manner it is said, S. My heart stands at it, i. e. It is disgusting to my stomach.

STAW, s. "A surfeit; disrelish," Sir J. Sinclair's Observ. p. 129. S.

Frae morn to e'en it's nought but toiling,
 At baking, roasting, frying, boiling;
 An' tho' the gentry first are stechin,
 Yet ev'n the ha' folk fill their pechan
 Wi' sauce, ragouts, and sicklike trashtrie.

Burns, iii. 4.

His father stecht his fortune in his wame,
 And left his heir nought but a gentle name.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 136.

It is sometimes used in a neut. sense, as signifying, to gormandize, to gorge.

Sibb. mentions Teut. stouw-en, stau-en, acervare, accumulare, to which it has considerable resemblance. But it is more immediately allied to stick-en, farcire, saginare turundis; also, aggerare, cumulare; and to O. Teut. staeck-en, stipare, to stuff, to cram, from staeck, stipes.

2. To confine one with a great quantity of body-clothes; also, to confine one's self in a very warm room, S.B.

Germ. stick-en, suffocare, suffocari, seems allied.

3. v. n. To stech in bed, to indulge sloth in bed, to please one's self with the heat, so as to be unwilling to rise, S.B.

STECH, s. 1. A heap, or crowd; a term conveying the idea of many thronged in little room; as, a stech of bairns, a number of children crowded together, S.B.

2. A confused mass; as, a stech of claise, a great quantity of clothes, S.B.; stechrie, id.

3. It also frequently conveys the idea of heat, as naturally connected with that of a crowd, S.B.

To STECH, STEGH, v. n. 1. To puff; to be out of wind; to blow hard, as when one goes up hill. Syn. Pech.

i. e. The place where the foot has been set. V. STEAD.

To STEEK, v. a. To shut. V. STEIK.

To STEEK, v. n. To push; to butt as a cow.

STEEL, s. A stitch. V. STEIK.

STEEL, s. 1. A wooded cleugh or precipice, greater than a Slain. 2. The lower part of a ridge projecting from a hill, where the ground declines on each side.

STEEL, s. The handle of any thing; as of a barrow.

STEEL, FINGER-STEEL, s. A covering for a cut or sore finger. V. THUM-STEIL.

STEEL, s. Stool, Aberd. To won the steel, to be entitled to the stool of repentance.

STEELBOW GOODS. Those goods on a farm, which may not be carried off by a removing tenant, as being the property of the landlord, S. See Sup.

"Till towards the beginning of this century, landlords, the better to enable their tenants to cultivate and sow their farms, frequently delivered to them, at their entry, corns, straw, cattle, or instruments of tillage, which got the name of steelbow goods, under condition that the like, in quantity and quality, should be redelivered by the tenants, at the expiration of the lease." Erskine's Instit. B. ii. T. 6. s. 12.

"The stocking in Sanday, belonging to the proprietor, is called steelbow." P. Cross, Orkney, Statist. Acc. vii. 472.

This term, which appears to be very ancient, may be deduced from Teut. stell-en, Su.G. staell-a, to place, and Teut. bouw, a field, q. goods placed on a farm, or attached to it; or A.S. stael, Su.G. staell, locus, and bo, supellex; q. the stocking of a place or farm. Bo is used in a very extensive sense, as denoting a farm; furniture of any kind; also, cattle; from bo, bo-a, to prepare, to provide. This word, as still used in Orkney, is most probably of Scandinavian origin. It may be merely an inversion of Sw. bo-staelle, a residence, domicilium.

STEELRIFE, adj. Overbearing.

STEEN, s. A spring. Syn. Stend.

STEEP-GRASS, s. Butterwort, S.

"Pinguicula vulgaris. Moan. Gaulis. Steep-grass, Earning-grass. Scotis austral. The Lowlanders believe that the leaves of this plant eaten by cows induce a ropiness in the milk. Probably there may be some foundation for this opinion, considering the known effects of this plant when put into warm milk." Lightfoot, p. 1131.

"The inhabitants of Lapland, and the North of Sweden, give to milk the consistence of cream, by pouring it, warm from the cow, upon the leaves of this plant, and then instantly straining it, and laying it aside for two or three days, till it acquires a degree of acidity. This milk they are extremely fond of." Ibid. pp. 76, 77. V. SHEEP-ROT.

STEEPIL, s. The staple or bolt of a hinge.

STEERING-FUR, s. A slight ploughing.

STEER-PIN, s. A pin in the stilt of a plough.

STEER-TREE, s. The stilt or handle of a plough.

STEETH, s. The bottom; the foundation.

STEEVE, STIEVE, STIVE, adj. 1. Firm; stiff; as, A steeve grup, a firm hold. 2. Applied to trade; as, a steeve bargain, one that cannot be easily broken, S.

3. Firm; compacted; as applied to the frame of an animal; stout; strong, S.

Sax souple hempies, stive an' stark,
Frae ilk side forat stendit.

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, ii. 15.

Thou ance was i' the foremost rank,
A filly buirdly, steeve, an' swank,
An' set weel down a shapely shank.

Burns, iii. 141.

4. Steady; strict in adherence to principle.

5. Trusty; as, a steeve friend, S. See Sup.

6. Sometimes used for obstinate.

A steeve carle, an inflexible man, S.

Germ. steif, firm, stable; A.S. stife, stiff, inflexible.

STIEVELIE, adv. Firmly, S.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 176.

Teut. stad, stede, urbs; hence stad-houder, stede-houder, prorex, legatus.

STEIDHALDERS, s. Perhaps deputies; lieutenants.

To STEIGH, v. n. To groan or pant from great exertion.

STEIGH (gutt.), s. A stifled groan, as if from one in distress, or bearing a very heavy load. Syn. Pegh.

To STEIGH (gutt.), v. n. To look big.

To STEIK, STEKE, v. a. 1. To pierce with a sharp-pointed instrument; to stab; E. stick.

The kingis men sa worthi war,
That with speris, that scharply schar,
Thai stekyt men, and stedis baith,

Till rede blude ran off woundis raith.

Moes.G. stigg-an, A.S. stic-an, stic-ian, Teut. stick-en, Germ. stech-en, Su.G. stick-a, pungere.

2. To stitch; to sew with a needle, S.

His riche arrey did ouer his schulderis hyng,
Bet on ane purpoure claith of Tyre glitteryng,
Fetusly stekit with pirnyt goldin thredis.

V. BEGAIRIES.

Doug. Virgil, 108, 51.

Su.G. stick-a, Germ. stick-en, acu pingere.

3. To fix; to fasten.

Forgane thaym eik at the entre in hy,
The goldin branche he stekis vp fare and wele.

Figere, Virg.

Doug. Virgil, 187, 13.

The proper signification undoubtedly is, to fix on, or by means of, a sharp instrument. Thus it occurs as a v. n.

— Ful dolorously thay se

The twa hedis stekand on the speris. Ibid. 293, 29.

Thus A.S. stic-ian on signifies, inhaerere; Germ. steck-en, Teut. stick-en, figere.

STEIK, STEEK, STYK, s. 1. A stitch, or the act of stitching with a needle, S.

Then up and gat her seven sisters,
And sewed to her a kell;
And every steek that they pat in,
Sew'd to a silver bell.

Gay Goss Hawk, Minstrelsy, Border, ii. 12.

— Still making tight, wi' tither steek,
The tither hole, the tither eik,
To bang the birr o' winter's anger,
And had the hurdies out o' langer.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 89.

"For want of a steek the shoe may be tint," Ramsay's S. Prov. p. 26.

— The best that sewes her any styk,

Takes bot four penys in a wik.

Ywaine, v. 3053.

Ritson's E.M.R. i. 128.

2. The meshes in sewed or netted work; improperly used.

He draws a bonie silken purse,
As lang's my tail, whare, thro' the steeks,
The yellow letter'd Geordie keeks.

Burns, iii. 4.

3. A small portion of work, S.

Sa did our Lord the reprobate ay mark,
As members of sedition and stryfe,
That maisters of ane evil steik of wark
Sould ay detest the godlie upright lyf.

N. Burne, Chron. S.P. iii. 452.

4. To the steeks, completely; entirely.

He brags he'll tak baith hill an' howe,
An' to the steeks us plunder.

A. Douglas's Poems, p. 10.

Doug. Virgil, 164, 4.

"Tavernes sould be steiked at nine houres, and na person suld be found therein." Skene's Acts, Index, vo. Tavernes.

I have observed only one instance of this being used as a v. n.

"When ae door steeks anither opens;" Ramsay's S. Prov. p. 76.

"We say, Scot. to steek the door; He steeked his eyne; A steeked neive;" Rudd.

2. To stop; to choke up; as referring to the course of a stream.

And Bannok burn, betuix the brays,
Off men, off horss, swa stekyt wais,
That, apon drownyt horss, and men,
Men mycht pass dry out our it then.

Barbour, xiii. 338. MS.

Rudd. refers to Teut. stick-en, figere. Sibb. more properly, mentions stek-en [steck-en] claudere ligneis clavis; Kilian. This is evidently from steck, synon. with slotel, a bolt; q. to shut by means of a wooden bar.

But as Teut. steck also signifies, stipes, which is undoubtedly the primary sense, synon. with Su.G. sticka, stake, E. a stake, it is evident that this v. acknowledges the preceding, in its primary sense, as the origin. For what is a stake, but a piece of wood pointed? For it seems admitted on all hands, that stake is from A.S. stic-an, Su.G. stick-a, &c. pungere. This analogy may be remarked in several other Northern verbs: Isl. stiaa, to separate by a pole or stake, from stiaa, a stake; i. e. to steek out, or exclude one from a place, in consequence of its being fenced with stakes: Also stik-a, adactis et impactis palis flumina et freta navibus impervia reddere; Verel. i. e. to steek the channel of a river or frith. May not steck-r, a sheep-fold, be denominated from the idea of its being an enclosure? Perhaps the Germ. phrase, ins gefaengnis stecken, conjicere in carcerem, is allied. There can be no doubt as to Belg. in een klooster ge-stoken, shut up in a cloister. See Sup.

Stocked is used by Chaucer for confined. This seems to correspond to Belg. ge-stoken. Gower uses stoke.

For if thou woldest take kepe,
And wysely coutheest ward and kepe
Thyne eye and eare, as I haue spoke,
Than haddest thou the gates stoke

Fro such foly. — Conf. Am. Fol. 10. b.

Stoken, part. and stak, pret. occur in Ywaine.

Als he was stoken in that stall,
He hard behynd him, in a wall,
A dor opend fair and wele.
And tharout come a damysel,
Efter hir the dor sho stak.

Ver. 695. 697.

Ritson's E.M.R. i. 30.

Gower also uses vnstoken in the sense of opened. Speaking of the avaricious person, he says;
Thus whan he bath his cofer loken,
It shall not after ben vnstoken,
But whan hym lyst to haue a syght
Of golde, howe that it shyneth bright.

Conf. Am. Fol. 83, b.

To STEIK THE GAB. To shut the mouth; to be silent. S. To STEIK, STEEK, v. n. "A' thing that opens and steeks," every thing without exception. S.

STEIK, s. A piece of any thing, as of cloth.

"That in euerie burgh, thair be ane qualifeit man chosin, to seill all claith, and sall haue for his laubouris of ilk steik seilling xiid." Acts, Ja. V. 1540. c. 93. Ed. 1566.

This seems the origin of what is now called stamping cloth.

A.S. sticce, stycce, a part or piece. This might be traced to Su.G. staek-a, decurtare.

To STEIK, v. a. To accommodate; used for Staik. S. STEIK-AND-HIDE, s. The play of Hide-and-Seek. S.

sellade, or steilbonet, with pesane or gorget." Acts, Ja. V. 1540. c. 57. Edit. 1566.

"This deponent abode half an hour or thereby, locked his allane, having his secret, plate-sleeves, sword, and whinger with him, and wanting his steelbonnet." Cromarty's Gowrie's Conspiracy, p. 49.

Isl. stalhufa has the same signification; from stal, steel, and hufa, hat. The ancient Goths and Swedes also called this piece of armour iarnhatt, i. e. an iron hat; in like manner, katilhatt, q. kettle-hat, when made of brass. Priscis Gothis et Sueonibus Galea Iarnhatt vel Katilhatt dicebatur, quod esset ea ferro aut aere, capiti tuendo aptata. Loccenij Antiq. Sueo.G. Lib. iii. c. 2. p. 119. Our term seems to be a translation of Fr. chapelle de fer, which, Father Daniel says, was "a light helmet, without visor or gorget, like those since called bacinets." Grose's Milit. Antiq. ii. 241. 242.

STEILD, part. pa. Set, Wallace, vii. 868. V. STELL.

STEILL MIRROR. A looking glass made of steel. S.

STEIN, s. A stone, S.B. V. STANE.

STEIN-BITER, s. A fish, Orkney; perhaps the lump, Cyclopterus Lumpus, Linn.

"Two of the best kinds of fish we have are the tusk and the stein-biter; but these are seldom caught." P. Birsay, Orkn. Statist. Acc. xiv. 314.

The Swedish name of the lump is Stenbit. It seems to be thus denominated, because it adheres very strongly to the rocks; q. biting the stones. The Wolf fish, Anarchicas Lupus, Linn. is called the Steen-bider, Pontoppidau's Norway.

STEING, s. A pole. V. STING.

STEINRAW, s. Rock Liverwort. V. STANERAW.

To STEIR, v. a. To govern; also, v. n. to stir. V. STERE.

STEIR, adj. Stout; strong.

And after that, within a twentie yeir.

His sone gat up ane stelwart man, and steir.

Priests of Peblis, S. P. Repr. iii. 10.

Su.G. starr, rigidus; Isl. staer-a, sese obfirmare.

To STEIR one's Tail. To bestir one's self. S.

To STEIR the Tyme. To lay hold on the opportunity. S.

STEIT, pret. v. Sir Tristrem, p. 172. V. STOIT.

STEKILL, s. 1. A latch for fastening a door.

Allace, quod scho, quhat sall I do?

And our doure hes na stekill.

Peblis to the Play, st. 22.

2. It seems the same word that is now vulgarly used for the trigger of a musket, S. See Sup.

A.S. sticcel, Teut. stekel, Belg. steekel, aculeus, stimulus, from stek-en, Su.G. stick-a, pungere; also figere.

To STELL, STEIL, STILE, v. a. 1. To place; to set.

Off hewyn temyr in haist he gert thaim tak
Syllys off ayk, and a stark barres mak,
At a foyr frount, fast in the forest syd,
A full gret strenth, quhar thai purpost to bid.
Stellyt thaim fast till treis that growand was.

Wallace, ix. 831. MS.

The Lord Cambel syne hynt it by the bar,
Heich in Cragmor he maid it for to stand,
Steild on a stayne for honour off Irland.

Ibid. vii. 868. MS.

This, in editions, is changed to still.

2. To Stile or Stell cannons, to plant them; to mount them.

"The earl Marischal at Stonehaven had stiled his cartows and ordnance just in their faces."—"They stiled cannons on ilk aue of their mounts for pursuit of the castell." Spalding's Troubles, i. 172. 215.

They stell'd their cannons on the height,

S T E

And show'r'd their shot down in the how.

Minstrelsy, Border, iii. 222.

3. To STELL a gun. To point it; to take aim. S.

4. To fix, "His een war stell'd in his head." S.

5. To make firm or stable; to fix, "Stell your feet." S.

6. To put; used in a forensic sense.

Stelling to the horne, putting to the horn, declaring one a rebel.

"The maist part of all billis, warrants, and chargis, hes ben deliverit and directit to officiaris of arms quha hes execut thame, quhilk hes not only bein very hurtfull and prejudicial to all his Majesty's leigis, in drawing in question diverse and sundrie of the chargis and executions maid be the said officiaris of arms, and by stelling of sundrie persouns to the horne maist priverlie and wranguslie; bot also, and to our particular interest." Act Sederunt, 9th Nov. 1596.

Belg. stell-en, Su.G. staell-a, to place; to put.

Stelling, in the act refered to, cannot surely mean stealing.

STELL-SHOT, s. A shot taken by one who rests his gun on some object for greater accuracy of aim. S.

STELL, s. A prop; a support. S.

STELL, s. A deep pool in a river where salmon lie, and where nets for catching them are placed. S.

STELL-NET, STILL-NET, s. A net stretched out by stakes into, and sometimes quite across, the channel of a river, S. This net is much used in Solway Frith. The fishes are caught in it by the neck.

"A still net has been tried on the lake with some success, but not enough to defray the expence of attendance." P. Strachur, Argyles. Statist. Acc. iv. 557.

This is called stell-fishing.

"There is belonging to the public good of Dingwall, a stell salmon fishery on Conan, or a fishery on that part of the river into which the sea flows." P. Dingwall, Ross, Statist. Acc. iii. 4.

"Culloden has on his property what is called a stell-fishing." P. Petty, Invern. Ibid. p. 29.

It is also written Stale-fishing, q. v. From Teut. stell-en, Su.G. staell-a, to place, the nets being fixed by means of stakes. L.B. estellus, pali in fluvio fixi ad sustinendum rete eisdem annexum in piscium capturam.—Estalaria, id. Fr. estellier & estalee; Carpentier, Suppl. Du Cange.

This is also called a Stent-net, S.B. as being extended and fixed by stakes.

STELL, STILL, STOLL, s. 1. A covert; a shelter, S.A.

"The stock land has been much improved of late, by draining the wet and marshy grounds; by planting clumps of firs, for stells to shelter the flocks in storms; and by enclosing some part of the lands contiguous to the farm houses, for hay to the sheep in severe winters and springs." P. Oxnam, Roxburghs. Statist. Acc. xi. 326.

2. A shelter, or small enclosure for sheep or cattle, S.A. See S.

—Truth maun own that monie a tod,—

In fauld or stell nae lambie worried,

Then aff, leg-bail, directlie hurried.

Teut. stelle, locus tutus. Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, ii. 90.

STELL, adj. Steep. S.

To STELL, v. a. To distil. S.

STELL, s. A still. S.

STELLAR, s. A distiller. S.

STELLAGE, s. The ground on which a market is held. S.

STELLFITCH, STELLVITCH, adj. Dry; coarse; applied to flax or grain that grows very rank, Fife.

Teut. stael, stele, caulis, stipes herbae, whence the E. synon. stalk.

S T E

STELLIFYIT, part. pa. Converted into a star; Lat. stella and fio.

O Venus clere, of goddis stellifyit,
To quhom I yelde homage and sacrifice,
Fro this day forth your grace be magnifyit!

King's Quair, ii. 33.

STELLIONATE, s. A term applied to crimes of fraud which are not specified in our common law. S.

STELLS, s. pl. The indentations made in ice to keep the feet steady in curling. Syn. Hacks. S.

STEM, s. The utmost extent of any thing. One is said to be at one's stem in a journey, when it is not meant to go any farther, Loth.

A.S. stemne, the fixing of time and place, the announcing of any thing as to be done at a certain time; Su.G. staemm-a, staemn-a, to fix a day; Staemma en til sig, to charge one against a particular day. Hence faestnadas-taemma, the day appointed for the celebration of nuptials.

It may, however, be derived from staemm-a, stagnare facio, cohibere.

To STEM, v. a. To stanch, used rather differently from the v. in E.; as, to stem blude, S.

Su.G. staemm-a bloden, to stanch blood.

STEM, s. An enclosure made with stones on the side of a river, into which salmon are driven. S.

STEMING, STEMING, s. The cloth tamine or taminy. S.

STEMPLE, s. A plug. S.

To STENCH, v. a. 1. To call off a dog from pursuing cattle or sheep. 2. To satisfy with food. S.

STENCHEL, STANCHEL, STANCHEON. Stenchels, iron bars fixed in the stonework for securing windows. S.

STENCHEN, s. An iron bar for a window. V. STANSOUR.

To STEND, v. n. 1. To leap; to spring; to move with elastic force, S.

— Things have taken sic a turn
Will gar our vile oppressors stend like flaes,
And skulk in hidlings on the hether braes.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 88.

"To stend, in common use, signifies to stride," Gl. Compl. p. 374. But this does not accurately express the idea.

2. Metaph. to rise to elevation; applied to the mind.

Whase fancy can sae tow'ring stend,
Thy merits a' to trace? Ramsay's Works, i. 119.

Fr. estend-re, Ital. stend-ere, to extend. Lat. extend-ere.

STEND, STEN, s. 1. A leap; a spring, S. See Sup.

Bot fra the hors on fer did him espye
Sa grym of chere stalkand sa bustuously,
For fere they stert abak, and furth can swak
The duke Nipheus wyde apoun his bak,
And brak away with the carte to the schore,
With stendis fell, and mony bray and snore.

Doug. Virgil, 338, 31.

2. Sometimes, a long step or stride, a leap on one foot, S. Rudd.

STENDLING, s. The act of leaping or springing with great force.

"It vas ane celest recreation to behald ther lycht lopene, galmounding, stendling bakuart & forduart." Compl. S. p. 102.

STENDERIS, s. pl. Standards. S.

To STENYE, v. a. To sting. "Conscience stenyies if he steil;" Gl. Sibb.

STENLOCH, STENLOCK, & An overgrown seath. S.

STENNERS, s. pl. Gravel or small stones. V. STANNERS.

S T E

STENNYNG, STENING, s. A species of fine woollen cloth anciently worn in Scotland. S.

To STENNIS, v. a. To sprain. S.

STENNIS, s. A sprain. S.

To STENT, v. a. 1. To stretch; to extend, S.

His ost all thar arestyt he,
And gert a tent sone stentit be;
And gert hyr gang in hastily.—Barbour, xvi. 282. MS.

— On athyr halff the watre of Wer

Gert stent thair pailyownys, als ner
As thar befor stentyt war thai. Ibid. xix. 515. MS.

2. To straiten. A cord is said to be stentit, when straitened; stent, at full stretch, S.

3. To restrain; to confine, S.

— Never did he stent

Us in our thriving with a racket rent.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 90.

4. To erect; improperly, in allusion to the mode of erecting a tent.

— Than to his freynd the seruice funeral
With obsequies to do for corporis absent,
And in my memour vp ane tombe to stent.

Doug. Virgil, 282, 43.

It is certainly allied to Fr. estend-re, Ital. stend-ere, from Lat. extend-ere, as Rudd. observes. But it deserves to be remarked that Su.G. stinn-a is used in a similar sense; stinna segel, the sail when extended by the force of the wind; from stinn, rigidus, robustus, Ihre. Hence, STENT-NET, s. A net stretched out and fished by means of stakes or otherwise, S.B.

—"That he had no instructions whatever to mark any thing upon the plan that did not appear evident on the ground, except as to the place where a stent-net was said to have been fixed, a cruive-dike once placed, and such other things as are engrossed in the letter produced." State, Leslie of Powis, v. Fraser of Fraserfield, p. 39.

"No nets can be counted stent-nets, unless they cross the water." Ibid. p. 78.

STENT, adj. Stretched to the utmost; fully extended. S.

To STENT, v. n. To stop; to cease, S. the same with the E. v. a. stint.

I the require suffir me to assay
With my retinew and thir handis tway
The first dangere in batal, or I stent.

Doug. Virgil, 381, 38.

I wan the vogue, I Rhaesus fell'd
An' his knabbs in his tent;
Syne took his coach, an' milk-white staigs,
Ere ever I wad stent.

Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 25.

Not, as Rudd. conjectures, from A.S. stinc-an, hebetare, &c. but from O.Sw. stynt-a, Isl. stunt-a, abbreviare; West-Goth. stynta up, religare.

To STENT, v. a. To assess; to tax at a certain rate, S.

—"And then, be the gude discretions of the saidis Provests, &c. to taxe and stent the haille inhabitantes within the Parochin—to sik ouklie charge and contribution, as sall be thocht expedient and sufficient to susteine the saidis pure peopill." Acts, Ja. VI. Parl. 6. c. 74. Murray.

From L.B. extend-ere, aestimare, appretiare; a term common in the E. law. Fr. estend-re, id. Par mesmes les Jurours soient les terres estendues à la very valuë. Du Cange, vo. Extendere. V. the s. See Sup.

STENT, STANT, s. 1. A valuation of property, in order to taxation.

"Becaus his rentis and treasour wes nocht sufficient to sustene the samyn (as he vsit) he desyrit ane general stent to be tane throw the realme of ilk person efter his faculte." Bellend. Cron. B. v. c. 6. Petiit censum agi, Boeth.

L.B. extent-a, aestimatio. O.E. and S. extent. V. Cowel. Hence the juridical phrase, Lands of old extent.

"The rentall & valour of lands hes bin taxed and liquidat to ane certaine sum of silver, conforme to the profites and dewties, quhilk the lands paid at that time [about the year 1280], quhilk is called the auld & first extent.—Ane vther taxation and extent was maid in the time of peace, as the former extent, conforme to the profites augmented;—quhilk therefore is called the new or second extent." Skene, Verb. Sign. vo. Extent. V. also Erskine's Instit. B. ii. T. 5, s. 31.

Thus stent is merely the corr. of extent.

2. A taxation, S. See Sup.

"The nobill Galdus (that recoverit his realme) desyrit neur stent of thaym for na maner of chargis that he sustent aganis his ennymes: knawyng weil how odious it was to the pepyl to seik ony new exactionis on thaym." Bellend. ubi sup.

"Stent, the tax, or proportion of it, payable by a Burgh or Incorporation," S. Rudd. It is also used to denote the proportion paid by individuals.

"When necessary, they voluntarily assess themselves in such sums as the support of the poor requires, thereby wisely preventing a general stent." P. Irvine, Ayr's Statist. Acc. vii. 179.

3. A task, S. stint, E.

"Scot. stent, i. e. a piece of work to be performed in a determined time," Rudd.

The fassioun how this stant to do maist habill
Herk at schort wordis, that point I sall you say.

Doug. Virgil, 103, 43.

Their stent was mair than they cou'd well make out.
And whan they fail'd, their backs they soundly rout.

Ross's Helenore, p. 49.

It seems questionable, whether the word in this sense, is not rather allied to Su.G. stynt-a. V. STENT, v. n.

STENTOUR, s. A stentmaster.

STENT, s.

A loklate bar was drawyn ourthourth the dur,
Bot thai mycht nocht it brek out of the waw.
Wallace was grewyt quhen he sic tary saw.
Sumpart amowet, wraithly till it he went.
Be forss off handis he raist out of the stent;
Thre yerde off breide alss off the wall puld out.

Wallace, iv. 238. MS.

This perhaps signifies the aperture in the wall, which received or confined the bar. But Editions read,

By force of hand it raised out of the sprent.

V. SPRENT.

STENTMASTERS, s. pl. Those appointed to fix the quota of any kind of duty payable by the inhabitants of a town or parish, S.

"To the end these impositions, warranted by public authority, may be equally laid on, the Lords declare, that they will from time to time nominat one advocat, and one wryter to the signet, for each quarter of the town, to meet with the Stentmasters, who shall be appointed by the Magistrates." Act Sederunt, 23 Feb. 1687.

This term is analogous to L.B. Extensor, aestimator publicus, cujus munus est res haereditarias inter comparticipes aestimare et partiri; Du Cange.

STENT-ROLL, s. The cess-roll, S.

"At the end of the yeir, that the taxation and stent-roll may be alwayes maid of new." Acts, Ja. VI. 1579, c. 74, Murray.

STEP-BAIRN, s. A step-child.

VOL. II.

481

STEP IN AGE. Advanced in years.

This ald hasard caryis ouer fludis hote
Spretis and figuris in his irne hewit bote,
All thocht he eildit was, or step in age,
Als fery and als swipper as ane page.

Doug. Virgil, 173, 53.

This phrase may be analogous to what we now use, past his grand climacteric. For as the E. word originally refers to the ascent of a ladder, from Gr. κλιμακτηρ, scalae gradus, secondarily, annus transilis; Teut. stap is rendered climacter, scalae, (Kilian,) as synon. with sporte, leder-sporte. Hence Germ. stapf-en, stapp-en, scandere, ascendere.

STEPPE, s. A stave. V. STAP.

STER. The termination of various names of trades, as Baxter, Webster, &c. V. BROUSTARE.

This termination in Germ. also forms one s. from another; as schuster, a shoemaker, from schu, a shoe, hamster, a field-mouse, from ham, ager. V. Wachter, Prol. Sect. 6. In like manner, our term bangster is formed from bang, maltster from malt, &c.

Somner derives this termination from A.S. steor-an, regere, gubernare; as denoting power, or the authority of a master over others. V. Lex. Sax. vo. Steoran.

STER, a termination of many names of places in Caithness. It is also common in Shetland. See Sup.

"The names of places here seem to be either Danish, Icelandic, or Norwegian. Many of them end in ster, a contraction of stader, (that is to say, a stead of houses, a station or habitation.) Thus Ulbster, properly Wolfster, either from its being of old a place infested with wolves, or from a person called Wolf—having possessed it." P. Wick, Statist. Acc. x. 39.

Another sense is given, which seems preferable.

"Ster, which signifies an estate, is the terminating syllable of an immense number of the names of places in Caithness and elsewhere.—Brabster is the estate or possession of Brab." P. Canisbay, Ibid. viii. 162, 163, N.

Isl. staer, Su.G. starr, denote long grass; Isl. stord, Sw. star, gramen, locus gramine consitus, Verel. q. a fit place for residence.

STERDE, STERDY, adj. Strong; stout, E. sturdy.

The tuelf makis ane end of all the were but dout,
Throw the slauchter of Turnus sterde and stout.

Doug. Virgil, 12, 52.

Skinner derives the E. word from Fr. estourde, which has no affinity; Casaubon, from Gr. στειραρος, validus; Jun. refers to Slav. twrdy, durus. But the most probable origin is Isl. styrd, rigidus.

To STERE, STEER, v. a. To govern; to rule.

— This mychty gay Lyoun,

May signify a prince or emperour—

Quhilk suld be walkryfe, gyd, and govirnour

Of his peple, and takis na lawbour

To rewll, nor steir the land, nor justice keip.

Henryson, Bannatyne Poems, p. 129.

A.S. steor-an, Teut. stier-en, Su.G. styr-a, id. Hafwa styrelsen of et land, to govern the state. Hence ofstyrig, who cannot be managed. Moes.G. Libands ustiuriba, vivens lascive, Luk. 15, 13.

STER, STERE, STEIR, STERING, s. 1. Government; management.

Sturtin study has the stere dystroyand our sport.

Doug. Virgil, 238, a. 21.

Thir twa the land had in stering.

Barbour, ix. 510. MS.

2. The helm.

Thar takyll, ayris, and thar ster,

3 P

Thai hude all on the samyn maner.

Barbour, iv. 374. MS.

Himself as skippare hynt the stere on hand.

Doug. Virgil, 133, 23.

A.S. steor, Su.G. styre, Alem. stiur-a, Isl. stiorn, id. gubernaculum navis; hence E. stern, the back part of the ship where the helm is fixed.

STERAND, part. pr. Active; lively; mettlesome, from stere v. to stir.

Apoun ane sterand stede of Trace he sat.

Doug. Virgil, 275, 27.

To STERE, STEIR, v. n. To stir, S. steer.

Quha standis welle, he suld nocht stere.

Wyntown, viii. 40. 24.

Steir nocht, bruder, bot hald us still,

Till we haif hard quhat be his will.

Lyndsay, S.P.R. ii. 113.

Bat fat did Ajax a' this time?

E'en lie like idle tike;

He steert na' sin Sigeia's hill,

Bat slipt ahint the dike.

A.S. styr-ian, id. Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 22.

STERE, STEIR, s. Stir; commotion, S. Hence, On stere, in a state of commotion, astir, S. asteer.

Bot principally the fey vnsilly Dido—

Micht not refrane, nor satisfy hir consate,

Bot ardentlie behaldis al on stere.

Doug. Virgil, 35, 53.

STERAGE, s. 1. Stir; motion.

Ilk sowch of wynd, and euery whisper now,

And alkin sterage affrayit, and causit grow.

Doug. Virgil, 63, 7.

2. Commotion caused by a throng.

Awounderit of this sterage, and the preis,

Say me, virgine, sayd Enee, or thou ceis,

Quhat menis sic confluence on this wattir syde?

Doug. Virgil, 174, 24.

STERK, adj. Strong; hardy, E. and S. stark.

Schyr Eduuard callt off Carnauerane,

—Wes the sterkast man off ane,

That men mycht [se] in ony cuntré.

Barbour, iv. 72. MS.

Isl. sterk-ur, Franc. starc, Germ. stark, validus, robustus.

I take notice of the word, merely to observe that this does not seem the primary meaning. The only sense of A.S. stearc, sterc, is rigid, hard, severe. Wachter gives this as also the primary sense of the Germ. word; which, after Stiler, he with the highest probability deduces from starr-en, rigere, indurare, q. starrig. It may be added that Moes.G. staurknith, arescit, drieth up, Mark ix. 18, seems to have the same origin. V. STARE above. It retains this sense in R. Glouc. Chron. p. 393. When it is said that Robert Courthose had to pledge Normandy to his brother William Rufus, for the loan of an hundred thousand marks; the author speaks of the terms as hard.

And borwede of hym thervppe an hondred thousand marc,

To wende wyth to the holy lond, & that was somdel starc.

"Hard, severe," Gl.

STERK, s. A bullock. V. STIRK.

STERLING, STRIUELING, adj. A term used to denote English money. See Sup.

I mention this word, merely to remark the general idea of our ancestors, that it had a Scottish origin. Osbret, a Saxon prince, in company with Ella, having overrun the Southern part of Scotland, in the ninth century, is said to have taken possession of the Castle of Stirling, and established a mint during his residence there.

"This Osbret had his cunyeouris within this castel be quhom the Striueling money tuk begynnyng." Bellend. Cron. B. x. c. 14. Libris, solidis, denariisque Sterlingis; Boeth.

Bellenden evidently adopts this as the origin of the term. For he gives it according to the old orthography of the name of the town.

"King Edward sall pay ane. m. pundis striueling to the Danis." Ibid. B. xi. c. 11.

This derivation is, however, quite improbable. The term seems far rather deducible from esterling, a name given to those Germans that inhabited the confines of Denmark, who are said to have been the first that brought the art of refining silver into England. V. Du. Cange, vo. Esterlingus.

STERLING, s. The name of a river-fish, Aberd. V.

DOWBRECK.

STERMAN-FEE, s. The wages of a steersman. S.

STERN, s. A star; also, a grain. V. STARN.

STERNYT, part. adj. Starred; starry.

—The swyft God of slepe gan slyde

Furth of the sternyt heuyn by nychtis tyde.

Doug. Virgil, 156, 30.

STERN O' THE EE. The pupil of the eye. S.

To STERT, v. n. To start. STERT, pret. Started. S.

STERT, s. A leap; a spring. S.

STERTLIN, adj. 1. Applied to denote the restlessness of cattle from the bite of the cleg or gad-fly. 2. Also to elderly females who have not lost hopes of the conubial state; as, "She has her stertlin fits yet." S.

STERTLIN, s. Applied to cattle and females as above. S.

To STERUE, STERF, v. n. To die; pret. starf.

Mor sall I desyr hyr frendschip to reserue,

Fra this day furth than euir befor did I,

In fer off wer, quhethir I leiff or sterue.

Wallace, vi. 40. MS.

— Amydwart the mellé

Reddy to sterf his hors furth steris he.

Doug. Virgil, 391, 36.

I lufe that flour abuse all other thing,

And wold bene he, that to hir worschipping

Mycht ought availe, be him that starf on rude,

And nowthir spare for trauaile, lyf, nor gude.

King's Quair, iv. 16.

Chaucer, id. Belg. sterv-en, Germ. sterf-en, id.

To STERUEN, v. a. To kill.

Forgiue all this, and schapith remedye,

To sauen me of your benigne grace,

Or do me steruen furthwith in this place.

King's Quair, iii. 29.

A.S. steorf-an, Germ. sterb-en, occidere, interficere, facere ut moriatur; A.S. steorfa, caedes.

STEVEL, adj. Firm; substantial; not flummery. S.

To STEVEL, v. n. To go about unsteadily. V. STAIVE. S.

STEUEN, s. Expl. "hour, or time."

No say nought what thou ses,

Bot hold astow art hende,

And hele;

Lay it al under hende,

To steuen gif thai it stele.

Sir Tristrem, p. 170.

The term seems properly to signify judgment, judicial trial, as synon. with Stewyn. Thus the meaning of the phrase is, "If they place it in judgment," i. e. if they make any judicial or strict inquiry. In like manner, the phrase used both by S. and E. writers, unset stevin, denotes a time not fixed, in allusion to the determination of a day of law, or of trial.

Quhen cup is full, then hold it evin;

S T E

V. STEWYN. Percy's Reliques, i. 70.

STEUG, STEWG, s. 1. A thorn; a prickle, or any thing sharp-pointed, S.B. synon. stob.

This seems the primary sense; in which it is allied to Germ. stich, punctum, ictus; stech-en, A.S. stic-an, pun-gere, cuspidare, confodere; as Wachter observes of the v.; Incipit a puncto, et desinit in vulnere. He views Moes.G. stik, punctum, (in stika melis, in puncto temporis) as allied; also stikl, calix, properly a horn, with which the animal strikes, and transferred to a cup, because the an-cients drunk out of horns. Isl. stikil still denotes the sharp part of a horn; resembling A.S. sticcel, stimulus, aculeus.

2. A rusty dart, Aberd.

This doughty lad he was resolv'd
Wi' me his fate to try,
Wi' poison'd stewgs o' Hercules;
Bat 'las! his bleed wis fey.

Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 6.

3. Obliquely, a hasty stitch with a needle, a slight and coarse sewing, S.B.

The idea evidently suggested is, that this sense has ori-ginated from the use of a coarse instrument in place of a needle; as small pins of wood were formerly used, instead of buttons, for fastening an under-waist-coat. Hence,

To STEUG, v. a. To stitch; to sew slightly and coarse-ly, S.B.

STEUIN, STEVEN, s. 1. The voice.

—Streckand vp my handis toward heuin,
My orison I made with deuote steuin.

Doug. Virgil, 73, 26.

— Oft by Sibyllis sawis he tonys his steuin.

Ibid. Prol. 159, 29.

The word is still used in this sense, S.B.

Quo' Jean, My steven, Sir, is blunted sair,
And singing frae me frighted aff with care.

Ross's Helenore, p. 117.

2. Sound; a note.

The clamour of the men and trumpis steuin
Gan springing vp on licht vnto the heuin.

Doug. Virgil, 367, 41.

The stirling changes diuers steuynnys nyse.

Stevon, a loud noise, A.Bor. Grose.

Moes.G. stibna, A.S. stefne, stefen, vox.

STEUIN, s. The stem or prow of a ship. See Sup.

— The Troianis frakkis ouer the flude,—

Thare steuynnys stowrand fast throw the salt fame.

Doug. Virgil, 14, 14.

Rudd. mentions S. steven as synon. with Belg. steuen, rostrum navis, steve, prora. Without sufficient reason he views this and the preceding s. as originally the same. Isl. stofn signifies caudex, stipes, stirps; and stafn, prora; which Seren. deduces from stofna, inchoari. A.S. stefn also signifies prora. Ihre views Isl. staf, tabula, assere, as the origin; vo. Stamm.

To STEUIN, v. a. To direct the course of a ship towards a certain point, by turning the prow towards it; proras seu rostrum obvertere, Rudd.

To turne thare course he gan his feris command,
And steuin thare schippis to the samin land.

Doug. Virgil, 205, 37.

Isl. stefn-a, proram aliquo dirigere; Ihre, vo. Staemma, p. 757.

3. Dust; dust drifted by the wind on the highway. S.

Bot thys Eneas, full bald vnder scheild,
With all his oist driuis throw the plane feild;
And with him swyftly bryngis ouer the bent
Ane rout cole blak of the stew quhare he went.

Doug. Virgil, 426, 6.

Stew is thus expl. by Grose, "when the air is full of dust, smoke, or steam," A. Bor.

4. Used like Stour to denote spray. 5. Metaph. battle; fight. S.

Rudd. derives the word immediately from Belg. stof, pulvis, pulvisculus. It seems more nearly allied to Isl. styfa, vapor in vaporariis non defumatis; G. Andr. Rudd. properly mentions E. stew, Fr. estuve, Ital. stufa, hypocaustum, as cognates; also Hisp. tufo, vapor calidus et densus qualis e balneis halat. This is merely a corr. of the Isl. term. Moes.G. stuf, Franc. stuppe, Alem. stouf, Sn.G. stoef, Germ. staub, all signify dust. Hence, MILL-STEW, s. The dust which flies about a mill, S. Germ. muhlstaub.

STEWATT, s. "A person in a state of violent perspiration, from Stew, vapour," Gl. Sibb. V. STUVAT.

To STEW, STEW on, v. n. To rain slightly; to drizzle. S.

STEWART, STEWARD, s. 1. A magistrate appointed by the king over special lands belonging to himself, having the same proper jurisdiction with that of a regality. 2. The deputy of a lord of regality. 3. Steward of Scotland, a chief officer of the crown. S.

STEWARTIE, s. 1. A jurisdiction over a certain extent of territory, nearly the same with that of a Regality.

2. The territory over which this jurisdiction extends. S.

STEWYN, s. Judgment; doom.

Vengeance off this throuch out that kynrik yeid,
Grantyt wes fra God in the gret hewyn,
Sa ordand he that law suld be thair stewyn.
To falss Saxonis, for thair fell judgement.
Thar wykkydnes our all the land is went.

Wallace, vii. 232. MS.

The Minstrel here relates the story concerning the hanging of the Scottish Barons at Ayr. The sense is; "It was the will of God, that they should be judged according to their own law, or their mode of dispensing law to others." The signification of stewyn is determined by the expression in the following line, "thair fell judgement."

Isl. stefna denotes a fixed time, statutum tempus, Ihre. This is the precise sense of E. steven, as given by Lye;

Add. Jun. Etym. vo. Stevin, vox. The Isl. term also signifies a meeting, convention; G. Andr. At times it denotes, in a general sense, a meeting for whatever purpose. Ahi bauth oc Eyrike Kongi til veizlo, oc lagthi honom hinn sama stefnodag; Aco also invited king Eric to a feast, and appointed the same day of meeting. Heims Kr. Tom. i. 88, ap. Ihre, vo. Staemma.

Sometimes it signifies a more solemn meeting, that which in Lat. is denominated comitia. Ener heidnu menn höfdo tha stefna fiölmenna, oc toko that rad at bloto tveim monnom or hweriom fiordungi; In the mean time the heathen, having held a full meeting, took counsel that they would sacrifice two men for every province. Kristnis. p. 92.

It also denotes an action at law, dica, G. Andr. Af thwi fell stefnan; Lis sopita est, Kristnis. p. 96. Eg stefne, dicam indico, dicam scribo, accerso. Tha er Olaf Kongr spurdi uspektr thaer er Thangbrandr gordi, stefndi hann hanom til sin, oc bar saker a hann; King Olave, having heard of the disturbances which Thangbrand excited, summoned him to appear before him, and objected to him the crimes he had committed. Kristnis, pp. 40, 42.

Moes.G. stau-an, stoi-an, signify to judge; Raihtaba stauides, Thou hast judged right, Luke vii. 34. Hence staua, a judge, stauastol, a judgment seat, and andastaua, an adversary, one who appears against another in judgment.

Ihre seems inclined to derive the Moes.G. word from staf, a rod; because judges anciently carried rods or staves, as badges of authority; adding, that the military staff is the judicial power in a regiment. Some have conjectured, with considerable probability, that Isl. stefna, as denoting a fixed time, an action at law, or judgment, may be traced to A.S. stefn, vox; because it is by the voice of authority that a day is fixed, or judgment pronounced. We may add, that a day fixed for judgment was generally made known by public proclamation.

The A.S. word, denoting a fixed time, is stemne, to which Su.G. staemma corresponds; diem definire, in jus vocare. Ihre views this word as analogous to Isl. stefna. These three Isl. phrases, stefna hanum thing, lagga lagstefnu, and dag gifwa, (i. e. to give, or fix a day,) are used as synon.; and convey the same idea with our old phrase, to appoint a law-day, or day of law. Ramsay's Poems, i. 212.

A custom formerly prevailed in S., and has not entirely gone into desuetude in some places, of turning out horses loose, to feed among the stubble, after harvest. These horses are denominated stibblers. In former times it was reckoned allowable for a person to take one of them, and ride him for a few miles, without asking the leave of the owner, or paying any hire. Hence, it is said, a Preacher received this designation, as he might be employed by any minister who needed his assistance; and, little to the credit of these times, the slightest consideration for his services was rarely accounted necessary.

To STIR, v. a. To injure. V. STEER, v. S.

STIRK, STERK, s. 1. A bullock or heifer between one and two years old, S. A stot is a bullock about three years old; the name being generally changed from stirk to stot, about the time of its being fit to be yoked in the plough.

It occurs in the S. Prov. "There was ay some water where the stirk drowned;" i. e. "there was certainly some occasion for so much talk, rumour, and suspicion." Kelly, p. 309.

—Ye haif our oxin reft and slane,

S T I

Bryttnyt our sterkis, and young beistis mony ane.

Doug. Virgil, 76, 5.

The stirkis for the sacrifice per case

War newly brytnit.

Ibid. 138, 36.

Jok that wes wont to keip the stirkis,

Can now draw him an cleik of kirkis.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 66.

Stirk is the mod. pron.

"Commonly Scot. Bor. they distinguish between stirk and steer, the first being younger, and either male or female, the other some older, and only male;" Rudd.

2. Metaph. a stupid ignorant fellow, S.

For me I took them a' for stirks—

That loo'd na money.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 307.

3. Applied to a stout man, "A stalwart stirk was he." S.

A.S. styr, styr, juvencus, juvenca. Hence E. stirk, a young ox or heifer; styrke, Lancash. Somn. styr, styr, is undoubtedly a dimin. from A.S. styr, steor, Moes. G. stiurs, Alem. stier, a steer. The more ancient form of the latter is supposed to be Su. G. tiur, Isl. tyr, C. B. tar-us, (Lat. taur-us), from tar-o, tar-u, ferire, percutere. V. Seren. vo. Steer. V. also the letter K. Hence,

To STIRK, v. n. To be with calf, S. B.

STIRKIE, s. A little stirk.

S.

STIRKIE'S-STA', s. 1. The place in a cow-house appropriated to a young stirk. 2. To be put in the Stirkie's Sta', a phrase applied to a child who receives less attention than formerly, from its mother having brought forth another child; alluding to the removal of a stirk from its dam.

S.

Ouer all the cieté enrageit scho here and thare Wandris, as ane stirkin hynd, quham the stalkar, Or scho persaif, from fer betis with his flaine.

Doug. Virgil, 102, 6.

STIRLIN, s. The denomination of a silver coin, apparently ascribed to David I. of Scotland.

"The stirlin in the time of the said King David, did wey threttie twa graines of gude and round quheat: Bot now it is othertwaies, be reason of the minoration of the money." Stat. Rob. III. c. 22. s. 6. Lat. copy, Sterlingus.

This is expl. by Du Cange,—pro monetae specie, quam denarium Sterlingum vocabant. He quotes Matt. Paris, An. 1247, as using the term in a similar sense. Praecept Dominus Rex—ut quicumque deinde Esterlingus in regno suo pondere non legalis inveniretur, statim funderetur; vo. Esterlingus.

The term starlinges, as used by Chaucer, is expl. "pence of sterling money;" Tyrwhitt.

The name has evidently originated from the term sterling or stirlin, as denoting the quality of the money. Thus it is also used as an adj.

"It is statute, that the kings money, that is stirlin money, sall not be caried furth of the realme. Stat. David II. c. 37. V. STERLING.

STIRLING, STIRLENE, STERLIN, s. The stare or starling, a bird, S. Sturnus vulgaris, Linn. See Sup.

—I think ane greit derisioun,

To heir Nunnis, and Sisteris, nycht and day,

Singand and sayand psalmis and orisoun;

Nocht vnderstanding quhat thay sing or say,

Bot like ane stirling, and ane popingay,

Quhilk leirnit ar to speik be lang vsage.

Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592. p. 16.

Teut. sterlinck, sturnus, from sterre, id.

STIRRAH, STIRRA, s. 1. "A stout boy," S.

An honest neiper man, Ralph was his name,—

A dainty stirrah had twa years out-gane.

Ross's Helenore, p. 13.

S T O

2. A term of contempt, apparently corrupted from Sirrah. S.—3. A young fellow.

If ony mettld stirrah green

For favour frae a lady's een,

He manna care for bein' seen

Before he sheath

His body in a scabbard clean

O' gude braid claithe.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 22.

STIRRING, STIRRING-FURROW, s. A slight ploughing. S.

STIRRUP-DRAM, STIRRUP-CUP, s. A glass of spirits, or a draught of ale, given by an inn-keeper to his guest when he is about to depart. S.

STITCH, s. A furrow or drill of potatoes, turnips, &c. S.

To STITE aff, v. n. 1. To stumble so as to go to one side. 2. To move about in a stiff and unsteady way. S.

STYTE, s. 1. Absurd prating; nonsense. Syn. Buff.

2. Applied also to a person who talks foolishly. S.

STITH, STYTH, adj. 1. Firm; steady, S.

—Als thai haid

A lord that sua swete wes, and deboner,—

And in bataill sa styth to stand,—

That thai had gret causs blyth to be.

Barbour, viii. 384. MS.

And athir gan contrare vthir stith stand,

With fingeris fast fakand thare mace in hand.

Doug. Virgil, 141, 51.

2. Strong; applied to inanimate objects.

—He made

A styth castell, and thare he hade

Oft and mekyl his duellyng.

Wyntown, vii. 7. 8. Also Ibid. x. 108. Barbour, iv. 101.

A.S. stith, styth, durus, rigidus, severus. Stethe, however, signifies, stabilis, firmus.

3. Stiff, from being stretched; applied to a rope. S.

4. Dead; properly, having the stiffness of death. Sheet styth, shot dead, Aberd. See Sup.

"For, thinks I, an' the horses tak a brattle now, they may come to lay up my mittens, an' ding me yavil an' as styth as gin I had been elf-shot." Journal from London, p. 4.

Up-by the lambie's lying yonder styth;

But maksna, that it's no yoursel I'm blyth.

Ross's Helenore, p. 15.

STYTHER, s. Place; station. S.

STITHILL.

Mony sege our the sey to the cité socht.

Schipmen our the streme thai stithill full straught.

With alkin wappyns I wys that wes for were wroght.

Gawan and Gol. ii. 12.

Mr. Pinkerton views this as a v., rendering it, interrogatively, steer. But it seems rather an adj., or adv., from A.S. stithlic, durus, or stithlice, severè, strenuè. Thus straucht must be the v. "Mariners stretched full firmly," or perhaps, "sternly, over the sea."

STIVAGE, adj. "Stout; fit for work," Gl. Shirr.

V. STAFFAGE.

STIVE, adj. Firm. V. STEIVE.

STIVEY, STEEVIE, s. A great quantity of thick food; as, "a stivey of parritch." S.

STIVERON, s. Any very fat food, as a haggis. S.

STIVET, s. 1. A short, stout-made man. 2. A stubborn, self-willed person. S.

To STOAN, v. n. To give out suckers or stems from the root; applied to herbs and trees. S.

STOAN, s. A number of suckers from the same root. S.

STOB, s. 1. A prickle, or a very small splinter of wood, fixed in any part of the body, S. Syn. Stog.

In this sense it is also used metaph., as denoting something that mars peace of mind.

"Ye had no need to be bare-footed among the thorns of this apostate generation, lest a stob stick up in your foot, and cause you to halt all your days." Rutherford's Lett. P. i. ep. 79.

2. The puncture made by means of a prick, S.
3. A coarse nail. S.

Germ. stumpf, stipp, punctum, stumpf-en, stipp-en, pungere.
To STOB, v. a. 1. To pierce with a pointed instrument, S.; synon. job. To pierce with a sword. See S.
2. To point with iron.

Thay maid them burdowns nocht to bow,
Twa bewis of the birk;
Weil stobbit with steil, I trow,
To stik into the mirk.

Symmye and his Bruder, Chron. S.P. i. 360.

STOB, s. 1. The stump of a tree.
— Sum wer fletand on the land;
Quhailis and monstouris of the seis,
Stickit on stobbis amang the treis.

Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 43.

2. A palisade; a stake driven into the ground, for forming a fence, S.; more commonly, stab.

Sum of Eneas feris besely
Flatis to plet thaym preissis by and by,
And of smal wikkis for to beild vp ane bere,
Of sowpill wandis, and of brounys sere,
Bound with the syouns, or the twistis sle
Of smal rammel, and stobbis of akin tre.

Doug. Virgil, 362, 9.

Vimen, however, is the only term used by Virg.

"The different articles made from these woods are sold at the following prices on the spot: Stobs, at 4s. the hundred, four feet long." P. Campsie, Stirlings. Statist. Acc. xv. 321.

3. A pole; a stake.

"He was taken and headed, and his right hand set upon a stob in the same place where he was slain." Spalding's Troubles, i. 53.

A.S. steb, stubb, Belg. stobbe, Su.G. Mod. Sax. stubbe, stipes, truncus. Dan. stub, "a stump, a stock, a stem or stalk;" Wolff. Kilian mentions Teut. stipp-en as signifying intersepire, to fence about; whether from the s., or vice versa, seems doubtful. Ihre derives Su.G. stubbe from stufw-a, amputare. S. Stow, q. v., is used in a cognate sense.

STOB and STAIK. To hald Stob and Staik in any place, to have one's permanent residence there. S.

STOB, s. The stump of a rainbow, or that part which seems to rest on the horizon, when no more of it is seen, S.

This, by seamen, is viewed as a prognostic of an approaching storm. If I mistake not, they also call it a dogg.

This seems allied to the preceding term, and to Su.G. stubb, which denotes a part of any thing broken off from the rest: Notat rem quamvis minorem a suo continuo abruptam; stubbig, mutilus, brevis, Ihre; (E. stubbed.) Dan. stuv, a remnant, an end.

STOB-FEATHERS, s. pl. The short unfledged feathers which remain on a fowl after it has been plucked; applied also to those which appear first on a young bird, S. See Sup.

Hence, a bird is said to be stobbed, or stob-feather'd. The latter term is also used metaph. Of a young couple, who have little provision or furniture, it is said; They're nae stob-feather'd yet, S.B.

The origin is stob, a stump, from the shortness of the feathers.

STOB-SPADE, s. An instrument for pushing in the straw in thatching. Syn. Stangril and Sting. S.

STOB-THACKER, s. One who forms or mends thatched roofs, by driving in the straw with a stob, sting, or stake, S.B.

The work thus performed is called stob-thacking or -thatching.

"Stob-thatching is now become pretty general, and, when well executed, makes a warm and durable roof." P. New Deer, Aberd. Statist. Acc. ix. 187, 188.

"Farm-houses and cottages.—Within these five years, a very few of them have been stob-thatched, or covered with a deep coat of straw,—and snecked or harled with lime." P. Keith-Hall, Aberd. Statist. Acc. ii. 534.

To STOCK, v. n. To become stiff; to be benumbed, S. Germ. stock-en, to be stopped or obstructed; Su.G. stock-a, to harden, to condense. Blodet stockar sig, the blood congeals. In the same manner we say that one stocks, or that the limbs stock, from cold or want of exercise, S. Hence, STOCK, s. One whose joints are stiffened by age or disease; an auld stock, id. S.

Belg. stok-oud, very ancient, decrepit.

STOCK, s. The hardened stalk or stem of a plant.

A kail-stock, the stem of colewort, S.

— Thro' the kail,

Their stocks maun a' be sought ance. Burns, iii. 126.

Su.G. kaalstock, id. from kaal, brassica, and stock, caulis.

STOCK. BED-STOCK, s. The fore-part of a bed.

—"Hezekiah turned his backe to the stocke, and his face to the wall, that he might conferre with his God." Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 71. Bed-stocke, ibid. p. 65.

— I winna lie in your bed,
Either at stock or wa'.

Jamieson's Popular Ball. ii. 159.

Weel brook ye o' your brown brown bride,
Between you and the stock. Ibid. i. 31.

Su.G. stock, id. sponda, vel pars lecti anterior.

To STOCK, v. n. To branch out into various shoots just above ground; applied to grasses, flowers, &c. S.

STOCKING, s. The act of sending forth various stems. S.

STOCK AND BROCK. The whole of one's property, including what is properly called Stock, and single or detached articles, or what are not entire. V. BROCK. S.

STOCK-DUCK, s. The Mallard, a bird, Orkney.

"The Mallard, (anas boschas, Lin. Syst.) our stock-duck, is a pretty numerous species, which builds in marshes, meadows, and holms, through all the Islands." Barry's Orkney, p. 301.

Germ. stock-ent, Kramer, p. 341. Norv. stok-and, Penn. Zool. p. 591. Dan. id. The name is the same, and ent signifying duck. The meaning of stock, as thus applied, I do not know. As it denotes a stick, also, the trunk of a tree, can this signify the tree-duck? it being "known sometimes to lay the eggs in a high tree, in a deserted magpie's or crow's nest;" Encycl. Britann. vo. Anas, N° 32.

STOCK AND HORN. A musical instrument anciently used in S. See Sup.

When I begin to tune my stock and horn,
With a' her face she shaws a caulrife scorn.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 68.

Ritson describes it as "a reed or whistle, with a horn fixed to it by the smaller end." V. CORNE PIPE.

But it is more particularly described by Burns.

"It is composed of three parts; the stock, which is the hinder thigh-bone of a sheep, such as you see in a mutton-ham; the horn, which is a common Highland cow's horn, cut off at the smaller end, until the aperture be large enough to admit the stock to be pushed up through the horn, until it be held by the thicker end of the thigh-bone: and lastly, an oaten reed, exactly cut and notched like that which you see every shepherd boy has, when the corn stems are green and full-grown. The reed is not made fast in the bone, but is held by the lips, and plays loose in the smaller end of the stock; while the stock, with the horn hanging on its larger end, is held by the hands in playing. The stock has six or seven ventages on the upper side, and one back-ventage, like the common flute. This of mine was made by a man from the braes of Athole, and is exactly what the shepherds went to use in that country." Burns's Works, iv. 209. N^o. 64.

This is also written Stock-in-horn, though, I apprehend, improperly; and derived from Gael. stoc, a pipe. V. Statist. Acc. xv. 8, N.

STOCK AND HORN. A favourite toast with farmers; including sheep-stock and horned cattle. A synonym. toast is, "Corn, Horn, Wool, and Yarn." S.

STOCKERIT, pret. Staggered. V. STACKER.

STOCKET, part. pa. Trimmed; or perhaps stiffened. S.

STOCK-HORNE, s. A horn anciently used by foresters in S.

"Ane stock-horne—commonly is maid of timmer and wood, or tree, with circles and girds of the same, quhilk is yet used in the Hie-landes and Iles of this realme: quhair of I haue seene the like in the cuntrie of Helvetia, in the yeir of God 1568, amangst the Zuitzers." Skene, Verb. Sign. vo. Menetum.

Ane stocke horne, ex Lib. Sconensi, species et forma cornu lignei quod si inflatur magnum et raucum edit sonum. Leg. Forest. c. 2. N.

STOCKIE, s. A piece of cheese, or a bit of fish, between two pieces of bread, Fife.

STOCKING, s. The cattle, implements of husbandry, &c. on a farm, in contradistinction from the crop. S.

STOCK-OWL, s. The Eagle Owl, Orkn. V. KATOGLE.

STOCK-STORM, s. Snow continuing to lie on the ground, Aberd. V. STORM.

I know not, whether we ought to view, as allied to this, the Su.G. phrase, en stickande storm, saeva tempestas, and Isl. stakastormur, id.

STODGE, s. A pet. V. STADGE. S.

STODGIE, adj. Pettish; sulky. S.

STOER-MACKREL, s. The tunny fish, S.; Scomber Thunnus, Linn.

"Thunnus, nostratibus, the Stoer-Mackrel." Sibb. Scot. P. iii. p. 23.

Perhaps from Sw. stor, great, large, and makrill, mackerell.

To STOG, v. n. To walk on heedlessly, with a heavy sturdy step. S.

Stog, s. A person with a stupid kind of gait. S.

To STOG, v. n. A term used when the tool goes too deep in turning, chipping, or planing wood. S.

STOG, s. Applied in reaping, to the stubble which is left too high, or to the inequality thus produced. S.

To STOG, STUG, v. a. To cut down grain, leaving some of the stubble too high, from not holding the hook horizontally. S.

To STOG, v. a. 1. To push a stick down through the soil, in order to ascertain its depth. 2. To search a pool or marsh, by pushing down a pole at intervals.

3. To plant the feet slowly and cautiously in walking, as aged or infirm persons do. S.

STOG, s. 1. Any pointed instrument; as, "A great stog o' a needle." 2. Sometimes applied to a prickle, or to a small splinter of wood, fixed in the flesh. S.

STOGGIE, adj. 1. Rough, in a general sense. 2. As applied to cloth, both coarse and rough. S.

STOG SWORD. V. STOK.

To STOICH, v. a. To fill with bad or suffocating air.

"The house is stoicht wi' reek," filled with smoke. S.

STOICH, s. Air of this description. S.

STOICHERT, part. adj. 1. Overloaded with clothes.

2. Overpowered with fatigue. S.

STOIFF, s. A stove. S.

STOYLE, s. A long vest, reaching to the ankles. S.

STOIP, s. A measure of liquids. V. STOUP.

To STOIT, Stot, Stoiter, v. n. 1. To walk in a staggering way; to totter, S. See Sup.

— What comes?—an auld, beld carle,—

Just stoitin to the ither warl

As fast's he can.

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, ii. 61.

2. To stumble on any object, S.

Sho stottis at strais, syn stumbillis not at stanis.

Montgomerie MS. Chron. S.P. iii. 499.

Steit has anciently been used in the same sense.

As Ganhardin steit oway.

His heued he brac tho,

As he fleighe.

Sir Tristrem, p. 172. st. 62.

Wi' writing I'm sae bleirt and doited,

That when I raise, in troth I stoited.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 336.

3. Used metaph., as denoting the staggering state of public affairs.

— He can lend the stoitering state a lift,

Wi' gowd in gowpins as a grassum gift.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 86.

4. To skip about; to move with elasticity. S.

On steit, Gl. Tristr., misprinted stut, my friend Mr. Scott seems justly to remark, that this is the origin of stutter, though now limited to the voice. They may at least be viewed as radically the same. In like manner, stammer, which in E. signifies to stutter, as applied to speech, in S. denotes staggering.

Su.G. stoet-a, allidere, offendere. Stoeta sin fot emot stenen, to strike one's foot against a stone. Isl. staut-a, steyt-a, Teut. stuyt-en, impingere; Dan. stoed, offendiculum; Teut. stoot-steen, lapis offensionis. Wachter derives Germ. stotter-n, balbutire, from stot-en, impingere.

STOITER, s. The act of staggering, S.

To STOITLE o'er, v. n. To fall over in an easy way, in consequence of infirmity, without, however, being hurt. S.

STOIT, s. A springing motion in walking. V. Stot. S.

To LOSE or TYNE the STOIT. Metaph. to lose the proper line of conduct; to go astray. S.

To STOK, v. a. To thrust.

For so Eneas stokkis his stiff brand

Throw out the youngkere hard vp tyl his hand.

Doug. Virgil, 349, 14.

The swerd wichtly stokkit or than was glade

Throw out his coist. — Ibid. 291, 52.

This v. seems formed from the part. pa. of stik; stokyn, pierced, stabbed.

Grekis insprent, the formest haue thay stokyn,

And slane with swerdes. — Ibid. 55, 29.

S T O

E. stock, which is nearly allied, denotes a thrust, a stoc-cado. V. the s. and STUG.
STOK, STOK SWERD, STOG SWORD, s. "A stiff or strong sword," Rudd.; but, as Sibb. observes, rather "a long small sword."

This Auentinus followis in thir weris,
Bure in thare handis lance, staiffis and burrel speris;—
With round stok swerdis faucht they in mellé,
With poyntalis or with stokkis Sabellyne.

Doug. Virgil, 231, 51, 52.

The term properly denotes a sword formed rather for thrusting than for striking down.

"Thay had stok swerdis quhom na armour may resist."
Bellend. Cron. B. x. c. 16. Hostem punctim magis quam caesim petere assueti essent, commoda breuitate mucronibus munimentum omne rupturis. Boeth.

This is also written stoge, stog.

"And so he straik him twyss or thryss throw with a stog sword." Knox's Hist. p. 65. A stog sweard, MS. i.

"He strikes him twice or thrice throw with a stog sword." Watson's Histor. Collect. p. 69.

Rudd. refers to Fr. estoc, Ital. stocco, ensis longior, verutum; which he derives from O. Belg. stokkade, pugio, sica.
But Kilian mentions Teut. stocke, sica, ensis. The origin seems Su.G. stick-a, pungere; although perhaps through the channel of the preceding v.

STOKEN, part. pa. Shut up; enclosed. V. STEIK, v.

STOKIT MERIS. Brood mares, or mares with foal. S.

STOLE, STOWL, s. A stalk; a scion from a root. S.

To STOLL, v. a. To place in safety, or in ambush.

Bot quha sa list towart that stede to draw,
It is ane stolling place, and sobir herbry,
Quhare oft in stail or enbuschment may ly,
Quhiddel men list the bargane to abyde,
Owthir on the richt hand or on the left side.

Doug. Virgil, 382, 36.

Rudd. derives the term from Fr. estal, locus ubi quidpiam reponitur. Teut. stolle denotes a mine, q. a secret place under ground, from stoll-en, fulcire. Perhaps stell-en, ponere, is the radical word.

Stolling, stollin, is used for the stowing of a cargo on shipboard.

"That na merchandis gudis be reuin nor spilt with vn-ressonabill stollin, as with spakis." Acts, Ja. III. 1466.
c. 17. Edit. 1566.

This, however, may be rather from O. Teut. stouw-en, acervare, accumulare, cogere.

STOLL, s. A place of safety, Gl. Sibb. V. the v. and STELL, s.

STOLLIN, s. The act of stowing goods in a ship. S.

STOLTUM, s. A good cut or slice; as of bread and cheese. Syn. Stow, Whang. S.

STOLUM, s. As much ink as a pen takes up, S.

Teut. stolle, frustum?

STOLUM, s. 1. A large piece of any thing broken off another piece; a large quantity of any thing. 2. A supply; a store. S.

STOMATICK, s. A medicine good for the stomach. S.

STOMOK, s. A shred; a piece of cloth; a fragment.

Frae claith weil can thou cleik a clout,
Of stomoks stown, baith red and blew,
A bag fou anes thou bore about.

Stewart, Evergreen, i. 120.

Allied perhaps to Su.G. Germ. stump, a segment, a fragment; stumpig, mutilated; from stufw-a, amputare.

STOMOK, s. A stomacher. S.

To STONAY, STUNAY, v. a. 1. To astonish.

drive away strange beasts from the pastures. S.

STONE CELT. V. CELT. S.

STONE-CHECKER, s. A bird. V. STANE-CHAKER.

STONE COFFIN. These repositories of the dead are formed of six flat stones put together as a chest; one for the bottom, four for the sides, and one as a cover. S.

STONE-FISH, s. The spotted Blenny, S.; Blennius Gunnellus, Linn.

"Gunnellus Cornubiensium, the Butter-fish of the English; our fishers call it the Stone-fish." Sibb. Fife, p. 121.

Probably denominated from its being found lying under stones. V. Penn. Zool. p. 171.

STONE-RAW, s. Rock Liverwort.

"Like the feld elfen of the Saxons, the usual dress of the fairies is green; though, on the moors, they have been sometimes observed in heath-brown, or in weeds dyed with the stone-raw, or lichen." Minstrelsy, Border, ii. 226.

Here the term has an E. orthography. V. STANE-RAW.

STONERN, adj. Of or belonging to stone. S.

STONES. To Go to the Stones, to go to church; Highlands of Scotland.—For origin of this. V. CLACHAN. S.

STONKERD, STONKARD, STUNKART, adj. Silent, and at the same time sullen; obstinate, S. See Sup.

— And ken them well whase fair behaviour

Deserve reward and royal favour,

Wha merit naithing but the gallows.

Ramsay's Works, Life, xlii.

Isl. stygg-r conveys nearly the same idea; indomitus, insolens, non mansuetus, G. Andr.; Su.G. stygg, odiosus, invisus; Belg. stug, surly.

To STOO, v. a. To crop. V. STOW.

STOOK, STOUK, s. A rick or shock of corn, consisting of twelve sheaves. S. A. Bor.

"As a proof of the productive crop we have had this harvest, 17 stooks of wheat, in a farm at Woodhall, have produced 11½ bolls excellent grain." Edin. Even. Courant, Oct. 13. 1803.

Sibb. doubtfully refers to Sw. stock, a cluster. But it more resembles Germ. stock, tectum, from steck-en, tegere,
q. a quantity of sheaves covered, for resisting rain; or Teut.
stock, meta, a heap, hoy-stock, meta foeni, Kilian; q. a stock of hay.

To STOOK, v. a. To put corn into shocks, S. See S.

When corn is ripe, and fit for the shearing,

The joys of the harvest we jointly shall see;—

And when 'tis a' cut, I'll stook it with pleasure,

And fit it for mill, or fit it for measure.

R. Galloway's Poems, p. 199.

STOOKER, s. One who puts corn into shocks on the field. S.

STOOK-WAYS, adv. As shocks of corn are set up. S.

STOOK, s. A kind of wedge anciently used in sinking coal-pits in Scotland. S.

STOOTHIN, s. Covering with lath and plaster. S.
STOOTHED, part. adj. Apparently, studded. S.
To STOP to, v. a. To cram; to stuff. S.
STOP, s. A stave. S.
STOP COMPTOUR. Apparently, a board or bench for holding stoups. S.
STOPPED, adj. Apparently used for stupid. S.
STOR, adj. Rough; severe. V. STURE. S.
STORE, s. Applied to sheep or cattle; hence, a store farm, a farm principally consisting of a walk for sheep, S.
STORARE, STOROUR, s. An overseer; one who has the charge of flocks.
 Welcum, storare of al kynd bestial.
Doug. Virgil, 403, 48.
 Tyrrheus thare fader was hie maister and gyde
 Of steddiss, flokkis, bowis, and hirdis wyde,
 As storour to the kinge, did kepe and yym.
Ibid. 224, 27.
STOREY-WORM, s. A slug. S.
STOREMASTER, s. The tenant of a sheep-farm. S.

STORG, s. A large pin.—STORGING. The noise a pin makes, rushing into the flesh. S.
STORY,* s. A softer term for a falsehood; a lie; as, You tell a story, S. evidently borrowed from the fabulous character of most of those narrations commonly called stories or story-books.
STORY-TELLER, s. A soft name for a liar. E. Romancer. S.
STORM,* s. Snow, Aberd. See Sup.
 This use of the term is pretty general in S.
 "Great frosts and snows in this oat seed-time, no ploughs going, and little seed sowing, so vehement was the storm." Spalding's Troubles, i. 216.
 When snow continues on the ground, it is called a lying storm; also, a Stock-storm, q. v.
FEEDING-STORM, s. Snow lying on the ground, and being increased by a further fall. S.
STORMING, s. The operation of tempestuous weather. S.
STORM-STEAD, STORM-STAD, adj. Stopped in a journey, by reason of a storm, and under a necessity of keeping a place of shelter, till it be over, S.
 This might seem q. storm-bestead. But Spalding's orthography directs to the v. stay; stayed, i. e. stopped.
 "Saturday he came to Fettercairn,—where he was storm-staid.—He is storm-staid while the tenth of February." Troubles in S. i. 41.
STORM-WINDOW, s. A window raised from the roof, and slated above and on each side. S.
STOT, s. 1. A young bull or ox; properly, one that is three years old, S.
 Mare nedeful now it war, but langare tary,
 Seuin young stottis, that yoik bare neuir nane,
 Brocht from the bowe, in offerand brittin ilkane.
Doug. Virgil, 163, 47.
 "The general run of stots and queys, reared here, from three to four years old, seldom fetch above 30s. or 40s., according to their size and shape." P. Wattin, Caithn. Statist. Acc. xi. 270.
 2. The term is often used for a bull of any age, S.B.
 3. It generally denotes a male of the Bos species that has been castrated. S.
 The term is used O.E.
 And Grace gaue Pierce of his goodnes four stottes,
 All that hys oxen eried, they to harrowe it after;
 One hyght Austen, and Ambrose an other,
 Gregory the greate clarke, and Jerome the good.
P. Ploughman, Fol. 108, a.
 Skinner expl. stot, "a young hors." This is most probably the sense in Chaucer, from A.S. stad, a stallion. Germ. stutte is rendered a filly-fole, Arnold's Dict. Tyrwhitt justly observes, that "the passage which Du Cange, in vo. Stottus, has quoted from Maddox, Form. Angl. p. 427. to shew that stottus signifies Equus admissarius, proves rather that it signifies a bullock. John de Nevill leaves to his eldest son several specific legacies, et etiam cc. vaccas pro stauo, cc. stottos et stirkes, mm bidentes, &c. Stirke is the Saxon name for a heifer, so that there can be little doubt that cc stottos et stirkes should be rendered cc bullocks and heifers." Note, ver. 617. A. Bor. stot, a young bullock or steer.
 Su.G. stut, juvenus; Dan. stud, a bull, an ox, ung stud, a bullock. Ihre deduces the term from stoet-a, ferire, q. one that strikes with the horn. Germ. stossig thier, bos cornupeta. V. NOLT.
STOT'S-MILK, s. Unboiled flummery. S.
To STOT, v. n. To take the bull, S.B.
To STOT, v. n. 1. To rebound from the ground; used with respect to any elastic body, as a handball, S.

See Sup.—2. To bounce in walking; to raise the body at every step, S.

Belg. stuyt-en, to bounce, weerstuyt-en, to rebound; Sw. stuts-a, stutt-a, v. n. to rebound, stoet-a tilbaka, v. a. id. Stoeter af steene; si subsiliat a lapide; Ihre, vo. Stuts, i. e. gif it stots aff a stane, S. The primary sense of stoet-a is, tundere, percutere; Moes.G. staut-an, Isl. steyt-a, Alem. stozz-en, Germ. stoss-en, id. Isl. staut-a, impingere. Su.G. stoet, ictus; stuts, repercussio.

STOT, s. 1. The act of rebounding, S. See Sup.

2. A bounce or spring, in walking, S.

3. It seems to signify quick or sudden motion.

"I find it difficult to keep all stots with Christ." Rutherford's Lett. P. i. ep. 71.

4. A leap, or quick motion, in dancing. S.

To STOT, v. a. To strike any elastic body on the ground; to cause it to rebound; as, to stot a ball, S.

To STOT, v. n. To stumble. V. STOT.

To STOT, v. a. To stop.

Quhen that the Lord of Lorne saw
His men stand off him ane sik aw,
That thai durst nocht folow the chase,
Rycht angry in his hart he was;
And for wondyr that he suld swa
Stot thaim, him ane but ma,
He said, "Me think, Marthokys son,
"Rycht as Golmakmorn was wone,
"To haiff fra hym all his mengne:
"Rycht swa all his fra ws has he."

Barbour, iii. 66. MS.

It may be allied to Belg. stuyt-en, verttere, averttere, impedire; Kilian.

To STOT, v. n. To stop; to cease.

Thair lufly lances thai loissit, and lichtit on the land.
Right styth stuffit in steill thai stotit na stynt;
Bot buskit to battaile, with birny and brand.

Gawan and Gol. iii. 3.

Mr. Pinkerton expl. it staggered. V. STOT. But that this cannot be the sense, is evident from the use of the same term afterwards.

Schir Oviles, Schir Iwell, in handis war hynt,
And to the lufly castell war led in ane lyng.
Thairwith the stalwartis in stour can stotin and stynt:
And baith Schir Agalus and Schir Hew was led to the Kyng. Ibid. st. 10.

It is here corrected from Edit. 1508. Mr. Pinkerton reads stolin. Stot is thus synon. with stynt; and the phrase redundant, which is very common with our old writers. It is merely the preceding v. used in a neut. sense.

STOTIT, Gawan and Gol. iii. 3. V. preceding v.

To STOTTER, v. n. To stumble; to be ready to fall. S.

To STOVE, v. a. To stew, S.

Ye may well ken, goodman,
Your feast comes frae the pottage-pan;
The stov'd or roasted we afford
Are aft great strangers on our board.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 525.

Germ. stov-en, Su.G. stufw-a, id.

STOVE, STOUVE, s. A vapour; an exhalation.

Mysty vapoure vpspringand swete as sence,
In smoky soppis of donk dewis wak,
With hailsum stouis ouerheildand the slak.

Doug. Virgil, 399, 51.

This is evidently the same with Stew, q. v.

STOUND, s. A small portion of time; a moment.

A. Bor. id.

Anchises son tho stentis ane litill stound,
And bayth hys futesteppis fixit on the ground.

Doug. Virgil, 174, 54.

The self stound amynd the preis fute hote

Lucagus enteris into his chariote. Ibid. 338, 32.

A.S. Su.G. Isl. Teut. stund, tempus, hora, spatium, momentum; Su.G. skam stund, a short time; Belg. terstond, immediately. As stund denotes a short time, Ihre deduces it from stufw-a, amputare. In Gl. Gunnlaug. it is derived from ek stend, consisto.

To STOUND, v. n. To ache; to have the sensation of acute pain, S.

Tharewyth all the hirnyys of his goist
He rypit wyth the swerd amynd his coist,
So tyl hys hart stoundis the pryk of deith:
He weltis ouer, and yaldis vp the breith.

Doug. Virgil, 339, 39.

A. Bor. It stounds, dolet; Isl. styn, doleo, stunde dolui.

STOUND, s. 1. An acute pain, affecting one at intervals; as, a stound of the onbeast, or toothache, S.B.

2. Transferred to the mind, denoting any thing that causes a smarting pain; as, a stound of luce, S. i. e. of love.

The fader of goddis and men——
Inducis and commouis to the mellé
Tarchon of Tuskanis principal lord and syre,
In braithful stoundis rasit brym as fyre.

Doug. Virgil, 390, 55.

Stounds, sorrows, damps, Skinner. Chaucer uses stound ill in the same sense.

She ne maie staunche my stound ill.

Rom. Rose, ver. 4472. Urry.

STOUP, STOIP, s. 1. A deep and narrow vessel for holding liquids; a flagon, S. stoop, E. See Sup.

Freyr Robert said, 'Dame, fill ane stoip of aile,
'That we may drink, for I am very dry.'
With that the gudewyf walkit furth in hy.
Sche fild ane stoip, and brought in cheis and breid.

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 67.

The term is frequently used to denote a vessel used as a measure, of indefinite size; as, a pint-stoup; a vessel made of pewter, that contains two quarts; a mutchkin-stoup, a vessel containing half a pint English, &c.

A.S. stoppa, a pot or flagon for wine, Somner; Belg. stoop, poculum majus, cantharus; Teut. stoop, urna. Su.G. stop, mensura liquidorum.

2. It is vulgarly used to denote a pitcher or bucket used for carrying water, narrower at the top than at the bottom, for securing the iron-hoops. This is denominated a water-stoup, S. See Sup.

The name water-stoup is also given, at Leith, to the common periwinkle, Turbo terebra, Linn.

STOUPFULL, s. As much as fills a stoup of whatever size. S.

STOUP, adj. Stupid, Aberd. V. STUPE.

STOUP and ROUP, adj. Completely; entirely, S. See S.

"Nae mair about it," quoth the miller,
The fowl looks well, and we'll fa' till her.
"Sae be't," says James; and in a doup,
They snapt her up baith stoup and roup.

i. e. stump and rump. Ramsay's Poems, ii. 527.

STOUPPE, s. A prop. V. STOOP.

STOUR, STOURE, STOWR, STURE, s. 1. The agitation of any body, the parts of which are easily separable from each other.

Sum grathis thame on fute to go in feild,
Sum hie montit on hors bak vnder scheild,
The dusty pouder vpdriuand with ane stoure.

Doug. Virgil, 230, 6.

2. Dust in a state of motion, S. pron. stoor.

And the stout stedis with thare huffis sound,

With swift renkis dynlit the dousty ground :
The blak stoure of powder in ane stew,
Als thik as myst towart the wallis threw.

Doug. Virgil, 397, 19.

— Stour of powder vp strekis in the are.

Ibid. 426, 30.

Yestreen I met you on the moor,
Ye spak na, but gaed by like stoure. Burns, iv. 286.

The term is also used, but improperly, with respect to dust that is laid, S.

My books like useless lumber ly,
Thick cover'd owre wi' stour, man.

A. Douglas's Poems, p. 41.

3. A gush of water. The spray driven, in consequence of the agitation of a body of water; or, as Rudd. expresses it, "water flying like dust."

Besely our folkis gan to pingil and strife,
Swepand the flude with lang routhis belife,
And vp thai welt the stoure of fomy see.

Doug. Virgil, 77, 34.

— Hir bowkit bysyne, that hellis belth
The large fludis suppis thris in ane swelth,
And vthir quhilis spoutis in the are agane,
Driuand the stoure to the sternes as it war rane.

Ibid. 82, 18.

Dust or water receives this denomination, merely from its agitated state; Teut. stoor-en, turbare, perturbare; lutum aut vadum commovere; Kilian. This derivation is confirmed by the use of upstourand as an epithet conjoined with dust.

— Younder mycht thou se
The heirdys of hartis wyth thare hedis hie
Ouer spynnerand wyth swyft cours the plane vale,
The hepe of dust upstourand at thare tale.

Doug. Virgil, 105, 15.

4. Metaph., trouble; vexation. To raise a stour, to cause disturbance, S.

Yon hobbleshow is like some stour to raise;
What think ye o't? for, as we use to say,
The web seems now all to be made of wae.

Ross's Helenore, p. 89.

5. Battle; fight.

Famows Lordis and Barownys,
Fled to the castelle owt of the stour.

Wyntown, viii. 11. 157.

— The best, and the worthiest,
That wilfull war to wyn honour,
Plungyt in the stalwart stour,
And rowtis rayd about thaim dang.

Barbour, ii. 355. MS.

It is still used in this sense, S.

There Scotia's sons most firmly stood,
Maintain'd an' gain'd the stour, man.

A. Douglas's Poems, p. 11.

It occurs in this sense in O.E.

Out of the stoure that stode tuo men askaped ware
Of Sir Haralde's blode, Eadwyn & Morkare.

R. Brunne, p. 71.

Isl. styr, Dan. styri, pugna, praelium; O.Fr. estour, a fight, a combat. Rudd. views A.S. styr-ian, steor-an, turbare, as the root.

6. Perilous situation; hardship; conflict; severe brush, S.

And I trast yhe wald nocht set till assaill,
For your worschipe, to do me dyshonour,
And I a maid, and standis in mony stour,
Fra Inglissmen to saiff my womanheid,
And cost has maid to kepe me fra thar dreid.

Wallace, v. 690. MS.

Ye are informed what a sture
Innes got at Lilsly Mure;
And Sharp's lifeguard, how they in Fife
Were in the hazard of their life.

Cleland's Poems, p. 21.

7. Force; violence.

"Thocht thai [the soland geese] have ane fisch in thair mouth abone the seis quhair thai fle, yit gif thai se ane vthir bettir, thay let the first fall, & doukis with ane fellow stoure (magno impetu, Boeth.) in the see, & bringis hais-telie vp the fische that thay last saw." Bellend. Descr. Alb. c. 9.

8. A paroxysm of rage.

Scho quham thou knawis within hir breist full hate
Soroufull vengeance compassis and dissate,
And certanely determyt for to de,
In diuers stouris, of ire brandissis sche.

Vario irarum aestu, Virg. Doug. Virgil, 119, 52.

9. Severe reproof. I wadna stand your stour, S.B.

Our lads and ye'll about it pluck a crow,
For forty groats I wadna stand your stour.

Ross's Helenore, p. 83.

The term, as used in the two last senses, is nearly allied to A.S. steore, reproof, correction, chastisement; from steor-an, to reprove, to correct.

10. A fright, Dumfr. q. a state of perturbation.

It is evident that this word, in all its senses, may be traced to Belg. stoor-en, Teut. stoer-en, A.S. styr-ian, turbare, movere, E. to stir. A.S. steor-an, to reprove, to correct, has been viewed as a different v. from styr-an. But the latter also signifies to irritate. Steor-an, in its primary sense, gubernare, is the very same with styr-an, movere. For steor-an, like Su.G. styr-a, seems originally to have been applied to the government of the helm, or steering of a ship. Now what is it, to govern a ship, but to move it by means of the helm? A.S. steore, the helm, merely signifies that part of a ship, by which the rest is stirred or put in motion. This seems also the origin of the Goth. terms used to denote a star. V. STARN.

To THROW STOUR in one's Een. To blind one; to impose upon one by false appearances. S.

STOURIE, adj. Dusty, S. V. the s.

To STOUR, STOWRE, STOOR, v. n. 1. To rise in foam or spray. To stoor, to rise up in clouds, as smoke, dust, &c. A. Bor.

The salt fame stouris from the fard thay hald.

Fit sonitus, spumante sale, Virg. Doug. Virgil, 45, 43.

2. To move swiftly, "making the dust or water fly about;" Rudd. S.

— It was ane glore to se —

The siluer scalit fyschis on the grete,
Ouer thowrt clere stremes sprinkilland for the hete,
With fynnyis schinand broun as synopare,
And chesal talis, stourand here and thare.

V. STEUIN, s. 2. Doug. Virgil, Prol. 400, 8.

I slipt my page, and stoor'd to Leith,

To try my credit at the wine. Watson's Coll. i. 14.

3. To gush. S.

Stoor, avast, get away, S. V. STOUR, s. 2.

STOURIN, s. A sprinkling of any powdery substance. S.

To STOUR about, v. n. To move quickly from place to place, from activity or restlessness of mind. S.

To STOUR aff, v. n. To move off quickly. S.

STOUR, STOURE, s. A stake; a long pole, Dumfr.

Mezentius the grym, apoun ane spere,
Or heich sting or stoure of the fir tre,
The blak fyre blesis of reik inswakkis he.

Doug. Virgil, 295, 43.

"Another method is called pock-net fishing. This is performed by fixing stakes or stours (as they are called) in the sand, either in the channel of the river, or in the sand which is dry at low water. These stours are fixed in a line, across the tide-way, at the distance of 46 inches from each other, about three feet high above the sand, and between every two of these stours is fixed a pock-net, tied by a rope to the top of each stour." P. Dornock, Dumfr. Statist. Acc. ii. 16.

Su.G. Dan. stoer, anciently staur, id. vallus, palus. Isl. staur, fulcrum sepimenti; Su.G. stoer-maal, interstitium inter paria perticarum, quae sepem sustinent, lhre. Hence stoer-a, to prop up with sticks or poles, Wideg.

STOUR, adj. Tall; large; great; stout. V. STURE, sense 3.

To STOUTER, v. n. To stumble; to trip in walking. S.

STOUTH, s. 1. Theft, S.

"Erle Thomas (seand how difficyl it was to bring thaym fra stouth that hes bene hantit thairwith) held ay with hym ane gard of bodin men." Bellend. Cron. B. xv. c. 1.

2. Stealth; clandestine transaction.

Sum rownys till his fallow thaym betwene,

Hys mery stouth and pastyme lait yestrene.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 402, 52.

Su.G. stoeld, id. furtum, from stiael-a, furari.

STOUTHREIF, s. Theft accompanied with violence; robbery.

"Because the cryme of thift and stouthreif, is sa commonlie vsit among the kingis liegis, and for stanching of the samin, It is statute, &c." Acts, James V. 1515, c. 2. Ed. 1566.

Although thift and stouthreif are mentioned as if they were the same cryme, they are evidently distinguished in what follows in the act, by the expression thief or reifar. They are also distinguished, Acts, James VI. 1587, c. 50, Skene.

"Robbery is truly a species of theft, for both are committed on the property of another, and with the same view of getting gain: but robbery is aggravated by the violence with which it is attended. It is in our old statutes called rief, 1477, c. 78, or stouthrief, 1515, c. 2, from stouth, or stealth, and rief, the carrying off by force; and it is in all cases punished capitally." Erskine's Inst. B. iv. Tit. 4. s. 64.

The same word is still vulgarly pron. stouthrie, S. But it merely denotes theft.

STOUTH AND ROUTH. Plenty; abundance. S.

STOUTHRIE, s. Provision; furniture, synon. with Splechrie, Fife.

Unless we should view this as an oblique sense of the preceding term, as properly denoting what has been gained by pillage; allied perhaps to Teut. stouw-en, acervare, E. stow, q. what one stoweth or accumulates; or with the addition of rych, A.S. ric, properly rich, used as a termination of nouns.

STOUTLYNYS, adv. Stoutly.

For thai that hardy war and wycht,
And stoutlynys with thair fayis gan fycht,
Pressyt thaim formast for to be.

V. LINGS, LINGIS, term. Barbour, xvi. 174. MS.

To STOW, STOWE, v. a. To crop; to lop; to cut off,

S. A. Bor. Pron. stoo. See Sup.

Vegetables are said to be stow'd, when the tender blades or sprouts are nipt off.

The hair is said to be stow'd, when it is cropped or cut short. I'll stow the lugs out of your head, I will crop your ears.

Thare he beheld ane cruell maglit face,
His visage menyete, and baith his handis, allace!
His halfettis spulyeit, of stowit his eris tuay,
By schamefull wound his neis cuttit away.

Doug. Virgil, 181, 23.

After their yokin, I wat weel

They'll stoo the kebbuck to the heel.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 46.

Quhae — maid you a gentillman wuld not stow your luggis?

Lyndsay, S.P.R. ii. 61.

This is purely Su.G. stufw-a, styfw-a, signifying, amputate. Warder styft af hanni naeser eller oerum; Si nares aut etiam aures illi amputentur. Leg. Suderm. ap. lhre. Styfw-a oeronen paa en haest; aures equo decurtare; to stoo a horse's lugs, S. Mod. Sax. stuv-en, afstuv-en, id. This is the origin of Su.G. stubb, E. stub, "a thick short stock left when the rest is cut off." V. STOB. Hence also E. stubble; and, STOWINS, s. pl. The tender blades or sprouts nipt from a plant of colewort or any other vegetable, S. See S.

STOW, s. A cut or slice; pron. stoo. V. STOW. S.

STOW, interj. Hush! silence! S.

STOW, s. A stove. Pl. STOWIS, stoves. S.

STOWEN, s. A gluttonous fellow. S.

STOWICK, s. A shock of corn; the same with Stook. S.

STOWLINS, adv. Clandestinely, q. by theft, from stouth, stealth, S. Stowenlins, S.A.

— A' his aim at putting, jump, or play,

Is frae the rest to bear the gree away;

And stowlins teetin' wi' a wishfu' ee,

Gin she he loves his manly feats does see.

Morison's Poems, pp. 164, 185.

— Stowenlins, whan thou was na thinkin,

I'd been wi' bonnie lasses jinkin.

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, i. 53.

STOWN, STOWIN, part. pa. Stolen, from which word it is softened.

"Oft tymes geir tynt or stowin, is gettin agane be coun-gerars." Abp. Hamiltoun's Catechisme, Fol. 16. b. V. STOMOK.

STOWNLINS, adv. Clandestinely; theftuously. S.

STOWP, s. A post, as that of a bed. Syn. Stoop. S.

STRA, STRAE, STRAY, s. 1. A straw, S. strae.

— With hir cours na rede nor tendir stray

Was harmyt oucht, nor hurt by any way.

Doug. Virgil, 237, b. 26.

2. Metaph., a thing of no value.

Stra for thys ignorant blabering imperfite.

Doug. Virgil, Pref. 3, 36.

A.S. stre, Su.G. straa, A. Bor. streea, id.

3. To draw a strae before ane, to attempt to deceive one, S.

I'm our auld a cat to draw a strae before, Prov. S.; or as given by Ferguson, p. 21. "It is ill to draw a strae before an auld cat." Signifying that one has too much experience to be easily deceived.

"Morton was too old a cat, to draw such a straw before him, or to propound any thing tending that way; wherefore their best was to make him away, that so the plot might goe on." Hume's Hist. Doug. p. 347.

The phraseology is also inverted.

"The Earle of Angus, though he were no very old cat, — yet was he too warie and circumspect to be drawne by a straw." Ibid. p. 228.

This Proverb is undoubtedly very ancient, and must have been transmitted from our Gothic ancestors. The very same occurs in Su.G. Thet aer swaart, at draga straa for gamla kattor, i. e. It is difficult to deceive an old cat. Draga straa foer en, to deceive; Ihre.

It may be supposed, that this very ancient phrase merely alludes to the childish custom of making a kitten follow a straw, or any thing of the same kind. But as it is vulgarly believed, that those who have the power of that species of fascination called casting glaumer, often employ a straw, making it appear as large as a pole; it is not improbable, that the phrase might originally have some such allusion.

There seems to be a vestige of the magical use of straws in incantation in Semple's Legend. V. STREASE.

Principal Baillie has a phrase, now obsolete, which most probably contains a similar allusion.

"It seems Digby and Langdale, intended to have kept Montrose's parliament at Glasgow, but—God laid a straw in their way. In their route, Digby's coach was taken, and sundry of his writs."—Letters, ii. 166.

STRAE, s. To Bind or Tie with a strae. When one is so overcome with laughter, as to have no power over himself, it is commonly said, Ye might hae bund him wi' a strae, S.

The phrase perhaps merely alludes to the custom of twisting ropes of straw for binding sheaves; signifying that one is in such a debilitated state, as the effect of violent laughter, that, instead of a rope, a single straw would be sufficient to bind him.

STRAE-DEATH, s. A fair strae-death, a natural death on one's bed, as opposed to a violent or accidental one, S. See Sup.

For a' the claith that we ha'e worn,
Frae her and hers sae often shorn,
The loss of her we cou'd ha'e born,
Had fair strae-death tane her awa',
Ewie wi' the Crooked Horn.

Ritson's S. Songs, i. 289.

This term alludes to the simple manners of our forefathers, who slept on straw. Hence the phraseology retained, S.B.

Sick, sick she grows, as ever lay on strae,
And near gae up the ghost 'tweesh that and wae.

Ross's Helenore, p. 56.

It is entirely a Goth. idiom. Su.G. straadoe, id. morte sicca obire diem suum, Ihre;—from straa, straw, and doe, to die. Han straadoe i Wizingzo, He died a natural death, in insula Wisingiana; Catal. Reg. ap. Ihre.

The warlike Goths reckoned this kind of death disgraceful. They therefore denominated it Kerlinga daude, i. e. the death of old women, S. carlins' dede; Keyser. Antiq. Septent. p. 145. V. GER.

STRAEIN, adj. Of or belonging to straw, S. A straein raip, a rope made of straw; A.S. strawene, id.

STRAA. To SAY STRAA to one. To find fault with one; to lay any thing to one's charge. S.

STRABBLE, s. Any thing hanging loose and awkwardly, or trailed on the ground; a shred; a tatter, S.B.

Germ. straublein, Belg. struyf, a fritter.

STRABS, s. pl. Any withered vegetables or light rubbish, loosely scattered about. S.

STRABUSH, STRABASH, s. Tumult; uproar, S. allied perhaps to Su.G. rabbus, tumultus, qualis esse solet hostium diripientium. See Sup.

STRACK, adj. Strict, S.B. A.S. strae, upright, strict, severe. V. STRAK.

STRACUMMAGE, s. The same with strabush, Fife.

STRADDLE, s. The same as Car-saddle, q. v. S.

STRAE, s. Straw. V. STRA.

STRAE-DEATH. V. under STRA.

STRAE-DEAD, adj. Used in the sense of—quite dead. S.

STRAG, s. A thin-growing crop, the stalks straggling. S.

STRAGGER, s. A straggler. S.

STRAY. On stray, adv.

The stedis stakerit in the stour, for streking on stray.

Gawan and Gol. iii. 21.

Perhaps this is equivalent to astray, like on brede, &c. q. "staggered aside in consequence of the violence of the strokes."

STRAICIEK, s. A stroke. S.

STRAICT, STRAYTE, s. A narrow pass.

And at Roslyne at the last,

Thare in the Straictis, thai tuk down,

And stentyt tent and pawillown.

Wyntown, viii. 16. 89.

STRAIFFIN, s. The thin filmy substance made of the secundine of a cow, for covering the mouths of bottles, &c.

STRAIGHT, s. A straight line, S.

"That the distance from opposite the angle of the ford dyke to the Coffin-stone on the Seaton side, taking the straight, and leaving the small angles and turns of the banks unnoticed, is about 2060 feet." State, Fraser of Fraserfield, 1805, p. 186. V. STRAUCHT.

To STRAIGHT, v. a. To lay out a dead body. S.

To STRAIK, STRAYK, v. a. 1. To stroke; to rub gently with the hand, S. See Sup.

With Venus hen wyffis, quhat wyse may I flyte?

That straykis thir wenschis hedes thame to pleis.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 96, 54.

A.S. strac-an, Germ. streich-en, Su.G. stryk-a, molliter fricare.

2. To anoint with any unctuous substance, S.

Su.G. stryk-a up haret med pomada, to rub up the hair with pomatum, S. To straik bread, to put butter on it; stryka smoer paa broed, id. Wideg. Sw. stryka ut et plaaster, to spread a plaister.

3. To render even, by drawing a straight piece of wood across the top of the bushel or firloft in which grain is put to be measured. S.

STRAIK, s. 1. The act of stroking, S. Germ. streech, id.

"And for eschewing of fraud, hes thought expedient, that all victual salbe measured be straik." Acts, James VI. 1587, c. 114, Skene. This is called straiked measure, as opposed to heaped.

Su.G. stryk-a has the same application, to smooth a measure of corn by the stritchel. Hence struket maal, i. e. straiked measure, is opposed to rogadt maal, mensurae cumulatae; Ihre, vo. Stryka.

2. A piece of wood, with straight edges, used for stroking off all that is above the legal measure of grain, salt, &c., in the vessel used for measurement. 3. The quantity of grain that is stroked off. 4. The act of anointing. S.

STRAIKER, s. The piece of wood with which grain, &c. is stroked, to level it with the brim of the measure. S.

 chisme, 1552, Fol. 28, a.
 2. Metaph. used as signifying remorse.
 "Therefore knowledge must go before the straik of the conscience. Thy hart can neuer feele that to be euill, quhilk thy mynde knawis not to be euill." Bruce's Serm. on the Sacr. N. 8. a.
 Germ. streich, Sw. streek, ictus.
 3. An engagement in the field of battle.
 At the first straik with thaim he had nocht beyne;
 With him he led a thousand weill beseyne.
Wallace, vi. 684. MS.
 From the idea of striking a battle.
 4. Coinage; the act of striking money.
 "As anentis the money, it is referrit to the actis maid of befor be the xxiii persounis chosin thairto, baith for the hame bringing of the bulyeon be the merchandis, and of the new straik to be maid." Acts, James II. 1449, c. 30.

 Sibb. seems justly to reject the common idea that this means Morocco leather, or that which was brought "from the Straits of Gibraltar." For this woollen stuff is mentioned in several O.E. Acts of Parl. as An. 18. Hen. 6., 4.
 Edw. 4. c. 1. and 1. Rich. 3. c. 8.
STRAITIT, part. pa. Constrained. S.
STRAK, adv. Straight, in a straight line.

Vision, st. 8. Evergreen, i. 216.
 Germ. strampf-en, id. used by Luther, in his version, Job xxxix. 24. It is amusing to observe, that Ihre, in his Su.G. Glossary says concerning this pronunciation, vo.
Trampa; "Germ. praeposita s, strampfen;" and Wachter returns the compliment to the Swedes; "Suevi sibilo praefixo dicunt strampfen;" vo. Trampen. Moes.G. ana-

 This sense, in which the term is still commonly used, as well as the former, is a deviation from that of all the other Northern dialects; in which it signifies, as in E., the shore, the margin of the sea, or any water.
STRANG, adj. 1. Strong; powerful.
 Away, away, thou traitor strang!

Doug. Virgil, 189, 17.

It is also used for the part. pa., from streik; as raucht, from reik.

STRAUCHT, adj. Straight; direct. The straucht road, the direct way, S.

A.S. straec, Germ. streck, rectus.

This, I imagine, ought to be viewed as originally the part. pa. of A.S. strecc-an and other Goth. verbs, signifying to stretch. For a straight line gives us the idea of that which is stretched out between two points.

STRAUCHT, s. 1. A straight line, S.B.

Minstrely, Border, ii. 391.

Perhaps thus denominated from their resemblance of streamers or flags unfurled in the atmosphere.

This term seems not to have been properly adopted as E. It is mentioned, as used in the north; Baddam's Mem. Royal Soc. viii. 215. They are also called Merry Dancers and Pretty Dancers.

To STREAMER, v. a. To streak; to cover with straggling flashes of light, resembling the Aurora Borealis. S.

STREAPE, s. A small rill. V. STRIPE.

STREASE, s. pl. Given in Gl. as not understood, is evidently for straws.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 63.

Perhaps from A.S. straec, strict; or rather Fr. estrecci, straitened, contracted, made short. The phrase indeed seems to signify, that he used the English pronunciation, as contrasted with the Scottish.

To STREIK, STREEK, v. a. 1. To stretch, S. See S.

Depe vnto hellis flude of Acherone.

Doug. Virgil, 173, 35.

STREIK, s. 1. Extent. V. STRAIK, sense 3. 2. The longitudinal direction of a stratum of coal. 3. Opinion; as, "Tak your ain streich," take your own way. S.

STREIKIN, part. adj. Tall and agile. S.

To STREIK, STREEK, v. n. To go quickly, S.B.

O'er hill and dale with fury she did dreel;
A' roads to her were good and bad alike,
Nane o't she wyl'd, but forward on did streich.

Ross's Helenore, p. 56.

A.S. stric-an, to go, to proceed; Isl. striuk-a, Su.G. stryk-a, currere, vagari. Isl. striuka a brautt, aufugere, q. to striek abroad. Su.G. stryka omkring i landet, to ramble about the country, Wideg. Germ. streich-en, Teut. strycken, tendere, proficisci. From Isl. striuk-a is formed strok-a, cursitare: a boy, who has recently acquired the power of running, is called strak-r, G. Andr. Perhaps streich, to extend, is the radical term; because in running the limbs are thrown forward, q. at full stretch.

STREIK, s. 1. Speed; expedition. To mak little streich, to make small progress, S.B.

2. Exertion in whatever way, S.B.

Contrive na we, your shaklebanes
Will mak but little streich.

Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 35.

3. Bustle; tumultuous noise; disturbance. It is said, that there is a michty streik in the house, when people are bustling up and down in a confused way. To raise a streich, to make much ado, to make great noise or disturbance, S.B. V. the preceding v.

From Isl. striuk-a is formed hafzstroka, procella maris, q. a streich in the sea.

STREIK, s. 1. A handful of flax. 2. A small bundle of flax, into which flaxdressers roll what they have dressed. S.

STREIN, STREEN, s. The strein, yesternight, S.

To STREKE, STRYKE, v. n. To extend. V. STREIK. S.

STRENIE, adj. Lazy; sluggish. Syn. Stechie. S.

STREMOURIS, s. pl.

The twynkling stremouris of the orient
Sched purpours sprayngis with gold and asure ment,
Persand the sable barmkin nocturnall,

Bet doun the skyes cloudy mantil wall.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 399, 26.

"The reader may judge for himself whether the poet means the Northern lights, or merely the streams of light which precede the rising of the sun;" Gl. Sibb.

There can be no reasonable doubt that the latter is meant. The description quoted does not apply to the Aurora Borealis; and the poet has previously said;

Nyctimene affrayit of the licht,
Went vnder couert, for gone was the nycht.

V. STREAMERS.

STRENEWITE', s. Fortitude; stoutness.

B in thi name beteknis batalrus;—

W valyeantnes; S for strenewitē.

From Lat. strenuit-as.

Ballad, S.P.R. iii. 140.

To STRENYIE, STRENYE, v. a. 1. To strain; to sprain.

—Baith hir tendir handes

War strenyeit sairly boundin hard with bandes:

Doug. Virgil, 52, 36.

2. To constrain.

—We for our lyvis,
And for our childre, and for our wywis,
And for our fredome, and for our land,
As strenyeit in to bataill for to stand.

Barbour, xii. 248. MS.

3. To distract.

Fr. estraind-re, Lat. string-ere.

STRENYEABILL, adj. 1. Used to denote one who is possessed of so much property, that he can relieve his bail by being distrained.

"Ilk frie man may be borch for himselfe in court, or outwith court, for his awin vnlaw, or other small things; swa he be responsall and strenyeabill to the judge." Quon. Attach. c. 37.

2. Applied to goods that may be distrained. S.

Contr. from distrenye, Lat. distring-o.

To STRENKEL. V. STRINKIL.

To STRENT, v. a. To strengthen. See Sup.

"Forthir to strenth his manheid with more crafty slycht, he maid deip fowseis in the place quhare the battall wes set, and dang in staikis with scharp pointis rysing vp, couerit with scherretis." Bellend. Cron. B. xiv. c. 10.

STRENTHE, adj. Strong; powerful. S.

STRENTHIT, adj. Strengthened; supported. S.

STRENTHLY, adv. By force; by main strength.

The tothyr that makys ws eggyng,

Is that thai our possessioun

Haldis strenthly, agayne resoun.—Barbour, iv. 541. MS.

STRESS, s. 1. An ancient mode of taking up indictments for the Circuit courts.

"This method of taking up of dittay or indictments is substituted—in place of the old one by the stress (traistis) and porteous rolls mentioned in 1487. c. 99." Erskine's Instit. B. iv. T. 4. s. 86. Acts, Ja. II. c. 86. Ed. 1566.

This learned writer seems to view stress as a corr. of Traistis, q. v.

2. Distress; the act of distraining. See Sup.

"Of the taking of stressis be the Constabill." Acts, Ja. II. 1457. c. 86. Tit. Edit. 1566. This in the act itself is called distressis.

To STRESS, v. a. To inconvenience. It often denotes the overstraining effect of excessive exertion. S.

STRESTELY, adv. This is perhaps an errat. from Trestely, faithfully. V. TRAIST.

Thar duelt a Wallas welcummyt him full weill,
Thocht Inglissmen thar of had litill feille.
Bathe meite and drynk at his will he had thar.
In Laglyne wode, quhen that he maid repayr,

This Gentill man was full oft his resett;
With stuff of houshold strestely he thaim bett.

Wallace, ii. 18. MS.

In Gl. Perth Edit. this is expl. fully. But it rather signifies, with difficulty, because of the danger of discovery by the English; from Fr. estrecé, estroisse, pinched, straitened. He did it, as we would say, S. with a stress.

To STRETCH, v. n. To walk majestically; used in ridicule.

To STRY, v. a. "To strive; to oppose," Pink.

May no man stry him with strength, while his whele stondes. Sir Gawain and Sir Gal. i. 21.

Perhaps for try, the alliteration being preserved; or stroy, destroy.

STRIAK, s. Sound. Striak of the swesch, sound of the trumpet. V. STREIK, s. and SWESCH.

STRIBBED, part. pa. Milked neatly. V. STRIP, v. S.

To STRICK lint, to tie up flax in small handfuls, in preparing it for being milled, S.B.

Either from Teut. streck-en, tendere, q. to stretch it; or from the Sw. phrase straak-a lin, to ripple flax, changed in its sense.

STRICK, s. A handful of flax knit at the end, in order to its being milled, S.B. Strike, Chauc. id. See Sup.

Bot smoth it heng, as doth a strike of flax.

Prolog. Cant. Tales, ver. 678.

STRICK o' the water. The most rapid part of a stream. S.

STRICT, adj. Rapid. The stream's very strict, S., it runs rapidly.

"That the said dike is for the benefit of the Ford-shot, and without it the Ford-shot would be good for little, as it stems and calms the water where the shot is felled, while otherwise it would be a strict current." State, Leslie of Powis, v. Fraser of Fraserfield, p. 60.

It also occurs in a metaph. sense.

"Furnish him with strength, whereby he may row against the strictest streams of all temptations, till hee arriue into the haven of the heauens, the sole and safe harberie of saluation." Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 1075.

Sw. straake, streke, the main current of a river, mid-stream; Wideg.

To STRIDDLE, v. n. To straddle, S. See Sup.

From E. stride, or Dan. strett-a, pedibus divaricare.

STRIDE, s. The same with Cleaving, q. v. S.

STRIDELEGS, adv. Astride; astraddle. To ride stridelegs, to ride astride as a man does on horseback; as opposed to riding sidelegs, which denotes the female mode, S.

—Stride-legs, on a bougar-stake,
Sat Cupid, wild an' clever.

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, i. 148.

STRIDELINGIS, adv. Astride.

Auld Willie Dillie, wer he on lyue,
My life ful weill he culd discryue;
How as ane chapman beiris his pack,
I bure thy Grace vpon my back
And sum times strydlingis on my nek,
Dansand with mony bend and bek.

V. LINGIS, term. Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 262.

STRIFF RIGS. Patches of land common to all. S.

STRIFFAN, s. Film; thin skin. Striffan o' an egg, the white film inside an egg-shell. S.

STRIFFEN'D, part. pa. Covered with a film. S.

STRIFFIN, s. Starch. Perhaps originally Stiffen. S.

To STRIFFLE, v. n. To move in a fiddling, shuffling sort of way, as if wishing to appear of importance. S.

STRIFFLE, s. Motion of this description. S.

To STRYK a battle or field; to fight.

—That Jhon gat Edwarde,

That come in-til Scotland syne,
And strak the battaile of Duplyne.

Wyntown, viii. 6. 278.

"We find in our Erische Cronickelis, that Coelus King of Norroway commandit his nobils to take his bodey and burey it in Colm-kill, if it chancit him to die in the iles; but he was so discomfitit, that ther remained not so maney of his armye as wald burey him ther; therfor he was eirded in Kyle, after he stroke ane field against the Scotts, and was vanquisht be tham." Monroe's Descr. W. Iles, p. 20.

This corresponds to Su.G. slag, as primarily signifying a stroke, in a secondary sense a battle.

STRICKEN, STRIKEN, part. pa. of Stryk. Fought. S.

To STRYKE, v. n. To extend. V. STREIK, S.

STRIKE, s. A handful of flax. V. STRICK. S.

STRYNCHT, s. Strength. S.

STRYND, STREIND, STRYNE, s. 1. Kindred; race; offspring.

It suffeyt well than, Man-kynd,
Anys suld cum of Adamys strynd.

Wyntown, v. 12. 1299.

Here was the noble kyn and anciant strynd,
The maist douchty lynage sprang be kynd

Fra king Teucer ———— Doug. Virgil, 187, 39.

Chauc. strene, E. strain, id. A.S. strynd, stirps, genus, from streon-an, strin-an, gignere.

2. A particular cast, disposition, or quality of any person, who in this respect is said to resemble another. It is generally used as to those related by blood, S. See S.

"Scot. the word strynd or strain is metaph. used for the resemblance of the features of the body. As we say, He has a strynd or strain of his grandfather, i. e. resembles him;" Rudd.

It is also said, He takes a streind of such an one.

STRYND, s. Expl. stream; rivulet; spring of water.

The course of a rill. See Sup.

Apollo chargit vs to speide bedene
To Tyber flowand in the se Tyrrhene,
And to the funtane and the stryndis clere
Of Numicus the hallowit fresche riure.

Vada sacra Numici, Virg. Doug. Virgil, 214, 1.

It properly denotes the shallow places nigh the source of a river, which may be easily waded. This is probably the same with E. strand. Rudd. views it as the primary sense of strynd, signifying kindred. It may be a secondary one; but cannot well be the primary, because all the cognate terms in A.S. respect generation.

To STRYNE, v. a. To strain or sprain. S.

STRYN'D legs. Sprained legs. V. STREIND, v. S.

To STRING, v. a. To hang by the neck, S.

Tho' by the neck she should be strung,

She'll no desert. Burns, iii. 25.

I need scarcely say, that it is from the use of a string or halter.

To STRING, v. n. To be hanged, S. also used in cant E.

—"My accusations—are so well founded, that was there, (as we say in Scotland) a right sitting Sheriff, I would not doubt to see some Gentlemen string." Carnwath's Mem. Pref. ix.

To STRING, STRING awa. To move off in a line. S.

STRINGIE, (g soft) adj. Stiff; affected, Loth. corr. perhaps from E. stingy.

STRINGS, s. pl. An inflammation of the intestines of calves; called also Liver-crook. S.

To STRINKIL, STRENKEL, v. a. 1. To sprinkle, S.

—And with thare bludis schede, as was the gise,
The funeral flamb strinkill in sacrifice.

Doug. Virgil, 362, 53.

S T R

2. To scatter; to strew, S. See Sup.
 Stones of sral they strenkel, and strewe.
Sir Gawan and Sir Gal. ii. 20.
 Sibb. views this as a variation of sprinkle. Perhaps it may rather be traced to Su.G. stryk-a, colore obducere, with the insertion of n; as other terms, used to signify sprinkling, imply the idea of variegation; or to Teut. strekel-en, leviter tangere. V. SPRAYNG.
- STRINKLING, s. A small portion of any thing. S.
 STRINN, s. 1. A rill of the smallest kind. 2. The run from any liquid that is spilled, as water on a table. S.
 STRYNTHT, s. Strength. S.
 STRIP, STRYPE, STREAPE, s. A small rill, S.
 "In this ile of Mula is ane cleir fontane two mylis fra the see. Fra this fontane discendis ane litil burne, or strip rynnand ful of rounis to the seis. Thir rounis ar round & quhit schynand like perle full of thik humour: and within two houris eftir that thay come to see thay grow in gret cocles." Bellend. Desc. Alb. c. 13.
 "Out of this well runs ther ane little strype downwith to the sea." Monroe's Isles, p. 31.
 "This brooke Cedron—was a little streape that ran when it was raine, but in time of drought it was drie." Rollocke on the Passion, p. 3.
 A strype is distinguished from a burn. "When the fish ascend forth of the said Loch, to the waters, burnes and stripes that fall in the same to spawn therein, there is great slaughter and destruction of them committed by the country people about." Acts, Charles I. 1633. c. 29.
 The gradation seems to be; water, a river, burn, a brook, burnie, a small brook, stripe, a rill of the smallest kind, synon. sike.
 Shall we consider this as a secondary use of stripe, used by Chaucer to signify race, kindred, from Lat. stirps; as strynd, a stream, has been viewed, in relation to strynd, race? Or is it merely E. strip, used in a peculiar sense; as denoting a very narrow gully or passage for water?
- STRYPPIE, s. A very small rill. S.
 STRIP, s. A long narrow plantation, or belt of trees. S.
 To STRIP, v. n. To draw the after-milkings of cows. S.
 STRIPPINGS, s. pl. The last milk taken from the cow. S.
 To STRIPE, v. a. To cleanse by drawing between the finger and thumb compressed; E. to strip. S.
 STRIPPIT, part. adj. Striped. S.
 STRITCHIE, adj. Lazy; sluggish. S.
 STRIVELING MONEY. V. STERLING. S.
 STRIVEN, part. adj. On bad terms; not friendly. S.
 To STRODD, STRODGE, v. n. 1. To stride along; to strut. 2. To walk fast without speaking. S.
 STRODS, s. A pet; a fit of ill humour. S.
 To STROY, v. a. To destroy.
 Mekyl of France oure-rad he than,
 Ande gret skaith did in all the land,
 Nakyn thing of froyt sparand,
 Abbays, and many solempne place,
 That stroyit, but recoverance, wace.
 It was used also in E. Wyntown, viii. 45. 26.
 Lincolne & Lyndeseie thei stroied & wasted.
R. Brunne, p. 42.
 Ital. strugg-ere, id. corr. from Lat. destru-ere.
 STROKOUR, s. A flatterer.
 Stuffets, strokours, and stafische strummels,
 Vyld haschbalds, haggarbalds, and hummels.
Dunb. Compl. Maitland Poems, p. 109.
 Isl. striuk-a, to stroke, metaph. to flatter. V. Wachter, vo. Streichen, mulcere. In like manner Fr. flat-er, whence E. flatter, also signifies to stroke gently.

S T R

- To STROMMEL, v. n. "To stumble," Gl. Sibb.
 V. STRUMMAL.
 STRONACHIE, s. A stickleback, or banstickle, S.
 Gasterosteus spinachia, Linn. V. HECKLEBACK.
 To STRONE, STROAN, v. n. "To spout forth as a water pipe," Gl. Sibb.; also, to urine, synon. strule.
 Nae tawted tyke, tho' e'er sae duddie,
 But he wad stan't, as glad to see him,
 And stroan't on stane, an' hillocks wi' him.
Burns, iii. 2.
 Sibb. refers to Teut. stroom-en, fluere. But it has more resemblance to Isl. streing-r, cataracta, fluvii fluxus fortior, G. Andr.; or to stroningum, sparsim, Verel.
 STRONE, s. The act of urinating copiously. S.
 STRONE, s. A hill that terminates a range; the end of a ridge. S.
 STRONTLY, adv. Strictly. Laws are said to be strontly led, i. e. rigidly observed on domysday.
 I pray to Jesu Chryst verrey
 For us his blud that bled,
 To be our help on domysday,
 Quhair lawis ar strontly led.
Bludy Serk, S.P.R. iii. 194.
 This may be a derivative from streng, strictus, rigidus; or perhaps rather abbrev. and corr. from Fr. estreinct, estreint, id. V. STRUNTY.
 STROOD, s. A worn-out shoe. S.
 STROOSHIE, STROUSSIE, s. Asquabble; a hurlyburly. S.
 STROOT, adj. Stuffed full; drunk. V. STRUTE. S.
 To STROOZLE, v. n. To struggle. V. SPROOZLE, &c. S.
 STROP, STROAP, s. Treacle, Ang.
 Belg. stroop, id.
 STROTHIE, s. An avenue betwixt parallel walls. S.
 STROUL, s. Any stringy substance found among sorbile food; as, a lang stroul amang the parritch, Fife.
Stroil, "a denomination for the long roots of weeds and grass in grounds not properly cultivated," Exm. Grose. Isl. strial, raritas, strial-ast, rarus ferri. Dan. straal, radius rarus. Gael. straoil-am, to draw after.
 STROUNGE, STROONGE, adj. 1. Harsh, "especially to the taste, as a sloe," Gl. Sibb. S.
 2. Surly; morose, S. See Sup.
 Isl. striug-r, denotes a sort of sorbile food, that is unpleasant to the taste; also, asper. Gefa striug fra ser; Aspera verba evomere, gravibus convitiis uti; Gl. Landnamab. O.Fr. truang-er is synon. with gourmand-er; Male habere, indignum in modum excipere; Dict. Trev.
 To STROUNGE, v. n. To take the pet. S.
 STROUP, STROOP, s. The spout of a pump, tea-kettle, tea-pot, &c. S. See Sup.
 Su.G. strupe, Isl. strup, guttur; q. the throat of a kettle, &c.
 STROUTH, s. Force; violence. S.
 To STROUTH, v. a. To compel by violent measures. S.
 STROW, (pron. stroo), s. 1. A fit of ill humour; a tiff, Ang.
 2. A quarrel; a state of variance; a scramble, S. See S.
 3. Bustle; disturbance. S.
Strow has formerly been used as an adj. "Daft folk's no wise strow," S. Prov. i. e. not hard to be dealt with; "spoken when people advise what is not prudent, or promise what is not reasonable;" Kelly, p. 89.
 Sibb. derives this from Teut. stoor-en, turbare. But there is no affinity. The origin undoubtedly is Su.G. strug, simulas.
 Thaa drog hwar wid annan strugh
 Med krankom wilja och ondom hug.
Chron. Rhythm. p. 26. ap. Ihre.

S T R

"Then they cherished contentions among them, with wounded hearts and hostility of mind."

*Ok worom thor saate med helom hug,
Ok drog ingen sidan wid annan strug.* Ibid. p. 117.

"There they were saucht," or "reconciled with sincere mind; and neither cherished secret ill will against another." In some parts of Sweden, Ihre informs us, they still use stru to denote hatred or envy.

STROW, s. A shrewmouse. V. STREAW. S.

STROWBILL, adj. Troublesome; or perhaps horrid. The red colour, quha graithly wnderstud, Betaknes all to gret battaill and blud; The greyn, curage, that thou art now amang, In strowbill wer thou sall conteyne full lang. Wallace, vii. 138. MS.

It may be either corr. from trouble, or allied to Flandr. struvel-en, horrere; Germ. straub, strobelhar, horricomis, having the hair standing on end.

STROWD, s. A senseless silly song, S.B.

Isl. strad, stred-a, futuere obscoenum.

STRUBBA, s. Milk in a certain state. S.

To STRUBLE, v. a. To trouble; to vex. S.

STRUBLENS, s. Disturbance. S.

STRUCKEN UP. To be strucken up, to be metamorphosed into stone. S.

STRUSSLE, s. A struggle. S.

To STRULE, v. n. 1. To urine, S.

2. It occasionally signifies, in a general sense, to pour water from one vessel to another, to emit any liquid in a stream, S. streel, Fife.

Mod. Sax. Fris. Sicamb. struyl-en, strull-en, streyt-en, reddere urinam, mejere; Sw. stril-a, to stream out, to gush out; Wideg.

STRUM, s. A pettish humour, S.B. synon. strow, stront, strunt. See Sup.

Su.G. strug, stru, is probably the radical term. V. STROW.

STRUM, STRUMMY, adj. Pettish; sullen, S.B. See S.

Perhaps it merits observation that Isl. stremb-en, signifies, dry, astringent, difficult; spissus, stypticus, difficilis; G. Andr.

To STRUM, v. n. To be in a pettish humour. S.

STRUMMAL, STRUMMIL, adj. Stumbling.

He stockerit lyke ane strummal aver.

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 94.

My strummil stirk yit new to spane.

Clerk, Evergreen, ii. 21. st. 8.

Sibb., vo. Strommel, properly refers to Teut. striemel-en, vacillare, cespitare, nutare gressu. Strompel-en is used in the same sense; Isl. stumr-a, id. A stumral horse, is a phrase still used S. to denote one that is habituated to stumbling; and may either be traced per metath. to Strummal, or deduced from Stammer, q. v.

STRUMMEL, STRUMBELL, s. A person so feeble that he cannot walk without stumbling.

Stuffets, strokours, and stafische strummels.

Dunb. Compl. Maitland Poems, p. 109.

Has ta'en the strunt? — Ramsay's Poems, ii. 4.

Sibb. offers various conjectures as to the origin; but they are all unnatural. It may be radically the same with its synon. Strum, q. v.; or the adj. from which Strontly is formed.

To STRUNT, v. n. To tak the strunt, to become pettish, S.

STRUNTIT, part. adj. Under the influence of a pet. S.

To STRUNT, v. a. To affront. "He strunted the puir lass."

STRUNTAIN, s. A species of tape made of wheelin, or coarse worsted, less than an inch in breadth. S.

"Before this period, the only manufacture was what is called Stow struntain, made of the coarsest wool, and wrought by the women on a loom like a bed-heck." P. Stow, M. Loth. Statist. Acc. vii. 138.

Sw. strunt, trash, any thing worthless, refuse, Wideg. This corresponds to the quality of the wool.

STRUNTY, adj. 1. Short; contracted; as, a strunty gown, Ang. 2. Applied to the temper; pettish; out of humour. S.

Fr. estreint, straitened, pinched, shrunk up.

STRUSHAN, s. A disturbance; a tumult. S.

STRUSSEL, s. A brawl; a squabble. S.

STRUTE, STROOT, adj. 1. "Stuffed full," Gl. Rams. S. S. 2. Drunken, S.

When lying bed-fast sick and sair,

To parish priest he promis'd fair,

He ne'er wad drink fou ony mair:

But, hale and tight,

He prov'd the auld man to a hair,

Strute ilka night. Ramsay's Poems, i. 237.

3. Metaph. vain-glorious.

E. strut, O.E. strout, to swell, to protuberate; prae superbia cristas erigere, &c. Jun. Etym. Germ. strotz-en, turgere. The term primarily respects what is turgid in a literal sense.

STRUTE, STRUIT, s. Stubbornness; obstinacy. S.

STUBIE, s. A water-bucket or pitcher, narrower at top than at bottom, with an iron handle. Syn. Stoup. S.

STUBBLIN', adj. Short and stoutly made. S.

STUCHIN (gutt.), STUCKEN, s. 1. A stake driven into the ground for supporting a pailing. 2. Applied also to the stakes used for supporting a sheep-net. S.

STUDY, STUTHY, STYDDY, s. An anvil; a smith's forge; stiddie, S. studdie, S.B. See Sup.

The huge coue, and all the mont wythin,

For straik of studyis, gan resound and din.

Doug. Virgil, 258, 21.

Fine of the grettest and maist cheif cieteis,

S T U

Thare wappinnis to renew in all degreis,

Set vp forgeis and stele styddyis syne. Ibid. 230, 16.

Rudd. derives the S. word, as Johns. does E. stithy, from A.S. stith, strong. But Sibb. justly mentions Isl. stedia, incus. He indeed also refers to the A.S. adj. Stedia, however, is derived from Su.G. sted-ia, to prop, to make firm, as denoting any thing on which another solidly rests. V. Gl. Kristnisag.

Styth is used by Chaucer in the same sense with E. stithy.

— The smith

That forgeth sharpe swerdes on his styth.

Knights T. ver. 2028.

STUDINE, STUDDEN, pret. v. Stood. S.

STUE, s. Dust. V. STEW. S.

To STUFF, v. a. 1. To supply; to furnish; to provide.

Quhill I had ony thing to spend,

And stuffit weill with warldis wrak,

Amang my freinds I wes weill kend.

Bannatyne Poems, p. 184.

i. e. "Amplly supplied with the trash of this world."

Fr. estoff-er, etoff-er, id. from Teut. Germ. stoff, apparatus, Wachter. Teut. stoffe, materies.

2. To supply with men; referring to warfare.

Hay, hay, go to, than cry thay with ane schout,

And with ane huge brute Troianis at schort

Thare wallis stuffit, and closit euery port.

Doug. Virgil, 275, 4.

It is also applied to the field of battle.

— Vmbro eik, the stalwart chiftane rude,—

The bargane stuffis, relevand in agane. Ibid. 337, 18.

Hence, as Rudd. observes, the phrase so common in Wallace, to stuff the chass, to furnish men necessary for giving chase to a flying enemy.

The Sotheron fled, and left thaim in that place.

Horss thai ran to stuff the chass gud spede.

Wallace, v. 935. MS.

Fr. Bien garnir et estoffer les villes de frontiere. Teut. stoff-er-en, munire.

STUFF, s. 1. "Corn or pulse of any kind," S. Gl. Burns.

q. provision for sustenance in whatever state. See S.

The simmer had been cauld an' wat,

An' stuff was unco green. Burns, iii. 132.

2. This term is used in a singular mode of expression.

It is said of one, who will not yield in reasoning, or in fighting, "He is good stuff, or, a piece of good stuff." S.

This is undoubtedly a Fr. idiom. Chevaliers de bonne estoife, Knights well armed, and well managing their arms; Cotgr.

3. The men placed in a garrison for its defence.

The wardane than fra Perth is gane,

To Stryvelyne wyth of his ost ilkane,

That castelle till assege stowtly,

That than Schyre Thomas of Rukby

Held wyth othyr worthy men,

That of the stuff war wyth hym then.

Wyntown, viii. 37. 138.

4. A relief, or reserve in the field of battle.

The hardy Bruce ane ost abandownyt, xx thowsand he rewlyt be force and wit.

Wpon the Scottis his men for to reskew,

Serwyt thai war with gud speris enew:

And Byschop Beik a stuff till him to be.

Wallace, x. 321. MS.

STUFF, s. Dust, Ang.

Teut. stuyve, stof, pulvis.

To STUFF, v. n. To lose wind; to become stifled from great exertion. S.

STUFFET, s. Apparently a lackey or footboy.

Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 286.

It seems to signify a lackey, a foot-boy; corr. from Fr. estaffier, id. or estafete, Ital. staffetta, a courier.

STUFFIE, adj. Stout and firm; mettlesome. S.

STUFFILIE, adv. Toughly; perseveringly. S.

STUFFINESS, s. Ability to endure much fatigue. S.

STUFFING, s. The disease called the Croup. S.

To STUG, v. a. 1. To stab; to prick with a sword.

"They stugged all the beds with their swords, and threatned to rost the children in the fire, and forced one of them to run from the house with nothing on him but his shirt, about half a mile in [a] dark night." Wodrow's Hist. ii. 173. V. STOK, v.

2. To jag; one jagged by stubble is said to be stuggit. S.

STUG, s. 1. A thorn or prickle. 2. Any clumsy sharp-pointed thing. 3. Applied to short irregular horns. S.

STUGGY, adj. Stubble is said to be stuggy, when it is of unequal length, in consequence of carelessness in cutting down the corn.

Germ. stucke, pars a toto separata; or Su.G. stygg, teter, deformis.

To STUG, v. n. To shear unequally. V. STUGGY. S.

STUGS, s. pl. Stubble of an unequal length. S.

STUG, s. 1. A piece of decayed tree standing out of the ground. 2. A masculine woman, stout and raw-boned. S.

STUGGEN, s. An obstinate person. S.

STUGGEN, s. A post or stake. V. STUCHIN. S.

STUGHIE, s. Something that fills very much, as food that soon fills the stomach. S.

STUGHRIE, s. Great repletion. V. STECH. S.

STUHT, s. The Steelbow stock on a farm. S.

STULE OF EYSE. A night-stool; i. e. stool of ease. S.

STULT, adj. Having the appearance of intrepidity, or perhaps of haughtiness.

Wallace and his than till aray he yeid,

With x thousand off douchty men in deid.

Quha couth behald thair awfull lordly wult,

So weill beseyn, so forthwart, stern and stult,

Sa gud chyftanys, as with sa few thar beyn,

Without a King, was neuir in Scotland seyn.

Wallace, x. 78. MS.

This may indeed be merely metri causa for stout, which is the reading of Edit. 1648. It must be observed, however, that Su.G. stolt, Isl. stoltt-ur, have the sense of magnificus, fastuosus; Teut. stolte, superbus. This has a strict analogy with the phrase, awfull lordly wult. The Su.G. word also signifies what is excellent in its kind. Ett stolt hus, magnificent buildings; en stolt haest, a generous steed. Swa war hon stoltz ok hofwelik; Adeo erat splendida et decens; Chron. Rhythm. p. 63, ap. Ihre. He views E. stout as from the same stock.

STUMFISH, adj. Strong; coarse; rank; applied to grain when growing, Tweedd.

Germ. staemmig, robustus, a term derived, according to Wachter, from stamm, stirps, as expressing the quality of the trunk of a tree; stumpf, blunt, as denoting a trunk wanting the top or point.

To STUMMER, v. n. To stumble. See Sup.

Thair stedis stakkerit in the stour, and stude stummerand. Gawan and Gol. ii. 25.

He slaid and stummerit on the sliddry ground,

S T U

 Isl. stunmr-a, cespitare. Doug. Virgil, 138, 41.
To STUMP, v. n. 1. To go on one leg; to halt, S.
 Teut. stompe, mutilatum membrum. Hence stomp-en, hebetare.
 2. To walk about stoutly; at times implying the idea of heaviness, clumsiness, or stiffness in motion, S. See S.
 An' stumpen on his ploughman shanks,
 He in the parlour hammer'd. Burns, i. 139.
STUMPIE, adj. 1. Squat; short on the legs. S.—2. Mutilated; used also as a s. for any thing of this description, as a limb which has undergone amputation, S.
 Su.G. stumpig, curtus, mutilatus; Ihre, vo. Stufwa.
STUMPIE, s. 1. A short, thick, and stiffly formed person.
 2. A mutilated limb. V. adj. sense 2. S.
STUMP, s. A stupid fellow; a blockhead. S.
STUMPISH, adj. Blockish. S.
To STUMPLE, v. n. To walk with a stiff and hobbling motion. V. STUMP, v. S.
STUMPS, s. pl. A ludicrous term for the legs. S.
To STUNAY, v. a. To confound. V. STONAY.
STUNCH, s. A lump of food, as of beef or bread. S.
To STUNGLE, v. a. Slightly to sprain any joint or limb. I've stungled my kute, I have sprained my ankle, S.B.
 Perhaps a dimin. from E. stun, or Fr. estonn-er.
STUNK, s. The stake put in by boys in a game, especially in that of marbles. S.
STUNKARD, adj. Sullen. V. STONKERD.
 Germ. stenker, litigator. Wachter derives this from Dan. sting-en, to strike with the horn; stanger, an animal that strikes in this manner.
STUNKEL, s. A fit of ill-humour or pettishness. S.
STUNKS. The stunks, pet; a fit of sullen humour. S.
STUNKUS, s. A stubborn girl. V. STUNKARD. S.
STUNNER, s. A big foolish man. S.
STUPE, s. A foolish person, S.B.
 Teut. stuype, deliquium, defectio animi.
STUPPIE, s. A wooden vessel for carrying water. S.
STURDY, s. 1. A vertigo; a disease to which black cattle when young, as well as sheep, are subject. A bag of water gathers in the front between the horns, which, producing giddiness, makes them run round about, S.
 "The principal diseases in sheep are — 5th, the sturdy, or water in the head. The scull grows soft above where the water is lodged; and they are sometimes cured by a trepan performed by a herd's knife." P. Linton. Tweedd. Statist. Acc. i. 138.
 "The Sturdy—When the forehead feels soft, a knife is inserted: both skin and bone are raised up, and the breath of the animal is stopped, till a small globule of fluid matter issues at the orifice." Prize Essays Highl. Soc. S. ii. 208.
 2. A sheep affected with this disease. S.
 The immediate origin is most probably O.Fr. estourdi, dizzy-headed; estourd-er, to make giddy, or dizzie in the head, Cotgr. This, however, may be radically allied to Belg. stoor-en, to trouble, to disturb, or Su.G. stort-a, to fall or rush headlong.
STURDIED, part. adj. Affected with the Sturdy. S.
STURDY, s. A plant that grows among corn, which, when eaten, produces giddiness and torpidity. S.
STURDY, s. "Steer my sturdy," trouble my head. S.
STURE, STUR, STOOR, adj. 1. Strong; hardy; robust, S.
 He wes a stout carle and a sture;
 And off him selff dour, and hardy.
Barbour, x. 158. MS.

Doug. Virgil, 142, 11.
 — In his hand the self tyme had he
 Ane bustuous spere percais baith stiff and sture.
Ibid. 383, 39.
 2. Rough in manner; austere, S. See Sup.
 He lighted at lord Durie's door,
 And there he knocked, most manfullie;
 And up and spake lord Durie, sae stoor,
 "What tidings, thou stalward groom, to me?"
Minstrely, Border, iii. 115.
 3. Rough; hoarse. A sture voice, a harsh voice, Gl. Shirr. S.
 Rudd. conjecturally refers to Lat. auster-us. Although in sense 2. it may be allied to Teut. stuer, torvus, trux, austerus, I apprehend that it primarily denotes strength, or hardness; A.S. Su.G. stor, anc. stur, ingens, magnus, Isl. stor, stoer. Lapp. stuurra, id. Isl. styrdr, rigidus, asper, is also, like the S. term, used to denote a harsh voice. Germ. storr, asper, rigidus.
Stor, store, is used in a sense nearly akin, Ywayne and Gawin.
 The king and his men ilkane,
 Wend tharwith to have bene slane;
 So blew it stor with slete and rayn.
E. M. Rom. i. 55.
 Ritson renders it "loud, blustering;" rather, severe, keen, rough. For it is elsewhere said;
 The store windes blew ful lowd,
 So kene come never are of clowd. Ibid. p. 16.
To STURE at, v. n. To be in ill humour with. S.
STURIS, s. pl. Probably, stivers, (a small coin.) S.
To STURKEN, v. n. To become stout after an illness. S.
STURKEN, part. adj. Congealed; coagulated. S.
STURNE, s. Trouble; vexation; disquietude.
 This word occurs in one of the rubrics in Barbour's Bruce, Edit. 1620, p. 201, although not in MS.
 How Sir Edward withoutten sturne,
 Vndertook the battell of Bannockburn.
 It is doubtful whether this should be traced to Belg. stoor-en, to move, to trouble, whence stoor-enis, disturbance; or to stirn, stern, Su.G. stierne, the forehead, used metaph. as denoting that displeasure often manifested by the contraction of the eye-brows. Ihre thinks that stern, torvus, acknowledges this as its origin.
STURNILL, s. An ill turn; a backset. S.
STUROCH, s. Meal and milk, or meal and water stirred together. Syn. Crowdie. V. STOURUM. S.
To STURT, v. a. To vex; to trouble, S.
 Insaciat of haitrent I rest in pece,
 That was sa bald afore, and neuer wald ceis,
 Quhen thay ware chasit of thare natyfe land,
 To sturt them on the streme fra hand to hand.
Doug. Virgil, 216, 28.
 But human bodies are sic fools,
 For a' their colleges and schools,
 That when nae real ills perplex them,
 They mak enow themsels to vex them;
 An' ay the less they hae to sturt them,
 In like proportion less will hurt them.
Burns, iii. 9. 10.
 Su.G. stoert-a, praecipitem agere, deturbare; stoerta en i olycha, aliquem in infortunium praecipitem dare. This Ihre properly derives from the obsolete v. stoer-a, synon. with A.S. styr-ian, movere; Germ. sturzen, praecipitare, deturbare. For to sturt is, greatly to stir one.
STURT, s. 1. Trouble; disturbance; vexation, S.B.

Sibb. refers to Fr. souill-er. But this is the origin of E. soil, S. sule, also used here. Suddill is more directly allied to Teut. sodel-en, Germ. sudel-n, id. inquinare, pol-luere. Wachter views this as formed from sul-en, id. d being inserted. Moes. G. saul-jan, A.S. syl-ian, Franc. sal-on.

SUDDILL, adj. Perhaps, sullied; defiled. S.

SUDEREYS, s. pl. A name given to some of the Hebudae.

"The title of these prelates, during the conjunction of Man and Sodor, had been universally mistaken, till the explications of that most ingenious writer, Dr. Macpherson: it was always supposed to have been derived from Sodor, an imaginary town either in Man or in Iona:
whose derivation was taken from the Greek Soter, or Saviour. During the time that the Norwegians were in possession of the isles, they divided them into two parts:
the northern, which comprehended all that lay to the North of the point of Ardnamurchan, and were called the Norderneys, from Norder, North, and ey, an island. And the Sudereys took in those that lay to the South of that promontory." Pennant's Voyage, Hebr. p. 294.

The propriety of this etymon appears beyond a doubt from the following passage.

Logmadr het son Gudraudur Sudreyia konongs; Logmadr var settr til landvarnar i Nordrey-om. "The son of Gud-raud, king of the Sudereys, was called Logmadr, [or Lagman,
q. Law-man.] He was set over the Norderneys, that he might protect the lands." Snorr. Sturles. ap. Johns.

— The valyeand Hectour loist the swete

On Achilles spere. — Doug. Virgil, 16, 13.

Both Junius and Rudd. view this as an adj., signifying sweet, and think that the term life must be supplied. Sibb.
has justly rendered swete, life; referring to A.S. swat, sanguis.

This is a Goth. idiom. We learn from Ihre, that Su.G.
swett properly denotes humour, moisture, but that the term has been restricted by use to two principal humours of the body. It not only signifies sweat, but also blood.
The latter sense, he says, anciently prevailed throughout the North. In this sense it is still used in Upland; as is sueit in Iceland.

To SUFFER,* v. n. To delay.

It is said of Wallace, after he received an invitation, while in France, to return to his country, and take the crown;

The wryt he gat, bot yeit suffer he wald,

For gret falsheid that part hym dyd off ald.

Mekill dolour it did him in his mynd,

Off thar mysfayr, for trew he was and kynd.

He thoct to tak amendis off that wrang;

He ansuerd nocht, bot in his wer furth rang.

Wallace, x. 1057. MS.

A Fr. idiom; Se souffrir de, to forbear the doing of.

The v. Thole is used in a similar sense, q. v.

SUFFER, adj. Patient in bearing injurious treatment.

Syne he gart louss him off thai bandis new,

SULE, s. A ring with a swivel, S.B.
Seren. derives the E. word from Isl. sweif, volva, instrumentum quo aliquid circumrotatur; sweif-a, volutare.
Su.G. soelia, however, denotes a ring into which a thong is put, Isl. sylgia, which, because of its rotundity, G. Andr. derives from sole, the sun; others from Fenn. sul-ien, to close.

SULE, s.

To SULK it. To be in a sullen humour. S.
SULLIGE, s. Soil. S.
SUM, a termination of adjectives, frequently occurring in S. See Sup.
Dr. Johnson has given so loose a definition of E. some, that no just idea can be formed from it, either as to its meaning or its origin. "A termination," he says, "of many adjectives which denote quality or property of any thing; as, gamesome."
Sum is used by us in three different senses.

1. It denotes conjunction; as, threesum, three together.
"It is nocht possibl to gar thresum keip consel, and speciale in causis of trason." Compl. S. p. 205.
Thresum occurs in the same sense in The Bruce.
— Jamys of Dowglas, at the last,
Fand a litill sonkyn bate,
And to the land it drew fut hate.
Bot it sa litill wes, that it
Mycht our the wattir bot thresum flyt.
Barbour, iii. 420. MS.
He also uses twasum and fyvesum in a similar signification.
— That wes in an ewill plass,
That sa strayt and sa narow was,
That twasum samyn mycht nocht rid
In sum place off the hillis sid. Barbour, x. 19. MS.
Samyn here is redundant; the idea being conveyed by the termination of the preceding word.
Dr. Leyden, in his Gl., refers to Su.G. sanja and sama, (Leg. saem-ia, saem-a.) consentire. "Hence," he adds, "the termination sam expresses union or agreement; as hedersam, consistent with honesty; warsam, consistent with prudence; fraendsaemia, jus consanguinitatis, mag-saemia, jus affinitatis." It may be further observed, that Su.G. sam, whence Ihre deduces saem-ia, saem-a, signifies, plurium unitas; and that sam occurs in some A.S. compound terms, as equivalent to Lat. con, as sam-hiwan, conjuges, sam-maele, concordēs, sam-wyrcan, co-operari, &c.
Twasum is used Caithn. for two acting together. Thus, a sick person is said to be lifted by twasum. Threesum, generally through S., denotes the union of three, in a particular kind of dance, called a threesum reel.

2. It signifies similitude, S.
This is the proper idea, when it seems to be used, in a general way, as denoting quality. It is commonly affixed to a s., and forms an adj., expressing a property analogous to the idea conveyed by the s.; as, lussum, amiable, hairtsum, cheerful, winsum, id. jucundus, gaudio similis.
Su.G. sam, mentioned above, also bears this sense. Ihre renders fridsam, pacifico similis. Som is used in the same way. Thus also, according to Wachter, sam occurs in Germ. tugendsam, virtuosus, virtuti similis; heilsam, salutaris, saluti similis; healthy, bearing the likeness, or exhibiting the appearance, of health. I need scarcely observe, that this is the obvious sense of S. halesum. A.S. sum, in this connexion, seems frequently synon. with Su.G. and Germ. sam. Thus sibsum, pacificus, may literally signify, paci similis. Lye, vo. Sum, expl. winsum, jucundus aliquantum. But as wyn signifies gaudium, perhaps it is rather, gaudio similis, exhibiting the appearance of joy.
Wachter has observed that lich is synon. with the term. sam; giving as an example friedsam and friedlich, which are promiscuously used, in the sense of pacific; Proleg. sect. 6. in vo. This is confirmed by our use of hairtsum and hairtlie, as conveying the very same idea.

3. In some degree, S.
Both Ihre and Wachter view A.S. sum as perfectly synon. with Su.G. and Germ. sam. Now, Lye observes that the term. sum, in certain A.S. words, has its origin from the pronoun sum, aliquid, aliquantum. There are indeed various words, both in A.S. and S., in which it seems most naturally to bear this signification; as A.S. lang-sum, diuturnus aliquantum, long in some degree, S. id.; fowsum, applied to things that are more full, than what is necessary; as to a piece of dress that has rather a clumsy appearance, from its being made too large.

SUM, adj. Some; used distributively, denoting first the one, then the other.

"Betwix Clid and Lennox lyis the baronie of Renfrew, in the quhilk ar twa lochis, namyt Qubhynsouth and Leboth, sum. xx. and sum. xii. mylis of lenth." Bellend. Descr. Alb. c. 7. Unus and alter are the correspondent terms used by Boece.

This is an A.S. idiom. Sum waes bescoren preoste, sum waes laewede; Hic erat attonsus clericus, ille, erat laicus; Bede ap. Lye. Moes.G. sums and suma also signify unus, a, um. V. Hickes Gramm. A.S. and Moes.G. p. 36.

SUM, adv. In some degree. V. SOME. S.

SUMDELL, SUMDELE, adv. 1. Somewhat; in some degree.

And he, that hard sa suddanly

Ibid. p. 87.

2. The gnats which dance in clusters in a summer evening. 3. In singular, a lively, little, young fellow. Synon. with E. Grig; "He's a perfect simmer-cout." S.

Perhaps q. summer-colls, in allusion to the undulating motion of these vapours, which may have been thought to resemble the frisking of young horses. These are called king's weather, Loth. In the South of S. it is pron. king's wethers; and it has been supposed to refer to the gay and unsteady motion of wedders, analogous to the other designation of couts. It may deserve to be mentioned, that an Isl. term very nearly resembling this, kyngvedr, has a sense almost directly contrary, denoting a storm; tempestas saeva; Sw. synon. stark storm; Verel. Ind.

SUMMER-FLAWS, s. pl. Syn. with Summer-couts. S.

SUMMER-GROWTH, s. V. SEA-GROWTH. S.

SUMMER-HAAR, s. A slight breeze from the east, which often rises after the sun has passed the meridian, though the wind has been westerly all the morning. It is not necessarily accompanied with any fog. S.

Ross's Helenore, p. 75.

Perhaps in allusion to the sobbing of a child in bad humour, who is soon pacified; or allied to Teut. soeff-en, flare. Gael. siob-am, to blow; seoban, drift, blast.

SUMMER-TREE, s. Apparently, a may-pole. V. SKA-FRIE.

SUMMYN, adj. Some.

All and summyn, all and every one.

Or list apprufe thay pepill all and summyn

To giddir myddill, or jone in lyig or band.

Doug. Virgil, 103, 35.

A.S. sumne signifies, aliquot. It is properly the accus. of sum, aliquis. Sumon is also used as the ablat. pl.

SUMP, s. The pit of a mine.

"A shaft, or sump, as the miners term it, was made, to the depth of several fathoms, immediately below the bottom of the waste, from whence the rich mass of ore, above-mentioned, had been taken, and a drift carried on, in the direction of the silver vein, upon that level." P. Alva, Stirl. Statist. Acc. xviii. 142.

SUMP, s. A sudden and heavy fall of rain. V. PLUMP. S.

SUMPED, part. adj. Wet; drenched. S.

SUMPAIRT, adv. Somewhat. S.

SUMPH, s. A blockhead; a soft blunt fellow, S.

"Better thole a grumph than a sumph." Ramsay's S. Prov. p. 20.

The finish'd mind, in all its movements bright,

Surveys the self-made sumph in proper light,

Allows for native weakness, but disdains

Him who the character with labour gains.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 347.

Callander derives this from Su.G. stamm, balbutiens, stuttering; MS. Notes on Ihre, (in vo.)

Perhaps it is rather allied to Germ. sumpf, Teut. sompe, a marsh; or Su.G. swamp, a sponge, also, a mushroom, q. fungosus homo; as, a fozy chield, S.B. Ihre, vo. Swamp, refers to Gr. σφῆρος, spungy. Teut. sompe is sceptrum morionis. It may be observed, however, that if we suppose m to have been inserted, the word would be literally analogous to Teut. suff-en, delirare, desipere, hallucinari; suf, delirus. Thus there would be no occasion for having recourse to a figurative origin.

To SUMPH, v. n. To dote; to be in a state of stupor.

I will affirm they're skant of wit,

Who in a supream court like that,

Will sumph and vote they wot not what.

Cleland's Poems, p. 113.

SUMPHISH, adj. Stupid; blockish, S.

The sumphish mob, of penetration shawl,

May gape and ferly at your cunning saul,

And make ye fancy that there is desert

In thus employing a' your sneaking art.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 349.

 SUPPRIS, s. Oppression; violence. S.
 SUPRASCRYVED, part. pa. Superscribed. S.
 SURCOAT, s. An under-waistcoat, S. See Sup.

This is entirely different from the signification of the term in E.

In the days they call'd yore, gin auld fouks had but won

To a surcoat hough-side for the winning o't,
 Of coat raips well cut by the cast of their bun,
 They never sought mair of the spinning o't,

Song, Ross's Helenore, p. 137.

Sarket seems used in the same sense. V. GASH, adj.

SURFET, adj. 1. Extravagant; immoderately high in price.

"Be that way thay mycht eschew surfet expensis, hauand decision of thair actionis with esy proces be thair superior." Bellend. Cron. B. xiii. c. 5.

2. Superabundant; extraordinary. 3. Oppressive in operation. 4. Excessive in any respect. S.

SWACK, adj. 1. Limber; pliant, S.

"S. swack, i. e. supple, flexible:" Rudd. vo. Swik.

'Twill mak ye suple, swack, and young.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 40.

—She was swift and souple like a rae,

Swack like an eel, and calour like a trout;

And she become a fairly round about.

V. GAUCIE. Ross's Helenore, p. 16.

2. Clever; active; nimble, S.B. 3. Weak; not stout. S.

Teut. swack, wack, lentus, quod facile flectitur, flexilis.

As wack is synon. with swack, it seems the radical term;

A.S. wac, lentus, flexibilis; Su.G. Germ. wig, alacer, agilis, Isl. vig-ur, id. Isl. sweig-ia, incurvare, and Teut. swack-en.

vibrare, are probably from this root. The transition, from flexibility of form to nimbleness, is perfectly natural. Thus, a swack chield denotes one, who is not only agile in his motions, but whose bodily form indicates agility.

To SWAY, SWEY, v. n. (pron. swey). 1. To incline to one side, S.

—Thir towris thou seis down fall and sway,
And stane fra stane down bet, and reik vpryse.

Doug. Virgil, 59, 18.

Growing corn, or grass, is said to be swayed, when wind-waved, S.

"For the heart, pleasing that device, in so far swayeth to it." Guthrie's Trial, p. 116.

Johns. derives E. sway from Germ. schweb-en, to move. But both this and the S. v. are allied to Isl. sweig-ia, Su.G. swig-a, inclinare, flectere.

2. To move backwards and forwards on a seat or pillow, suspended by a rope fastened at both ends to the branch of a tree, or any similar support, S. swey, A. Bor. id. swing, E. See Sup.

The E. word, corresponding to Su.G. swaeng-a, swing-a, seems formed from swig-a, or Isl. sweig-ia, mentioned above.

SWAY, s. 1. A movable instrument of iron, of a rectangular form, fastened to one of the jambs of a chimney, on which pots and kettles are suspended over the fire, S.

2. A swing, or rope fastened for the purpose of swinging. V. the v. In the Swey-Swaw, in a state of hesitation or uncertainty. S.

SWAIF, v.

Receive, and swaif, and haif, ingraif it here.

Bannatyne Poems, p. 201.

"Probably kiss, receive cordially," Lord Hailes. It may rather signify, "ponder this bill or poem, which I have written for your use;" Su.G. swaefw-a, Isl. sweif-a, to be poised (librari); also, to hover, to fluctuate. But the first sense is preferable.

SWAIF, SUAIF, s. A kiss.

Adew the fragrant balmie swaif,

And lamp of ladies lustiest!

My faithful hairt scho sall it haif,

To byd with hir it luvis best.

Scott, Chron. S.P. iii. 167.

To SWAYL, v. a. To swaddle, S.B. sweal, S. V. SWILL.

A.S. swaethil, swethil, fascia, from swed-an, vincire.

SWAILSH, s. A part of a mountain that slopes much, or any part on the face of a hill not so steep as the rest. S.

SWAINE, s. The country of Sweden. S.

SWAIP, adj. Slanting. V. SWIPE, v. S.

SWAIPILT, s. A piece of wood like the head of a crosier put loosely on the foreleg of a horse at pasture, to prevent his running off. S.

SWAISH, SWESH, adj. A term implying fulness in the face, with the idea of suavity and benignity. S.

SWAITS, s. New ale or wort, S. swats.

Now drink thay milk and swaits in steid of aill,

But reaming swats.

A.S. swate, ale, beer.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 229.

SWAYWEYIS, adv. Likewise; Acts, Ja. I.

To SWAK, SWAKE, v. a. 1. To throw; to cast with force.

The entrellis eik fer in the fludes brake

In your reuerence I sall flyng and swake.

Doug. Virgil, 135, 30.

Neuir sa swiftlie quhidderand the stane flaw,

Swakkit from the ingyne vnto the wall.—Ibid. 446, 47.

2. To strike, S.B.

According to Rudd., it is much the same with E. swag; Sibb. views it as formed ex sono. It is more probably allied to Teut. swack-en, vibrare, as persons are wont to poise, and sometimes to brandish, a missile weapon, before it is thrown.

The term may perhaps be traced to the same origin with Su.G. swik-a, to frustrate, to deceive. For, as Ihre observes, this is a v. which properly respects athletic exercises, and is applied to him who overthrows another, with whom he wrestles, by a certain inclination of his body, i. e. by suddenly twisting or throwing his body into a new position. Lipsius accordingly renders Alem. be-suiken, supplant. Ihre seems to view swik-a as a derivative from swig-a, loco cedere, Isl. sweig-ia, incurvare.

Nor would this disprove the affinity of our verb to Teut. swack-en. For Teut. swick denotes a lash, to which sense 2 agrees, from swick-en, synon. with swack-en, vibrare; Su.G. sweg, which has the same signification, is deduced from Isl. sweig-ia.

SWAK, SWAKE, s. 1. A throw, Rudd.

2. A stroke; properly a hasty and smart blow.

That man hald fast his awyn swerd

In-til his neve, and wp thrawand

He pressit hym, noucht agayne standand

That he wes pressit to the erd,

And wyth a swake thare of his swerd

Wyntown, ix. 14. 56.

"Blow with a sudden turn; Isl. sueig-r, bend, curve."
Gl. Wynt.

3. A violent dash, as that of waves.

Hie as ane hill the jaw of the watter brak,
And in ane hepe come on them with a swak.

Doug. Virgil, 16, 25.

4. Metaph. a little while.

—He had slummerit bot an swak,
Quhen the fyrst silence of the quyet nycht
His myddell cours and cyrkyl run had rycht,
Prouokying folk of the fyrst slepe awaik.

Doug. Virgil, 256, 38.

"So Scot. we say, I'll be with you with a rap, and with a clap [more commonly in a rap, &c.] and Scot. Bor. in a weaving; and so our author uses frequently the word throw;" Rudd.

To SWAK away, v. n. To decay; to consume; to waste.

Yet deid sall tak him be the bak,
And gar him cry, Allace!

Than sall he swak away with lak.

Bannatyne Poems, p. 182. st. 2.

Lord Hailes thinks that there is an "allusion to the oscillatory motion, remarkable when great loads are carried on men's shoulders." But as the person is described as in the hands of Deid or Death, the language does not seem expressive of motion, but of decay. Dan. swackk-er, to waste; Teut. swack-en, Germ. schwack-en, to become weak, to fail; Teut. swack, feeble, languid, enervated.

SWAK, s. Wallace, vii. 1043, Edit. Perth. V. SNUK.

SWALD, part. pa. Swelled.

S.

SWALE, part. pa. Fat; plump; swelled.

To feding and to dant thare sleyk swale stedis,
Thay hantit, quhil they leuit here on lyffe.

It is also used by Chaucer. Doug. Virgil, 187, 54.

To SWALL, SWALLY, v. a. To devour; to swallow.

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 50.

A.S. swam, Teut. swamme, Germ. schwam, tuber, fungus; Moes.G. swamms, spongia.

SWAM, s. A large quantity; as, "a swam o' claise." S.

SWAMP, adj. 1. Thin; not gross; slender, S.

2. Not swelled, S. Lincolns. synon. chung. Swamp is opposed to hoven. The belly is said to be swamp, after long fasting. See Sup.

Allied perhaps to Su.G. swang-er, Isl. swang-r, hungry;
esuriens, qui vacua ilia habet, Ibre. Sweingd, fames.

SWAMPIE, s. A tall thin fellow. S.

SWAMPED, part. adj. Metaph., imprisoned. S.

SWANDER, SWAUNDER, s. An apoplectic giddiness

Swanger: or some part of the armour that moved round;
Germ. schwang, motus rotantis, Su.G. swaeng-a, motitare.

SWANK, adj. 1. Thin; slender. It particularly denotes one who is thin in the belly, as opposed to a corpulent person, S.

2. It often conveys the idea of limber; pliant; agile, S.

In this sense Fergusson speaks of fallows,

Mair hardy, souple, steeve, an' swank,

Than ever stood on Sammy's shank. Poems, ii. 78.

"Steeve and swank, firm and agile." Gl. Morison's Poems. Hence,

It is improperly expl. "stately, jolly," Gl. Burns.

Thou ance was i' the foremost rank,

A filly buirdly, steeve and swank. Burns, iii. 141.

Dan. swang, lean, meagre, thin; also, hungry. V. SWAMP.
Germ. schwank, agilis, mobilis, quod dicitur de gracili et macilento, quia caeteris alacrius movetur, Wachter; from sweng-en, to move quickly, whence schwank-en, motitare.
The words of this form may be all traced to SWACK.
This seems to suggest the most natural etymon of Swanky,
s. q. v.

SWANK, SWANKY, s. An active or clever young fellow, S.

Doug. uses the term. V. SWANE. See Sup.

SWANKING, part. adj. Supple; active. S.

SWANKY, adj. 1. Apparently, empty; hungry.

Sweir swapit, swanky swyne, kepar ay for swats.

Dunbar, Evergreen, ii. 54. st. 11.

It may signify empty, hungry; as Kennedy is compared to a sow still seeking to catch wort. V. SWAMP and SWANK.

2. Applied to a person who is tall but not filled up. S.

SWANKYN, part. pa. Meaning doubtful. S.

To SWANKLE, v. n. Apparently synon. with Chunk, q. v.

To SWAP, v. a. To exchange, S. See Sup.

This word appears to be also O.E. being mentioned by Phillips; by Johns. too, but without any authority.
Dryden uses swap, id. Johns. calls it a low word, of uncertain derivation. The learned and ingenious Callander, in his MS. notes on Ihre. views it as allied to Su.G.
omswep, ambages, a term also used in Germ., traduced from A.S. ymb-swape, id. turnings and compassings, Somner; from ymb-swipan, circumire; as denoting the circumvention often used in bartering commodities.

Dr. Johns. gives the E. word as of uncertain origin.
But I observe a passage in Orkneyinga Saga, ap. Johns.
Antiq. Celto-Scand., which, as it refers to a very ancient custom among those who wished to cement their friendship, a custom which still prevails when friends are about to part for a long time, seems also to point out the origin of this word. Their Gilla-Kristr oc Kali skiptuz giofum vid at skilnadi, oc het huor othrum sinne vinattu fullkominne huar sem fundi theirra baeri saman. Gilchrist and Kali swaupit gifts, when they were about to separate (skail) from each other, mutually promising entire friendship wheresoever they should afterwards meet together. P. 258.

Instead of Isl. skipt-a, in Su.G. it is skift-a, (mutare.)
E. shift is more immediately allied. But it is not improbable, that this is also the origin of swap.

SWAP, s. A barter; an exchange. S.

To SWAP, v. a. 1. To draw, with the prep. out.

And thai that held on horss in hy
Swappyt owtswerdys sturdyly.—Barbour, ii. 363. MS.

2. A hollow or declination of a mountain or hill, near the summit, corr. squair, S.

The soft south of the swyre, and sound of the stremes,—
Micht confort any creature of the kyn of Adam.
Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 64.

Mr. Pinkerton renders it hill. But this does not express the sense.

This folkis ar in likyng at thare willis,
This land inhabitis vale, mont, and swyre.
Doug. Virgil, 259, 33.

Lo, thare the rais rynnyng swift as fyre,
Dreuin from the hichtis brekis out of the swyre.
Ibid. 105, 11.

— The prince Enee with al his men
Has enterit in, and passit throw the glen,
And ouer the swyre, schawis vp at his hand;
Eschape the derne wod, and wyn the euin land.
Jugum, Virg. Ibid. 398, 26.

Hence the designation, the Reid-squair Raid.

At the Reid-Squair the Tryst was set.

— But yit, for all his cracking crouse,
He rewed the Raid of the Reid-squyre.
Evergreen, ii. 224. 226.

Godscroft writes Red Swire, Hist. Doug. p. 339.

“ Sir John Forrester warden of the English side, and Sir John Carmichael of the Scottish, meeting at a place called the Red Swyre for redressing some wrongs that had been committed, it fell out that a Bill (so they used to speak) was filed upon an Englishman, for which Carmichael, according to the law of the borders, required him to be delivered till satisfaction was made.” Spotswood, p. 274.

This is merely a metaph. use of the term properly denoting the neck; and undoubtedly a beautiful figure it is.
For the hollow between the lower part of a mountain and its summit strikes the eye, as bearing a resemblance of that part of our corporeal frame which intervenes between the body and the head. A similar metaph. is used in E., when a peninsula is called a neck of land. Lat. jugum, a ridge, expl. swyre by Doug., seems to have the same allusion, although somewhat obliquely; as it primarily signifies a yoke which surrounds the neck. V. Now.

3. It is used, in a looser sense, to signify the most level spot between two hills, Loth. “ a steep pass between two mountains,” Gl. Sibb. See Sup.

A.S. sweor originally denotes a pillar; hence, according to Lye, transferred to the neck. Isl. swyr, however, simply signifies the neck. Our term, in its secondary senses, is confined to the South of S.

To SWARF, v. n. 1. To faint; to swoon, S. swarth, Ang.

Al pale and bludeles swarfs scho rycht thare,
And in the deith closis hir could ene.

Doug. Virgil, 394, 51.

— She grew tabetless, and swarft therewith.

Ross's Helenore, p. 25.

2. To abate; to become languid; applied to inanimate objects.

Mony abade the ebbing of the sand,

Quhill the swarf fard wallis abak dyd draw.

Doug. Virgil, 325, 45.

Recurfus languentis pelagi, Virg.

Rudd. very naturally supposes that it should be read swarfand wallis, i. e. failing, retiring waves.

He views it as obliquely derived from Belg. swerv-en, errare, vagari, whence E. swerve. Our v. may have the same respect to swerv-en, as doil'd to dwaal-en, errare; denoting stupor of mind. Perhaps the original idea is retained in Su.G. sworfw-a, tornari, in gyrum agitari; as a person, when seized with a swoon, often feels a kind of vertigo. Seren. derives the Sw. term from Moes.G. hairb-an, ire, praeterire, transire.

SWARFF, SWERF, s. 1. Stupor; insensibility.

Off ayle and wyne yneuch chosyne haiff thai:

As bestly folk tuk off thaim selff no keip,

In thair brawnys sone slaid the sleuthfull sleip,

Through full gluttre in swarff swappyt lik swyn,

Thar chyftayne than was gret Bachus off wyn,

Wallace, vii. 349. MS.

2. A fainting-fit; a swoon; swarth, Ang. See Sup.

The Swerf, and the Sweiting, with Sounding to swelt.

V. FEYK. Montgomerie, Watson's Coll. iii. 14.

But, Gentlemen, I crave your pardon,

A swerff of love my heart is hard on.

V. the v. Cleland's Poems, p. 33.

3. Faintness; dejection of spirit. S.

To SWARF, v. a. To stupify. S.

SWARFE, s. The surface.

"Wee may not settle vpon the swarfe of the heart, but the heart must be pricked with many interrogations, it must be lanced deipely." Rollocke on the Passion, p. 501.

SWARGH, s. A convention, &c. V. SWARCH. S.

SWARYN, s. V. SYVEWARM.

SWARRACH, s. A large unseemly heap, Ang. It often implies the idea of disorder.

Allied perhaps to Su.G. swaer, gravis.

SWARRIG, s. A quantity of any thing. S.

SWARTATEE, interj. Black time; an ill hour. S.

SWARTBACK, s. The Great Black and White Gull, Orkn.

"The Great Black and White Gull, (larus marinus, Linn. Syst.) our black-backed mew, or as it is sometimes called swartback, is the largest of the gull kind in our seas," Barry's Orkney, p. 304.

Norv. swartbag, id. V. Penn. Zool. p. 528.

SWARTH, s. A faint. Also,

To SWARTH. V. SWARF, v. and s.

SWARTH, s. Sward. S.

SWARTH, s. In swarth o', in exchange for. S.

SWARTRYTTER, s. Properly, one belonging to the German cavalry.

"He changeit his apparell, becaus he wald be vnknawin of sic as met him; and put on aue lose cloke, sic as the Swartrytters weir, and sa yeid fordwart throw the watche to execut his intendit traiterous fact," Buchanan's Detect. B. ii. 6. Penulam laxiorem, qualis Germanorum equitis est, superinduit. Lat. copy.

This term seems to be here used for dragoons in general, or those called Red cloaks. But it had originally a peculiar application. Swerte ruyters, according to Kilian, are, milites nigri, formerly in Lower Germany. "Their garments," he says, "as well as their spears, were black. They called themselves devils, to infuse terror into the minds of those against whom they were sent; and to many indeed, according to their name, they brought destruction, till at length they were wasted by frequent wars." See S.

Kilian refers to And. Altham and B. Rhenanus, as his authorities. I need scarcely add, that the word is formed from Teut. swert, black, and ruyter, a horseman.

To SWARVE, v. n. To incline to one side; E. Swerve. S. SWASH, s. "The noise which one makes, falling upon the ground;" Rudd. vo. Squat. See Sup.

E. squat, used as signifying a sudden fall, has been deduced from Ital. quatt-are, chiatt-are, acquattare, humi desidere. Seren. mentions Su.G. squaett-a, liquidum excrementum ejaculare, as the probable origin.

To SWASH, v. n. To swell; to be turgid. See Sup.

—"Who, in a word, in hight of stomacke, ruffling & swashing, did tread vpon God's turtles, accounting them the most vile off-scourings of the earth." Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 673.

Su.G. swassa denotes the swelling of language, a bombast style; also, to walk loftily; whence it is probable, that it was formerly used literally to signify any thing swollen or inflated.

SWASH, s. 1. A person of a broad make, or of a corpulent habit, S. 2. A large quantity viewed collectively; as, a swash of siller, a large sum of money, S. Applied also to meat or drink. See Sup.

SWASH, SWASHY, adj. 1. Of a broad make; or, of a full habit, S.B. "squat," Gl. Shirr.

2. It is also rendered fuddled, ibid. "swollen with drink," Gl. Rams.

Fou closs we us'd to drink and rant,—

Until we baith did glow'r and gaunt,—

Right swash I true.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 218.

SWASH, s. A trumpet. V. SWESCH. S.

SWATCH, s. 1. A pattern, generally of cloth, S. Swache, A.Bor. "a tally, that which is fixed to cloth sent to dye, of which the owner keeps the other part;" Ray. See S.

"A swatch (from swath;) a pattern, or piece for a sample." Sir J. Sinclair's Observ. p. 161.

2. A specimen of whatever kind, S. See Sup.

"This is but a short swatch of the unprecedented force, violence, and heavy oppression of Ministers, in their ministerial and judicative capacity." Wodrow, i. 41.

3. Metaph. a mark. An ill swatch of him, a bad mark of one's character, S.

SWATHEL, s. A strong man.

With a swap of a swerde that swathel him swykes.

Sir Gawain and Sir Gal. ii. 16.

A.S. swithlic, ingens, vehemens; swith, potens, fortis.

SWATS, s. pl. New ale, S. V. SWAITS.

SWATS, s. pl. The thin part of sowens or flummery. S.

To SWATTER, SQUATTER, v. a. 1. To move quickly in any fluid substance; generally including the idea of an undulatory motion, as that of an eel in the water, S.

The water stank, the field was odious,

Quhair dragonis, lessertis, askis, edderis swatterit.

Palice of Honour, i. 25.

Some by their fall were fixed on their spears,

Some swat'ring in the floud the streame down bears.

Muse's Threnodie, p. 112.

Birdis with mony pieteous pew,

Efferitlie in the air thay flew,

Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 41.

Burns writes squatter, Ayrs.

Awa ye squatter'd, like a drake,

On whistling wings.

Works, iii. 72.

2. To move quickly in an awkward manner; used improperly.

I shall remove, I you assure,

Tho' I were nere sa weak and poor,

And seek my meat throw Curry moor,

As fast as I can swatter. Watson's Coll. i. 43.

3. To swim close together in the water like young ducks.

Teut. swadder-en, profundere, turbare aquas, fluctuare.

Perhaps Su.G. squaett-a, liquida effundere, and squaettr-a, spargere, dissipare, have a common origin.

SWATTER, s. A large collection, especially of small objects; as, a swatter of bairns, a great number of children, Loth.

This may allude to the unequal motion of a crowd, and thus be allied to the v. Kilian expl. Teut. swadder-en, as also signifying, strepere. Thus swatter might refer to the noise made by a multitude. Germ. schwader is rendered, turma; but, according to Wachter, it is from Ital. squadra, a squadron. Su.G. swet, conglobatio, is also viewed by Ihre as of foreign origin, from Fr. suite, id.

SWATTLE, s. The act of swallowing with avidity, Stirlings.

To SWATTLE, v. a. To beat soundly with a stick or wand. E. Swaddle, to beat; to cudgel. S.

SWATTLIN, s. A drubbing. S.

SWATTROCH, s. Strong soup; excellent food. S.

SWAUGER, (g hard), s. A large draught. Syn. Waucht. S.

SWAUKIN, part. Hesitating. V. HAUKIN and SWAUKIN.

To SWAUL, v. n. To increase in bulk; to swell. S.

SWAUL, s. A large swell. S.

SWAULTIE, s. A fat animal; one that is swollen. S.

To SWAUNDER, v. n. To become giddy, &c. V. SWANDER.

To SWAUP, v. a. Used to denote the act of a nurse who puts a spoonful of meat first into her own mouth, that it may be cooled, softened, and brought to the point of the spoon, before she puts it into her child's. S.

To SWAVER, v. n. To walk feebly, as one who is fatigued, S.B. "walked wearily," Gl. Ross.

— By the help of a convenient stane,

To which she did her weary body lean,

She wins to foot, and swavering makes to gang.

Ross's Helenore, p. 26.

Teut. sweyv-en, vagari, vacillare, fluctuare, nutare; sweyver, vagus.

To SAW, v. a. 1. To produce waves, or ruffle the surface of the water. 2. To cause a motion in the water; as that produced by the swift motion of fishes. S.

SAW, s. 1. A wave. 2. The slight undulation in water caused by a fish swimming near the surface; also that caused by any body thrown into the water. S.

SAWIN o' the Water. The rolling of a body of water under the impression of the wind. S.

To SWEAL, v. a. To swaddle, S. V. SWILL.

To SWEAL, v. n. To whirl; to turn round rapidly. S.

SWEAL, s. The act of turning round with rapidity. S.

To SWEAL, v. n. To melt away hastily. S.

To SWEAL, v. a. To carry a candle in so careless or hurried a manner as to make it blaze, or melt away. S.

To SWEAP, v. a. To scourge, S. Rudd. vo. Swipper.

Isl. swipa, a scourge.

SWEAP, s. A stroke or blow. S.

SWECH (gutt.), s. A trumpet. S.

SWECHAN (gutt.), part. pr. Sounding; applied to the noise made by water;—Sough, to that made by wind. S.

SWECHYNGE, s. A rushing sound like that of water; or the hollow whistling sound made by the wind. S.

SWECHT, s. The force of a body in motion.

Bot thys ilk Latyne, knawand thare malyse,

Resystis vnmouyt as ane roik of the seis,

Quham with grete brute of wattir smyte we se,

Hymself sustenis by his huge wecht,

Mole tenet, Virg.

Doug. Virgil, 228, 27.

For as thay ran abak, and can thame schape

For till withdraw towart the tothir side,—

Than with thare swechtis, as thay rele and lepe,

The birnand towris down rollis with ane rusche.

Pondus, Virg.

Ibid. 296, 33.

2. A multitude; a great number or quantity. S.

Rudd. renders this "burden, weight, force," viewing it as probably nothing else but the E. weight, with s prefixed. But it is more probably allied to Su.G. swigt-a, vacillare, ut solent loco cessura; from Isl. sweig-ia, incurvare. Thus swecht is a s. from the same origin with sway, sway, to incline to a side.

SWEDGE, s. An iron chisel with a bevelled edge, used in making the groove round a horseshoe. S.

To SWEDGE, v. a. To make a groove in a horseshoe. S.

To SWEF, SWEY, v. n. 1. To incline to one side. 2. To move backwards and forwards, as a tree from the action of the wind. 3. To be irresolute. V. SWAY, v. S.

SWEY, s. V. SWAY.

To SWEF, v. a. 1. To move any object to one side. 2. To cause to move backwards and forwards. V. SWAY, v. S.

To SWEF aff, v. a. To slant off; to turn aside. S.

SWEF, s. An inclination to one side. A chimney crane, for suspending a pot over the fire. V. SWAY. S.

SWEF-SWAY, adj. In a state of suspense or hesitation; halting between two opinions. S.

SWEF, s. A line of grass cut down by the mower. S.

To SWEF, v. n. To smart with pain. Syn. Gell, Sow. S.

To SWEF, v. a. To singe. S.

SWEEK, s. The art of doing any thing properly. When one cannot accomplish what he attempts, it is said, He has nae the week o't, S.B. See Sup.

It is probably the same with Su.G. swik, swek, dolus, insidiae. V. SWAK, and SWIK, s.

To SWEEL, v. n. To drink copiously, S. swill, E.

To SWEEL, SWEAL, v. a. To wash any thing in a large quantity of water, dashing it to and fro, or whirling it round forcibly. Syn. Synd. S.

To SWEEL, v. a. To swallow. E. Swill. S.

To SWEEL, SWEAL, v. a. To wind round; as, to sweal a rope round a post. S.

SWEELER, s. A bandage; what is sweeled round. S.

SWEEP, s. A chimneysweeper; also Sweepie. S.

SWEER, SWEERT, adj. Slow. V. SWEIR. S.

To SWEESH, v. a. To beat. V. SQUISHE. S.

SWEET, adj.* 1. Used in the sense of fresh, not salted, with respect to butter, generally beyond the Frith of Forth. S.

Sweet butter now on mony a plate,

An sugar is presentit.—A. Douglas's Poems, p. 144.

2. Fresh; not putrid. S.

SWEETBREAD, s. The pancreas in animals. See S.

SWEETIES, s. pl. The term vulgarly used for sweetmeats or confections, S.

"Sweetys, sweetmeats, confectionary." Sir J. Sinclair's Observ. p. 151.

—Snuff boxes, sword-knots, canes, and washes,
And sweeties to bestow on lasses.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 547.

Hence,

SWEETIE-BUN, SWEETIE-SCON, SWEETIE-LAIF, s. A cake baked with sweetmeats, or with raisins, &c. S.

—The bride's sweetie bun, and good liquor,
Wi' gawfin and jeerin' gaed down.

Jamieson's Popular Ball. i. 296.

SWEETIE-MAN, s. A confectioner; a man who sells confections or sweet-meats at a fair. S.

SWEETIE-WIFE, s. A female who sells sweet-meats. S.

SWEET-MILK CHEESE. Cheese made of milk without the cream being skimmed off; Dunlop cheese. S.

SWEET-MILKER, s. The day on which a cheese is made in a farm-house. S.

SWEG, SWEIG, s. A quantity; a considerable number, Loth.

Franc. sueig, pecus, grex; Alem. suiga, armentum; Germ. schweigen, praedia pecuaria. The term, from denoting a flock or herd, might be transferred to a collection of any kind, like hirsell, drave, &c. V. SWACK.

SWEY, s. A long crow for raising stones, Ang. as punch denotes a smaller one.

Probably from Isl. sveig-ia, inclinare, q. to move the stones from their place. V. SWAY, v.

SWEIG, s. A large draught of liquor. E. swig. S.

SWEIG, SWEEG, s. A very bad candle. S.

SWEIL, s. 1. A swivel, or ring containing one; also Sowle. 2. Any thing that has a circular motion. S.

To SWEILL, v. n. To move in a circular way. S.

SWEYNGEOUR, SWYNGEOUR, s. S. swinger. See S. Sweyngeouris, and skuryvagus, swankys and swanys, Geuis na cure to cun craft.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 238, b. 23,

Ane swyngeour coffe, amangis the wyvis,
In land-wart dwellis with subteill menis,
Exponand thame auld sanctis lyvis,
And sanis thame with deid mennis banis.

Bannatyne Poems, p. 170.

Lord Hailes renders this "a rascally wench." Were this the sense, it might be allied to Dan. swangr-er, gignere, which is probably from swange, ilia. Rudd. expl. it "scoundrel, rascal;" but gives no probable etymon. Lye renders it desidiosus, iners, piger; Add. Jun. Etym. This sense is more probable; A.S. sweng, swong, lazy, swon-gornes, torpor. In Edin. Review, Oct. 1803, it is observed, however, that the term "means only a strong man, or, as the vulgar still say, a swingeing fellow, from Moes.G. swintheins, potentia, or swinth, validus, robustus, as in Ulph., Gatayida swinthein, fecit potentiam." P. 206.

SWEIR, SWERE, SWEER, SWEAR, adj. 1. Lazy; indolent, S. Sweet, S.O. See Sup.

Mony sweir bumbard belly-huddroun,
Mony slute daw, and slepy duddroun,
Him servit ay with sounyie.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 29,

Lord Hailes says; "In modern language, the consequence only is used; for sweir means unwilling;" Note, p. 237. But I know not how the learned writer could assert this, as the word is still commonly used in the sense of lazy. Not swere, bot in his dedis diligent,
Palynurus furth of his couche vpsprent.

Doug. Virgil, 85, 36,

Quharfor bene nobillis to fallow prowes swere?

Ibid. Prol. 354, 8.

Hence the name given to a lazy girl, Ketty Sweerock, as in the S. Prov.;

Ketty Sweerock frae whare she sate,
Cries, Reik me this, and reik me that.

Ramsay's S. Prov. p. 48,

"Work for nought makes fowk dead swear;" Ibid. p. 79.

A.S. swaer, swere, piger, deses. Swer thegn, piger servus, Matt. xxv. 26. But the primary sense of the A.S. term is, heavy; corresponding to Su.G. swaer, Alem. suuar, gravis. The transition to laziness is very natural; as this flows from heaviness of spirit, or any pressure of disease on the body.

2. Reluctant; unwilling, S. V. sense 1. To do a thing with sweir will, to do it reluctantly.

Yet sweir were they to rake their een,
Sic dizzy heads had they.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 271,

Unyoke thee, man, an' binna swear,
To ding a hole in ill-hain'd gear!
O think that eild, wi' wyly fit,
Is wearing nearer bit by bit!

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 106.

3. In the Western counties, it is often used in the sense of niggardly; as denoting one who is unwilling to part with any thing that is his property. Hence, DEAD-SWEIR, adj. Extremely lazy, S.

"Deferred hopes need not to make me dead-swier (as we use to say.)" Rutherford's Lett. P. i. ep. 199.

SWEIR-KITTY, s. An instrument for winding yarn, S.B.

It had originally received this denomination, as affording an easier mode of working than had formerly been known; from sweir, and Kitty, a contemptuous term for a woman. There is probably an allusion to the nickname given, in the S. Prov., to a lazy girl. V. SWEIR, sense 1, SWEIRNES, SWEIRNESS, s. Laziness, S. See Sup.

To SWELT, v. n. 1. To die.

At Jerusalem trowyt he Grawyn in the Burch to be;
The quethyr at Burch in to the Sand
He swelt rycht in his awn land.

Barbour, iv. 311. MS.

A.S. swelt-an, swelt-an, Moes.G. swilt-an, mori; Su.G. swaelt-a, to perish by hunger. Callander, MS. Note in vo., mentions "Scot. to swalt, to die." I have not heard the word used in this sense.

2. To feel something like suffocation, especially in consequence of heat, S. nearly allied to E. swelter. See S.

— Het, het, was the day;—

With faut and heat, I just was like to swelt,
And in a very blob of sweat to melt.

Swelchie is still used in this sense, Orkn.

"On the north side of this isle is a part of Pightland-Firth, call'd the Swelchie of Stroma, — very dangerous to seamen." Wallace's Orkney, p. 5.

"Did we credit the tales of former times, wells and swelchies, gulphs and whirlpools, are constantly surrounding this island, like so many gaping monsters, more hideously formidable than even Scylla or Charybdis." Barry's Orkney, p. 44.

Swell, in modern S.B., is used in a sense very nearly allied, as synonym. with bog.

—"He knows the place called the Waggle, between which and the water [river] there was a bog or swell that beasts would have laired in." State, Leslie of Powis, A. 1805, p. 74.

Su.G. swalg, which, like Teut. swelgh, primarily signifies the throat, (guttur, fauces,) is used, in a secondary sense, for an abyss or gulf: Abyssum, vel quicquid affluentes humores absorbet. Ett stort swalg, ingens vorago; a great gulf; Luke xvi. 26. Isl. swelg-ur, barathrum. V. Ihre in vo., who derives the v. swael-ja, from the s.

SWERF, s. A fainting fit; a swoon. V. SWARF.

SWERTHBAK, s. The Great Black and White Gull.

The Goull was a garnitar,

The Swerthbak a scellarar.

Houlate, i. 14.

This in Orkn. is still called Swartback, q. v. Thus it appears that it formerly had the same name in S. unless this should be the Lesser Guillemot; Isl. swartbak-ur; denominated from the blackness of its back. V. Pennant's Zool. p. 520.

SWESCH, s. A trumpet.

"All the Gild brether sall convene, and compeir after they heare the striak of the swesch (or the sound of the trumpet)." Stat. Gild. c. 14.

Audito classico, Lat.

It is used in a similar sense by Lyndsay, although given by Mr. Pinkerton as not understood.

Ane thousand hakbuttis gar schute al at anis

With swesche, talburnis, and trumpettis awfullie.

S. P. Repr. i. 212.

Here it may denote some other musical instrument used in war, or a trumpet of a different construction from those mentioned in the close of the verse.

A.S. sweg, sound in general; also, any musical instrument. Sweg herelic, instrumentum militare; classicum. The pl. is swegas, whence swesch may have been formed. Moes.G. swiga-jon, to pipe, swigajon, a minstrel. E. swash, "to make a great clatter or noise," seems a cognate term.

SWESCHER, SUESCHER, s. A trumpeter.

S.

SWEUIN, SWEVING, SWEVYNYNG, SWENYNG, s. A dream; the act of dreaming.

The figure fled as licht wynd or the sonne beme,
Or maist likly ane wauerand sweuin or dreme.

Doug. Virgil, 65, 15.

—Sum tyme in our sweving we tak kepe.

Ibid. 446, 11.

I slaid on ane swevynyng, slomerand ane life.

Ibid. Prol. 238, a. 8.

A swenyng swyth did me assaile
Of sonis of Sathanis seid.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 19.

The latter is merely a contr. O.E. sweven, A.S. swefen, id. from swaef-ian, to sleep; Dan. sov-er, id. whence soven, sleep; Isl. sueffn, id. from sof-a, dormire.

That Sueuin has also been formerly used as a v., appears from its part. sweyning.

Than come Dame Dremyng, all clad in black sabill,
With sweyning Nymphis, iu cullouris variabill.

Dial. Honour, Gude Fame, &c. p. 1.

SWYCHT, adj.

And for thair is na horss in this land
Swa swycht, na yeit sa weill at hand,
Tak him as off thine awyne hewid,

As I had gevyn thairto na reid.—Barbour, ii. 120. MS.

"Swift," Gl. Pink. Isl. skiot-ur, celer, or perhaps powerful, from wicht, with the sibilation prefixed.

SWICK, adj. Clear of any thing, Banffs.

Perhaps allied to the s. as denoting escape by some artful means. See Sup.

To SWICK, v. a. 1. To deceive; to illude. 2. To blame; to censure, Ang.

Allied to Teut. swecht-en, reprimere, or rather from A.S. swic-an, decipere; also, offendere. V. the s.

SWICK, SWYK, s. 1. Fraud; deceit, S.B.

Bot he gat that Archebyschapyrk

Wyntown, vii. 8. 38.

2. A trick, of whatever kind.

S.

Su.G. swik, anc. swick, Dan. swig, id.

3. Blame; fault; criminality. I had nae swick o't, I had no blameableness in the matter, S.B.

A.S. swica, swic, offensa, offendiculum.

4. A deceiver, Fife.

A.S. swice, swica, proditor, deceptor, seductor.

SWICKY, adj. 1. Guileful; deceitful, Ang.

2. Tricky; roguish; applied to one who is given to innocent sport, Ang. V. SWIK.

To SWIDDER, v. a. To cause to be in doubt; to subject to apprehension; to shake one's resolution.

Than on the wall ane garritour I consider,
Proclaimand loude that did thair hartis swidder;
“Out on all falsheid the mother of euerie vice,
“Away inuy, and birnand couetice.”

V. v. n. Palice of Honour, iii. 55.

To SWIDDER, SWITHER, v. n. To doubt; to hesitate, pron. swither, S. See Sup.

Sae there's nae time to swidder 'bout the thing.

Ross's Helenore, p. 93.

Then fute for fute they went togidder,
But oft she fell, the gate was slidder;
Yet where to take her he did swidder,
While at the last he would.

Watson's Coll. i. 41.

Sibb. refers to Teut. swier-en, vibrare, vagari, in gyrum verti; swier, vibratio, gyros. I have sometimes thought that the v. or s. might originate from A.S. swaether, which of the two, contr. from swa hwaether. But as the active sense, as it occurs in the Palice of Honour, is the most ancient example I have met with, perhaps it may rather be allied to Germ. schutter-n, concutere, concuti. For Doug. evidently uses it to denote a mental concussion. The Germ. v. is a frequent. from schutt-en, Teut. schudd-en, id. Su.G. skudd-a. Hence E. shudder. “Swither is expl. trembling,” Gl. Morison's Poems. See Sup.

SWIDDER, SWIDDERING, SWITHER, s. Doubt; hesitation. See Sup.

And since that ye, withoutten swither,
To visit me are come down hither,
Be blyth, and let us drink together,
For mourning will not mack it.

Watson's Coll. i. 66.

—I think me mair than blist
To find sic famous four Besyde me, to gyde me,—
Considering the swiddering
Ye fand me first into.

Cherrie and Slae, st. 72.

Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 4.

SWIFF, s. 1. Rotatory motion, or the sound produced by it; as, the swiff of a mill, Loth.

2. Any quick motion producing a whiffing sound. 3. A sound of this description. Syn. Souch. S.

Isl. swef-ast, Su.G. swaefw-a, circumagere, motitari.

To SWIFF, v. n. A term used to denote the hollow melancholy sound made by the wind. Syn. Souch, v. S.

To SWIFF asleep, v. n. To enjoy the short interval of sleep experienced by those who are restless from fatigue or disease. S.

SWIFF of Sleep. A disturbed sleep. V. Souf. S.

To SWIFF awa, v. n. To faint; to swoon. S.

SWIFT, s. A reeling machine used by weavers. S.

To SWIG, v. n. “To turn suddenly,” S.A.

SWIG, s. The act of turning suddenly. V. Gl. Compl. vo. Suak.

The Editor views these terms as connected with Isl. sweig-a, to bend.

To SWIG, v. n. To wag; to move from side to side; to walk with a rocking sort of motion. S.

To SWIK, v. a. “To soften; assuage; allay;” Rudd. Sibb. It properly signifies to deceive. See Sup.

And sum tyme wald scho Ascanus the page,
Caucht in the fygure of his faderis ymage,
And in hir bosum brace, gyf scho tharby
The luf vntellibyl mycht swik or satisfy.

Doug. Virgil, 102, 38.

Rudd. derives it from A.S. swic-an, cessare, desistere; Sibb. from Teut. swicht-en, sedare, pacare. But swik here undoubtedly signifies to deceive, used metaph., from A.S. swic-an, id. in its primary sense. For it is the v. corresponding to fallere in the original. See Sup.

SWYK, s. Fraud; deceit. V. SWICK.

To SWYKE, v. a. To cause to stumble; to bring to the ground.

With a swap of a swerde that swathel him swykes,
He stroke of the stede-hede, streite there he stode.
The faire fole fondred, and fel to the ground.

Sir Gawan and Sir Gal. ii. 16.

A.S. swic-an, facere ut offendat.

SWIKFUL, adj. Deceitful, Wyntown. Hence,

SWIKFULLY, adv. Deceitfully.

Bot a fals traytoure cald Godwyne
This Ethelrede betraysyd syne,
And hym murtherysyd swykfully.

Wyntown, vi. 15. 85.

SWIL, s. The swivel of a tedder or tether. S.

SWILK, SUILK. Such. See Sup.

With swilk wordis thai maid thair mayn.

Barbour, xx. 277. MS.

A.S. swilc, swylc, talis. S. sic, sik, is evidently corr. from this, as the A.S. word is contr. from Moes.G. swaleik, id. from swa, so; and leik, like, (similis.)

To SWILL, v. a. To swaddle, S. sweal, swayl.

How that gaist had been gotten, to guess they began;
Well swill'd in a swins skin and smeir'd o're with suit.

Montgomerie, Watson's Coll. iii. 13.

Attour, I hae a ribbon twa ell laug,
As broad's my loof, and nae a thrum o't wrang,
Gin it hae mony marrows, I'm beguil'd,
'Twas never out of fauld syn she was swayl'd.

Isl. swellt, strictus.

Ross's Helenore, p. 114.

SWILL, s. Perhaps a duty, for which money was taken. S.

SWINE. The swine's gane through't, a proverbial phrase used in relation to marriage, when something untoward has taken place which breaks it off. S.

SWINE-ARNOT, s. The same with Swine's Mosscoorts. S.

SWINE'S-SAIM, s. Hog's lard. S.

SWINE-FISH, s. The Wolf-fish, Orkn.

“The Wolf-fish, (anarhichas lupus, Lin. Syst.) here the swine-fish, an ugly animal, is often found in our seas.” Barry's Orkn. p. 294.

SWINES ARNUTS, Tall Oat-grass with tuberous roots; Avena elatior, Linn. S.

SWINES MOSSCORTS, Clown's all-heal, an herb, S. Stachys palustris, Linn. The Sw. name is Swinknyl, from swin, swine, and knyl, knoel, a bump, a knob.

SWING, s. A stroke; a blow, Barbour. A.S. id.

SWINGER, s. V. SWYNGEOUR. S.

SWYNGYT, Barbour, viii. 307. Ed. Pink.

For thai that fyrst assemblyt wer,
Swyngyt, and faucht full sturdely.

But in MS. it is fwyngyt, i. e. foined, pushed; as in Edit. 1620, fonyeed. Foin is not, as Skinner and Johns. conjecture, from Fr. poindre, to prick, but from O.Fr. foine, a sword. V. Dict. Trev.

To SWINGLE lint, to separate flax from the pith or stalk on which it grows by beating it, S. pron. sungle.

A.Bor. to swingle, to roughdress flax; Gl. Grose. See S.
Teut. swinghel-en het vlas, id. Mollire linum flagello,

SWINGLER, s. The instrument used for beating flax. S.
SWINGLE-WAND, s. A wooden lath or sword, used for dressing flax. Syn. Scutch, sense 1. q. v. S.

SWINGLE-TREE, s. The stock over which flax is beat. S.

SWINGLING-HAND, s. The same as Swingle-wand. S.

SWINGLING-STOCK, s. An upright board, about three feet in height, mortised into a foot or stock, over which flax is held to be scutched. V. SCUTCH. S.

SWING-LINT, s. An instrument used for breaking flax. S.

SWINGLE-TREE, s. 1. The movable piece of wood put before a plough or harrow, to which the traces are fastened; pron. sungle-tree, S. See Sup.

2. Used improperly to denote the poles of a coach.

"Sometimes the breast-woddies, an' sometimes the theets brak, and the swingle-trees flew in flinders, as gin they had been as freugh as kail-castacks." Journal from London, p. 5.

Teut. swinghel-en, to vibrate, to move backwards and forwards.

To SWINK, SWYNK, v. n. To labour. See Sup.

His servand, or himself, may nocht be spard,

To swynk or sweit, withoutin meit or wage.

Henryson, Bannatyne Poems, p. 120.

A.S. swinc-an, laborare, fatigare.

O.E. swinke.

Great loubies and long, that loth were to swinke,

Clothed hem in copes, to be knownen from other;

And shopen hem hermits, her ease to have.

P. Ploughman, Pass. 1.

SWINK, s. Labour; Chauc. swinke.

Ever as thai com newe,

He on ogain hem thre;

Gret swink. Sir Tristrem, p. 97.

To SWIPE, v. n. To move circularly; to give a stroke in a semicircular or elliptical form, as with a scythe. S.

SWIPE, SWYPE, s. 1. A circular motion. 2. A stroke fetched by a circular motion. S.

SWYPES, s. pl. Brisk small beer. S.

SWIPPER, SWIPPET, adj. 1. Quick; swift; nimble.

All thoct he eildit was, or step in age,

Als fery and als swipper as ane page.

Doug. Virgil, 173, 54.

Bot than the swypper tuskand hound assayis,

And neris fast, ay reddy hym to hynt. Ibid. 439, 29.

2. Sudden, S.B.

In rinning aff lay my relief I thought;

But of my claise he took a swippert claight.

Ross's Helenore, p. 88.

3. Hasty; tart. One is said to speak swippert-like, when one speaks hastily, as if in ill humour, S.B.

A.S. swip-an, Isl. swip-a, cito agere, swip-r, subita apparentia, swipan, motus subitus, swipul, brevis, momentaneus, evanescens. Verel. mentions S. kort, hastig, as

SWIPPERTLY, SWIPPIRLIE, adv. Swiftly.

Turnus the chiftane on the tothir syde,

Come to the cieté, or that ony wist,

Furth fleand swippirlie, as that him best list.

Doug. Virgil, 275, 24.

Then swippertly started up a carl.—

Jamieson's Popul. Ball. i. 303.

SWYRE, s. The neck; also, a declination in a hill, &c.
V. SWARE.

To SWIRK, v. n. To spring; to set off with velocity. S.

Full craftely conjurit scho the Yarrow,

Quhilk did forth swirk as swift as ony arrow.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 4.

To SWIRL, v. n. 1. To whirl like a vortex, S. See S.

2. To be seized with giddiness. S.—3. Used to denote the motion of a ship in sailing; but improperly.

—Wha—in a tight Thessalian bark

To Colchos' harbour swirl'd.

Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 3.

Su.G. surr-a, swarf-a, Isl. swirr-a, Belg. swier-en, to be hurried round. Swarf-a and swirr-a are originally the same with hwerf-a, s being prefixed. Hence hwerft-a, to be carried round, wattn hwirfel, a whirlpool, &c.

SWIRL, s. 1. The whirling motion of a fluid body, S.

The swelland swirl vphesit vs to heuin,

Syne with the wall swak vs agane doun euin,

As it apperit, vnder the sey to hell.

Doug. Virgil, 87, 24.

2. A whirling motion of any kind, as that caused by the operation of the wind. 3. The vestiges left of a motion of this kind. 4. A twist or contortion in the grain of wood. 5. The same with Cowlick, a tuft of hair on the head which brushes up. S.

It often signifies an eddy; applied to water, to wind, to driving snow, S. V. the v.

To SWIRL, v. a. To carry off as by a whirlwind. S.

SWIRLIE, adj. 1. Full of twists; contorted; full of knots, knaggy, synon. S.; q. as denoting the circumvolutions of wood, the veins of which are circular.

He taks a swirlie, auld moss-oak,

For some black, grousome carlin. Burns, iii. 136.

2. Entangled; applied to grass or grain that lies in various positions. 3. Inconstant; ever in a state of rotation. S.

SWIRLING, s. Giddiness; vertigo. S.

SWIRLON, SWIRLIN, adj. Distorted; crooked. S.

SWITH, SWYTH, SWYTH, adv. Quickly; als swyth, as soon.

For hunger wod he gapis with throttis thre,

Swyth swelliand that morsel raucht had sche.

Doug. Virgil, 178, 27.

Als swith as the Rutulianis did se

The yet opin, thay ruschit to the entré.

Chaucer, aswith.

Ibid. 302, 32.

Rudd. mentions A.S. swithe, promptè; and indeed Som- ner renders ealles to swithe, "nimium promptè, too quickly or readily." But this is not the proper sense. It is simply a sign of the superlative, like Lat. valde, E. very.
 Sometimes it signifies vehementer; from swith, valens potens, fortis.

"Scot. we say, Swith away, i. e. be gone quickly," Rudd.

Sibylla cryis, that prophetes diuine,

Al ye that bene prophane, away, away,

Swyth outwith, al the sanctuary hy you, hay.

Doug. Virgil, 172, 13.

Swyth man! fling a' your sleepy springs awa'.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 6.

Swith frae my sight, nor lat me see you mair.

Shirrefs' Poems, p. 62.

This perhaps may be viewed as a v. In this sense the term is often used to a dog, when he is ordered to get away. Isl. svey is used in the same manner. It is thus illustrated by G. Andr. Svey, Interjectio, Vae, Graecè Ouai, Phy, Danicè ewi, swei thier, tvi vorde dig; Phy, apage, st, Canis! Ad svey-a, silentium cum pudore imperare, p. 230. Perhaps our term is formed from Su.G.
swig-a, loco cedere, q. give place.

 TABERNACLE, s. To keep up the tabernacle. 1. To continue in a full habit of body; not to lose flesh. 2. To use means for keeping in full habit. S.
 TABERNER, s. One who keeps a tavern. S.
 TABETS, TEBBITS, s. Bodily sensation; feeling. My fingers lost the tebbits, i. e. they became quite benumbed, so that I had no feeling, S.B. See Sup.
 C.B. tyb-io, tyb-ygw, are expl. sentio, to feel—Lhuyd; but seem properly to apply to the mind, existimare, putare, opinari; Davies.
 TABETLESS, TAPETLESS, TEBBITLESS, adj. 1. Not as expl. by Shirr. and Sibb., "without strength," but destitute of sensation, benumbed, S.B. See Sup.
 But toil and heat so overpowr'd her pith,
 That she grew tabetless and swarft therewith.
Ross's Helenore, p. 25.
 2. "Heedless; foolish," Gl. Burns, S.O.
 The tapetless ramfeezl'd hizzie,
 She's saft at best, and something lazy.—Burns, iii. 243.
 This is undoubtedly the same word.
 TABILLIS, s. pl. Boards for playing at draughts or chess.
 TABIN, s. A sort of waved silk. E. Tabby. S.
 TABLE, TABLES. The designation given to the permanent council held at Edinburgh, to manage the affairs of the covenanters during the reign of Charles I.
 TABLE-SEAT, s. A square seat in a church. S.
 TABLET, TABILLET, s. A small enclosure for holding relics; a small square box. S.
 TABLET, TABLIT A FACE. Syn. Fast, Fassit, q. v. S.
 TABOURS, s. pl. A beating; a drubbing. S.
 TABRAGH, s. A term applied to animal food, that is nearly in the state of carrion, Fife; perhaps corr. from CABROCH, q. v.
 TABURNE, s. A tabour. V. ROBIN-HOOD. S.
 To TACH, TATCH, v. a. To arrest; to attach. See S.
 As he thus raid in gret angyr and teyne,
 Off Inglissmen thar folowed him fyfteyn,
 Wicht, wallyt men, that towart him couth draw,
 With a maser, to tach hym to the law,
Wallace, vii. 304. MS.
Tach, Edit. Perth; teach, Edit. 1648, 1673.
 Most probably abbrev. from Fr. attach-er; L.B. attach-are, which, according to Hickes, primarily signifies, to seize by the hands of lictors or officers. But these terms, as well as Ital. attac-are, Hisp. atac-ar, acknowledge a Goth. origin; A.S. taec-an, Isl. tak-a, tak-ia, to take; Su.G. tag-a, Belg. tach-en, to apprehend. Isl. tak denotes the apprehension of those who struggle; luctantium arreptatio, G. Andr. Moes.G. attek-an, tangere, probably expresses the primary idea.
 TACHT, adj. Tight; tense; close, S.B. Sw. tact, id.
 TACK, TAK, s. The act of taking; particularly used to denote violent seizure.
 —"Certane gentilmen—hes vsit to tak Caupis, of the quhilk tak thair, and exaction thairof, our souerane Lord, and his thre estatis knew na perfite nor ressonabill cause. Acts, Ja. IV. 1489. c. 35. Edit. 1566. Tacke, Edit. Murray, c. 18.

T A E

 TACK, s. A slight hold or fastening. It hings by a tack, It has a very slight hold, S. from the E. v. tack.
 TACK, TAKE, s. The act of catching fishes; a gude tack, success in catching, S.
 "He [the King] suld haue of euery boate, that passis to the draue and slayis herring, an thousand herring of ilk tack that halds, viz. of the lambmes tack, of the winter tack, and of the Lentrone tack." Skene, Verb. Sign. vo. Assisa.
 "This ile hath also salt water loches, to wit, Ear, and little small loche with guid take of herringes.—Then is Lochfyne, quherein ther is a guid take of herringes." Monroe's Iles, p. 18.
 Isl. teh-ia, captura, G. Andr.
 TACK, TAKK, TACKE, s. 1. The lease of a house or farm, S.
 "Suppois the Lordis sell or annaly that land or landis, the takaris sall remaine with thair takkis, vnto the ischie of thair termis, quhais handis that euer thay landis cum to, for siclyke maill, as thay tuik thame for." Acts, Ja. II. 1449. c. 17. Ed. 1566. Tacke, Skene.
 2. Possession. A lang tack of any thing; long possession of it, S. Hence, TACKSMAN, s. 1. One who holds a lease from another, S.
 "An assignation by the tenant without the landlord's consent, though it infers no forfeiture of the right of tack itself against the tacksman, can transmit no right from him to the assignee." Erskine's Instit. B. ii. T. 6, s. 31. See S.
 2. In the Highlands, used in a peculiar sense, as denoting a tenant of a higher class.
 "In this country, when a man takes a lease of a whole farm, and pays L.50 sterling, or upwards, of yearly rent, he is called a tacksman; when two or more join about a farm, and each of them pays a sum less than L.50, they are called tenants." P. Lochgoil-head, Argyles. Statist. Acc. iii. 186, N.
 "By tacksmen is understood such as lease one or more farms; and by tenants, such as rent only an half, a fourth, or an eighth of a farm." P. S. Knapdale, Argyles. Statist. Acc. xix. 323, N. See Sup.
 TACKET, s. A small nail, S.
 —Johny cobbles up his shoe
 Wi' tackets large and lang.
 V. CLAMP, s. Morison's Poems, p. 47.
 The idea of lang is not quite correspondent.
 Evidently a deriv. from E. tack, id. which denotes a nail so small that it only as it were tacks one thing to another, WHISKY-TACKET, s. A pimple, supposed to proceed from intemperance. S.
 TACKIT. Tongue-tackit, adj. 1. Having the tongue fastened by a small film, which must sometimes be cut in infants, to enable them to suck, S.
 2. Tongue-tied, either as signifying silence, or an impediment in speech, S. He was nae tongue-tackit with them, i. e. he spoke freely.
 TACKLE, s. An arrow. V. TAKYLL. S.
 TADE, SHEEP-TADE, s. The sheep-louse; the tick. S.
 TAE, adj. One. S.
 TAE, s. 1. The toe, S. A. Bor. See Sup.
 2. The prong of a fork, leister, &c.
 TAE'S-LENGTH, s. The shortest distance conceivable. S.
 THREE-TAE'D, part. adj. Having three prongs. S.
 TAE, s. Applied to the branch of a drain, S.
 TAE, prep. To. S.

To TAEN, v. a. To lay hands on the head of one who is caught in a game. S.

TAEN about, part. pa. V. TANE. S.

TAFF-DYKE, s. A fence made of turf. S.

TAFFEREL, adj. Thoughtless; giddy; ill-dressed. S.

TAFFIE, s. Treacle mixed with flour, and boiled till it acquire consistency; a Hallowe'en sweetmeat. S.

—"There was a four-nooked taffil in manner of an altar, standing within the kirk, having standing thereupon two books, at least resembling clasped books, called blind books," &c. Spalding's Troubles, i. 23.

"Then the Earl of Errol sat down in a chair,—at a four-nooked taffil set about the fore face of the parliament, and covered with green cloth." Ibid. p. 25.

Germ. tafel, Su.G. tafla, tabula cujuscunque generis; skrifttafla, tabula scriptoria. Hence, as would seem, A.S. taefl, a die, because tables were used in playing at dice; Su.G. tafwel-bord, a dice-table, tabula aleatoria; taefla, to play at dice; shaf-tafwel, chess.

To TAFFLE, v. a. To tire; to wear out. S.

TAFFLED, part. pa. Exhausted with fatigue. S.

TAFT, TAFTAN, s. A messuage or dwelling-house and ground for household uses, S.B. See Sup.

This term seems radically the same with E. toft, L.B. toftum. These, however, must be traced to Su.G. toft, topt, Isl. topt-r, area domus; in Sw. now corrupted to tomt, the ground belonging to a house. Ihre views taepp-a, claudere, as the origin, because it is customary to enclose houses.

TAFTEIS, s. Taffeta. S.

TAG, s. 1. The latchet of a shoe. 2. Any thing used for tying, S.

Isl. tag, a thong, from teig-a, to stretch. Tag has a similar sense, vimen lentum; radices virgultorum flexiles, Verel. taggar, fibrae. Su.G. tagg, cuspis, aculeus, i. e. a point, a name also commonly given S. to a shoe-latchet. Mr. Tooke derives E. tag from A.S. ti-an, vincere, viewing it as the part. past.

3. A long and thin slice of any thing; as, a tag of skate, i. e. a slice of skate hung up to be dried in the sun, S.

4. Trumpery; trifling articles.

Thus quhan thay had reddit the raggis,

To roume thay wer inspyrit;

Tuk up thair taipis, and all thair taggis,

Fure furth as thay war fyrit.

Symmye and His Bruder, Chron. S.P. i. 360.

Perhaps it may denote shreds of parchment on which pardons or indulgences were written. The language seems borrowed from a tailor's board.

5. Any little object hanging loosely from a larger one. S.

To TAG, v. a. To tie. S.

TAG, s. A disease affecting the tail of sheep. S.

To TAG, v. n. To wane; applied to the moon. S.

TAG, s. The white hair on the point of the tail of a cow or stot. S.

TAGGIE, s. A cow having the point of its tail white. S.

TAGGIT, TAGGED, part. adj. Applied to cattle having the lower end or point of the tail white. S.

TAG AND RAG. The whole of any thing; every bit of it.

TAGEATIS, s. pl. Apparently, cups, S.

TAGGIT, part. pa.

This rich man, be he had heard this tail,

Ful sad in mynd he wox baith wan and pail,

And to himselfe he said, sickand ful sair,

Allace how now! this is ane hasty fair.

And I cum thair, my tail it will be taggit,

For I am red that my count be ovir raggit.

Priests of Peblis, S.P.R. i. 38.

"Pulled," Pink. But it seems to be the same term, which in E. is sometimes used as equivalent to tucked. The phrase certainly signifies, "I shall be confined," or "imprisoned." There may be an allusion to a custom which still prevails in fairs or markets. Young people sometimes amuse themselves by stitching together the clothes of those who are standing close to each other; so that when they wish to go away, they find themselves confined. This they call tagging their tails, S.B. Hence the phrase may have come to denote the act of depriving one of liberty by imprisonment. V. OVER RAGGIT.

TAGGLIT, adj. Harassed with any thing; encumbered; drudged, S.B. most probably originally the same with Taigled. V. TAIGLE.

TAGHAIRM, s. A mode of divination formerly used by the Highlanders, described in Notes to The Lady of the Lake. S.

TAGHT, TACHT, part. adj. Stretched out; tightened. S.

TAY, TAE, s. A toe, S.

————— In fere

Diores, quhidderand at his bak fute hate,

His tayis choppan on his hele all the gate.

Doug. Virgil, 138, 27.

Tip-tais, tip-toes, Ibid. 305, 2.

A.S. ta, Germ. zehe, Belg. teen.

To TAY, v. a. Perhaps to lead. S.

TAID, TED, s. 1. A toad, S. A.S. tade. 2. Transferred to a person, as expressive of dislike, aversion, or disgust. 3. A term of fondness for a child. S.

TAIDIE, TEDDIE, s. Dim. of Taid, as used in sense 3. S.

TAID-STULE, s. A sort of mushroom. Paddock-stool. S.

To TAID, v. a. To manure land by the droppings from cattle, either in pasturing or folding. V. TATH. S.

TAIDREL, s. A puny feeble creature.

Let never this undought of ill-doing irk,

But ay blyth to begin all barret and bail:

Of all bless let it be as bair as the birk,

That tittest the taidrel may tell an ill tail.

Let no vice in this world in this wanthrift be wanted.

Polw. & Montgom. Watson's Coll. iii. 19.

Adimin. from A.S. tedre, tyddre, tener, fragilis, imbecillis.

TAIFFINGOWN, s. Perhaps a species of silk. V. TABIN.

TAIGIE, TEAGIE, TYGIE, s. A designation given to a cow which has some white hairs in her tail. On this account she is also said to be taigit, Fife.

An' whare was Rob an' Peggy,

For a' the search they had,

But i' the byre 'side Teagie,

Like lovin' lass an' lad.

A. Douglas's Poems, p. 124.

To TAIGLE, v. a. To detain; to hinder, S. See Sup.

Sibb. refers to Teut. tagg-en, altercari. But the term has no connexion with altercation. It is undoubtedly allied to Sw. taaglig, slow of motion, Wideg. togelig, lentus, Ihre. This the latter derives from A.S. tohllice, lentus, lente, from toh, tenax, lentus, from Su.G. tog-a, ducere. The pret. is togh.

TAIGLIT, part. pa. Fatigued; wearied. S.

To TAIGLE, v. n. To tarry; to delay; to procrastinate. S.

TAIGLESUM, adj. What detains or retards. S.

TAIKIN, s. A token. S.

TAIKNE, TACKNE, s. An odd ridiculous person. S.

 For at that tyme he wald him taile
 To distroy wp sa clene the land,
 That nane suld leve tharin lewand.
Barbour, xviii. 238. MS.
 In Edit. 1620, it is rendered without regard to the MS.
 For at that time hee thought all haill, &c.—P. 360.
 It may possibly be merely A.S. tal-ian, aestimare, used in a peculiar form. But it seems rather the same with Teal, q. v.
- TAILE, s. A tax; Fr. taille.

- TAIL-ILL, s. A disease of cows; an inflammation of the tail, cured by letting blood in the part affected, Loth. See Sup.
- TAILLES, s. pl. Left unexplained; perhaps, pendicles. S.
- TAIL-MEAL, s. An inferior species of meal, made of the tails or points of the grains. S.
- TAIL-RACE, s. V. RACE.
- TAIL-SLIP, s. A disease affecting the tails of cows. S.
- TAIL-TYNT. 1. To Ride Tail-tynt, to stake one horse against another in a race, the losing horse to be lost to the owner. 2. To Play Tail-tynt, to make a fair exchange. Syn. To Straik Tails. S.
- TAILWIND, s. To shear wi' a Tailwind, to reap grain not straight across the ridge, but diagonally. S.
- TAIL-WORM, s. A disease affecting the tails of cattle.
- TAINCHELL, s. Tainchess, pl.
 "Syxteen myle northward from the ile of Coll, lyes ane ile callit Ronin ile, of sixteen myle lang and six in bredthe in the narrowest, ane forest of heigh mountains, and abundance of little deir in it, quhilk deir will never be slaine downwith, but the principal saitts [snares] man be in the height of the hill, because the deir will be callit upwart ay be the Tainchell, or without tyntchel they will pass upwart perforce." Monroe's Iles, p. 23.
 "All the deire of the west pairt of that forrest will be callit [driven] be tainchess to that narrow entrey, and the next day callit west againe, be tainchess throw the said narrow entres, and infinite deire slaine there." Ibid. p. 7.
 Can this be from Fr. estincelle, etincelle, a twinkle, a flash? If so, it must refer to some mode of catching deer under night, by the use of lights.
- TAING, TYANG, TANG, s. 1. That part of an iron instrument into which the handle is fitted; as, "the taing o' a graip." 2. The prong of a fork. S.
- TAING, s. A tongue of land. S.

To TAYNT, v. a. 1. To convict in course of law.

That schepe, he sayd, that he stall noucht.
And thare-til for to swere an athe,
He sayd, that he wald noucht be lathe.
But sone he worthyde rede for schame,
The schepe thare bletyd in hys wame.
Swa was he tayntyd schamfully,
And at Saynt Serf askyd mercy.

Wyntown, v. 12. 1232.

"f. attainted," Gl. It properly signifies, convicted; corresponding to Fr. attaint, L.B. attaint-us, attainct-us, criminis convictus. Attaincta, attincta, convictio in actione criminali, aut manifestus cujuslibet criminis reatus; Du Cange.

2. Legally to prove; applied to a thing.

"And quhair it be taintit that thay [ruikis] big, and the birdis be flowin, and the nest be fundin in the treis at Beltane, the treis sall be foirfaltit to the King." Acts, Ja. I. 1424. c. 21. Ed. 1566.

In this sense Skene uses attainted.

"And gif it be otherwaies attainted (or proven), he quha is essonyied, and his pledges, salbe americiat for his non-compearance." 1. Stat. Rob. I. c. 6. s. 3. Attayntum, Lat.

TAINT, s. Proof; conviction. See Sup.

"That within the burrowis throwout the realme na liggis nor bandis be maid.—And gif ony dois in the contrare, and knowlege and taint may be gottin thair of, thair gudis, that ar fundin giltie thairin to be confiskit to the King, and thair lyffis at the kingis will." Acts, Ja. II. 1476. c. 88. Edit. 1566.

"For gif the assisors sall happin to be convict as men-sworne in the court, be ane Taynt, that is, be probation of twentie foure loyall men;—they sall tine and forfalt all thair cattell." Reg. Maj. B. i. c. 14. s. 2. 3.

"Attaint or Taynt, is called the deliverance or probation of 24 leil men, the quhilk may be called an great assise." Skene, Verb. Sign. vo. Attaynt.

This seems the same with S.B. tint, commonly used in the phrase tint nor tryal, with respect to any thing about which there is no information.

Sae sair for Nory she was now in pain;
And Colin too, for he had gane to try;
But tint nor trial she had gotten nane,
Of her that first, or him that last was gane.

Ross's Helenore, p. 44.

It seems, however, somewhat dubious, whether the phrase may not signify, that one can neither find certain evidence that a person or thing is tint, i. e. lost; nor, supposing this to be the case, light on any means of recovery. A phrase somewhat similar, is used by R. Brunne, p. 165. when giving an account of a fruitless search for a fugitive prince.

Sir Guy & Bumund thei com as thei gede,
The ne tynt ne fond, ne were at no dede.

TAYNTOUR, s. One who brings legal evidence against another for conviction of some crime. S.

TAIP, s. A piece of tapestry. S.

To TAIR, v. n. To cry as an ass.

"Than the suyne began to quhryne quhen thai herd the asse tair." Compl. S. p. 59.

Said to be "an imitative word," Gl. But it is evidently the same with Teut. tier-en, intentiore voce clamare, vociferari.

TAIRD, s. A term expressive of great contempt, applied both to man and beast; a slovenly hash. S.

TAIRD, TERD, s. A gibe; a taunt; a sarcasm. S.

To TAIRGE, v. a. To rate severely. V. TARGE. S.

To TAIS, v. a. To poise; to adjust; pret. tasit.

Ane bustuous schaft with that he grippit has,

And incontrare his aduersaris can tais.

Doug. Virgil, 327, 36.

He taysyt the wyr, and leit it fley,
And hyt the fadyr in the ey. Barbour, v. 623. MS.
Than Turnus smitin ful of felony,
Ane bustuous lance, with grundin hede full kene,
That lang quhile tasit he in propir tene,
Lete gird at Pallas.— Doug. Virgil, 334, 11.

Rudd. and Sibb. refer to Belg. tees-en, trahere, vellicare. A stickler for Gr. etymology might, without hesitation, deduce it from τασσω, ordino. But it is more natural to view it as allied to Su.G. tast-a, Germ. tatsch-en, to grasp, to handle. The root is Su.G. tasse, the hand; originally the paw of a beast. The ideas are nearly connected. One grasps a weapon in the hand, in order to poise it. As Fr. brand-er, and E. brandish, are generally supposed to be from brand, the weapon that is brandished. This word seems to be formed from the manner in which the action is done.

TAIS, TAS, TASSE, s. A bowl, or cup, S. tass. See S.

He merely ressauiis the remanent tais,

All out he drank, and quhelmit the gold on his face.

Doug. Virgil, 36, 48.

This term occurs in a passage which contains a curious account of the minutiae of politeness in the reign of James V.

"At that tyme ther vas no ceremonial reuerens nor stait, quha suld pas befor or behynd, furtht or in at the dur, nor yit quha suld haue the dignite to vasche ther handis fyrst in the bassine, nor yit quha suld sit doune fyrst at the tabil. At that tyme the pepil var as reddy to drynk vattir in ther bonet, or in the palmis of ther handis, as in ane glas, or in ane tasse of siluyr." Compl. S. p. 226.

Concluding this, we toome a tas of wyne.

Legend, Bp. St. Androis, Poems 16th Cent. ii. 308.

Ramsay uses it as signifying "a little dram-cup," Gl.

—Haste ye, gae

And fill him up a tass of usquebae. Poems, ii. 122.

TAISCH, s. The voice of a person about to die. S.

TAISSLE, TEAZLE, s. 1. The effect of a boisterous wind, when the clothes are disordered, and one is scarcely able to keep one's road, S.

I—hailst her roughly, and began to say,
I'd got a lump of my ain death this day;
Wi' weet and wind sae tyte into my teeth,
That it was like to cut my very breath.
Gin this be courting, well I wat 'tis clear,
I gat na sic a teazle this seven year.

The word is pron. taissle. Ross's Helenore, p. 38.

2. A severe brush of any kind, S. This is called a sair taissle. Also written tassel, tassle, and teasle. S.

The idea might seem borrowed from A.S. taesl, carduus fullonum, or fuller's thistle, E. teasel, a kind of thistle used in raising the nap upon woollen cloth; from taes-an, to teese. It is a curious fact, that this thistle in Su.G. is called karborre, more properly kardborre, q. the carding bur. For, according to Ihre, it is denominated from kard-a, to card; as the Lat. name card-uus is from car-o, -ere, id, which is generally traced to Gr. καρπε-ειν, tondere. Teut. kaerde, kaerden-kruyd, kaerden-distel, id. A sanguine theorist might infer, that, among the Western nations at least, the use of cards had been suggested by the burs of thistles; or, that these had been used, instead of cards, by men in a simple state of society.

Taissle might seem to be the same with tussel, used in the sense of struggle, N. and S. of E. (Grose, Prov. Gl.) adopted by P. Pindar. But tussel is synon. with S. Tousle, q. v. which is still used as if quite a different word from taissle. Whether tussel be related to Germ. tusel-n, tundere, percutere, is doubtful.

To TAISSLE, v. a. 1. Applied to the action of the wind when boisterous. I was sair taisslit wi' the wind.
2. To examine with such strictness as to puzzle or perplex the respondent. S.

To TAIST, v. n. To grope; used to express the action of one groping before him with his spear, while wading through a deep trench filled with water.

—Arayit weill in all his ger,
Schot on the dyik, and with his sper
Taistyt, till he it our woud:
Bot till his throt the watyr stud.

Barbour, ix. 388. MS.

Mr. Pinkerton has overlooked this word; which is evidently synon. with Belg. tast-en, to grope, to handle, to feel; Germ. id., also antast-en; Su.G. tast-a, antast-a, id. Ital. tast-are, Fr. tast-er, tat-er, used in the same sense, are clearly of Goth. origin. Wachter derives the Germ. v. from tasche, Su.G. tasse, the paw of an animal, which originally signified the hand. Germ. tasche still denotes a clumsy fist. Teut. met den tast gaen, praetentare iter manibus aut pedibus; Kilian.

It confirms this derivation, that Teut. tetse, tatse, is rendered, palma pedis feri animalis; and tets-en, palma tangere.

Seren. assigns the same origin to the E. v. to taste. It seems undeniable, indeed, that this v., as used in E., has been transferred from one organ to another; as originally respecting the sense of touch. Thus indeed the E. v. was anciently used.

Al they wer vnhardi, that boued on horse or stode
To touche or to taste him, or taken downe of rode,
But thys blinde bachiler bare him throughe the hert.

P. Ploughman, Fol. 98. a.

It is remarkable, that while both Junius and Skinner refer to this as the sense of Teut. tasten, neither has observed that it occurs in this sense in O.E.

TAIST, s. A sample. S.

TAISTE, s. The Black Guillemot. V. TYSTE.

TAISTRILL, TYSTRILL, s. A dirty gawkish thowless sort of woman; or a careless girl who destroys her clothes. S.

TAIT, TYTE, adj. "Neat; tight," Rudd. Warton, Hist. E. P.

In lesuris and on lewis litill lammes

Doug. Virgil, 402, 24.

About hir palpis, but fere, as thare modyr,

Ibid. 266, 1.

Frae fute to fute he kest her to and frae,
Quhys up, quhys down, als taite as ony kid.

Henryson, Evergreen, i. 152. st. 25.

It is descriptive of the cruel sport which a cat makes with a mouse, and of her playful motions before she kills it. The most natural sense is, gay, frisky, lively, playful. I cannot think, with Rudd., that it has any relation to tyte; as tyte, Ir. teadadh, signifies, quick, active, nimble. But the origin certainly is Isl. teit-r, teit-ur, hilaris, laetus, exultans. Verel. Teiti hilaritas, Landnamab. Gl. Oelteite, merry with drink. The idea seems borrowed from the young of animals; teit-r, pullus animalis, hinnulus; as, a young fawn, a kid, G. Andr.; teit-ur, juvenus, vel equulus exultans, expl. by Verel. merry and lively, as a foal.

It seems to signify nimble, active, in the following passage.

Sa mony estate, for commoun weil sa quhene,
Owre all the gait, sa mony thevis sa taite,
Within this land was nevir hard nor sene.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 43.

TAIT, s. A small portion. V. TATE.

To TAIVER, v. n. 1. To wander. Tauren, i. e. taiver-ing. V. DAUREN.

This might be viewed as akin to Isl. tauf, mora, genit. tafar; tef-ia, morari, moram facere; G. Andr. p. 234.

2. To talk idly and foolishly. Syn. Haver. To talk in an incoherent manner, like one delirious, S.

This may be merely a metaph. signification of the same v., as applied to the mind. In the same sense one is said to waver, when incoherent in ideas and discourse.

Allied perhaps to Teut. toover-en, Alem. touber-en, toufer-en, fascinare, incantare; which Lye deduces from Teut. doov-en, Alem. tob-on, dob-en, insauire, delirare: as magical arts seem to derive their name, either from the vain ravings of those who use them, or from the stupor produced in the ignorant. O.E. tave is also used in the sense of delirare. V. Jun. Etym. Isl. tofr-a, incantare, tofrad-r, incantatus.

TAIVERSUM, adj. Tiresome; fatiguing, S.

TAIVERT, part. adj. 1. Much fatigued; in a state of lassitude, in consequence of hard work, or of a long journey, S. Fortaivert, synon. V. the v.

2. Stupid; confused; senseless. 3. Stupified with intoxicating liquor. 4. Overboiled. S.

TAIVERS, s. pl. Tatters; as, boiled totaivers, Fife. See S.

To TAK. To take, S. A. Bor. used in some senses in which the E. v. does not occur.

To TAK apon, v. a. To conduct one's self; to act a part.

Wallace so weill apon him tuk that tide,
Throw the gret preyss he maid a way full wide.

Wallace, v. 43. MS.

To TAK in hand, v. a. To make prisoner.

This Schyr Jhone in till playn melle,
Throw sowerane hardiment that felle,
Wencussyt thaim sturdely ilkan,
And Schyr Androw in hand has tane.

Barbour, xvi. 518. MS.

To TAK on, v. a. To buy on credit; to buy to accompt, S. Perhaps an ellipsis for, to take on trust. S.

To TAK on, v. n. To enlist as a soldier, S. See Sup.

To TAK on, v. n. To begin to get fuddled, S.

To TAK on hand, v. n. 1. To assume an air of importance; to affect state.

Sum part off thaim was in to Irland borne,
That Makfadyan had exilde furth beforne;
King Eduuardis man he was suorn of Ingland,
Off rycht law byrth, supposs he tuk on hand.

Wallace, iv. 184. MS.

2. To undertake; to engage in any enterprise. See S.

And quhen the King off Ingland
Saw the Scottis sa tak on hand,
Takand the hard feyld opynly,
And apon fute, he had ferly;
And said, "Quhat! will yone Scottis fycht?"

Chr. Kirk, st. 10. Chron. S.P. ii. 362.

Takil, Chaucer, tacle, Gower, id. Rudd. derives this from C.B. tacel, sagitta. Bullet mentions Celt. taechlu, orner, taechlau, ornemens. From tacel comes O.Fr. tacle, a shaft or bolt, the feathers of which are not waxed, but glued on. From the same source is takillis, Doug. the tackling of a ship.

TALE, s. Account; estimation. V. TAIL.

TALE,* s. Wi' his tale! Wi' your tale! &c. seems nearly synon. with E. Forsooth! and intimates derision, contempt, or some degree of disbelief; as, "He's gaun to tak a big farm wi' his tale!" S.

TALENT, s. Desire; inclination; purpose.

TAMMY HARPER. The crab called Cancer araneus, Linn. Newhaven. This seems the same with that mentioned by Sir R. Sibbald. Cancer varius Gesneri, the Harper Crab. Fife, p. 132.

To TAMMIL, v. a. 1. To scatter from carelessness. 2. To scatter or strew from design. S.

TAMMOCK, TOMMACK, s. A hillock. S.

TAM-O'-TAE-END, s. The largest of puddings. S.

TAM-TAIGLE, s. A rope by which the hind leg of a horse or cow is tied to the fore leg to prevent straying.

TAM-TARY. "To hold one in tam-tary, to vex or disquiet him," S. Rudd. vo. Tary.

One might suppose it to be comp. of Isl. taum, habena, and Su.G. taer-a, consumere; q. to wear out by holding in a rein, to gall by means of the bridle.

It is probable, however, that this might be originally a military term, signifying that men were still kept, as we now say, on the alert; from Fr. tantarare, mot imaginé

Wiclif, Matt. vi.

"The one of two. Tane is a rapid pronunciation of ta ane," Gl. Wynt. Rudd. views the word as formed from ane with t prefixed, as the Fr. put t before il, when the foregoing v. terminates in a vowel. But the tane, the tother, seem to have been originally that ane, that other. A similar form at least existed in O.E.

Heo nomen here conseil, & the folk of this lond radde,

That heo bi twene this lond & Scotlond schulde a wal rere,

Doug. Virgil, 56, 24.

TANE-AWA, s. 1. A decayed child, S. 2. A child that exhibits such unnatural symptoms as to induce the vulgar belief that it has been substituted by the fairies in place of the mother's birth. S.

The name seems to have been formed from the vulgar belief, that the fairies used formerly to carry off, or take away, healthy children, and leave poor puny creatures in their room. V. FARE-FOLKIS.

The Romans had an idea somewhat similar, with respect to certain birds of night, particularly screech-owls; but, according to Ovid, it was doubtful whether they were really birds, or merely assumed this form from the power of witchcraft.

Out of their cradles babes they steal away,

And make defenceless innocents their prey.—

Whether true birds they were, or had that form

From some old ugly witches potent charm.—

Fasti, B. vi. Massey's Transl. p. 303.

They believed, however, that these birds sucked the blood of the infants whom they carried off.

TANE about. Weel ta'en about. Kindly received and hospitably entertained; made welcome; well cared for. S.

TANE down. 1. Emaciated or enfeebled from disease. 2. Reduced in temporal circumstances. S.

TANE out. Weel tane out, receiving much attention; particularly in the way of frequent invitations. S.

TANG, s. A name given to the larger fuci in general, particularly to the F. digitatus and saccharinus, Orkn. Shetl.

—"The sea-oak, (Fucus vesiculosus, Linn.) which we denominate black tang, and which grows next to the former, nearly at the lowest ebb." P. Shapinsay, Statist. Acc. xvii. 233.

"The common sea weed, here called tang, is pretty generally and successfully used as a manure for the lands." P. Delting, Zetl. Statist. Acc. i. 390.

Su.G. tang, Isl. thang, id. Shall we view these words as allied to Isl. teng-ia, jungere?

TANG, adj. Straight; tight. Pang, synon. S.

TANG, s. 1. The prong of a fork, &c. V. TAING. 2. A piece of iron used for fencing any thing else. S.

TANGIT, pa. Fenced with iron; having a rim of iron. S.

TANG-FISH, s. A name of the Seal in Shetl. S.

TANGHAL, s. A bag; a satchel. V. TOIGHAL. S.

TANGIE, s. A sea-spirit. Sea-Trow, or Kelpie. S.

TANGIS, s. A pair of tongs. S.

TANGLE, s. 1. The same with Tang. This name is also given to the stem or stalk of the larger fuci, S.

"The Alga Marina, or Sea-Tangle, as some call it, Sea-Ware, is a rod about four, six, eight or ten feet long; having at the end a blade, commonly slit into seven or eight pieces, and about a foot and half in length. It grows on stone, the blade is eat by the vulgar natives." Martin's Western Islands, p. 149.

This seems formed from thaungull, the pl. of Isl. thaung, alga.

2. Used metaph. to denote a person, who, although tall, is lank, S.B. See Sup.

—We'll behad a wee.

She's but a tangle, tho' shot out she be.

Ross's Helenore, p. 21.

TANGLE, adj. 1. Tall and feeble; not well knit in the joints; as, "A lang tangle lad." 2. Applied to one when much relaxed in consequence of fatigue. S.

TANGLENES, s. Indecision; pliability of opinion. S.

TANGLE-WISE, adj. Long and slender. S.

TANGLE, s. An icicle, S. See Sup.

At first view this might seem to be merely the preceding term, used in a metaph. sense, because of the resemblance of an icicle to the sea-weed thus denominated. But it is undoubtedly the same with Isl. dingull, an icicle; whence dingl-a, to hang and move as a loose icicle; pendere et motari veluti pendulae stiriae; G. Andr. vo. Isechokull. E. to dangle.

TANGS, TAINGS, s. pl. Tongs, S. See Sup.

TANNER, s. 1. That part of a frame of wood, which is fitted for going into a mortice, S.

Su.G. tan, tanor, a tendon; q. that which binds or unites.

Isl. thinnor, lignum cui arcus incurvatus insertus est, et quod eum tensum retinet et sustinet; Verel.

2. Tanners, pl. The small roots of trees, Loth. synon. tapouns.

In this sense it seems more nearly allied to Isl. tannari, assulae; laths, chips, splinters; or tein, Sw. teen, surculus; Moes.G. tains, virga, virgula; Belg. teen-en, vimina.

TANNERIE, s. A tan-work, S. Fr. id.

TANTERLICK, s. A severe stroke, Fife. See Sup.

TANTONIE BELL. Perhaps, St. Anthony's bell. S.

He had to sell the Tantonie bell.

And pardons therein was. Spec. Godly Sangs, p. 6.

"St. Anthony's bell, hung about the necks of animals," Lord Hailes.

Fr. tantan, "the bell that hangs about the neck of a cow," &c. Cotgr. It seems very doubtful, however, if this has any relation to St. Anthony. It seems rather from Fr. tintant, any thing that makes a tingling; whence perhaps S. tingtang, a term often used by children, to denote the sound made by the ringing of a bell. The origin is Lat. tintinn-o, -are, to ring; whence tintinnabulum, a little bell. C.B. tant, the chord of a musical instrument. See S. TANTRUMS, s. pl. High airs; stateliness. In his tantrums, on the high ropes, S. Cant E.

—I thought where your tantrums wad en'.

V. HOSTA. Jamieson's Popul. Ball. i. 299.

Fr. tantran, a nick-nack; Germ. tand, vanity.

TAP, s. 1. The top of any thing, S. 2. The head, S. Gl. Shirr. 3. The tuft on the head of some fowls, S. Hence the phrase, tappit hen. 4. A top used by boys in play, S. See Sup.

The shape or fashion of his head

Was like a con or pyramid;

Or like the bottom of a tap. Colvil's Mock Poem, i. 8.

To BE on one's TAP. 1. To assault; especially by flying at one's head, or attempting to clutch the hair. 2. To attack in the language of reprehension or abuse. S.

TAP OF LINT. The quantity of flax put on a distaff. S.

TAP o' TOW. A very irritable person; one whose temper, like flax, is easily kindled. S.

To TAK one's TAP IN one's LAP, and set off. To truss up one's baggage and be gone; to go off hastily. S.

NEVER AFF one's TAP. Always finding fault with one. S.

TAP-COAT, s. A great-coat; one that goes uppermost. S.

TAP-KNOT, s. A knot or bunch of ribbons, worn as an ornament in a woman's cap or bonnet. S.

TAP, TAIL, nor MANE. A phrase used to express that the account given of any thing was utterly unintelligible; "I could mak neither tap, tail, nor mane of it." S.

TAP, adj. Excellent; capital. V. TOP. S.

TAP, s. To Sell by Tap, to sell by auction or outcry. S.

To TAPE, TAPE out, v. a. To make any thing, although little, go a great way, to use sparingly, S. synon. hain.

Then let us grip our bliss mair sicker,

And tape our heal and sprightly liquor,

Which sober tane, makes wit the quicker,

And sense mair keen.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 378.

Erroneously printed tap, which suggests an idea almost directly the reverse.

Isl. eg teppe, obstruo, obturo; tept-r, cohibitus, shut up, restrained; tepping, restraint; G. Andr. p. 238. Su.G. taepp-a, to shut, to stop up, to fill up blanks in a hedge; taeppa, a field hedged on all sides. This etymon receives confirmation from the similar use of hain, which originally signifies, to hedge in, to enclose by a hedge. Fr. tap-er, to cover, to keep close, is probably from this origin. Isl. taepileg-ur, signifies sparing, parcus, Verel. taepilega, parce.

TAPEE, s. 1. The name given formerly to the forepart of the hair when put up with pins. 2. A small cushion of hair worn by women on the open of the head for keeping up their hair. S.

TAPEIS, s. Tapestry; Fr. tapis.

—Thy beddis soft, and tapeis fair,

Thy treitting, and gud cheir;

Gif I the treuth wald now declair,

I wait thow hes no peir. Maitland Poems, p. 257.

Chaucer uses tapiser, for a maker of tapestry.

TAPER-TAIL, adv. Topsyturvy. S.
TAPESSARIE, s. Tapestry. S.
TAPETLESS, adj. Heedless; foolish. V. under TABETS.
TAPETTIS, s. pl. Tapestry.

 Hir place sche tuke, as was the gise that tyde.

Teut. tapijt, Lat. tapetes. Doug. Virgil, 35, 22.

TAPISHT, part. pa. In a lurking state.

The hart, the hind, the fallow deare,
 Are tapisht at their rest.

A. Hume, Chron. S.P., iii. 388.

Apparently from Fr. tap-ir, to hide, to keep close;
tapiss-ant, hiding one's self, lurking, squatting.

TAPLOCH, TAWPLOCH, s. A giddy-brained girl. S.

TAPONE-STAFF, s. The stave, in a barrel, in which the bung-hole is.

"That no barrel be sooner made and blown, but the Coupers Birn be set thereon, on the tapone-staff thereof, in testimony of the sufficiency of the tree." Acts, Char.
 II. 1661, c. 33.

It seems doubtful, whether it has received this name from the cork, or plug that is used for filling the bung-hole. This by coopers is called the tap, S. Perhaps originally the tapping-staff, i. e. the stave in which the orifice is made for drawing off liquor.

The term blown refers to the mode of trying whether a cask be tight. A little water is put into it. Then, the head being fixed on, a small hole is bored, by means of which the vessel is filled with as much air as it can contain. The effect is, that, if there be the least chink, the force of air makes the water bubble through it.

TAPOUN, s. A ramification, or long fibre at the root of a plant or tree, S.B.

I have met with it in print, only as used metaph., with respect to Bishops.

"All here, praised be God, goes according to our prayers, if we would be quit of bishops; about them we are all in perplexity. We trust God will put them down; but the difficulty to get all the tapouns of their roots pulled up, is yet insuperable by the arm of man." Baillie's Lett. i. 241.

Perhaps from Dan. tap, a hollow tube; or Belg. tapp-en, to draw out, as these fibres extend themselves so far.

TAPPENIE. A term used in calling a hen. S.

TAP-PICKLE, s. 1. The uppermost grain in a stalk of oats. 2. Metaph. a thing of the greatest value. S.

TAPPIE-TOURIE, s. 1. Any thing raised very high to a point. 2. The plug of paste on the top of a pie. S.

TAPPIE-TOUSIE, s. A sort of play among children, S.
 In this sport, one taking hold of another by the forelock of his hair, says to him;

"Tappie, Tappie tousie, will ye be my man?"

If the other answers in the affirmative, the first says;

"Come to me then, come to me then;"

giving him a smart pull towards him by the lock which he holds in his hand. If the one, who is asked, answers in the negative, the other gives him a push backward, saying;

"Gae fra me then, gae fra me then."

The literal meaning of the term is obvious. The person asked is called Tappie-tousie, q. dishevelled head, from Tap, and Tousie, q. v. It may be observed, however, that Su.G.
tap signifies a lock or tuft of hair. Haertapp, floccus ca- pillorum; Ihre, p. 857.

But the thing that principally deserves our attention, is the meaning of this play. Like some other childish sports, it evidently retains a singular vestige of very ancient manners. It indeed represents the mode in which one received another as his bondman.

"The thrice kind of nativitie, or bondage, is, quhen ane frie man, to the end he may haue the menteinance of ane great and potent man, randers himselfe to be his bond-man, in his court, be the haire of his forehead; and gif he thereafter withdrawes himselfe, and flees away fra his maister, or denyes to him his nativitie: his maister may proue him to be his bond-man, be ane assise, before the Justice; challengand him, that he, sic ane day, sic ane yeare, compeired in his court, and there yeilded himselfe to him to be his slaue and bond-man. And quhen any man is adjudged and decerned to be natue or bond-man to any maister; the maister may take him be the nose, and reduce him to his former slaverye." Quon. Attach. c. 56, s. 7.

T A P

This form, of rendering one's self by the hair of the head, seems to have had a monkish origin. The heathenish rite of consecrating the hair, or shaving the head, was early adopted among Christians, either as an act of pretended devotion, or when a person dedicated himself to some particular saint, or entered into any religious order.
 Hence it seems to have been adopted as a civil token of servitude. Thus, those who entered into the monastic life, were said capillos ponere, and per capillos se tradere.
 In the fifth century, Clovis committed himself to St.
 Germer by the hair of his head; Vit. S. Germer, ap. Carpentier, vo. Capilli. Those, who thus devoted themselves, were called the servants of God, or of any particular Saint.

This then being used as a symbol of servitude, we perceive the reason why it came to be viewed as so great an indignity to be laid hold of by the hair. He, who did so, claimed the person as his property. Therefore, to seize, or to drag one by the hair, comprehendere, or trahere per capillos, was accounted an offence equal to that of charging another with falsehood, and even with striking him. The offender, according to the Frisic laws, was fined in two shillings; according to those of Burgundy, also in two;
 but if both hands were employed, in four. Leg. Fris. ap.

To TARROW, v. n. 1. To delay.

This semple counsale, brudir, tak at me;
And it to cun perqueir sé nocht thou tarrow;
Bettir but stryfe to leif allone in lé,
Than to be machit with a wicket inarrow.

Henryson, Bannatyne Poems, p. 122.

The S. Prov. seems used in this sense; "Be still taking and tarrowing; take what you can get, though not all that is due;" Kelly, p. 63. i. e. take what is offered, and allow time for what remains. Also, that, "Lang tarrowing takes all the thank away;" Ferguson's S. Prov. p. 23.

2. To haggle; to hesitate in a bargain.

He that wes wont to beir the barrowis,
Betwixt the baik-hous and the brew-hous,
On twenty shilling now he tarrowis,
To ryd the hé gait by the plewis.

Bannatyne Poems, p. 144.

i. e. He hesitates as to the sufficiency of the sum.

Tarrow is still sometimes used as signifying that one murmurs at one's allowance of food, &c. S.

3. To feel reluctance.

But she's as weak as very water grown,
And tarrows at the broust that she had brown.

Ross's Helenore, p. 60.

—Nane of us cud find a marrow,

So sadly forfairn were we;

Fouk sud no at any thing tarrow,

Whose chance looked naething to be.

Song, Ibid. p. 150.

"To loath, to refuse," Gl. Ross. This is perhaps more strongly expressed than the term admits. Children are said to tarrow at their meat, when they delay taking it, especially from some pettish humour, or do it so slowly that it would seem they felt some degree of reluctance. It is rendered "take pet," Gl. Ritson.

"A tarrowing bairn was never fat;" S. Prov. Kelly, p. 13.

"He tarrows early that tarrows on his kail;" S. Prov.

"The Scots, for their first dish have broth (which they call kail) and their flesh-meat, boil'd or roasted, after. Spoken when men complain before they see the utmost that they will get;" Kelly, p. 135.

Tarrie and tarrow are used in this sense as synon.

But ye'll repent ye, if his love grow could;—

Like dawted wean that tarries at its meat,

That for some feckless whim will orp and greet.—

The dawted bairn thus takes the pet,

Nor eats tho' hunger crave,

Whimpers and tarrows at its meat.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 76. 77.

"To refuse what we love, from a cross humour;" Gl. ibid.
The prep. of had formerly been used instead of at.

"I am sure it is sin to tarrow of Christ's good meat."

Rutherford's Lett. P. i. ep. 19.

4. To complain; "I darena tarrow," I dare not complain. 5. Applied to springing corn turned sickly. S.

TARLOCH, adj. Slow at meat; loathing; squeamish. S.

Perhaps from A.S. teor-ian, ateor-ian, geteor-ian, to fail, to tarry, to desist or give over. Celt. tario, to tarry, Bullet.

TARSIE-VERSIE, adv. Walking backwards. S.

TARTAN, TARTANE, s. Woollen cloth, or silk, checkered, or cross-barred with threads of various colours, S.

Syne schupe thame up, to lowp owr leiss, ranks, still wear a large veil of this stuff, rather of a thin texture, as a covering for the head and shoulders. The Philibeg also, or Kilt, worn by the Highlanders instead of breeches, is generally of Tartan.

T A R

Notwithstanding the zeal of Ramsay, in ascribing the highest antiquity to the Plaid under this name, (V. his poem entitled Tartana, or the Plaid); there is no evidence that this word was anciently used in Scotland. It is not Gaelic or Irish. It seems to have been imported, with the manufacture itself, from France or Germany. Fr. tiretaine signifies linsey-woolsey, or a kind of it worn by the peasants in France. Teut. tiereteyn, id. vestis lino et lana confecta, pannus linolaneus, vulgo linistima, lino-stema, burellum; Kilian. Bullet mentions Arm. tyrtena as of the same meaning with Fr. tiretaine, which he calls a species of droquet, our drugget. L.B. tiretanus occurs in the same sense in ancient MSS. This, according to Du Cange, is pannus lana filoque textus. He quotes the Chartulary of Corbillum, or Nantes, as containing the following article. Item ung fardeaulx de Tiretaine vers doit 11 sols ob. These linsey-woolsey cloths were most probably particoloured. But although this should not have been the case, the word, originally signifying cloth of different materials, when it passed into another country, might, by a natural transition, be used to denote such cloths as contained different colours. Or, although the stuff first used in Scotland, under the name of Tartan, might be merely the Tiretaine of the continent; when the natives of this country imitated the foreign fabric, they might reckon it an improvement to checker the cloth with the most glaring colours. Tiretaine is thus described by Thierry, Le Frere's edition 1573. De la Tiretaine, Picard du telon, Coenomanis, Du Beinge, Northman. The passage, I suppose, should have been printed thus. De la Tiretaine, Picard Du Telon, Coenomanis; Du Beinge, Northman.; as intimating that this cloth was called Tiretaine in Picardy, Telon in Maine, and Beinge in Normandy.

Gael. braec is the term used to denote what is particoloured. What we call a tartan plaid is Gael. breacan. Perhaps Gallia Braccata may have received its designation from the circumstance of a particoloured dress being worn by its inhabitants, rather than from that of their wearing breeches. See Sup.

TARTAN, adj. Of or belonging to tartan, S.

O! to see his tartan trouze,

Bonnet blue, and laigh-heel'd shoes!

Ritson's S. Songs, ii. 107.

TARTAN-PURRY, s. "A sort of pudding made of red colewort chopped small, and mixed with oatmeal;" Gl. Shirr. Aberd. p. 37.

I would have gi'en my half year's fee,

Had Maggy then been jesting me,

And tartan-purry, meal and bree,

Or butt'ry brose,

Been kilting up her petticoats

Aboon her hose.

V. PURRY.

Forbes's Dominie Depos'd, p. 35.

The last part of the word is evidently Teut. porreye, purreye, jus sive cremor pisorum; Fr. purée, sap, juice, La purée de pois, pease pottage or the liquor of pease. Perhaps the term tartan is prefixed, because the coleworts used are particoloured. It may, however, be softened from Teut. taerte-panne, testum, q. soup made in an earthen pot; or it may be from Fr. tarte en purée. See Sup.

TARTER, s. Chequered cloth, or tartan. S.

2. To boggel, as a horse does, Loth.
3. To hesitate as to a bargain.
"A toom purse makes a tartling merchant;" Ramsay's S. Prov. p. 17.

4. To hesitate from scrupulosity; denoting an act of the mind.

Some gentlemen, that's apt to startle,
Some seem two sentences to tartle,—
Contained in this ancient deed.

Cleland's Poems, p. 86.

Perhaps the second line was written, Seem at two sentences, &c.; as the repetition of some mars the sense.

Thir Gentlemen have weasands narrow,
That makes them tartle, flinch, and tarrow.
A medicine I will prescribe,
And paun my thrapple it shall thrive.
Send them a while to other nations,
Whence their veins may have dilatations.
When they return, they'll you request
To have the favour of the Test.

Ibid. p. 104.

Perhaps q. tartal, allied to Isl. tortallit, difficult to tell or reckon, Verel. from tor, a particle, denoting the difficulty one has in effecting any thing, and tala, to speak, to tell; as signifying that one finds it difficult to tell who the person is.

To TARTLE, v. a. To recognise; to observe. S.

TARTLE, s. The act of hesitation in the recognition of a person or thing. S.

TARTUFFISH, adj. Sour; sullen; stubborn, Renfrews. S.

To TARVEAL, v. a. 1. To fatigue, S.B. See Sup.

The never a rag we'll be seeking o't;
Gin ye anes begin, ye'll tarveal's night and day,
Sae 'tis vain ony mair to be speaking o't.

Song, Ross's Helenore, p. 134.

2. To plague; to vex; Gl. Sibb.

This seems merely a corr. of Fr. travaill-er, to labour; to vex, to trouble; Ital. travagliare. This Verel. deduces from Isl. thrael-a, Sw. traal-a, duro labore exerceri, p. 264. Isl. taarfelle, however, signifies illachrymor, G. Andr. to lament, bewail.

TARVEAL, adj. Ill-natured; fretful, S.B.

"The vile tarveal sleeth o' a coachman began to yark the peer beasts sae, that you wou'd hae heard the sough o' ilka thudd afore it came down." Journal from London, p. 5.

TASCAL MONEY. The money formerly given in the Highlands to those who should discover cattle that had been driven off, and make known the spoilers. S.

To TASH, v. a. 1. To soil; to tarnish, S. Fr. tach-er, id.

But now they're threadbare worn,—
They're tashed like, and sair torn,
And clouted sair on ilka knee.

Ritson's S. Songs, i. 214.

2. Often used to denote the injury done to character by evil-speaking, S. 3. To upbraid, S.B. 4. To fatigue; as, To tash dogs, to weary them out in hunting. S.

TASH, TACHE, s. 1. A stain; a blemish, S. Tache, Chaucer, a blot, Fr. id.

2. A stain in a metaph. sense; disgrace; an affront, S.

"Mr. Hog was one from whom the greatest opposition to Prelacy was expected, and therefore a tash must be put on him at this Synod." Wodrow, i. 41.

To TASH about, v. a. To throw any thing carelessly about, so as to injure it. S.

TASK, s. The angel or spirit of any person, Ross-shire.

"The ghosts of the dying, called tasks, are said to be heard, their cry being a repetition of the moans of the sick. — The corps follow the tract led by the tasks to the place of interment; and the early or late completion of the prediction, is made to depend on the period of the night at which the task is heard." Statist. Acc. iii. 380.

Gael. taise, dead bodies, ghosts, Shaw.

TASKER, s. A labourer who receives his wages in kind, according to the quantity of work he performs, who has a fee for a certain task, Loth. See Sup.

"The taskers are those who are employed in threshing out the corn; and they receive one boll of every 25, or the twenty-fifth part for their labour; and this has been their fixed and stated wages, as far back as can be remembered." P. Whittingham, E. Loth. Statist. Acc. ii. 353.

TASKIT, part. adj. Much fatigued with hard work. S.

TASKIT-LIKE, adj. Appearing greatly fatigued. S.

TASS, TASSE, TASSIE, s. A cup or goblet. V. TAIS.

TASSELL, s. Sair tassell. V. TAISSE. S.

TASSES, s. pl.

Mon in the mantell, that sittis at thi mete,

In pal pured to pay, prodly pight.

The tasses were of topas, that were thereto right.

Sir Gawan and Sir Gal. ii. 2.

"Cups," Pink. V. TAIS. But it seems rather to signify bags or purses; for the tasses are described as fixed or tied to the mantell or pall. Su.G. Isl. taska, pera, bulga, Alem. Ital. tasca, Fr. tasche, Belg. tasche, tesche. V. TISCHE.

TASTER, s.

Avis marina Taster dicta. Sibb. Scot. p. 22.

It is uncertain what bird is meant; not the Tyste surely, because the author mentions this a few lines below.

TASTIE, adj. 1. Having an agreeable relish; palatable.

2. Displaying taste; as applied to dress. S.

TATCH, s. A fringe; a shoulder-knot. S.

To TATCH, v. a. To drive a nail so far only as to give it but a slight hold. S.

To TATCH in, v. a. To fix slightly by a nail. S.

To TATCH thegither, v. a. To join together slightly, with nails, as carpenters do to try their work. S.

TATE, TAIT, TEAT, TATTE, s. A small portion of any thing; as, a tate of woo, of lint; i. e. of wool, of flax, S. See Sup.

— Fleas skip to the tate of woo,

Whilk slee Tod Lowrie hads without his moo.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 143.

An' tent them daily, e'en and morn,

Wi' teats o' hay, an' rips o' corn. Burns, iii. 79.

It is applied to hair, as equivalent to lock, S.

Her hair in taits hung down upon her brow.

Ross's Helenore, p. 28.

—Apoun his chin feill chanos haris gray,

Liart felterit tatis, with birnand ene rede.

Doug. Virgil, 173, 45.

It is used by Skene as denoting a portion, or part divided from another.

"Like as ane forke hes twa graines, this precept hes ane alternatiue command of twa partes.—Itaque hoc preceptum est furcatum,—quhilk is divided in twa taits or parts." De Verb. Sign. vo. Furche.

Sibb. defines it "lock of hair or wool, commonly matted;" deriving it from A.S. getead, connexus, unitus. But the term does not necessarily include this idea; as appears from the use of the epithet felterit by the Bishop of Dunkeld. Su.G. taatte hodie significat pensum, vel quantum fuso simul imponitur. En lin-taatte, portio lini. Fenn. tutti, Ihre, Sw. tott, totte, manipulus lini aut lanae, ab Isl. toe, Sw. to, tod, lanificium, tomentum; Seren. Thus it seems probable, that this word has had its origin from the pastoral life of our ancestors; when their ideas

T A T

- were greatly confined to their flocks, and many of their terms borrowed from these. V. FE.
- TATELOCK, s. A small lock of matted hair, wool, &c. S.
- TATH, TAITH, TATHING, s. 1. The dung of black cattle, S. taid, Ang.
- "There is a tradition that a priest lived here, who had a right to every seventh acre of Ladifron, and to the tathing (dung as left on the ground) every seventh night." P. Monimail, Fife, Statist. Acc. ii. 204.
- Isl. tad, dung, manure; also tadfall, id. q. the falling of the tath.
2. "The luxuriant grass which rises in tufts where the dung of cattle has been deposited," Gl. Sibb. A tuft of such grass is called a tath, S. See Sup.
- Isl. tada expresses the very same idea: Foenum, laetaminis beneficio proveniens; G. Andr. p. 234.
- The term tath had been anciently used in some parts of E. as Suffolk, Norfolk, &c. Dominicum hoc privilegium faldam liberam vocant forenses: Tenentium servitutem, Sectam faldae: stercorationem, Icenii Tath. Spelman, vo. Falda.
- To TATH, v. n. To dung; applied to black cattle chiefly, S. taid, Ang. See Sup.
- Isl. ted-ia, stercorare; also, laetare.
- To TATH, v. a. To manure a field by laying cattle on it, S. See Sup.
- "The outfield was kept five years in natural grass; and, after being tathed by the farmers' cattle, who were folded or penned in it, during the summer, it bore five successive crops of oats." P. Keith-Hall, Aberd. Statist. Acc. ii. 533.
- TATHING, s. The act of manuring a field, by making the cattle lie on it, S.
- "After a tathing, by allowing to lie upon the field at night, and after milking at noon, two or three crops of oats are taken." P. Kilchrenan, Argyles. Statist. Acc. vi. 268.
- TATH-FAUD, s. A fold in which cattle are shut up during night, to manure the ground with their dung. S.
- TATHIL, s. A table; apparent corr. of Taffil, q. v. S.
- TATHIS, s. pl. Gawan and Gol. iii. 21.
- Thai gird on tua grete horse, on grund quhil thai grane;
The trew helmys, and traist, in tathis thai ta.
- As it corresponds to the following line,
- Thair speris in the feild in flendris gart ga;
it may signify splinters, very small segments: Su. G. taat, a string, a wire; Teut. tactse, tatse, a nail with a large head. See Sup.
- TATHT, s. Same with Tath, the dung of black cattle. S.
- TATY, adj. Matted. V. TATTY. S.
- TATSHIE, adj. Dressed in a slovenly manner. S.
- TATTER-WALLOPS, s. pl. Tatters; rags in a fluttering state, S.
- TATTY, TATTIT, TAWTED, adj. 1. Matted; disordered by being twisted, or, as it were, baked together; a term often applied to the hair when it has been long uncombed, S. See Sup.
- "The hair of thaim is lang and tattie, nothir like the woll of scheip nor gait." Bellend. Descr. Alb. c. 13.
- Nae tawted tyke, tho' e'er sae duddie,
But he wad stan't, as glad to see him. Burns, iii. 2.
- This ilk strang Aventure,
Walkis on fute, his body wymplit in
Ane felloun bustuous and grete lyoun skyn,
Terribil and rouch with lokkerand tatty haris.
Doug. Virgil, 232, 2.
2. Rough and shaggy, not matted; as, "a tatty dog." S.

T A W

- Junius so far mistakes the sense of this word, as to render it terribilis, horridus. Lye, (Add. Jun. Etym.) who gives its proper signification, derives it from Ir. tath, gluten, ferrumen. Perhaps rather allied to Isl. taatt-a, to tease wool. V. Seren. vo. Teaze.
- TATTREL, s. A rag. S.
- TAVART, s. A short coat, made without sleeves. V. TALBART.
- TAUCH (gutt.), s. The threads of large ropes. S.
- TAUCHEY, adj. Greasy; clammy, S.
- This might seem allied to Belg. taai, clammy, Teut. taey, tenax; but rather from S. Taulch, q. v.
- TAUCHEY-FACED, adj. Greasy-faced. S.
- TAUCHT, s. Tallow that has been melted. V. TAULCH. S.
- TAUCHT, pret. v. Gave; delivered; committed.
- He taucht him siluer to dispend,
And syne gaiff him gud day,
And bad him pass furth on his way.
Barbour, ii. 130. MS.
- Bonnok on this wise, with his wayne,
The pele tuk, and the men has slayne.
Syne taucht it till the King in hy,
That him rewardyt worthely. Ibid. x. 253. MS.
- There is no ground for Mr. Pinkerton's conjecture as to the first of these passages, that it should be "perhaps raucht, reached to him, held out to him." N. i. 38. It is merely an abbrev. of Betaucht, q. v.
- TAUDY, TOWDY, s. A term used to denote a child, Aberd. Tedie, Todie, Ang.
- Hence taudy fee, Forb. the fine paid for having a child in bastardy, and for avoiding a public profession of repentance; in some places called the cuttie-stool-mail.
- But yet nor kirk nor consterie,
Quo' they, can ask the taudy fee.—
For tarry-breeks should ay go free,
And he's the clerk.
Forbes's Dominie Depos'd, p. 43.
- Towdy*, however, also signifies, podex; as in Gl. Everg.
- TAVERNRY, s. Expenses in a tavern. S.
- TAUIK, s. Conversation; talk. S.
- TAULCH, TAUGH, s. Tallow, S. tauch.
- "It is ordanit that na taulch be had out of the realme, vnder the pane of escheit of it to the king." Acts, Ja. I. 1424. c. 35. Edit. 1566.
- This is properly the name given to the article by tradesmen, before it is melted. After this operation it receives the name of tallow. S.
- "Resolved, 1st, That anciently, when Taugh, or Rough Fat, was sold by Tron weight, it was then of very little value in proportion to its worth now.—2dly, That the standard weight for selling the carcasses of Black Cattle and Sheep by is Dutch; and Taugh was sold by Tron weight, merely to make allowance for the garbage or refuse, which was unavoidably mixed with it in slaughtering the cattle and sheep." Edin. Even. Courant, Oct. 5, 1805.
- It is written tauch, in a foolish Envoy of Dunb. Everg. ii. 60. st. 25.
- Belg. talgh, Su. G. Germ. talg, Isl. Dan. tolk, id.
- TAUPIE, TAWPIE, s. A foolish woman; generally as implying the idea of inaction and slovenliness, S. See S.
- "Pottage," quoth Hab, "ye senseless tawpie!"
"Think ye this youth's a gilly-gawpy?"—
V. SMEERLESS. Ramsay's Poems, ii. 525.
- Su. G. tapi, simple, silly, foolish. Ihre views Gr. θηπ-ω, stupeo, and ταφ-ων, stupidus, as cognates. Germ. tapp-en, to fumble, tappisch, clumsy.
- TAUPIET, part. adj. Foolish. S.
- TAWPY, adj. Foolish and slovenly. S.

T A W

To TAW, v. a. "To pull; to lay hold of; to tumble about," Gl. Sibb.

Su.G. tae-ja, lanam praeparare, vellicando deducere; Ihre, vo. To. V. TAAVIN.

To TAW, v. a. 1. To make tough by kneading, Ang.; as, Be sure you taw the leaven weel. 2. To work, like mortar, either with the hand or with an instrument, Ang. 3. To spoil by frequent handling. S.

Teut. touw-en, deprecere.

To TAW, v. n. To suck greedily without intermission, as a hungry child at the breast. S.

TAWAN, s. Reluctance; hesitation. To do any thing with a tawan, to do it reluctantly, Ang.

Hence the Prov. phrase; "He callit me sometimes Provost, and sometimes my Lord; but it was ay with a tawan." Perhaps allied to the last v. or Su.G. tog-a, toi-a, togn-a, Isl. teig-ia, Moes.G. tiuh-an, to draw; if not to Isl. tauf, mora, tef-ia, morari.

TAW, s. Difficulty; much ado. Hesitation; reluctance. S.

TAWBERN, TAWBURN, s. The tabour or tabret.

— The quhissil renderis soundis sere,

With tympanys, tawbernis, ye war wount to here.

Tawburnys, MS.

Doug. Virgil, 299, 44.

V. TALBRONE.

TAWCHT, s. Tallow. "Sheip tawcht & nolt tawcht." S.

TAWREAL, s. Fatigue. S.

To TAWEN, v. a. To disfigure by handling. S.

TAWEROINE, s. A tavern. S.

TAWIE, adj. Tame; tractable; "that allows itself peaceably to be handled; spoken of a horse or cow," Gl. Burns. See S.

— Ye ne'er was donsie,

But hamely, tawie, quiet, an' cannie. Burns, iii. 141.

Allied perhaps to Isl. taeg-iast, Su.G. taag-as, trahi, tog-a, trahere, ducere; q. allowing itself to be led; or teg-ia, Isl. tey-a, allicere, as being easily enticed or prevailed with.

TAWIS, TAWES, TAWS, s. 1. A whip; a lash.

As sum tyme scantis the round top of the tre,
Hit with the twynit quhip dois quhirle we se,
Quham childer driuis bissy at thare play
About the clois and vode hallis al day;
Sche smytin with the tawis dois rebound,
And rynnys about about in cirkil round.

Doug. Virgil, 220, 7.

Rudd. derives it from E. taw, A.S. taw-ian, coria subigere, Belg. touw-en. But it is more allied to Isl. taug, tag, vimen, lorum, juncus. It is evidently a pl. s. q. tagis. Taw is still used in the sing. for the point of a whip.

2. The ferula used by a schoolmaster, S. tawse.

Syne be content to quite the cause,
And in thy teeth bring me the tawes,
With becks my bidding to abide.

Montgomerie, Watson's Coll. iii. 3.

"Never use the taws when a gloom can do the turn," Ramsay's S. Prov. p. 57.

3. Metaph. the instrument of correction, of whatever kind, S. See Sup.

— Now its tell'd him that the taws
Was handled by revengefu' Madge.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 179.

Hence,

To TAZ, v. a. "To whip, scourge, belabour," Gl. Shirr. S.B.

TAWM, s. A fit of rage; a cross or sullen humour; especially as including the idea, that one cannot be managed, when under its influence, S. See Sup.

It might seem allied to Isl. talma, to hinder, talman, hindrance, obstruction, farar talme, that which prevents one from taking a journey, itineris remora, G. Andr.; especially as he, who has agreed to go to any place, when he suddenly alters his purpose, without any apparent reason, is said to tak a tawm. But I suspect that it is merely Gael. taom, a fit of sickness, madness, or passion; taomach, subject to fits; especially as A. Bor. to taum signifies to swoon; Grose.

533

TAWNEY, s. The vulgar name for a mulatto. S.

TAWNLE, TAANLE, s. 1. A large fire, kindled at night about Midsummer, especially at the time of Beltein, S.O. synon. bleize, banefire. See Sup.

"The custom of kindling large fires or Taanles, at Midsummer, was formerly common in Scotland, as in other countries, and to this day is continued all along the strath of Clyde. On some nights a dozen or more of them may be seen at one view. They are mostly kindled on rising ground, that they may be seen at a greater distance." Gl. Sibb. vo. Taanle.

"An ancient practice still continues in this parish and neighbourhood, of kindling a large fire, or tawnle as it is usually termed, of wood, upon some eminence, and making merry around it, upon the eve of the Wednesday of Mary-mass fair in Irvine. As most fair days in this country were formerly Popish holy days, and their eves were usually spent in religious ceremonies and diversions, it has been supposed, that tawnles were first lighted up by our catholic fathers, though some derive their origin from the druidical times." P. Dundonald, Ayr. Statist. Acc. vii. 622.

2. Used to denote a large fire in general. S.

Su.G. taend-a, Moes.G. tand-ian, A.S. tend-an, tyr-an, to kindle; Gael. teine, a fire. I have heard it conjectured, that taanle might be merely Beltein inverted, q. Tein-bel. According to the system of the Welsh kingdom of Strathclyd, we might suppose that the ancient Britons had left this word in the West of S. from C.B. tanlhuyth, incendium, a burning flame, Lhuyd; also, rogus, Davies. Ir. teineal signifies touchwood, igniarius. V. BELTEIN.

TAWPY, s. A foolish woman. V. TAUPIE.

TAWRDS, s. The ferula. S.

TAWSY, s. A cup or bowl. Siller tawsy, silver bowl, Evergreen, ii. 20. V. TAIS.

TAWTIE, adj. Shaggy. S.

TAWTIE, TATIE, s. The vulgar name for a potato. S.

TAWTIE-BOGLE, s. A scarecrow. S.

TAXATIVE, adj. Having the power of deduction from the force of an argument, or plea, as enfeebling it. S.

TAXATOUR, s. An assessor; one who apportions a tax according to the supposed ability of individuals. S.

TAXED-WARD, TAXT-WARD, s. A forensic term, denoting the wardship of a minor, in which a limited sum is accepted in lieu of the whole casualties. S.

TAXT, s. A tax; an impost. S.

To TAZ, v. a. To whip; to scourge. V. under TAWIS. S.

TAZIE, s. A romping foolish girl. Syn. Hailick. S.

TCHICK, interj. 1. A sound produced by pressing the tongue on the roof of the mouth, used for quickening a dull horse. 2. An expression of surprise, or of contempt.

TEAGIE, s. A designation given to a cow. V. TAIGIE.

TEAK, s. An otter. S.

TEA-KITCHEN, s. A tea-urn or vase. V. KITCHEN. S.

To TEAL, TILL, v. a. To entice; to wheedle; to inveigle by flattery; generally, to teal on, or to teal up, Ang.

With Penny may men wemen till,

Be thai neuer so strange of will,

So oft may it be sene;

T E E

Lang with him will thai noght chide.
Sir Penny, Chron. S.P. i. 140. st. 5.
 It also occurs in the Old Legend of King Estmere.
 Nowe stay thy harpe, thou proud harper,
 Nowe stay thy harpe, I say;
 For an thou playest as thou beginnest,
 Thou'lt till my bride away.—Percy's Reliques, i. 59.
 Su.G. tael-ja, pellicere, decipere; Isl. tael-a, decipere, circumvenire, synon. with Sw. beswik-a, Verel. Hence taeld-ur, deceptus, circumventus. Mioh taeldr oc swikinn, id.
Tulle, to allure, used by Chaucer, is radically the same.
 With empty hand, men may na haukes tulle.
Reves T. v. 4132.
 It seems to be the same word which R. Brunne uses in a neut. sense, p. 128. It also occurs in the form of Tole. S.
 In alle manere cause he sought the right in skille,
 To gile no to fraude wild he neuer tille.
 Junius views this as allied to A.S. betilldon, used by King Alfred, in rendering the phrase, introducitur est, Bed.
 iv. 26. Add. Jun. Etym. But this etymon is doubtful.

 lime between the layers of stones towards the outside, S. q. to indent.
 "The fences are partly stone walls teethed with lime, partly ditches with thorn hedges on the top." P. Carnock, Fife, Statist. Acc. xi. 482.
 TEETH, AN ANGRY TEETH. The fragment of a rainbow appearing on the horizon: when seen in the North or East it is viewed as indicating bad weather. S.
 To TEETHE upon, v. a. To make an impression upon. S.
 TEETHY, adj. Crabbed; ill-natured, S. A. Bor. A teethy answer, a tart reply.
 The term conveys the same idea as when it is said that a man shews his teeth.

 TEEWHOAP, s. The Lapwing, Orkn.
 "The Teewhoap, (tringa vanellus, Lin. Syst.) which, from the sound it utters, has the name of the teewhoap here, comes early in the spring." Barry's Orkney, p. 307.
 V. PEEWEIP and TUQUEIT.
 TEHEE, s. A loud laugh. He got up with a tehee, S.
 It is frequently used as an interj., expressive of loud laughter. See S.
Te hee, quoth Jennie, teet, I see you.
Watson's Coll. iii. 47.
 Tam got the wyte, and I gae the tehee.
Ross's Helenore, p. 64.
 To TEHEE, v. n. To laugh in a suppressed way. S.
 Either from the sound; or allied to Su.G. hi-a, ludere,
 Isl. ridere.
 TEICHER, s.
 At every pylis poynt and cornes croppis
 The teicheris stude, as lemand beriall droppis,
 And on the halesum herbis, clene but wedis,
 Like cristall knoppis or small siluer bedis.

"Drops of dew, f. a Fr. tacher, to spot; tacheture, a spot, speckle or mark," Rudd.

It seems rather to signify dots, small spots; in which sense S. ticher is still used, a dimin. from Tick, id. q. v.

TEICHEMENT, s. Instruction. V. TECEMENT. S.

To TEICHER, TICHER, v. n. 1. To distil almost imperceptibly, like blood from a very slight cut. 2. Used to express the appearance of a fretted sore. S.

TEICHER, s. A very small drop. S.

TEIDSOME, adj. Tedious. V. TEDISUM. S.

TEIGHT, part. pa. Fatigued. S.

To TEIL, v. a. To cultivate the soil, S. to till, E.

"We—be the tennor hereof grantis and gevis license to thame and thair successors to ryfe out breke and teil yeirle ane thousand acres of thair common landis of our said burgh." Chart. Ja. V. to the Burgh of Selkirk, ap. Minstrely, Border, i. 264.

As Mr. Tooke has derived the E. v. from A.S. til-ian, to raise, to lift up; observing, that "to till the ground is, to raise it, to turn it up," (Divers. Purley, ii. 69,) one might suppose that this derivation were greatly confirmed by the synon. expressions, ryfe out and breke, here used. But unfortunately, there is no evidence that the A.S. v. was ever used in this sense. It signifies to prepare, to procure; to labour, to cultivate; to toil; to compute, to assign. V. Lye and Somner. Isl. till-a, indeed, signifies to lift up; attollere, leviter figere. But I do not find that it is ever used to denote the cultivation of the soil. Nor does Teut. till-en, tollere, admit of this sense.

TEIL, s. A busybody; a mean fellow. S.

To TEYM, TEME, v. a. To empty, teem, S.B. See Sup.

The roistit bullis flesche set by and by,
The bakin brede of baskettis temys in hye.

Doug, Virgil, 247, 5.

This Rudd. derives from Dan. tomm-er, vacuo. But the v. in this form more closely resembles Isl. taem-a, evacuaire; Verel. Teem is also used as an E. v. V. TUME.

TEIND, TEYND, s. Tithe. S.

TEINDIS, TENDIS, s. pl. Tithes, S. V. Skene Ind.

"That na man let thaim to sett thair landis, and teindis, vnder the pane that may follow be spiritual law or temporal." Acts, Ja. I. 1424. c. 1. Edit. 1566.

To TEIND, TYNDE, TINE, v. n. To kindle, S.

"Candle-teening, candle-lighting; Westmorel. To teen and doubt the candle, to light and put out the candle;" Gl. Grose.

"Ne me teendith not a lanterne, and puttith it undir a bushel." Wiclif, Matt. v.

A.S. tend-an, tyn-an, Moes.G. tand-jan, intand-jan, Su.G. taend-a, Isl. tendr-a, accendere. Wachter traces the Goth. terms to Celt. tan, fire, Gael. teyn, Ir. tinning: and undoubtedly the affinity is very obvious. He observes, that to the same family belong tunder, tinder, Isl. tin, tinna, a flint, tindr-a, to emit sparks, tinn-a, to shine forth, tungl, a star, the moon, Germ. tannen baum, the pine, q. a tree which easily catches fire; and A.S. tender, tyndre, Isl. tundur, E. tinder, q. something that kindles easily. TELELAND, s. Arable land; land that has been tilled. S.

TELISMAN, s. A husbandman; a farmer. S.

TELYIE, s. A piece of butcher meat. V. TAILYIE.

TELLABLE, adj. What may be told. S.

TELLYEVIE, s. A violent or perverse humour.

Scho will sail all the winter nicht,

And nevir tak a tellyevie.—Simple, Evergreen, i. 67.

Apparently the same with S. tirrivie, q. v. or perhaps from Fr. taluer, to slope, to take an oblique direction.

TELLIN' s. To tak Tellin'. 1. To need to be frequently reminded of what ought to be done. 2. To listen to advice, admonition, or warning. S.

TELLIN', adj. Well or good for; beneficial to; as, "It was tellin' him that he did as he did." S.

To TEME, v. a. To empty. V. TEYM.

TEMED, pret.

For drede thai wald him slo,

"Perhaps from Sax. Temed, or Getemed. Mansuefac-tus, domitus. Tamed." Gl.

Mr. Scott is certainly right. The idea is, to entice forward. For the Goth. words, allied to E. tame, imply not only the use of force, but occasionally of gentle and persuasive means. Isl. tem-ia, assuefacere.

TEMERARITE, TEMERARITIE, s. Rashness in judgment.

TEMMING, s. A kind of woollen cloth. V. TIMMING. S.

To TEMPER (a machine), v. a. To put those parts of a machine which immediately perform the work into proper trim for operating in the best manner. S.

TEMPER-PIN, s. The wooden pin used for temper- ing or regulating the motion of a spinning wheel, S.

My spinning wheel is auld and stiff,—

To keep the temper pin in tiff,

Employs aft my hand, Sir.—Ritson's S. Songs, i. 175.

TEMPLARIE, s. A foundation originally belonging to the Knight's Templars; or Temple Lands. S.

TEMPLELANDS, s. pl. The lands which formerly belonged to the Knights Templars. V. PRECEPTORIE. S.

TENANT-STED, adj. Occupied by a tenant. S.

"Fr. tenc-er, tanc-er, tans-er, to chide, scold, taunt; tanson, a chiding, scolding, brawling with;" Rudd. Ten- ceresse, grumbling, Rom. de la Rose.

Tance and tence are also used in O.Fr. in the sense of querelle, debat, Dict. Trev. Tanson was applied also to a species of verse, in which poets seem to have carried on a sort of scolding-match.

"The evidences of the poetical talent, which had hitherto occurred in France, consisted of romances, tales and love-songs, tensons, or pleas in verse, and sirventes, or the overflowings of a satirical humour." Godwin's Life of Chaucer, i. 351.

He here speaks of the period preceding the age of Lorris, who wrote the Roman de la Rose.

Tenson. Vieux terme de Poesie Françoise, qui s'est dit de certains ouvrages des Trouveres ou Troubadours.
—Ils contenoient des disputes d'amours, lesquelles estoient jugées par des Seigneurs et Dames qui s'assembloient à Pierrefeu et a Romans, dont les résolutions s'appelloient Amets d'Amours. On trouve encore de jolis Ten- sons dans les vieux Poètes Provençaux. Dict. Trev.

The Fr. tenson most probably first suggested to our poets that singular species of writing to which they have given the designation of Flyting; as, The Flyting of Dun- bar and Kennedy, Evergreen, ii. 47. The Flyting of Pol- wart and Montgomerie, Watson's Coll. iii. It even descended so far as to assume the title of The Soutar and

TENDALE KNYFF. Some kind of knife. S.

TENDER, adj.* 1. Delicate in health; weakly; ailing. S.

"Mr. Henderson is much tenderer than he wont."
Baillie's Lett. ii. 139.

"As, Pope was a tender man.—By delicate, the Scots mean sickly, and the English beautiful or pleasing. These senses of the words, tender, and delicate, the Scots seem to have taken from the French, who make use of delicat in the same sense as foible, weak or feeble; and tendre, for douillet, unable to bear any hardship." Sir J. Sinclair's Observ. p. 108, 109.

2. Circumspect; avoiding all appearance of evil. 3. Having a scrupulous mind. 4. Dear; beloved. 5. Nearly related. S.

To TENDER, v. a. To make delicate. S.

TENDIR OF BLUDE. Nearly related by consanguinity. S.

Doug. Virgil; Contentes, 12, 45.

The pl. is sometimes used.

The prince Eneas on this wyse allane
The fatis of goddis, and rasis mony ane
Rehersing schew, and sundry strange ventis,
The Quene and all the Tyrianis takand tentis.

Doug. Virgil, 92, 44.

The phrase corresponds to Fr. faire attention.

"A story is told of an English lady, who consulted a physician from Scotland, and being desired by him to tak tent, understood that tent wine was prescribed her, which she took accordingly. It is not said what was the consequence of this mistaken prescription; but as that species of wine is far from being a specific for every disorder, this is a phrase, which, by the faculty at least, ought to be carefully avoided." Sir J. Sinclair's Observ. p. 19.

2. To Tak Tent to, to take care of; to exercise concern about a person or thing, S. See Sup.

To say the salmes fast sho bigan,
And toke no tent unto no man.

Ywaine, ver. 890. E.M.R.

the moral character of a church-member, when about to leave the district. S.

TESTIT, part. adj. Testamentary; given by will. S.

TESTOON, TESTONE, s. A Scottish silver coin varying in value. See Sup.

T E U

"There is no mention of these coins in the Scottish statutes before the beginning of James VI.'s time, which the French and English call testoons, from their having the king's head stamped on them; but Nicolson is of opinion that their name was common enough in the time of queen Mary, mother of James VI. Certainly Fr. Blancius expressly calls some of the coins of Francis II. of France, and Mary of Scotland, his wife, testoons. Their value in England was always the same as shillings, but among the Scots, at first they were five shillings, and then raised to a higher value." Introd. to Anderson's Diplom. p. 131.

The silver coin, weighing about 92 grains Troy, with Mary's head, 1562, is generally denominated her testoon.
V. Cardonnel's Numism. p. 99. O.Fr. teste, a head. Teston.
Capitatus nummus. On les appelloit testons à cause de la

To TETE, TEET, v. a. 1. To send forth as if by stealth; to cause to peep out.

The rois knoppis, tetand furth thare hede

Gan chyp, and kyth thare vernale lippis red.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 401, 18.

2. v. n. To peep out; to look in a sly or prying way;
often as implying the idea that this is done clandestinely, S. pron. teet; synonym. keik. See Sup.

"They say Scot. He is teeting out at the window, i. e. he steals a glance or hasty view through the window;" Rudd.

But I can teet, an' hitch about,

And melt them ere they wit.

Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 36.

Sibb., while he justly overlooks Rudd's etymon, ("probably a F. tete, caput") is not much more happy in his derivation. For he views it as "corr. from Belg. kijck-en, to peep or spy." It is evidently from the same stock with Su.G. titt-a, inspicere. Ihre explains this word almost in the same terms with Rudd. Per transennam veluti videre, ut solent curiosi aut post tegmina latentes. This idea of "lurking behind a covert," very frequently enters into the sense in which we use our S. term. There had undoubtedly been a cognate word in O.E., as Skinner renders toteth, looketh; supposing that it is allied to Lat. tue-or, tui-tus. Ihre adopts the idea as to titt-a. Hence,

TEET-BO, s. 1. Bo-peep, S.

But she maun e'en be glad to look,

An' play teet-bo frae nook to nook.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 113.

2. Used metaph. to denote inconstancy, or infidelity.

By teet-bo friends, an' nae a few,

I've rough been guidit.

Morison's Poems, p. 95.

TETH, s. Temper; disposition. Ill-teeth'd, ill-humoured, having a bad temper, Fife.

Allied perhaps to A.S. tyht, instructio, teting, disciplina, or Isl. tidt, indeclin. Mierer titt um; huic rei studes; Verel.

TETHER-STAKE, s. 1. The pin fixed in the ground, to which the tether is tied. 2. Metaph. any object which restricts one; as, "A man that's married has a tetherstake." V. TEDDER. S.

TETHERFACED, adj. Having an ill-natured aspect, S.

Allied perhaps to Isl. teit-a, rostrum belluinum; whence teitstr, torvus et minax.

TETTIE, adj. Having a bad temper. Syn. Titty, q.v. S.

TETUZ, s. 1. Any thing tender. 2. A delicate person. S.

TEUCH, TEUGH, TEWCH, adj. 1. Tough, not easily broken, S. Tewh, Yorks.

Ibid. 18. 23.

Although it occurs in our history before the reign of Malcolm Canmore, it has been supposed that it was introduced by this prince, from his attachment to A.S. manners, as he had been educated in the English court; Notes to Sibb. Fife, p. 224. But it is more probable, that it was borrowed from the A.S. in an earlier reign, as in this it seems to have given place to the title of Earl; Lord Hailes' Annals, i. 27.

This, as taking place of Murmor, appears to have been the highest title of honour known in S., before the reign of Malcolm Canmore. Afterwards, that of Earl was probably reckoned more honourable, as having obtained a more determinate sense in England after the Norman conquest. For, according to Spelman, (vo. Eorla) Erle seems rather to have denoted a Duke than a Count.

It has been supposed, that there were Earls in S. even before the time of Malcolm II. Dalyell's Fragments, Desultory Reflections, p. 37. Torfaeus says; Fuit quidam Comes in Scotia Melbrigdus, Hist. Orcad. circ. A. 860. Lib. i. c. 4. According to Sturlson, "Earl Sigurd killed Melbrigd, called Tonn, a Scottish Earl." Sigurdr Iarl drap Melbrigda Tonn, Iarl Skotskan; Heimskringla, V. i. 99. Torfaeus also mentions Dungad Comes Catenesiae, A. 875. He is called Dungadar iarls af Katanese; Orkneyinga S. p. 4. We also read of Erp, the son of Meldun, a certain Earl from Scotland; Melduni cujusdam comitis è Scotia, about 870. Hist. Orcad. Lib. i. c. 5. of Earls Hund and Melsnat, the kinsman of Malcolm, who afterwards came to the throne, A. 993. Ibid. c. 10. And Mr. Dalyell also refers to Adils and Hring, A. 985. who both receive the name of Iarl; Egill, Skallagrim S. But there is no evidence that they resided in Scotland. They are called two brothers who presided over Bretlandi, the land of the Britons; and are said to have been, skattgilldir un- dir Adalstein konung, tributaries to Athelstan, King of England. V. Johnstone, Antiq. Celto-Scand. p. 33. comp. with pp. 41. 42. Mention is made, in Niala Saga, of an Earl Melkolf, i. e. Malcolm, who seems to have resided on the Border, in a place called Whitsburg, near Berwick. V. Johnstone, p. 142.

In the same work, Makbeth Comes, 952. is also mentioned; and Finleikus Comes Scotorum, 985. Ol. Tryggvason S. It is added, that, "if we might credit Torfaeus, —Malcolm Mackenneth was in use to create Earls;" and that "there is an earlier account of the creation of an Earl;" for Skuli, the brother of Liot, having gone into Scotland, was there dignified with the name of Earl by the Scottish king. V. Ol. Tryggvason S. Johnstone, p. 118.

Mr. Dalyell has justly observed, that "great latitude must be given to the imperfect accounts Torfaeus and the writers of the Sagas might obtain." When they use the term, it is highly probable, that it is meant to express the dignity of Thane; as the latter designation, although of Gothic origin, does not appear to have been used, among the Scandinavians, as so honourable a term, or in so definite a sense.

It is probable, that some were created, by our kings, earls in Caithness, before the term was more generally used. As this country had been long in the possession of the Norwegians, and governed by those who had been honoured with this title by the kings of Norway, their successors in power, who adhered to the Scottish crown, might view it as more honourable than Thane.

It seems evident that this name, as used in the instances referred to, was not merely honorary, but descriptive of office. For no sooner was Skuli, above mentioned, made an Earl, than he raised forces in Caithness, and led them into the islands; Antiq. Celto-Scand. p. 118. The same thing was done by Moddan, after he had been made an Earl by a Scottish king, called Karl by the Norwegian writers; Orkneyinga, S. p. 31. Whether such a king ever existed or not, is not material. These passages shew, that they understood the title as conferring at least territorial authority.

It is probable that Thane was at first synon. with Lat. Comes, as expressive of an honour arising from office. He, who enjoyed this title, seems to have presided in a county, and sometimes in a province. Macduff, as Thane of Fife, must have had an extensive jurisdiction.

It may also be supposed, that he had a partial command in the army, at least of the forces in his own district. Spelman accordingly observes, that Thane, among the ancient Scots, is equivalent to Tosch; and Gael. Toshich signifies the General, or Leader of the van. This interpretation, as Dr. Macpherson observes, is confirmed by the name of a considerable family in the Highlands of Scotland,—the clan of M'Intosh, who say, that they derive their pedigree from the illustrious Macduff, once Thane, and afterwards Earl of Fife. Macduff, in consideration of his services to Malcolm Canmore, obtained a grant, which gave him and his heirs a right of leading the van of the royal army on every important occasion. The chieftain of the clan, that is descended from this great Earl, is styled Mac in Toshich, that is to say, "the Son of the General." Crit. Diss. 13.

The Thane, according to Boece, collected the king's revenues; Fol. 20, a. Fordun, speaking of an Abthane, says that, "under the king, he was the superior of those who were bound to give an annual account of their farms and rents due to the king. For," he adds, "the Abthane had to reckon the royal revenues, as discharging the office of a Steward or Chamberlain." Lib. iv. c. 43.

Thane, according to Mr. Pinkerton, is equivalent to Murmor; (Enquiry, ii. 193.) which seems to have been the highest title anciently given to a subject. To this, we imagine, the A.S. term succeeded. It is worthy of observation, that Thane and Mair, in their primary sense, conveyed the same idea; both signifying a servant.

As Thane succeeded to Mair in its composite form (Murmor), it is hence probable, that there has been some foundation for the assertion of Buchanan and other writers, that the Thane not only administered justice, but collected the King's revenues in a county or district. For Gael. maor is also expl. steward. V. MAIR.

It has been supposed, that the Thane "did not transmit his honours to his posterity;" Notes, Sibb. Fife, p. 225. This is not quite consistent with what is said, in the page immediately preceding, that the extract from the Book of Paisley represents Macduff as asking the privileges referred to, for himself and his successors, Thanes of Fife. This extract evidently supposes indeed, that, in this family at least, the honour was hereditary. Petiit a rege Malcolm, primum, quod ipse et successores, Thani de Fyf, regem tempore sui coronationis in sede regia locaret. Ap. Sibb. Fife, p. 212.

From some ancient charters, it appears that thanages were hereditary. In one granted by David II., it is said; "Although we have infeoffed Walter de Lesly, Knight, in the Thanage of Abirkyrdore, in the sheriffdom of Banff, and in the Thanages of Kyncardyn; nevertheless, because perchance the heirs of the Thanes who anciently held the said Thanages in few farm, may be able to recover the said Thanages, to be held as their predecessors held them; we have granted, that if the said heirs, or any one of them, should recover the said Thanages, or any one of them, our said cousin and his heirs shall have the services of the said heirs or heir of the said Thanes or Thane, and the few farms anciently due from the foresaid Thanages." Robertson's Index of Charters, p. 87. No. 220. V. also p. 96. No. 315; p. 121, No. 72; p. 133. N. 13.

It may be added, that the title of Earl of Fife, which succeeded to that of Thane of Fife, and which seems to have included all the honours connected with the latter, was given by David Bruce to Sir Thomas Biset, and his heirs male by Isabella de Fyf; whom failing, the whole earldom was to return to the King and his heirs. Ibid. p. 74. No. 62.

Sometimes this honour was conferred only for life. Thus, the moiety of the Thanage of Fermartine, in the shire of Aberdeen, is given by David Bruce to the Earl of Sutherland, and his male heirs, "which had formerly been given to him only during the term of his life." Ibid. p. 81. No. 157.

The last Thane said to be mentioned is William Thane of Caldor; Cart. Morav. fol. 98. V. Hailes' Annals, i. 27. N.

It perhaps deserves notice, that all the *thanedom*s specified, in the Index of Charters, are to the north of Forth, and seem to have been situated within the limits of the Pietish kingdom, in the counties of Cromarty, Banff, Aberdeen, Kincardine, Forfar, Fife, and in the lower parts of Perthshire. Shall we view this as a proof, that the designation never extended to that part of the country which was inhabited by the Celts?

Abthane has been considered as a title expressive of still higher dignity, and explained as equivalent to that of High Steward of Scotland; Buchanan, Hist. vii. 19. This title, it has been conjectured, has found a place in our history, merely in consequence of a mistake of Fordun, who, perhaps unwilling to admit that an Abbot was married, or misled by the contractions common in MSS., has substituted Abthane of Dull, for Abbat of Dunkeldyn. V. Pink. Enquiry, ii. 193. Notes to Wynt. ii. 467. But Mr. Pinkerton seems to go too far, when he says; "Who ever heard of an Abthane?" The modest remark made by Mr. Macpherson supplies an answer to this query. "The nature and antiquity of this office is unknown to me; but that there was such an office, and that it remained for ages after this time, is unquestionable. David II. granted to Donald Macnayre the lands of Easter Fossache with the Abthanrie of Dull in Perthshire. [Roll, D. 2. K, 22, in MS. Harl. 4609.] The Baillerie of Abthane of Dull, and the lands of the Abthane of Kinghorn, occur in other grants in the same MS. in Roll D. 2. F." V. Robertson's Index, p. 46. No. 46. 50.

Mr. Pinkerton seems inclined to think, that Abthane is q. Abbot-Thane, a title given to a Thane who was also an Abbot, and corresponding to Abas Comes expl. by Du Cange, as denoting a laic count to whom an abbey was given in commendam. But, whatever be the origin of the particle prefixed, it seems to have signified an inferior dignity. See S.

The title of Thane, as has been formerly observed, seems gradually to have sunk in its meaning. It may not perhaps be viewed as a sufficient proof of this, that, according to our old laws, the Cro of an Earl's son was equal to that of a Thane; Reg. Maj. Lib. iv. c. 36. s. 2. In the Statutes of Alexander II., however, the Thane is ranked, not only as inferior to a Baron, but apparently as on a level with a Knight.

"Touching all others quha remaines from the hoist, that is, of lands pertaining to Bischops, Abbats, Earles, Barones, Knights, Thanes, quha halds of the king: the king allanerlie sall haue the vnlaw:—Bot the king sall haue onlie the ane halfe thereof: and the Thane, or Knicht, ane other half." Stat. Alex. II. c. 15. s. 2.

It affords further evidence of this, that, whereas, in the more early periods of our history, a Thanedom seems to have been as extensive as a sheriffdom, in the reign of Robert Bruce, and of his son David, we find several *Thanedom*s within one county; as the Thanedom of Aberbothnot, of Cowie, of Aberlachwich, of Morphie, of Duris, of Newdoskis, &c. in the sheriffdom of Kincardine. V. Robertson's Index of Charters, p. 17. No. 55. 56. p. 18, No. 59. p. 23, No. 4. p. 32, No. 14. p. 33, No. 37.

It appears, indeed, that some of the more ancient *Thanedom*s were as extensive as what are now called counties, including all the extent of jurisdiction originally given to Comites or Earls. This is evident, not only from the Thanedom of Fife, but from that ascribed to Macbeth. He, as has been seen, is called by Wyntown, Thayne of Crumbawchty, i. e. Cromarty. Now, this was a sheriffdom as early at least as the reign of Robert Bruce. Robertson's Index, p. 2, No. 50. In this reign also, the Thandome of Alith (Alyth) gave designation to a sheriffdom. Ibid. p. 4, No. 38.

In some instances, the term Thandome is used as synonym with Barony. Thus, the "baronies of Kincardin, and Aberluthnok, and Fettercardin, vic. Kincardin (Ibid. p. 63, No. 53.) are called "the thandome of Kincardine, Abercouthnot, [in both places, for Aberluthnot] Fetherkern;" Ibid. p. 65, No. 15. Chart. David II. At first view, it might seem that the thandome, as mentioned in the singular, included these three baronies. But we find the phrase, thanagiorum de Kyncardyn, Abirlouthnot, et Fethirkern, in vic. de Kincardyn; Ibid. p. 89, No. 242.

According to the A.S. laws, as Cowel has remarked after Spelman, some, distinguished by this title, were called Thani Majores and Thani Regis; while those who served under them, as they did under the King, were denominated Thani minores, or the lesser Thanes. The term, as used in the Laws of Alex. II., seems nearly to correspond to the latter.

In its original use, indeed, in other languages, it was quite indefinite. A.S. thegen, thegn, in its primary sense, denotes a servant. Thus theowne oththe frige signifies a slave as distinguished from a freeman; Leg. Inae, c. 11. Hence it was transferred to a military servant; and, from the dignity attached to an important trust in war, it seems at length to have been used to signify a grandee, one who enjoyed the privilege of being near the person of the King, or of representing him in the exercise of authority. The person, who was thus distinguished, was designed cyninges thegen; Thanus regius, satrapa, optimas, dynasta, baro. One of an inferior rank was called medmera thegen, mediocris vel inferior Thanus; "a Thane or nobleman of a lower degree, as that at this day of a Baronet;" Somner. Woruld-thegen signified a secular Thane; maesse-thegen, a spiritual Thane or priest.

Germ. degen has a similar variety of significations; servus; civis, et quilibet subditus; dominus, sed superiori domino (Principi vel Regi) obnoxius; miles, ab infima ad supremam conditionem; vir fortis; sensus a milite ad omnes strenuos traductus. Franc. thegn signified not only a common soldier, but a general. V. Wachter.

Dan. degn, diagn, now written tagn, was used nearly with the same latitude as the Germ. word, Worm. Monum. Dan. p. 264—267. Schilter seems to give the original sense. For he observes, that Alem. thegan properly signifies a man; hence theganliche, viriliter, manfully. "By and by," he says, "it came to be used to denote the peculiar state of those subject to the power of others, as soldiers, and servants." He derives it from diuh-en, progredi, proficere, crescere, prodesse; vo. Diuh-en, p. 230.

In the celebrated Death-Song of Regner Lodbrog, v. 23. this phrase occurs; Hrokkve ei degn fyrir degne; Man yields not to man; literally thane—to thane. Spelman, although he explains thegan vir fortis, mentions lesse thegen as used in the Laws of Canute, MS., in the sense of, mediocris homo. Ol. Wormius seems to think that the office of Decanus, (mentioned by Vegetius, Lib. 2. c. 13.) who presided over ten soldiers, might originate from this Gothic term.

It appears that Alem. thegan denoted a servant, prior to its use as signifying a grandee. For an epithet was prefixed to determine its signification. Hence edilthegan, literally, a noble servant. It is evident, indeed, that thegan was anciently synon. with skalk, knab, and knecht; all signifying a servant. Hence Lindenbrog, vo. Adelscale, expl. this term as equivalent to Germ. edelknab; adding, that they were formerly denominated edildeggen. Aedelknecht was used in a similar sense in Denmark. Monum. ubi sup. In Isl., thegn is equivalent to Lord. Thiaegn oc thrael, dominus et servus; Verel. To the same source Danneman, a Su.G. title of honour, has been traced. V. Ihre in vo. But this is doubtful; as thægn in that language corresponds to A.S. thegn.

The word is most probably from A.S. thegn-ian, then-ian, Germ. dien-en, Dan. thien-er, tien-er, Isl. thien-a, then-a, to serve; although some invert the derivation. The common fountain seems to be Isl. thi-a, humiliare, subigere, (whence Su.G. tiaen-a), thiad-ur, servitute oppressus. See Sup.

Lambard has justly observed, that the motto, Io Dien, (retained in the arms of the Prince of Wales,) is of Saxon origin, for Io thegn; or, according to the Belg. mode of writing, Io dien; i. e. I serve. Archaionom. Rer. et Verb. Expl.

Verstegan, on the same subject, observes, that d and th were "in our ancient language indifferently used;" Restitution, p. 259.

Comites, the term used by Tacitus to denote men of rank among the ancient Germans, had a similar origin, as conveying the idea of honourable service. For, as Dr. Robertson has remarked, "we learn from Tacitus, that the chief men among the Germans endeavoured to attach to their persons and interests certain adherents whom he calls Comites. These fought under their standards, and followed them in all their enterprises. The same custom continued among them in their new settlements, and those attached or devoted followers were called fideles, antrustiones, homines in trusta Domini, leudes." Hist. Cha. V. i. 260. Tacitus evidently uses a Lat. term, well understood by his countrymen. He most probably substitutes Comes for the Germ. word Graf, in A.S. gerefa, expl. comes, socius.

Shaw views Gael. Tanaiste, "lord, dynast, governor," as equivalent to Thane. Dr. Macpherson indeed apprehends, that it is an ancient Gael. word, signifying, "the second person or second thing." In proof of this he observes, that "before the conquest of Ireland by Henry the second, the title of Tanist became obsolete." Crit. Diss. 13. It appears, however, that it continued to be used so late as the year 1594. V. Ware's Antiq. p. 71. From the similarity of the terms, and from the sameness of signification, it is far more probable, that Tanist was formed from Thane, or was imported into Ireland by the Belgae. In confirmation of this, it may be observed, that there is no evidence of the existence of any Celtic root, from which Tanist can reasonably be deduced. I observe, that my ingenious friend, the Rev. Mr. Todd, has thrown out the same idea, in his Illustrations of Spenser, vol. viii. 308.

"To dare.—He will not dare (be able) to go far;" Gl. Trist. It seems rather to signify, to need, to have occasion, to find it necessary. E. dare is from A.S. dearr-an, dyrr-an. The sense may be; "He who gives heed to lies, has no occasion to proceed any further." It must be admitted, however, that verbs, signifying to dare, seem to be occasionally used, in ancient writing, as denoting power. V. THURCH, THURST.

THEDE, s. 1. A nation; a people.

—Ye are thre in this thede thrivand oft in thrang;
War al your strenthis in aue,
In his grippis and ye gane,
He wald ourcum you ilk aue.—Gawan and Gol. ii. 3.

i. e. "Ye are three persons, belonging to this nation, often prosperous in the heat of battle."

Mr. Pinkerton conjectures that this word means business. But it is undoubtedly from A.S. theod, gens, populus. According to Verstegan, theod or thiad signifies a strange nation. But I do not perceive the ground of this assertion; especially as he renders pl. thiada simply nations.

It seems used in this sense by R. Brunne.

T H E

Hence Junius and Ihre derive the L.B. term diaeta, diet, used by the Germ. to denote a public convention; although this may perhaps be from dies, the day fixed for meeting. Hence also Theotisc, gentiles; the name given by the Franks or Alemans to all the people of their nation; A.S. getheode, vernacular language; Franc. bithiot-en, Belg. beduyd-en, to interpret, Isl. thyd-en, to explain.

2. A region; a province.

To waif with the wynd. Gawan and Gol, ii. 10.

It might bear this sense in the passage quoted, sense 1. In the same poem, i. 14, instead of,

All the wyis in welth he weildis in weid Sall halely be at your will, all that is his;
it ought to be, according to Edit. 1508,

—weildis in theid—

i. e. "All the wealthy wights which he rules in the nation or province."

The same idea is thus expressed in the following stanza.

Of all the wyis, and welth, I weild in this steid.

i. e. place; A.S. stede, locus, folcstede, populi statio. Perhaps in welth, in the first passage, should be read, and welth, as here. Thus persons are distinguished from property.

With alle thing Y say,
That pende to marchandis,
In lede;
Thai ferden of this wise,
Intil Yrlond thede. Sir Tristrem, p. 85.

This, misquoted in Gl. as p. 95, is viewed as "apparently a contraction for they gede." But it certainly signifies Ireland country. They gede would be an obvious tautology, being anticipated by ferden, fared.

A.S. theod signifies not only gens, but provincia. East-Seaxna theod, Orientalium Saxonum provincia; Myrcna theod, Merciorum provincia.

3. It seems to be used in the sense of species, kind.

ter; thereabout. Out o' thereaway, from about that quarter. 2. That way; to that purpose. 3. As far as that; to that distance; often There-and-away. S.

THERE-BEN, adv. In the inner apartment. V.

THAIRBEN.

THEREFRAE, adv. Therefrom. V. THAIRFRA. S.

THEREIN, adv. Within doors. V. THAIRIN. S.

THEREOUT, adv. Without; afield. V. THAIROWT. S.

THERM, THARME, s. 1. The intestines. 2. A gut prepared, especially as a string for a musical instrument. S.

THERNA, THURRNA. Equivalent to "need not," or "should not;" as, "You thurtna stop," you should not stay. S.

THESAURE, THESSAURE, s. A treasure. S.

THESAURARE, s. Treasurer. S.

THESAURARIE, s. Treasury. S.

THESELF, pron. Itself. V. SELF, SELFF. S.

THESTREEN, s. Yesternight; corr. of Yestreen. S.

THETIS, THETES, s. pl. 1. The ropes or traces, by means of which horses draw in a carriage, plough or harrow, S.

The bodyis of Rutilianis here and thare

Thay did persauae, and by the coist alquhare

The cartis stand with lymouris bendit strek,

The men ligging the hames about thare nek,

Or than amangis the quhelis and the thetis,

All samyn lay thare armour, wyne, and metis.

Doug. Virgil, 287, 7.

2. The term is often used metaph. One is said to be quite out of thetes, when one's conduct or language is quite disorderly, like that of a horse that has broke loose from its harness, S. See Sup.

"Hence the ordinary expression in Scotland, Ye are out of theet, i. e. ye are extravagant, or in the wrong;" Rudd.

It appears from Sibb. that in some places, perhaps S.A.,
this is corr. pron. Feets.

3. Out of thete. A phrase applied to one who is rusted, as to any art or science, from want of practice. S.

One might fancy that there were some affinity with A.S. theowet, servitude; as cords are the badges of bondage, and Isl. thiad-ur denotes one oppressed with servitude. But it is undoubtedly from another Isl. term, thatt-r, a thread, cord, or small rope. The term is also used for a narration, q. the thread or connexion of a discourse. This has some analogy to the metaph. sense mentioned above. Pars historiae, narratio; proprie flum vel funis tenuior, ex quo funis crassior conficitur; Gl. Kristnis.

THEVIS-NEK, THEUIS-NEK, s. An imitative term formed to express the cry of the lapwing. S.

THEW, s. Custom; manner; quality.

Wilyhame Wyschard of Saynct Andrewys

Byschape, wertus, and of gud thewys,

Wys, honest, and awenand,

O Troiane prynce, I lawly the beseik,
Be thyne awne vertuis, and thy thewis meik.

Doug. Virgil, 339, 26.

A.S. theaw, mos, modus. Hence (says Lye) A. Bor. thew'd, docilis; towardly, Grose. Seren. gives Sw. thooielse in the sense of quality, which seems to acknowledge the same origin. A.S. theaw, mos, and theow, servus, can scarcely be viewed as radically different; especially as the word, signifying a servant, is sometimes written theaw. Both, I suspect, must be traced to Isl. thia, thiaa, humiliate, duriter tractare, subigere: as a servant is one brought into a state of subjection; and what are manners, but the habits learned in consequence of instruction, restraint, and chastisement? It is highly probable, indeed, that the term thede, as primarily signifying a nation, A.S. theod, is from the same source, q. a body of men brought into a state of subjection. It may be viewed as a proof of this, that the v. theod-an, formed from theod, signifies to serve. Ich him geornlicor theodde; Ego illis impensius servire curavi; Bed. 516. 9. and Theoden denotes a king, q. one who subjects others, or causes them to serve. Isl. thiod, populus; God thiod, bonus populus, i. e. cives et fideles subditi. Thiad-ur, servitute oppressus, thyda, mansuetudo, obsequium; Verel.

THEWIT, part. pa. Disciplined; regulated. Weill thewit, having a proper deportment.

Thair was na wicht that gat a sicht eschewit,
War he never sa constant, or weill thewit,
Na he was woundit, and him hir seruant grantis.

Palice of Honour, i. 38.

The term seems to denote that self-command which a knight, or one regularly bred to arms, ought to have over himself. One of the senses of A.S. theaw is, institutum. V. the s.

THEWLES, THIEVELESS, adj. 1. Unprofitable.

Lat vs in ryot leif, in sport and gam,
In Venus court, sen born thareto I am,
My tyme wel sall I spend: weuys thou not so?
Bot all your solace sall returne in gram,
Sic thewles lustis in bittir pane and wo.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 96, 24.

Thowles seems formerly to have been used nearly in the sense of mod. dissipated, or profligate.

He wes thowles, and had in wown
By hys wyf oft-syis to ly
Othir syndry women by. Wyntown, viii. 24. 166.
Welle waxyn wp that tyme he wes,
And thowles than, for his yowthhed
To that nature wald hym lede:
Justynge, dawnsyng, and playnge
He luwyd welle, for he wes yhyng. Ibid. 38. 291.

From A.S. theow, a servant, or theow-ian, to serve, and the privative particle les, less; q. what does no service.

2. Inactive; remiss, S. pron. thowless. See Sup.

How worthless is a poor and haughty drone,
Wha thowless stands a lazy looker-on!

Ramsay's Works, i. 55.

Sibb. justly gives thieveless as synon. A thieveless excuse, one that is not satisfactory, q. does not serve the purpose. He came on a thieveless errand, S.; "He pretended to have business about which he was not in earnest."

3. "Cold; forbidding," S. Gl. Sibb.

It chanc'd his new-come neebor took his ee,
And een a vex'd and angry heart had he!
Wi' thieveless sneer to see his modish mien,
He down the water gies him this guideen.

Burns, iii. 54.

"Thieveless, cold, dry, spited," Gl. Shirr.

To look thieveless to one, to give one a cold reception, S.O.

T H I

4. Hence transferred to a cold, bleak day. It's a thieveless morning, is a phrase used in this sense by old people, Renfrews.—A thieveless day is one that has no decided character; neither properly good nor bad. S.

5. Insipid, as applied to mind; destitute of taste, S.

A saul with sic a thowless flame,

Is sure a silly sot ane.

Ramsay's Works, i. 118.

6. Feeble.

For thowless age, wi' wrinklet brow,—

Mae need the aid I gae to you,

When strang an' young.

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, i. 47.

7. Shy; reserved.

It is used indeed to denote frigidity or insipidity of manner, but evidently as including the primary idea; being applied to one who appears unfit for action, S.

THEWTILL, THEWITTEL, s. A large knife; or one that may serve as a dagger.

Ane Ersche mantill it war thi kynd to wer,

A Scotts thewtill wndyr thi belt to ber.

Wallace, i. 218. MS.

E. and S. whittle, a knife; A.S. hwitel; Chauc. and A. Bor. thwite, cultello resecare, A.S. thwit-an, thweot-an, id. THIBACK, s. Apparently, a stroke or blow. S.

THICK, adj. 1. Intimate; familiar. 2. Ouer thick, over thick, denotes a criminal intimacy between persons of different sexes. 3. Used in relation to consanguinity; as, "He liked his cousin best; for blood's thicker than water, ye ken." 4. To follow one through thick and thin, to adhere to one in all hazards. Cant E. Grose's Class. Dict. Great or grit, thrang, synon. V. PACK. S.

To MAK THICK wi'. To ingratiate one's self with. S.

THIEF, s. Used often, without meaning to charge with dishonesty, but in the sense of E. Hussy; as, She's an ill-faur'd thief. S.

THIEF-LIKE, adj. Having the appearance of a black-guard. Plain; hard-looking; ugly. Unbecoming; not handsome; applied to dress; as, "That's a thief-like mutch." S.

THIEVELESS, adj. V. THEWLES.

THIFTBUTE, s. The crime of taking money or goods, booty, from a thief, to shelter him from justice. S.

THIFTDOME, THIEFTDOME, s. The commission of theft; an act of stealing. S.

THIFTEOUS, adj. Dishonest; thievish. S.

THIFTOUSLY, adv. By theft. S.

To THIG, THIGG, v. a. 1. To ask; to beg.

His fyrst norryss, of the Newtown of Ayr,
Till him scho come, quhilk was full will of reid,
And thyggyt leiff away with him to fayr.

Wallace, ii. 259. MS.

Grete goddis mot the Grekis recompens,
Gif I may thig aue uengeance but offens.

Doug. Virgil, 182, 37.

To tar and tig, syne grace to thig,
That is a pityous preis.

V. TAR, v.

Evergreen, ii. 199.

"So we perceive that England never forgot their old quarrels upon small or no regard, when they saw an apparent advantage to have been masters; and, by the contrary, they were fain to thigg and cry for peace and good-will of Scottish-men, when there was unity and concord amongst the nobles living under subjection and obedience of a manly Prince." Pitscottie, p. 56.

Alem. thig-en, dich-en, petere; thigi, digi, dichi, preces. Gote thigiti, they prayed God. V. Schilt. vo. Diche. Su.G. tigg-a, petere.

2. To go about, receiving supply, not in the way of common mendicants, but rather as giving others an opportunity of manifesting their liberality, S. See Sup.

"It is used properly for a more civil way of seeking supply, usual enough in the Highlands and North of Scotland, where new-married persons, who have no great stock, or others low in their fortune, bring carts and horses with them to the houses of their relations, and receive from them corn, meal, wool, or what else they can get," Rudd.

"Better a thigging mother than a riding father," S. Prov. Kelly, p. 66. He expl. it by another; "Better the mother with the poke, than the father with the sack;" observing that "both these signify, that the mother, though in a low condition, will be more kindly to, and more careful of, orphans, than the father can be, though in a better."

He that borrows and bigs,
Makes feasts and thigs,
Drinks and is not dry;
These three are not thrifty.

Ferguson's S. Prov. p. 13.

The father buys, the son bigs,
The grandchild sells, and his son thiggs.

"A proverb much used in Lowthian, where estates stay not long in one family; but hardly heard of in the rest of the nation." Kelly, p. 312.

Had Kelly lived a little later, he would have seen no reason for the restriction of the proverb to Lothian.

It seems uncertain, whether this, or the preceding, be the primary sense. Although the Alem. v. signifies to ask, A.S. thicg-an, thicg-ean, thig-ian, is rendered accipere, sumere, sc. cibum; having properly a relation to food. Isl. thygg-ia very nearly approaches the common sense of the term in S. Gratis accipere, dono auferre; from thaa, id. Hence G. Andr. derives thack-a, q. thagh-a, to thank; and the derivation is certainly natural; for that only, which is received as a gift, can properly be matter of thankfulness.

3. To beg; to act the part of a common mendicant, S. It is probably in this sense that the term is used by Henrysone.

For Goddis aw, how dar thow tak on hand,
And thow in berne and byre so bene and big,
To put him fra his tak, and gar him thig?

Bannatyne Poems, p. 120.

This is the most common sense of the Su.G. v. tigg-a, petere, proprie usurpatur de mendicantium precibus; Ibre. V. the s.

4. To borrow; used improperly.

Some other chiel may daftly sing,—
And blaw ye up with windy fancies,
That he has thigit frae romances.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 144.

THIGGAR, THIGGER, s. 1. One who draws on others for subsistence in a genteel sort of way. S.—2. A beggar; a common mendicant.

"The King hes statute—that na Thiggaris be tholit to beg, nouthor to burgh nor to landwart, betuix xiiii and lxx yeiris, bot thay be sene be the counsall of the townis or of the land, that thay may not win thair leuing vther wayis. And thay that sal be tholit to beg, sall haue a certane takin on thame, to landwart of the Schiref, and in the burrowis thay sall haue takin of the Alderman or of the Baillies." Acts, Ja. I. 1424. c. 27. Edit. 1566.

Su.G. teggare, id.

THIGGING, s. 1. The act of collecting as described.

2. The quantity of grain, &c. collected in this way. S.

THIGSTER, s. A sort of gentle beggar. Syn. Thiggar. S.

THIGHT, adj. Close, so as not to admit water. S.

THILSE, adv. Else; otherwise. Contr. for the else. S.

THIMBER, adj. Given as not understood by Ritson.

—There I spy'd a wee wee man,
And he was the least that ere I saw.
His legs were scarce a shathmout's length,
And thick and thimber was his thighs;
Between his brows there was a span,
And between his shoulders there was three.

Ritson's S. Songs, ii. 139.

It seems to signify gross, heavy, cumbrous, or perhaps swollen; Isl. thungber, gravis, portatu molestus, from thungi, onus, and ber-a, ferre, portare; q. what is difficult to carry. Thamb-a, inflate; thember upp, turgescit, inflatur.

THINARE, s.

—Swete Ysonde thinare,

Thou preye the king for me. Sir Tristrem, p. 119.

Probably, an intercessor, A.S. thingere, id. from thingian, to intercede, to manage one's thing, cause or business; or to do so in a thing, i. e. a court or convention. V. THING.

THINE, THYNE, adv. Thence; often with fra, from; prefixed; as, Fra thyne, thence. See Sup.

i. e. by far more troublesome or difficult.

A.S. thanon, inde, illinc; or perhaps from Su.G. then, this, with the prep. prefixed.

THINE-FURTH, adv. Thenceforward.

And til Cumnokys Kyrk broucht he
This Schyr Dowgald to mak fewtè
To the wardane: and Gallway
Fra thine-furth held the Scottis fay.

Wyntown, viii. 42. 174.

A.S. thanon furth, deinceps, deinde, de caetero.

THING, s. 1. Affairs of state.

And gyff it hapnyt Robert the King
To pass to God, quhill thai war ying,
The gud Erle off Murreff, Thomas,
And the Lord alsua off Dowglas,
Suld haff thaim into gouernyng,
Quhill thai had wyt to ster thair thing,
And than the Lordschip suld thai ta.

Barbour, xx. 142. MS.

Not ring, or reigne, as in Edit. Pink. and others. Ster thar thing is, manage their affairs of state.

2. It seems to signify a meeting, or convention, concerning public affairs.

Chanslar, schaw furth quhat ye desyr off me.
The Chanslar said, The most causs of this thing,
To procur peess I am send fra our King,
With the gret seill, and woice off hys parliament,
Quhat I bynd her oure barnage sall consent.

Wallace, vi. 904. MS.

Not understanding thing in this sense, Editors have reckoned it necessary to substitute another word for causs, i. e. cause; as in Edit. 1648;

The chancellor said, The most part of this thing,
To procure peace, I am sent from the King.

Isl. thing, Su.G. ting, a meeting of the citizens called for consultation concerning public affairs; also used for the forum, the place of meeting or judgment. Hence Thingvoll-r, the plain of convention, (which has been viewed as the origin of the name of Dingwall in the county of Ross;) Thingstod, the place of meeting; Al-thing, an universal convention.

There is a parish of this name in Shetland, the signification of which confirms the etymon given of Dingwall.

"Tingwall—is said to derive its name from a small island, in a water called the Loch of Tingwall, and joined to the nearest shore by the remains of a stone wall. In this island, the courts of law are said to have been anciently held, and to this day it is called the Law-Taing." Stat. Acc. xxi. 274. It is more properly written Law-ting; Neill's Tour, p. 89.

The etymon given of Tingwall, Stat. Acc. ubi sup. rather opposes the preceding account. For it is said, that 'Taing, in the language of that country, signifies a point of land stretching out into the water.' See Sup.

In the Orkney Islands, the Law-ting, or the "Supreme Court, in which business of the utmost importance was transacted," continued till the time of the Commonwealth. V. Barry's Orkney, p. 217.

It is thought that Ting, as denoting a convention, is derived from Su.G. ting-a, to speak, Alem. ding-an; because they anciently met in their public assemblies for conference, and in this manner settled their business. This etymon is supported by analogy. Moes.G. mathls signifies forum, from mathl-ian, to speak. In the Laws of the Lombards, the place of public meeting is called the Mall, from Goth. mal, discourse. Among the ancient Germ. Sprache also denoted such a convention; from sprach-en, to converse; as Fr. Parlement is from parl-er, to speak. V. Ting, Ihre.

THING,* s. 1. Ain thing, own exclusive property.

2. When preceded by the it expresses approbation; as, "That's quite the thing;" or, with the negative particle, disapprobation; as, "I doubt he's no the thing." 3. The thing is sometimes put before the relative instead of that or those; as, "Send me mair bukes; I have read the thing that I hae." S.

THINGS, pl. "He's nae great things" is often said of a person to intimate that the speaker holds his character in slight estimation. Applied also to things, intimating that they are of little account. S.

To THINK,* v. n. To wonder; as, Fat's that, I think. S.

To THINK LANG. To become weary; to feel ennui. S.

To THINK SHAME. To feel abashed; to have a sense of shame, S. This idiom seems pretty ancient.

Bot ane thing have I hecht sickerly,
That nane sal cum about hir, Sir, bot I.
The virgine is bot yong, and think[i]s shame;
And is full laith to cum in ane ill name.

Priests of Peblis, S.P.Repr. i. 32.

She perceived that I thought shame;
She asked not what was my name.—Sir Egeir, v. 304.

Or, need this day think shame compar'd

Wi' auld lang syne?

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, i. 58.

THIN-SKINNED, adj. 1. Possessing great sensibility.

2. Apt to take offence on slight grounds; touchy. S.

THIR, pron. pl. These; used only when objects are near, S. thur, Cumb.

Be thir quheyne, that sa worthily
Wane sik a king, and sa mychty,
Ye may weill be ensampill se,
That na man suld disparyt be.

i. e. "These few." Barbour, iii. 249. MS.

And all the Lordis that thar war

To thir twa wardanys athis swar.—Ibid. xx. 146. MS.

—Thir hertis in herdis coud hove. Houlate, i. 2.

Isl. theyr, illi, thaer, illae. V. Runolf. Ion. Isl. Vocab. The learned Hickes has demonstrated, that these might be rendered not less properly by Lat. hi, E. these.

Sibb. observes, that in some cases there seems no correspondent English word; as, "Thir shillings (which I hold concealed in my hand) are better than these upon the table." A Scotsman would say, "than thai." For thir and thai are generally opposed, like these and those; although they seem properly to have both the same meaning.

To THIRL, THYRL, v. a. 1. To perforate; to bore; to drill, S.

Besides your targe, in battle keen
But little danger tholes,
While mine wi' mony a thudd is clowr'd,
An' thirl'd sair wi' holes.

Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 12.

2. To pierce; to penetrate.

Bot yhit the lele Scottis men,
That in that feld ware feychtand then,
To-gyddyr stwd sa fermly
Strykand before thame manlykly,
Swa that nane thare *thyr*l thame mycht.

Wyntown, viii. 15. 31.

The bustuous strake throw al the armour thrang,
That styntit na thing at the fyne hawbrek,
Quhil thorow the coist thirllit the dedely prik.

Doug. Virgil, 334, 23.

Thryis the holkit craggis herd we yell,
Quhare as the swelth and the rokkis thirllit.

Ibid. 87, 28.

3. To pierce; to wound, metaph.

— My *thir*lit heart dois bleid,
My painis dois exceid.—

Throw langour of my sweit, so *thir*lit is my spreit.

Bannatyne Poems, p. 203.

Lord Hailes expl. this, "bound, engaged;" misled by the common use of the word, S. as denoting the obligation of a tenant to bring his grain to a certain mill. V. THIRL, v. 4.

A.S. thirl-ian, perforare; whence E. thrill and drill. Su.G. trill-a, Teut. trill-en, drill-en, id.

To THIRL, v. a. To thrill; to cause to vibrate, S.

There was ae sang, amang the rest,
It thirl'd the heart-strings thro' the breast,
A' to the life. Burns, iii. 236.

To THIRL, THIRLE, v. n. To pass with a tingling sensation, S. dirle, and dinle, synon.

And then he speaks with sic a taking art,
His words they thirle like music thro' my heart.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 79.

Thro' ilka limb and lith the terror thirl'd,
At every time the dowie monster skirl'd.

Ross's Helenore, p. 24.

THIRLING, part. adj. Piercingly cold. S.

THIRL-HOLE, s. The hole into which the coulter of a plough is inserted. S.

To THIRL, v. a. To furl.

"Tak in your top salis, and thirl them." Compl. S. p. 64.

This at first view might seem a corr. of the E. word. But it is rather allied to Teut. drill-en, trill-en, gyrare, rotare, volvere, conglomerare.

To THIRL, THIRLL, v. a. 1. To enslave; to thrall.

"Ye sal nocht alanerly be iniurit be euil vordis, bot als ye sal be violently strykkyn in your bodeis, quharfor ye sal lyf in mair thirlage nor brutal bestis, quhilkis ar thirllit of nature." Compl. S. p. 144.

"Thay nicht outhir thirll the Scottis to maist vile seruytude, or ellis expell thaym (gyf thay plesit) out of Albioun." Bellend. Cron. Fol. 76, a.

Thus four times thirld and overharld,
You're the great refuse of all the world.

Rob. III's Answ. to Henry IV. Watson's Coll. ii. 6.

From A.S. Isl. thrael, Su.G. trael, a bond-servant. According to the ingenious Editor of Spec. Eng. Poetry, i. 20, the name of a slave is from thirl-ian, to bore. He accordingly quotes that passage concerning a servant, Exod. xxi. 6, from the A.S. version; "He shall also bring him to the door," or "to the door-post," and thirlie his eare mid anum aele, "and bore his ear through with an awl:" adding that this custom was "retained by our forefathers, and executed on their slaves at the church door."

If this custom can be authenticated, it must greatly confirm the etymon given. Yet one difficulty would still remain; that, although Isl. thrael, thraela, Dan. trael, and Su.G. traell, signify a bond-servant, there is no similar term in these languages, signifying to bore, except Su.G. drill-a.

Ihre, with less probability, derives Su.G. trael, a bond-servant, from A.S. thre-an, to correct, to chasten; observing, that the term properly denotes a slave that is wont to be beaten, or that wretched race of men who seem born for stripes. Su.G. annodag also signified a slave; with this difference, however, according to the same learned writer, that it strictly denoted one who had been made captive in war, or otherwise subjected, whereas trael was the designation of one born a slave.

2. To bind or subject to; as when a person lays himself, or is laid, under a necessity of acting in any particular way, or when a thing is bound by some fixed law. S. I'll no thirl myself, or be thirled, to ony tradesman; i. e. I will not confine my custom to him, as if I were bound to do it.

"All thingis (qubilkis ar comprehendit within the speir of the mone) ar sa thirlit to deith and alteration, that thai ar othir consumit afore us, or ellis we afore thame." Bel-lend. Descr. Alb. c. 1.

"Na Mailman, or Fermour, may thirle his Lord of his frie tenement." Baron Courts, c. 48.

3. To bind, by the terms of a lease, or otherwise, to grind at a certain mill, S.

"Thirlage is constituted by writing, either directly or indirectly. It may be constituted directly, first, by the proprietor thirling his tenants to his own mill by an act or regulation of his own court." Erskine's Instit. B. ii, Tit. 9, s. 21.

THIRL, s. The term used to denote those lands, the tenants of which are bound to bring all their grain to a certain mill; properly, the jurisdiction attached to a mill, S. See Sup.

"The astricted lands are called the thirl, or the sucken." Erskine's Instit. B. ii, Tit. 9, s. 20. V. SUCKEN.

THIRLAGE, s. 1. Thraldom, in a general sense.

This mysfortoun is myne of auld thirlage,
As therto detbund in my wrechit age.

Doug. Virgil, 366, 28.

2. Servitude to a particular mill, S.

"That servitude by which lands are astricted or thirled to a particular mill, to which the possessors must carry the grain of the growth of the astricted lands to be grinded, for the payment of such duties as are either expressed or implied in the constitution of the right." Erskine, ubi sup. s. 18.

3. Used in regard to mortgaging of property or rents, S.

THIRLE-MULTER, s. The duty to be paid by thirlage for grinding. S.

THIRLDOME, s. Thraldom.

Na he, that ay hass levyt fre,
May nocht knaw weill the propyrté,

The angry, na the wrechyt dome,
That is cowplyt to foule thyrldome.

THIRLESTANE-GRASS, s. Saxifrage. S.

THO, adv. Then, at that time. See Sup.

Ane wattry cloud blak and dirk but dout,
Gan ouer thare hedis tho appere ful richt.

Doug. Virgil, 127, 35.

This word occurs very frequently in the same sense in Chaucer and Gower. It is also used by Langland, in a passage which contains such genuine strokes of poetry, that I cannot resist the inclination of transcribing it.

Consummatum est, quod Christe, and coinseth for to swonne,

Pitiously and pale as a prisoner doth that dieth;
The Lord of life & of light tho laied his eies together;
The day for dread withdrew, & darck became the sunne;

The wall wagged and clefte, & all the world quaued;
Dead men for that dine came out of depe graues,
And tolde why that tempest so longe time endured.

'For a bitter battel,' the dead body saide,
'Life & deth in this darknes, here one fordoth the other:'

'Shal no wight wit witterly, who shal haue maistrye
'Er Sondag about sunne rising;' & sanke with tha' to thearth.

V. ALLTHOCHT.

Doug. Virgil, 49, 36.

THOCHT, s. 1. A very little of any thing. Syn. Ken-nin. 2. A moment. V. THOUGHT. S.

THOCHTY, adj. 1. Thoughtful. 2. Given to reflection; attentive. S.

—He past a-pon a day

Or shake-winds owr my rigs wi' pith had blawn,

To this I cou'd hae said, "I carena by."

V. ALLTHOCHT.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 6.

THOILL, TOLL, s. One of the ancient privileges of barons, usually mentioned in charters.

"Barons hauand liberties, with sock, sak, theme, thoill, infang-theif, and out-fang-theif, may doe justice in their court, vpon ane man, taken within their fredome, saised with manifest thift." Quon. Attach. c. 100, s. 1. Toll and thame, Reg. Maj. B. i. c. 4, s. 2.

According to Skene, it is an immunity from payment of custom in buying.

"He quha is infest with Toll, is custome free, and payis na custome. — All Earles, Barrones, Knichts, vassalles, life-renters, Free-halders, and al quha hes landes nomine eleemosynae, suld be quite and free fra payment of Toll and custome within burgh; in bying meate and claith, and vther necessair things to their awin proper vse. Bot gif ony of them be commoun merchandes, they suld paye tholl and custome; albeit they haue als great libertie as Barronnes." De Verb. Sign. vo. Toll.

In this sense it was also used in E. V. Cowel, vo. Toll. But Spelman defines it to be "the liberty of buying or selling on one's own lands." It occurs indeed in both senses in the A.S. laws; although most frequently in the latter. V. Lye, vo. Toll. L.B. tholonium, telonium.

To THOLE, THOILL, v. a. 1. To bear; to undergo; to suffer, S. A. Bor. Chauc.

—The King, and his cumpany,
That war ii. c. and na ma,
Frai thai had send thar horss thaim fra,
Wandryt emang the hey montanys,
Quhar he, and his, oft tholyt pany.

Barbour, iii. 372. MS.

Doug. Virgil, 79, 52.

A.S. thol-ian, Moes.G. thul-an, Alem. thol-en, Isl. thol-a, Su.G. tol-a, Germ. Belg. duld-en, pati, ferre.

Ihre thinks that the ancient Latins had used tol-o or tul-o in the same sense. This he infers from the use of tuli, the pret of fer-o, which is employed to express the bearing of hardships; and also from toler-o, which he considers as derived from tol-o, in the same manner as gener-o, from the obsolete gen-o. He also refers to Gr. ταλ-ω, suffero, perpetior, &c. ταλ-ω, miser.

2. To bear with, not to oppose.

"Quha brekis this command? — Thai that tholis nocht thair father and mother, suppose thai do thame iniuris and be cummersum." Abp. Hamiltoun's Catechisme, 1552, Fol. 46, b.

3. To bear patiently; to endure, S.

Son of the goddes, lat vs follow that way
Bakwart or fordwart quhiddir our fatis driue:
Quhat euir betid, this is na bute to striue:
Al chance of fortoun tholand ouercummin is.

Doug. Virgil, 151, 34.

"Happy is the man that tholis tribil, for quhen he is preuit & knawin, he sall resaif the croune of lyfe, quhilk God hais promissit till thame that luffis him." Abp. Hamiltoun's Catechisme, 1552, Fol. 27, a.

A.S. thol-ian, Moes.G. thul-an, tolerare. A.S. Swa lange ic eow tholige? Moes.G. Und quha thuldu izwis? How long shall I suffer, or exercise patience with, you? Mar. ix. 19. Su.G. tol-a, patienter ferre. Moes.G. thuldaina, A.S. tholemodnesse, Isl. thol, patientia, Su.G. tolig, patiens.

4. To restrain one's self; to exercise self-command; as a v. n.

Had Bruce past by but baid to Sanct Jhonstoun,
Be haill assent he had resawyt the croun;
On Cumyn syn he mycht haiff done the law.
He couth nocht thoill fra tym that he him saw.

Wallace, x. 1162. MS.

5. To tolerate, in relation to one accounted a heretic.

"For if I thoill him, I will be accusit for all thame that he corruptis and infectis in Heresie." Memorand. Archbishop of St. Androis, Knox's Hist. p. 103.

Su.G. tol-a, to tolerate, Seren.

6. To exempt from military execution, on certain terms.

The King gert men of gret noblay
Ryd in till Ingland for to prey;
That broucht owt gret plenté of fe:
And sum contreis tholyt he,
For wittaill, that in gret foyssoun
He gert bring smertly to the toun.

Barbour, xvii. 228. MS.

And with some countries trewes tooke he.—Edit. 1620.

7. To permit; to allow, S.

Yeit glaid wes he that he had chapyt swa,
Bot for his men gret murnyng can he ma;
Flayt by him self to the Makar off buffe,
Quhy he sufferyt he suld sic paynys pruff.
He wyst nocht weill giff it wes Goddis will,
Rycht or wrang his fortoun to fulfill:
Hade he plesd God, he trowit it mycht nocht be,
He suld him thoill in sic perplexité.

Wallace, v. 234. MS.

Thoill is evidently used as synon. with suffer, v. 230, as denoting permission. V. also viii. 43.

Faint-hearted wights, wha dully stood afar,
Tholling your reason great attempts to mar.—

Ramsay's Poems, i. 325.

8. To wait; to expect.

This seems to be the sense in the following passage.

"We suld nocht prescriue to God any special tyme to heir our prayer, bot patiently commit all to God baith the maner of our helping and the tyme, according as the Prophet commandis in the Psalme, sayand: Expecta Dominum, viriliter age, confortetur cor tuum, et sustine Dominum. Wait apon our Lord, do all thi deidis stoutly, lat thi hart be of gud comfort, and thole our Lord to wyrk all thingis to his pleasure." Abp. Hamiltoun's Catechisme, 1552, Fol. 46, b.

Thole a wee, wait a little; A. Bor. Thole a while; corresponding to Su.G. tola tiden, tempus expectare. The idea plainly is; "Exercise patience for a short time." Su.G. gifwa sig tol, to be patient of delay.

9. To thole the law, to be subjected to a legal trial. See S.

"It is—forbidden, that ony man, that is officiar of ony countrie, or ony man, that indictis ane vther for ony action, be on hys assyse, that sall thole the law, vnder the pane of ten pund to the king." Acts, Ja. I. 1424. c. 56. Edit. 1566.

10. To require; to stand in need of; as, He wad thole a mends, he would need to be reformed. S.

To THOLE aff. 1. To admit of a part being taken off. S.

2. To account one's self sufficiently warm, without some particular part of dress. S.

To THOLE on. To admit of any thing being put on. S.

To THOLE to. 1. To admit the addition of. 2. To admit the door, &c. being shut. S.

To THOLE, v. n. To endure; to exercise patience under suffering. Thole a wee, bear for a little. S.

THOLANCE, s. Sufferance; toleration. S.

THOLEABLE, adj. Tolerable; what may be suffered. S.

THOLESUM, adj. The same as Tholeable. S.

THOLMUDE, THOILMUDE, adj. Patient.

In vane that name thou beris, I dare say,
Gif thou sa thoilmude sufferis lede away
Sa grete ane price but derene or batell.

Ross's Helenore, p. 23.

To THOW, v. a. To address in the singular number, as a token of contempt.

This v. is used by Shakspeare in the same sense. I take notice of it, therefore, merely to observe that it had been early used in S.

Wallace answer'd, said, "Thow art in the wrang."

"Quham thowis thow, Scot? in faith thow serwis a blaw."

Till him he ran, and out a suerd can draw.

Barbour, xviii. 71. MS.

This may also be the sense of the term in the following passage.

Like as twa bustuous bullis by and by,—
Quhen thay assembl in austerne battall thra,
With front to front and horn for horne attanis
Ruschand togiddir with crones and ferefull granis.—

Doug. Virgil, 437, 47.

4. Opposite; reluctant; averse.

Belg. gedrang, id. Isl. thraung-ur, Su.G. traang, arctus, angustus.

2. Intimate; familiar, S. thick, grit, synon.

Fu' tyr'd he seem'd, yet back wi' me wou'd gang,

Syne hame we scour'd fu' cheery and fu' thrang :

Wi' kindly heart he aft your welfare speer'd.

Morison's Poems, p. 136.

"They are very throng, for intimate together, is a very common Scotticism." Sir J. Sinclair's Observ. p. 109.

V. GILL-WHEEP.

3. Busy; busily employed. 4. Applied to the time or season of busy engagement. 5. Transferred to the engagement or work itself. S.

THRANG, s. 1. A throng; a crowd, S. See Sup.

2. Constant employment, S.

"Ye canna get leave to thrive for thrang;" Ramsay's
S. Prov. p. 81.

3. Straits; a state of hardship or oppression.

The nobill men, that ar off Scottis kind,

Thar petous dede ye kepe in to your mynd,

And ws rawenge, quhen we ar set in thrang.

Wallace, vii. 237. MS.

Editors, not understanding the sense, have changed the word to throng. It is A.S. thrang, turba, or Isl. thraeng, angusta, used metaph. Su.G. traangmaal, necessitas.

4. Pressure of business. 5. Intimacy. 6. Bustle; confusion. S.

THRANGERIE, s. A bustle. S.

THRANGITY, s. The state of being throng. S.

THRAPPLE, s. The windpipe. V. THROPILL. S.

To THRAPPLE, v. a. To throttle or strangle, S. Thropple, A. Bor. V. THROPILL. See Sup.

To THRAPPLE up. To devour; to gobble up. S.

To THRAPPLE, v. a. To entangle with cords. S.

THRASH, s. A rush. V. THRUSH. See Sup.

To THRATCH, v. n. To gasp convulsively, as one does in the agonies of death, S.B.; to draucht, synon.

Graeniu in mortal agony,

Their steeds were thratchin near.

Jamieson's Popul. Ball. i. 245.

Isl. threyte, certo, fatigo, laboro; thraute, labor; Su.G.
trot, fatigatus, trott-a, fatigare. See Sup.

THRATCH, s. The oppressed and violent respiration of one in the last agonies, S.B.

Dead-trach occurs in this sense, evidently an errat. for dead-thratch.

"That same deceitfull illusion—having, by slow degrees, mounted to so monstrous an height, is now, agayne, neare the dead-trach, to the Devil's great displeasure." Forbes's Eubulus, p. 107.

THRAVE, s. Twenty-four sheaves. V. THRAIF. S.

To THRAVE, v. n. To have wages in proportion to the number of thraves cut down in harvest. S.

THRAVER, s. A person who works on these terms. S.

To THRAW, v. a. To cast; to throw.

—With how grete thud in the mellé,

Ane lance towartis his aduersaris thrawis he.

A.S. thraw-an, jacere.

Doug Virgil, 371, 38.

To THRAW, v. a. 1. To wreath; to twist, S.

"Thraw the wand while it's green;" Ferguson's S.

Prov. p. 30.

Throw is used in the same sense. V. TITUPP.

2. To wrench; to sprain, S. V. Gl. Shirr. I've thrawn my kute, I have sprained my ancle.

3. To distort; to wrest.

"Sum factius, and curius men techeis the scripture to be iuge, quha vnder the pretence of the auancement and libertie of the Euangell, hes euir socht the libertie of thare flesche, furthsetting of thare errouris, auancement of thare awin glore, curiosite and opinioun, wrestand and thrawing the scripture, contrare the godlie menyng of the samyn, to be the scheild and buklare to thair lustes, and heresiis."
 Kennedy, Commendatar of Crosraguell, p. 6.

4. To oppose; to resist. V. THRAWIN. To carry any measure by a strong hand, S.

"The Lordis perceaving that, come vnto hir with dissimulat countenance, with reuerent and faire speeches, and said, that thair intentionis were nawayes to thraw hir; and thairfoir immediatlye wald repone hir with free-dome to hir awin palace of Halyrudhous, to doe as shoe list." Historie James Sext, p. 21.

5. To Thraw out, to extort; to obtain by violence.

"When hee hath thrawne all these good turnes out of them, whereof they haue noe wite, because they doe it for ane vther end, hee maketh ilkane of them to be hang-men to vther." Bruce's Eleven Serm. R. 1. b.

THRAW, s. A pang; an agony. The dede thrawis, the agonies of death, S.

Doun duschit the beist dede on the land can ly,
Spreuland and flychterand in the dede thrawis.
Doug. Virgil, 143, 51.

Isl. thra, aegritudo; Su.G. traege, dolor, moestitia; A.S. threa, poena, inflictio; threow-an, agonizare. Rudd. confounds this with the term denoting a short while. But they are radically different.

THRAW in the belly. Belly-ache; gripes. S.

Lasses were kiss'd frae lug to lug,

Nor seem'd to tak it ill,

Doug. Virgil, 108, 21.

O.E. throw, Rom. Cueur de Lyon. By throwes, by turns.

By throwes eche of them it hadde.

Gower's Conf. Am. Fol. 10.

A.S. thrah, Isl. thrauge, cursus, decursus temporis, tempus continuum; from Moes.G. thrag-jan, currere. The A.S. term is used indefinitely. Sume thrage, in quoddam tempus; lange thrage, in longum tempus. It seems to have been originally used, by our writers, in a similar manner; the duration being determined by the epithet.

For it is best

Thy wery ene thou priuely withdrew

From langsum labour, and slepe ane litle thraw.

Doug. Virgil, 156, 44.

THRAW, s.

The Kyng hym self Latinus, the great here,

Wyntown, v. 10. 579.

Fordun gives it the same name. Scotichr. Lib. ii. c. 7.
He elsewhere calls it Thirlitwall, observing that it was thus denominated on account of the gaps made in it, here and there, by the Scots and Picts, that they might have free issue and entry. Latine Murus perforatus, Ibid. Lib. iii. c. 10.

To THRIMLE, THRIMBLE, THRUMBLE, v. a. To press; to squeeze. Also, to handle. See Sup.

I saw my selfe, quhen grufelings amid his cafe
Twa bodies of our sort he tuke and raife,
And intil his hidduous hand thame thrimblit and wrang,
And on the stanis out thar harnis dang.

V. v. n.

Doug. Virgil, 89, 28.

To THRIMLE, THRIMMEL, THRUMBLE, v. n. To press into, or through, with difficulty and eagerness, S. applied both to a crowd collectively, and to an individual pressing into a crowd, S.B.

For quhen the feirs Achil persewit sare,
Chasand affrayit Troianis here and thare,
The grete routis to the wallis thrimland,
To fore his face half dede for fere trimland.—

Doug. Virgil, 155, 12.

Peter, who was ever maist sudden, sayis: "Thou art thrumbled and thrustud be the multitude, and yet thou speeris quha hes twitched thee." Bruce's Serm. Sac. J. 5, a.

It is strange that Rudd. and Sibb. should both view this as perhaps originally the same with Thirl. It does not, as the latter asserts, even bear the same meaning. For it nowise suggests the idea of drilling, or boring.

It might seem allied to A.S. thrym, multitudo. But I would rather deduce it from Teut. drommel, res simul compactae et densae; from dromm-en, premere. It may, however, have the same origin with the following v.

To THRIMLE, v. n. To wrestle; to fumble, S.B. Gl. Shirr. See Sup.

This seems the meaning of thrimble as used by Adamson.
Then on the plain we caprel'd wonder fast:

"Thrown up," N. Tytler. But it strictly signifies, thrust up.

A.S. thring-an, urgere, premere, Isl. threing-ia, Su.G. traeng-a, Belg. dring-en, id. from Su.G. traeng, strait, narrow. Ihre views Moes.G. thraih-an, arctare, premere, as proclaiming the antiquity of the word. Hence *thraih-and*s vigs, narrow way, Matt. vii. 14. The v. Dring, q. v. is evidently from the same fountain.

And saw him keipit with a busche of speiris:
Considering him so able for the weiris,
A radius crown of rubies scho him gaif,
And said, In feild go furth, and fend the laif.

Dunbar's Thistle and Rose, Bannatyne Poems, p. 5.

It is not easy to determine the particular species of thistle which should be viewed as the Scottish emblem. Most probably it is the Spear thistle, carduus lanceolatus, Linn., which is a wide-spreading elegant plant, very common in Scotland, and which accords well with Buchanan's celebrated inscription, Nemo me impune lacesset.—The Milk thistle, or Our Lady's thistle, Carduus Marianus, has been preferred by some. It grows on the banks of Stirling Castle, and about Fort William; but Lightfoot, in his Flora, denies that it is indigenous to Scotland, never being found but in the neighbourhood of cultivation. Besides, the finely variegated leaves of the Milk thistle would not probably have escaped the praises of Dunbar and others.

This seems to be the Scots thistle referred to by Dr. Garnet, who, when describing the castle of Dumbarton, says; "The true Scotch thistle, a rare plant, having its light green leaves variegated with white, grows in considerable quantity about the bottom of the rock, and sparingly even on the very top." Tour through the Highlands, &c. vol. i. p. 14. Others give the preference to the lofty Cotton thistle, onspordon acanthium, which grows on calcareous soils, by our sea-shores, to the height of 10 or 12 feet. But it is destitute of the formidable spines of the two former.

This name, with the r, does not seem to occur in any other dialect. It may, however, be supposed that this was its ancient form among the Goths, as the linnet, which Lat. is called carduelis from carduus, because it feeds among thistles, is in Isl. denominated throstr. V. G. Andr.

THRISSLY, adj. Testy; crabbed, S.B. See Sup.

This at first view might seem a metaph. term formed from thrissill, a thistle, to which our national motto, referred to above, is certainly applicable. But perhaps it is rather allied to Germ. verdriesslich, fretful, uncivil, rude, &c. or A.S. thristlece, bold, daring.

- In Edit. 1620, the word traist is used. Through may be from the same origin with Su.G. trogen, trygg, faithful, tro, to believe.
It may be questioned, however, whether the phrase, gaiff through, be not equivalent to gave place; from A.S. thurh, through, a prep. respecting place.

L.B. truc-a denotes a coffin. Sepulchrum—fabricavit; —similiter Trucam etiam, in qua sepeliri debuit, cum ap. Du Cange.

It has been supposed, but apparently without sufficient ground, that our term has some affinity with A.S. thurh, through, and with dure, door. Ihre conjectures, that there has been an ancient Celtic or Scythic word, denoting any thing hollow or perforated; and that not only Su.G. trog, a trough, but A.S. thruh, sarcophagus, is allied to it.

The word thruch may have been originally used to signify a grave or coffin promiscuously; especially as in former ages, in this country, a grave was properly composed of four stones set on end. The cover, laid on these, seems to have been called the thruch-stane. Perhaps the form of a grave, or of such a coffin, gave rise to the name; from its resemblance to a trough. The hold of a ship may in like manner have been denominated a thurroh, from its hollow form. This term is used by Chaucer.

To THRUS, THUSCH, v. n. 1. To fall, or come down, with a rushing or crashing noise.

Adam Wallace, the ayr off Ricardtoun,

Straik ane Bewmound, a squier of renoun,

On the pyssan, with his hand burnyst bar,

The thrusande blaid his halss in sonder schar.

Wallace, iii. 190. MS.

Hand should perhaps be brand.

2. To cleave with a crashing noise, used actively.

Awkwart the bak than Wallace can him ta,

With his gud suerd that was off burnyst steill;

His body in twa it thruschyt euirilkdeill.

Wallace, xi. 252. MS.

This is merely an oblique sense. In Gl. Perth Edit. it is rendered burnished. The Editor has been probably misled by the boldness of some former Editor, who has inserted this word in the text.

The birnisht blade his halse in sunder share.

Isl. thrush-a, strepere; G. Andr. p. 268. There seems to be no reason to doubt that this is radically the same with Moes.G. drius-an, cadere; draus-jan, ex alto deorsum praecipitare: whence draus, a fall, ruin; Teut. druysch-en, strepere, impetere, stridere, fremere; and druysch, impetus, strepitus. Junius has observed, that Belg. ge-druysch signifies a great noise, or more properly, a prodigious crash of any great mass suddenly broken and falling; Immanis fragor magnae alicujus molis ex improviso disruptae ac procidentis. Gl. Goth. The Goth. word, however varied in different dialects, has primarily signified the act of rushing or falling, and hence been secondarily used to denote the noise produced by a fall or disruption. Ihre views Moes.G. drius-a as having the same origin with Su.G. rus-a, to rush; d being prefixed.

THUA, adj. Two; Aberd. Reg. S.

THUD, s. 1. The forcible impression made by a tempestuous wind; as including the idea of the loud, but intermitting, noise caused by it, S.

Small birdis flokand throw thik ronny's thrang
In chirmyng, and with cheping changit thare sang,
Sekand hidlis and hirny's thame to hyde
Fra ferefull thuddis of the tempestuous tyde.

Tyde, i. e. season. Doug. Virgil, 201, 22.

About the trie ruts thir twa ran;

Bot did thole mony thud:
For cauld thay wer discomfeist clene,
The schowrs wer sa seueir.

Burel's Pilgr. Watson's Coll. ii. 22.

Thus it is commonly said, The wind comes in thuds, when it comes in gusts; and especially when it strikes on any body that conveys the sound, as a door, &c. S.

It sometimes implies the idea of that velocity of motion which distinguishes a stormy wind.

Before thame all furth boltis with ane bend
Nisus ane fer way, stert mare spedely
Than thud of weddir, or thundir in the sky.

Quanto turbine, Virg. Doug. Virgil, 138, 21.

2. Impetus, resembling that of a tempestuous wind.

And how sternlie he raises vp his scheild,
Or with how grete thud in the mellé
Ane lance towartis his aduersaris thrawis he.

Quo turbine, Virg. Doug. Virgil, 371, 37.

3. Transferred to any loud noise, as that of thunder, cannons, &c. The noise of a fall. See Sup.

Morison's Poems, p. 151.

5. In a moral sense, the violent assaults of temptation. S.

It is surprising that Rudd. should view this word as formed from the sound. We have seen that Doug. uses it as giving the sense of Lat. turbo. Now, A.S. thoden conveys this very idea: "Turbo, noise, din, a whirlwind;" Somner. This must certainly be traced to Isl. thyt, thaut. ad thiot-a, cum sonitu transvolo; thyt-r, sonitus; G. Andr. p. 266. Germ. dud-en, sonare, seems radically the same. Ir. dud, a noise in the ear.

To THUD, v. n. 1. To rush with a hollow sound, S.

—The blastis wyth thare bustuous soune,

THUD, s. The act of wheedling or flattering. S.

THULMARD, THUMART, s. A polecat. V. FOWMART. S.

To THUMB, v. a. To prepare any thing by applying the thumbs to it; a vulgar mode of making a thing clean, S.

—Honest Jean brings forward, in a clap,
The green-horn cutties rattling in her lap;
And frae them wyl'd the sleekest that was there,
And thumb'd it round, and gave it to the Squire.

Ross's Helenore, p. 116.

THUMB,* s. From the number of proverbial phrases in which the thumb is introduced, it appears to have been esteemed by our ancestors as the chief instrument of operation; as, Ye needna Fash your Thaum, that will be a vain attempt. That's aboon your Thaum, you will not be able to attain that. S.

To PUT or CLAP the THOUM ON any thing. To conceal it carefully; as, Clap your Thaum on that. S.

RULE of THOUM. To do a thing by Rule of Thaum, to do it nearly in the way of guess-work, or at hap-hazard. S.

To LEAVE one TO WHISTLE ON one's THOUM. To leave one in a state of complete disappointment. S.

THUMBIKINS, s. pl. An instrument of torture, applied as a screw to the thumbs, S. See Sup.

"A respectable gentleman in the town, a relation of the celebrated Principal Carstairs, has in his possession the identical thumbikins, with which the Principal was severely tortured.—The story of the thumbikins is, that Carstairs asked, and obtained them in a present from his tormentors. 'I have heard, Principal,' said King William to him the first time he waited on his Majesty, 'that you were tortured with something they call thumbikins; Pray what sort of instrument of torture is it?' 'I will shew it you,' replied Carstairs, 'the next time I have the honour to wait on your Majesty.' The Principal was as good as his word. 'I must try them,' said the King; 'I must put in my thumbs here,—now, Principal, turn the screw.'—'O not so gently—another turn—another—Stop! stop! no more—another turn, I'm afraid, would make me confess any thing.' P. Greenock, Statist. Acc. v. 583.

This mode of torture was practised on the persecuted Presbyterians, during the reign of Charles II. Whether the merciful rulers of that period borrowed the idea from the Spaniards, I cannot say. But it has been generally asserted, that part of the cargo of the Invincible Armada was a large assortment of thumbikins, which it was meant should be employed as powerful arguments for convincing the heretics.

THUMBLES, s. pl. Round-leaved Bell-flowers. S.
THUMB-LICKING, s. An ancient mode of confirming a bargain, S.

"Another symbol was anciently used in proof that a sale was perfected, which continues to this day in bargains of lesser importance among the lower rank of people, the parties licking and joining of thumbs: and decrees are yet extant in our records, prior to the institution of the college of justice, sustaining sales upon summonses of thumb-licking, upon this medium, That the parties had licked thumbs at finishing the bargain." Erskine's Inst. B. iii. T. 3. s. 5.

The same form is retained among the vulgar in the Highlands; an imprecation against the defaulter being generally added to the symbol. See Sup.

There is evidently an allusion to this mode of entering into engagements, in the S. song,

There's my thumb, I'll ne'er beguile thee.

Ramsay's Works, ii. 263.

This custom, although it now appears ridiculous and childish, bears indubitable marks of great antiquity. We learn from Tacitus, that it existed among the Iberians, a people who inhabited the country now called Georgia. His language seems also to apply to their neighbours the Armenians. "It was customary," he says, "with these kings, in concluding a peace, or striking an alliance, to join their right hands, and bind their thumbs together, and draw them hard with a running knot. Immediately when the blood had diffused itself to the extremities, it was let out by a slight prick, and mutually licked by the contracting parties. Their covenant was henceforth deemed sacred, as being ratified by each other's blood." V. Tacit. Ann. Lib. xii. Anc. Univ. Hist. ix. 516.

Hence it has been supposed by some interpreters, that Adonibezek might excuse his cruelty, in cutting off the thumbs of threescore kings, by pretending that he thus punished their treachery in breaking the covenant that had been confirmed by this symbol. V. Pol. Synops, in Jud. i. 7.

This custom might be introduced into our country by the Goths, as the Iberi appear to have been a Scythian nation. Anc. Univ. Hist. vi. 57. x. 138.

That the Goths were not strangers to it, appears by the definition which Ihre gives of Su.G. Topp. Formula digito micantium, et veteri more pollice pollici opposito, consensum indicantium. Hence, it would seem Germ. doppe is used as an invitation to strike a bargain. Wachter thinks that it may be viewed as the imperat. of duppen, percutere. Ihre also mentions Fr. topp-er, convenire, oblatas conditiones acceptare. See Sup.

This custom is well known on the continent of India. I have not heard that it is used among the Hindoos; but am assured by a gentleman, who has long resided in that country, that he has often observed the Moors, when concluding a bargain, do it in the very same manner as the vulgar in Scotland, by licking their thumbs.

Something of a similar kind prevailed among the Romans. According to Pierius, the hand being stretched out, the thumb, bent downward, was held by them a symbol of the confirmation of peace. He quotes Quintilian as his authority. Ait, Qui gestus in statu pacificatorum esse solet, qui inclinato in humerum dextrum capite, brachio ab aure praetenso, manum inflexo pollice extendit. Hieroglyphic. Lib. xxxvi. Tit. Pacificatio; Fol. 260. V. also Plin. Hist. Nat. Lib. xxviii. c. 2.

Lat. pollic-eri, to promise, to engage, has been viewed as comp. of per and liceor, for pellic-eri; as properly signifying, to offer and promise a price for merchandise. But it is not improbable, that the v. had been formed from pollex, -icis, the thumb. This member being used among the Romans, in latter times, as a symbol of the ratification of peace, it may be conjectured, that, in an earlier period, they had some custom more analogous to that of the Iberians, which gave rise to the term used to denote a promise or engagement, although the original reason of the designation was afterwards lost.

I had hazarded this conjecture, before observing that Wachter throws out the same idea. Having derived Germ zusagen, to promise, from zu, copulative, and zagen, to say, because promises, according to ancient manners, were made by pledging the hand; he adds, Forte etiam Latinis a pressione pollicis dicitur Polliceri. Prolegom. Sect. v. vo. Zu.

The shedding of blood, in entering into covenants, has, in various modes, been practised among many nations. Lucian gives an account of the custom of the Scythians, the same people with the Goths, in this respect. "The happy chosen friends enter into a solemn oath and covenant, that they will live with, and, if occasion calls for, die for each other: and thus it is performed; each cuts his finger, and drops the blood into a bowl; they then dip the points of their swords in the blood, and both drink together of it, after which nothing can dissolve the band;" Toxaris. V. also Herodot. Melpom. iv. 70. Brotier (in his Notes on Tacit. ubi sup.) refers to Herodot. Thal. iii. 8. in proof of the existence of a similar custom among the Arabs. He seems disposed to trace these observances, among the heathen, to the very ancient and divinely instituted rite of confirming covenants by sacrifice. For he quotes Gen. xv. 3. and Ezek. xxxiv. 18. observing, that the Scripture exhibits a similar use of blood, although one more consistent with humanity. See Sup.

THUMMERT, s. An awkward-looking person. S.

THUMPIN' adj. Large; large and stout. S.

THUMPER, s. 1. A large individual of any species; as, a thumper of a trout. 2. Any thing large. Of a gross falsehood, it is often said, "That is a thumper." S.

THUNDERBOLT, s. The vulgar name for a stone hatchet found in the islands of Scotland. V. CELT. S.

THUNNER, s. The vulgar pronunciation of thunder. S.

THUNNER-SPEAL, s. A thin board to which a string is tied: when whirled round in the air it booms like thunder. S.

THUNNERIN, adj. An epithet applied to drought. A thunnerin drouth, a strong drought, S.B. apparently expressing that which is viewed as the effect of fire in the air, or lightning.

THUORT, THUORTOUR. V. THORTOUR.

THURCH.

Bot his hart, that wes stout and hey,
Consaillyt hym allane to bid,
And kepe thaim at the furd syd;
And defend weill the wpcummyng;
Sen he wes warnyst off armyng,

T I C

That he thar arowys thurch nocht dreid.

Barbour, vi. 124. MS.

Hurt, Edit. Pink.; should, in former copies.

Thurch may be viewed as a s., signifying force. "Being provided with sufficient armour, he did not dread the force of their arrows," or fear that they would penetrate it. Isl. thrug-a, invitam cogere, thrugan, force, violence; Su.G. trug-a, premere.

It may, however, signify might, as synon. with Thurst, q. v., but immediately allied to Isl. thor-a, audere.

THURST, s.

For scho wes syne the best lady,
And the fayrest, that men thurst se.

Barbour, xx. 107. MS.

This seems to signify could, as allied to Su.G. troest-a, valere, posse.

Han troeste ey mera ther foerwaerfwa.

Chron. Rhythm. ap. Ihre.

i. e. There he could accomplish no other thing. The v. primarily signifies to dare.

THURST, v. impers. Needed. Thurst n', needed not. S.

THUS-GATE, adv. In this manner.

The justyng thus-gate endyt is,
And athyr part went hame wyth pris.

V. GAT.

Wyntown, viii. 36. 1.

THWAYNG, s. A thong, S. whang.

A rone skyne tuk he thare-of syne
And schayre a thwayng all at laysere.

A.S. thwang, Isl. thweing, id. Wyntown, viii. 32. 51.

THWANKIN', part. adj. A term applied to clouds mixing together in thick and gloomy succession. S.

THWARTER-ILL. V. THORTER-ILL.

To THWRICKEN, v. n. To choke from the influence of thick smouldering smoke. S.

TYAL, s. Any thing used for tying; a latchet, S.B. Isl. tigill, ligula.

To TYAUVE, v. n. As one syllable pron. of Taave. S.

To TIAWE, v. a. To amble. S.

TIBBE, TIBBIE, TIB, s. Corruptions of the name Isabel. S.

TIBBET, s. One length of twisted hair in a fishing line; a link. Syn. Snood. V. TIPPET. S.

TYBER, s.

Yet shal the riche remayns with one be overronen,
And with the Rounde Table the rentes be reved.
Thus shal a Tyber untrue tymber with tene.

Sir Gawan and Sir Gal. i. 22.

A.S. tyber signifies a sacrifice, an offering; and timbr-ian, to build. But the connexion of these ideas is not obvious. The language is metaph., expressing the consequences of the death of King Arthur.

TIBRIC, TIBRICK, s. A name given to the young of the Coalfish, Orkn.

"These boats sometimes go to sea, for the purpose of fishing cod, cooths, and tibricks, which are the small or young cooths.—The time of fishing the young cooths or tibricks begins about the middle of August." P. Westray, Statist. Acc. xvi. 261.

Were it not that there are no Gael. words found in Orkn., this might seem a corr. of Dowbreck, q. v. a name given to the sparling or smelt.

To TYCE, v. n. To move slowly and cautiously. S.

TICHEL, TICHIL (gutt.), s. 1. A number. 2. It also appears to denote any article kept secretly. S.

TICHER, s. A small fiery pimple. V. TICKER. S.

To TICHER (gutt.), s. To laugh clandestinely. S.

To TICHLE (gutt.), v. n. 1. To join hands; used in various games of children. 2. Applied to any thing that is attached to another, whether from design or by accident. S.

TICHT, pret. Tied. V. TIGHT.

To TICT, v. a. To make close. S.

TICK, TICKER, s. 1. A dot of any kind. The tick above an I, the dot above the letter I, S. Teut. tick, punctus. 2. A very small spot on the skin, S.B. See Sup.

Hence perhaps freckles are called fernie-tickles, q. tickers, as resembling the dots on the herb called a fern. V. TEICHER.

TICK, s. Upon tick. In a state of activity. S.

To TICK, v. n. To click, as a watch, S. See Sup.

Belg. tikk-en, als een uurwerk, id.

TICK, s. Beat; as of a watch. S.

TICKING, s. Clicking; the noise of a watch. S.

TICKET, s. A pat, a slight stroke with the hand, or with any instrument, S. Sometimes a smart stroke. S.

Belg. tik, a pat, a touch; tikk-en, to pat, to touch slightly; Moes.G. tek-an, to touch.

To GET one's TICKETS. 1. To be subjected to a scolding match. 2. To get a drubbing. S.

To TICKLE,* v. a. To puzzle; to gravel. S.

TICKLER,* s. Any thing puzzling. S.

TICKLY, adj. Puzzling; difficult. S.

TICKLE-TAILS, s. A game. V. NEEDLE-EE. S.

TID, s. 1. Proper time; season, S. 2. The condition which any soil is in for the purpose of agriculture; as, "The grund's no in the tid." S.—3. Metaph. applied to the mind, as denoting humour, S. I'm just in the tid; I am in the proper humour of doing any thing, S.

What pleasure matrimony brings

To counterbalance a' its stings.

To pay for a' their plaids and gowns,—

To hide their fauts and keep their tid,

And, whan they're ill, to ca' them gude.

R. Galloway's Poems, p. 11.

It is also applied to brute animals.

To TID, v. a. To time; to choose the proper season.

The aitseed has been weill tiddit; The proper season for sowing oats has been taken, S. V. the s.

To TAK THE TID. To be seized with a perverse or ungovernable humour. S.

Tak tent case Crummy tak her wonted tid,

And ca' the laiglen's treasure on the ground.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 58.

A.S. Su.G. tid, time, season. V. TXTE, adv.

TIDDIE, adj. 1. Cross in temper. 2. Applied to land of such quality as renders it difficult to catch the proper season for ploughing it. S.

TID-AND-QUID. A term used by old farmers to denote a farm in a state of thriving rotation. S.

TID, TYD, v. impers. Happened. Chauc. id. E. betid.

Perauenture of Priamus wald ye spere

How tid the chance, his fate gif ye list here.

Doug. Virgil, 56, 6.

For ony trety may tyd, I tell thé the teynd,

I will noght turn myn entent, for all this warld brerd.

Gawan and Gol. iv. 7.

A.S. tid-an, Su.G. tid-a, contingere.

These verbs are undoubtedly formed from tid, tempus, as primarily denoting the time when any thing takes place.

TYDY, TYDIE, adj. 1. Neat, synon. trig, S.

In this sense tidy is used in E. as in the passage which Johns. quotes from Gay's Pastorals.

4 B

T I F

- Whenever by yon barley-mow I pass,
Before my eyes will trip the tidy lass.
2. Plump; fat, S.
Fyue twinteris britnyt he, as was the gyis,
And als mony swine, and tydy qwyis
Wyth hydis blak— Doug. Virgil, 130, 35.
Tydy ky lowis, velis by thaym rynnys.
Ibid. Prol. 402, 25.
— Lo, we se
Flokis and herdis of oxin and of fee,
Fat and tydy, rakand ouer all quhare. Ibid. 75, 5.
A tydy bairn, a child that is plump and thriving, S.
3. Lucky; favourable.
King Aeol, grant a tydie tirl,
But boast the blasts that rudely whirl.
Ramsay's Poems, ii. 201.
4. Pregnant; as applied to a cow. Also to a woman;
as, "A tidy bride," one who goes home to the bridegroom's house in a state of pregnancy. S.
The term, in sense 1, seems most analogous to Isl. tyd-r, obsequens, applicabilis. The phrase en tyd kona is expl.
by the Sw. synon. liufig husfru, i. e. a pleasant housewife.
Su.G. tidig, decorus, decens, conveniens.
The second sense is perhaps immediately borrowed from Teut. tydigh, in season, mature, ripe. Thus a young cow is denominated eene tydighe koe; Kilian. To this corresponds Su.G. tidfoedd hiord, grex mature editus; and tidig frukt, fructus cito maturescens, which Ihre derives from tid, tempus. Teut. tydigh also signifies, tempestivus, which corresponds to the third sense.
- TIDILY, adv. Neatly; trimly.—TIDINESS, s. Neatness; especially in the mode of dressing. S.
- TYDWOLL, s. Wool of a certain kind. S.
- TIE, s. A trick; a deception.—To TIE one's HAIR
WITHOUT A WHANG. To deceive one; a cant phrase. S.
- TEIND-FREE, adj. Exempted from payment of tithes. S.
- To TIFF, TYIFF, v. a. To reject any thing from the lips;
perhaps from E. Tiff, v. to be in a pet. S.
- TIFT, s. Condition; plight; humour, S. tid, synon. In tift, in proper capacity for doing any thing. See Sup.
"The soldiers owned that the country men behaved themselves with the utmost bravery, and very few of them who engaged, escaped, being overpowered by numbers, and the King's horse being in good tift." Wodrow's Hist.
ii. 140.
To sing or dance, I'm now in proper tift:
My birn, O Bess, has got an unco lift.
Shirrefs' Poems, p. 84.
Isl. tif-a, tyf-a, praeceps ire; G. Andr. p. 237, 238.
Hence it might be used to denote eagerness to engage in any business.
- To TIFT, v. a. To put in order, S.B.
The fidler tifted ilka string. Morison's Poems, p. 25.
- TIFT, s. Used as expressive of tediousness; at least of considerable duration. A lang tift, a long discourse, S.
Isl. tef-ia, Su.G. toefw-a, to delay, morari, moram facere.
Hence tof, mora; lang tof, a long delay.
- TIFT, s. 1. The act of quarrelling, Loth. tiff, E.
2. It sometimes signifies the act of struggling in a wanton or dallying way, Loth. synon. with tousling.
3. Used to denote the action of the wind. See Sup.
Four and twenty siller bells
Were a' tyed till his mane,
And at ae tift of the norland wind,
They tinkled ane by ane. Ritson's S. Songs, ii. 190.
Isl. tyft-a, to chastise; tyf-a, to run headlong.
- TIFTY, adj. Quarrelsome; ill-natured. S.

T I G

- To TIFT, v. a. To quaff.
Well fed were they; nor wanted to propine
Among their friends; but tifted canty wine.
Hamilton's Wallace, p. 39.
Apparently allied to E. tiff, drink, or a draught.
- TIFTER, s. A quandary; a difficulty. S.
- To TIG, v. n. 1. To touch lightly; to dally. Young people are said to be tigging, when sporting with gentle touches, or patting each other. It properly applies to those of different sexes, S.
Fareweil with chestetie,
Frae wenchis fall a chucking,
Thair follow things thre,
To gar them gae a gucking;
Imbracing, tigging, plucking.
V. TAR. Scott, Evergreen, i. 125, 126.
2. To give a slight stroke to another and then run away;
a term used in a game of children. S.
3. To trifle with; to treat in a scornful and contemptuous manner. See Sup.
—"Complain, and tell him how the world handleth us, and how our King's business goeth, that he may get up, and lend them a blow, who are tigging and playing with Christ and his spouse." Rutherford's Lett. P. iii. ep. 35.
This may either be allied to Moes.G. tek-an, to touch, Belg. tikk-en, to pat; or Isl. tey-a, teg-ia, teig-ia, lactare, allicere, as denoting the allurements employed in this way.
Teyging, allectio, illecebra. V. TYTE, s. Hence,
- TIG-TOW, s. 1. The name given to the game of Tig in Ang. 2. To play at tig-tow, to pat backwards and forwards; to dally, S. It is sometimes used as a v.
Formed perhaps from tig, and Su.G. toefw-a, morari;
as denoting procrastination in the way of dallying.
- TIG, s. 1. A twitch; a tap; a slight stroke. 2. Sometimes a rougher touch; a stroke causing a wound. S.
3. Tig. A game among children, in which one touches another, and runs off. He who is touched becomes pursuer in his turn, till he can touch (tig) another, on whom his office devolves. The slight stroke given is called a tig; and the person who receives it and becomes pursuer is also called Tig. S.
- TIG ME IF YOU CAN. Another name for the game of Tig. S.
- To TIG, v. n. To take the bizz, applied to cattle. V. BIZZ.
- TIG, TEYG, s. A pet; a fit of sullen humour. To tak the tig, to be pettish, S. dorts, synon.
What tig then takes the fates that they can thole
Thrawart to fix me i' this dreary hole?
Fergusson's Poems, ii. 73.
Perhaps from Su.G. tig-a, to be silent; as it is a usual mark of the pettishness expressed by this term, that the person preserves a sullen taciturnity. Or, it may be allied to C.B. dig, ira, iracundia; Davies. Gael. taigh, a fit of passion.
- TIGGY, adj. Petty, prone to pettishness, S. Dorty more properly expresses that ill humour which is manifested by giving a saucy answer.
- To TIG-TAG, v. n. 1. To trifle; to be busy while doing nothing of importance.
"The King came on Sunday last to Basing-house, with purpose to break up Waller's quarters, and then to enter Kent; but, as we hear, Waller is recruited, from Kent, with horse and foot, and minds to stand to it. They may tig tag on this way this twelve-month." Baillie's Lett. i. 404.
2. To be tedious in making a bargain; to haggle. S.
Probably from E. ticktack, a game at tables; q. moving backwards and forwards to little purpose,
- TIG-TAGGIN, s. The act of haggling. S.

T I L

To TIGGLE-TAGGLE, v. n. To haggle in making a bargain. S.
TIGER-TARRAN, s. A waspish child. V. TIRAN. S.
To TIGHER, v. n. To titter, &c. Syn. Kigher, q. v. S.
To TIGHER, v. n. To ooze out; applied to blood and other liquids. V. TEICHER. S.
TIGHT, TIGHT, part. pa. and pret. 1. Tied.
The tassess were of topas, that were thereto tight.
Sir Gawain and Sir Gal. ii. 2.
2. Prepared; girt for action.
Nou will I rekkin the renkis of the round tabill,
That has traistly thame tight to governe that gait.
For ticht, id. V. TISCHE. Gawain and Gol. iii. 8.
Qu. bound up, from A.S. tyg-an, to bind. And here perhaps we see the true origin of E. tight, as signifying neat, generally traced to Teut. dicht, solidus. It seems merely, q. tied close, well knit. The term, however, as used in sense 2, may be immediately allied to Isl. ty-ia, armo, instruo; ty, arma, utensilia; tyad-r, armatus.
To TIGMATEEZE, v. a. To pull one about. S.
To TIG-TOW, v. n. To touch and go; to be off and on. S.
To TIG-TOW wi' a Lass. To seem inclined to marry her, yet to hang off. S.
TYISDAY, s. Tuesday. V. TYSDAY.
TYISHT, pret. Enticed. V. TYSE. S.
TIKE, TYKE, TYK, s. 1. A dog; a cur; properly, one of a larger and common breed, as a mastiff, a shepherd's dog, &c. S. A. Bor. See Sup.
—Thocht he dow not to leid a tyk.
Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 62.
2. A selfish, snarling fellow. He's a dour tyke. S.
Su.G. tik, Isl. tyk, a little bitch; Alem. zoh, Germ. zucke, id.; the t, in other languages, being softened into z in the German dialects.
TIKE-TYRIT, adj. Dog-weary, tired like a dog after coursing or running, S.
Quhan greits the wean, the nurse in vain,
Thoch tyke-tyrit, tries to sleip.
Minstrely, Border, iii. 363.
It is the same word, I suspect, that Rudd. writes tig-tyre, rendering it, to vex or disquiet, vo. Tary; unless this be q. to tire with tigging, or childish sportiveness.
The same idiom is found in Sw. troett som en hund, dog-weary; Seren. vo. Dog.
TYKED, adj. Having the disposition of a degenerate dog, currish; from tike.
For all her waful cries and greeting,
Her loving words and fair intreating,
(These follows were too tyked)
To her they would make nae supplie,
Nor yet let her remaining be
Amang them, but twa days or three,
Say to them, what she liked. Watson's Coll. i. 46.
TYKE-HUNGRY, s. Ravenous as a dog. S.
TYKE-TULYIE, s. Literally, a dog's quarrel; metaph. any coarse scolding-match. Syn. Collyshangie. S.
TYKE AND TRYKE, adv. Higgledy-piggledy, in an intermingled state, S.B.
Su.G. tiock, densus; tryck-a, angustare, used to denote a crowd of objects pressing one upon another; q. closely crowded or pressed together.
TYKEN, TYKIN, s. 1. The case which holds the feathers of a bed or bolster; E. Tick, Ticking. 2. Tyken o' a bed, the bed itself. S.
TYKEN, adj. Of or belonging to the cloth called Tick. S.
TIL, TILL, prep. 1. To, S. A. Bor.
Now God gyff grace that I may swa
Tret it, and bryng it till endyng,

As til Malcolme in ewyn lyne,
All oure kyngis of Scotland
Ware in-til successyowne discendand.
Wyntown, vi. 19, 139.
TIL, TILL, as a mark of the infinitive, instead of to. It is more generally used by our old writers, before a vowel or the aspirate; although this rule is by no means strictly observed.
For ioy thay pingil than for till renew
Thare bankettis with al obseruance dew.
Doug. Virgil, 210, 3.
Mr. Macpherson has observed that it is used by Ulphilas, as a prefix to the infinitive, Luk. vi. 7, "where Junius is quite at a loss for a meaning to it." Gl. Wynt. Ei bigeteina du til wrohjan ina; Ut invenirent unde accusarent eum. Du til is a redundant phraseology, resembling for till; du, as well as til, signifying to.
To TYLD, v. a. To cover, S.B.
The bodie of the cairt of evir bone,
With crisolitis and mony precious stone

To TYLE, v. n. To tyle a Lodge, to shut the door of a Mason-lodge; whence "Is the lodge tyled?" S.
TILER, TYLER, s. A door-keeper of a Mason-lodge. S.
TILE-STONE, s. An old term for a tile or brick. S.
TILFOIR, adv. Before; as, "A yeir tilfoir he died." S.
TILL, adv. While, during the time that.
Thai wald nocht fecht till that he wes
Liand in till his seknes. Barbour, ix. 105. MS.

This line is omitted in Edit. Pink.

As quhill S. is used for till E., till, vice versa, occurs in the sense of while.

The A.S. s. tille signifies rest, as if it were synon. with hwile, id. whence E. while, which is evidently from Isl. Su.G. hwil-a, quiescere. Thus, it would appear that the change of till for quhill is not accidental, or merely arbitrary.

To TILL, v. a. To entice. V. TEAL.

TILL, s. A cold unproductive clay, S. See Sup.

"The soil of the upper grounds, in general, is a very strong heavy clay, lying upon a stratum of a dense argillaceous substance, generally of a great depth; which, under all its different appearances, is called till in this country." P. Dalserf, Lanarks. Statist. Acc. ii. 372.

"The bottom is a very bad sort of clay, commonly called by the farmers here mortar or till." P. Kilspindie, Perth. Statist. Acc. iv. 203.

TILLIE-CLAY, s. 1. Cold clay; unproductive soil. 2.

Used metaph. to express coldness of heart. S.

TILLIE, TILLY, adj. Of or belonging to Till, s. S.

TILL, conj. That; so that; to such a degree that. S.

TILL-BAND, s. Pudding-stone, or primary Breccia. S.

To TILLER, v. n. A term applied to grasses when they give out a number of suckers from the same root. S.

TILLER, s. The rising blade of growing corn shooting out several stems from one seed. S.

TILLIE-LICK, s. A gibe; a cut. V. TULLIE. S.

TILLIE-LICKIT, s. 1. An unexpected stroke. 2. An unexpected misfortune. S.

TILLIESOUL, s. A place at some distance from a gentleman's mansion-house, whither the servants and horses of his guests are sent, when he does not choose to entertain the former at his own expense. The person employed is often an old servant of the family, who is allowed to sell corn, hay, &c. for his own sustenance, and for the accommodation of visitors, Loth. See Sup.

It does not appear that this is of Gael. origin. It may perhaps have been formed, in allusion to soldiers getting dry billets, as they are called, i. e. money to pay for lodging elsewhere, from Fr. tillet, a ticket, and sould, soldier's entertainment or pay.

TILLIE-VALLEY, adv. A word used to express that any thing said was considered trifling or impertinent. S. TILLING, s.

"The birds are—plover pages, tillings, linnets, thrushes, hill sparrows, &c." P. Reay, Caithn. Statist. Acc. vii. 574.

This might seem the Sea-pie, Haematopus ostralegus, Linn. (Norv. tield. In Iceland the male is called Tialld-ur, the female Tilldra; Penn. Zool. p. 482.) But as sea-pies are mentioned before, it is probably an erratum for titting or teeting, the Titlark, Alauda pratensis.

TILLY-PAN, s. A skillet. S.

TILLIT, pret. v.

"Quhat suld a Scot do with sa fayr a knyff?"

"Sa said the Prest that last janglyt thi wyff.

"That woman lang has tillit him so fayr,

"Quhill that his child worthit to be thine ayr."

Wallace, vi. 149. MS.

This is part of the dialogue between Wallace and an Englishman, who, according to the story, was employed to provoke Wallace to some act that might seem to warrant an attack on him and his handful of friends at Lanark.

Tillit most probably signifies, coaxed, enticed; Isl. tael-ia, pellicere; the same with Teal, q. v. Tillit is absurdly changed to called, Edit. 1648.

TILLOWIE, s. 1. A cry addressed to hounds, urging them on to the chase; corr. of the E. huntsman's cheer of Tallihoo. 2. Used of one who has dealt too freely with intoxicating liquor; as, "He has gotten his til-lowie," he has got as much as urges him on. S.

TILT, s. Account, tidings of, S.B. See Sup.

Great search was made for her baith far and near,
But tilt nor trial of her cud we hear.

Ross's Helenore, p. 126.

If not an errat. for tint, (V. TAINT;) apparently formed from A.S. tel-ian, to tell, or Isl. til-ia, narrare; like tilth, tillage, from til-ian, to till.

TILT up, pret. Snatched. Perhaps errat. for Tytt. S.

TILTH, s. Plight; condition, good or bad, like Tift. S.

TYMBER, TYMMER, TYMBRELL, TYMBRILL, s. The crest of a helmet.

The creist or schynand tymber, that was set
Aboue Eneas helme and top on hicht,
Kest lemand flambis with ane glitterand lycht.

Doug. Virgil, 324, 45.

Twa noweltyis that day thay saw,
That forouth in Scotland had bene nane.
Tymmeris for helmys war the tane,
That thaim thought thane off gret bewté.

Barbour, xix. 396. MS.

The portratour of armes was misknaw,
All war but Grekis tymbrillis that thay saw.

Doug. Virgil, 52, 46.

Fr. timbre, "a crest upon an helmet, corresponding to the crest of the bearer's coat of arms;" Pink. Bullet derives the Fr. word from Arm. tymbr, a mark; L.B. timbr-um, tymbr-is. See Sup. Du Cange observes, that Fr. tymbre anciently signified the helmet itself.

TYMBRIT, part. pa. Crested.

His souir scheild assayis he also,
And eik his tymbrit helme with crestis two.

Doug. Virgil, 409, 32.

TIMBER MARE. The Wooden Horse, E., a barbarous mode of punishment formerly used in the army. S.

TYMBRELL, s. A small whale; perhaps a porpoise. S.

TIME, s. The act of once harrowing a field. S.

TYME, s. The herb thyme. S.

TIME-ABOUT, adv. Alternately, S. Sir J. Sinclair's Observ. p. 50. It is used in the vulgar Prov. Time-about's fair play. See Sup.

"That—divers of his friends should come in competent number, time about, and attend him upon their own expences." Spalding's Troubles, i. 102.

TIMEOUS, adj. Timely; as, Timeous hours. S.

TIMEOUSLY, adv. In due time. S.

TYME-TAKER, s. One who lies in wait for an opportunity to effect his purpose; used in a bad sense. S.

TIMMER, s. 1. Timber; wood, S. V. sense 2. Sw. timmer, id.

2. A certain quantity of skins, denominated from the mode in which they are packed. See Sup.

"Ane Timmer of skinnies: That is, swa monie as is included within twa broddes of Timmer, quhilk commounlie conteinis fourtieskinnies: In the quhilk manner, merchandes vsis to bring hame martrick, sable and vther coastlie skinnies and furrings." Skene, Verb. Sign. vo. Timbria.

TIMMER, adj. Of or belonging to wood. S.

TIMMERTUNED, adj. Having a harsh voice, one that is by no means musical, S. from timmer, timber, q. having as little music as a piece of wood. Wanting a musical ear.

To TIMMER, v. a. To chastise; to beat with a stick. S.

TIMMERIN, s. A beating with a stick. S.

T I N

To TIMMER up, v. a. To do, strenuously and successfully, any work that requires continued exertion. S.
TIMMER-BREEKS, s. pl. A cant term for a coffin. S.
TYMMER-MAN, s. A carpenter; a dealer in wood. S.
TIMMER WECHT. A sort of tambourine. S.
TIMMING, TEMMING, s. A kind of woollen cloth resembling what is called durant, but very coarse and thin, S.

"Timming, camblet for womens gowns, when in colours, are respectively sold at 3s. and 2s. 10d. the yard." P. Barrie, Forfars. Statist. Acc. iv. 242.

This seems to be the same with Taminy, Johns. Tammie, Pennant. See Sup.

"There is no inconsiderable manufacture, at Durham, of shalloons, tammies, stripes and callimancoes." Tour in S. 1769, p. 36.

TIMOURSUM, TIMERSOME, adj. Timorous. S.

TYMPANY-WINDOW, s. A window in the Tympan. S.

TYMPANE, s. The instrument called a sistrum by Virg.; from Lat. tympan-um.

The routis did assembl to fecht bedene,
 With tympane sound, in gyse of hir cuntré.

Doug Virgil, 268, 53.

TIMTY, s. A mode of labouring the ground in the island of Lewis, in which the soil is turned upside down and covered with sea-ware. In S. this is called trenching. S.

TIN, s. Loss.

Tristrem and Ganhardin,
 Treuthe plighen thay,
 In wining, and in tin,

Sir Tristrem, p. 173.

i. e. Gaining or losing. V. TINE, v.

TIN, s. A jug made of tinned iron. S.

TINNIE, s. A small jug of this kind for children. S.

TINCHILL, TINCHEL, s. 1. A circle of sportsmen, who, by surrounding a great space, and gradually contracting the circle, brought immense quantities of deer together. 2. A snare; a gin or trap. S.

"After this, there followed nothing but slaughter in this realm, every party ilk one lying in wait for another, as they had been setting tinchills for the slaughter of wild beasts." Pitscottie, p. 22.

Perhaps originally an improper use of Fr. etincelle, a spark, as applied to the blazes, made in the night season, in the black fishing, and transferred to hunting.

To TYND, v. n. To kindle. TYND, s. A spark. V. TEIND.

TYND, s. 1. The tooth of a harrow, S. tine, E. See S.
 From Isl. tindr, Su.G. tinne, id.; harftinnar, the teeth of a harrow.

2. Used to denote the act of harrowing. A double tynd, or teind, is harrowing the same piece of ground twice at the same yoking, S.B. q. bringing it twice under the teeth of the harrow.

3. Tyndis, pl. "The horns of a hart, properly the tines of the horns;" Rudd.

This hart of body was bayth grete and square,
 With large hede and tyndis birnist fare.

Doug. Virgil, 224, 22.

This is from the same origin. For Su.G. tinne signifies any thing sharp like a tooth; hence used to denote the niched battlements of walls, pinnae murorum.

TINDE, s. On tinde, in a collected state.

T I N

He tight the mawe on tinde,

And eke the gargiloun. Sir Tristrem, p. 32, st. 46.

i. e. He tied its parts together, in the way of collecting the grease of the deer, and all its appurtenances. Isl. tin-a, colligere, tynt, collectum; Verel.

TINDLING, s. Meaning doubtful. S.

To TINE, TYNE, v. a. 1. To lose; tynt, pret. and part. pa. •

Thus Wallace wist: Had he beyne left allayne,
 And he war falss, to enemyss he wald ga;
 Gyff he war trew, the Sothroun wald him sla.
 Mycht he do ocht bot tyne him as it was?

Wallace, v. 121. MS.

He left the toune, and held his way;
 And syne wes put to sik assay,
 Throw the power off that cité,
 That his lyff and his land tynt he.

Barbour, iii. 248. MS.

It occurs in the same sense in O.E.

Lely beleue, i. e. true faith, leal belief, S.

2. To forfeit; used as a forensic term.

—"And gif he slayis, he sall die thairfor, and tyne all his gudis as escheit to the King." Acts, Ja. I. 1426, c. 108. Edit. 1566.

"And at the thrid tyme gif he be conuict of sic trespas he sall tyne his lyfe or than by it. — And gif ony dois the contrare he sall tyne ane hundreth, S. for the vnlaw befor the Justice." Ibid. 1424, c. 12.

3. To lose a cause in a court of justice; to receive a decision contrary to one's claim. S.

4. To kill or destroy. 5. To Tyne Heart, to lose courage or spirit, or inclination to any business. S.

6. To Tyne the heartis of others, to lose their affections. S.

"And seeing hee only is terrible, because he is onely Lord of body and soule, onely hee hath power to saue and tyne; And seeing it is so, let vs feare and retyre our selfis to him, who is able to preserue & keep baith body and soule." Bruce's Eleven Serm. 1591. Sign. R. 4, a.

He seems to refer to James iv. 12. "There is one law-giver, who is able to save, and to destroy." "Leese and delyuere;" Wiclif, ibid.

7. To tyne the saddle, to lose all; a proverbial phrase, S.
 "You must not look to expenses, when presently we are either to win the horse or tyne the saddle." Baillie's Lett. i. 397.

This term has no affinity to any A.S. v. Isl. tyne-ast, perdere, eg tyne, perdo, tynde, perdidi. The same Isl. v. signifies, to separate chaff from grain. Legumina purgare, ab aliis rejectaneis separare; G. Andr. This may have been its primary sense. The chaff being thrown away or lost, the term may have been at length used to denote the loss of any thing in what way soever. Sw. tyn-a, tyn-a af, aftyn-a, to languish, to dwindle away. This sense corresponds to the neut. signification of the Isl. v., perdi, interire.

T Y N

Hence tion, jactura, perditio; Verel. To this corresponds Tin, s. q. v.

TINEMAN, s. An appellation given to one of the Lords of Douglas whose christian name was Archibald.

Lord Hailes, after Fordun, says that this was that Archibald who was killed at Halidon. He was the first of this name. Godscroft ascribes this designation to Archibald the third of the name, who was Duke of Turrane in France. He also assigns a far more satisfying reason for the appellation, than that adopted by Lord Hailes, who says; "He was commonly called Tineman, implying, as may be conjectured, tiny or slender little man." Ann. ii. 260.

According to Godscroft, "this Archibald is hee who was called Tineman, for his unfortunate and hard successe he had, in that he tint (or lost) almost all his men, and all the battels that he fought. This nick-name, or cognomination, the old manuscript (of Sir Richard Metellan of Lithington) giveth to Archibald slain at Halidoun hill, and calleth this, Archibald one eye, for distinction, because of the losse of his eye in a battell against Percie. But that surname of Tyneman cannot bee given so conveniently to the former Archibald who lost only one field, and himself in it; whereas this man ever lost his men, himself escaping often." Hist. H. Douglas, p. 115.

Besides its being a mere conjecture that he was a little man, the word tiny, I suspect, was never so much in use in S. as to be the foundation of a nick-name.

The historical fact cannot perhaps be easily determined; and it is not of great importance. But the first Archibald might be thus denominated, although he lost but one battle, because it was a very fatal one to the Scots; and especially as Douglas seems to have been blamed by the bulk of his countrymen afterwards, for engaging with Edw. III. in the circumstances in which his army was placed. Hence Lesley; Intellexisset Archibaldum Douglasium gubernatorem, furore quodam, tanquam Erenni, percitum, praelio ad Halidonum monticulum commisso, militibus fuis fugatisque, cecidisse, &c. Hist. Lib. vii. p. 238.

TYNAR, TINER, s. 1. A loser in a general sense. 2. One who loses his cause, or is cast, in a court of law. S.

"It is statute and ordanit, that gif ony persoun persewis ane vther within burgh, that the tynar of the cause, pay the winnaris expensis." Acts, Ja. V. 1540, c. 91. Edit. 1566. Tiner, Skene's Edit.

To TINE, v. n. To be lost; to perish in whatever way. S.

TINE HEART, TYNE a'. A phrase urging the necessity of not suffering the spirits to sink under difficulties. S.

TYNING, s. The act of losing. The state of being lost. S. Between the TYNING and the WINNING. 1. Applied to any circumstance, the issue of which turns on a very narrow hinge. 2. In a moral sense, — in that intermediate state in which a person may be either lost, or, by proper means, be saved from ruin. S.

TYNSAILL, TINSALL, TYNSEL, s. 1. Loss, in whatever sense, S.B.

For oftsyss throw a word may ryss
Discomford, and tynsaill with all.
And throu a word, als weill may fall,
Comford may ryss, and hardyment
May ger men do thair entent. Barbour, xi. 488. MS.

A wykyd word may wmqwhil mak
Full gret tynsel, as it dyd here. Wyntown, viii. 30. 83.

It is retained in the Buchan Dialect. V. ALLPUIST.

It occurs in a very useful S. Prov. "He that's far from his geer, is near his tinsel."—"A man may soon be wrong'd when his back is turn'd." Kelly, pp. 132, 133.

It is used by R. Brunne.

Lost he had his men ilk one.

Conseile couth he tak at none,

T I P

How he myght his brother help.

Of tynselle myht he mak his gelp.

V. Gl. R. Glouc. vo. Boskes.

2. Forfeiture; used as a forensic term.

"That na man haue out of the realme gold nor siluer, bot he pay XL.d. of ilk pund of custume to the king, vnder the pane of tinsall of all gold and siluer that beis fundin with him, and. x. pund to the King for the vnlaw." Acts, Ja. I. 1424, c. 16. Edit. 1566.

To TINSALL, TINSELL, v. a. To injure; synon. with skaith; formed from the s.

"Gif he does otherwise, the partie that is essonyied will be tinsalled." Baron Courts, c. 40, s. 2.

"And gif sic essonyie without borgh, be made against the soyte of the partie mutand in court, he that swa is essonyied may be tinselled and skaithed." Ibid. c. 54, s. 3.

TIN-EGIN, s. Forced fire. V. NEID-FYRE. S.

To TING, v. a. To ring.

———— In ane dreame she fel,

And by aperaunce herde quhere she did lie

Cupide the King tingand a silvir bel,

Quhich men micht here fro hevin into bel.

Henryson's Test. Creseide, Chron. S.P. i. 161.

Hence ting-tang, a reduplicative term used among children, to denote the sound made by a bell. Teut. tinghe-tangh-en, tintinnare.

To TINK, v. a. To rivet, including the idea of the noise made in the operation of riveting; a Gipsy word. S.

To TINKLE on, v. n. To trifle about.

"If that man now go to tinkle on bishops, and delinquents, and such foolish toys, it seems he is mad." Baillie's Lett. ii. 208.

TINKLE-SWEETIE, s. A cant name once current in Edinburgh for the bell rung at eight o'clock, P.M., when the shops were shut and the apprentices and shopmen at liberty. Also, The aught-hours bell. S.

TINKLER'S TIPPENCE. Useless cash; money to be spent, as a tinker wastes his, in the change-house. S.

TINNEL, s. Watermark; sea-mark. S.

TINT NOR TRIAL. V. TAINT.

TYNT, TINT, pret. and part. pa. Lost. V. TINE, TYNE, v.

TINTOE, s. The pin used in turning the cloth-beam of a loom. S.

TIP, s. A ram. S.

To TIP, v. n. To take the ram.

"Tip when you will, you shall lamb with the leave;"

[l. lave, i. e. rest.] S. Prov. Kelly, p. 306. V. LAMB, v.

It is also used actively.

"The lamb where it's tipped, and the ewe where she's clipped;" S. Prov., "a proverbial rule about tithes; signifying that the lamb shall pay tythes in the place where the ewe was when she took the ram, but the old sheep where they were shorn." Kelly, p. 307.

S. it is tup. Johns. expl. this v. "to but like a ram." But in O.E. it had the same sense as in S. Hence Phillips renders it, to cover the ewe.

To TIP, v. a. This term is used to signify the effect of an expression, action, or event, which disappoints or nettles one. That tips him; It silences or mortifies him, S.

It seems to be merely a metaph. use of E. tip, as signifying to strike slightly,

To TIPPANIZE, v. n. To act the toper, properly in drinking small beer, S.

"Your tippanizing, scant o' grace,"

Quoth she, "gars me gang duddy;

T Y R

"Our nibour Pate sin break of day's "Been thumping at his studdy."

Ramsay's Poems, i. 277.

"Scant o' grace," seems to be an appellation. V. Two-PENNY.

To TIPPER, v. n. To walk on tiptoe, or in an unsteady way; to totter; as, to tipper up a hill. S.

To TIPPER-TAIPER, v. n. To totter. S.

TIPPERTY, adj. 1. Unstable. An object is said to be tipperty, or to stand tipperty-like, when it is ready to fall, S.B.

2. To gang tipperty-like, to walk in a flighty ridiculous sort of way, S.B. 3. Applied to a young woman who walks very stiffly, precisely, or with a mincing gait. S.

Q. to walk on tip-toes; as allied to E. tip, top or end, Su.G. Dan. tipp, Isl. typpe, cacumen. Or V. next word.

TIPPERTIN, s. A bit of card with a small piece of stick passed through it; resembling a te-totum, Loth. Hence the phrase, to loup like a tippertin.

TIPPET, s. 1. One length of twisted hair or gut in a fishing-line; a link. 2. A handful of straw bound together at one end; used in thatching. S.

TIPPET, s. St. Johnstone's Tippet, a halter. V. RIBAND. S.

TIPPY, adj. Dressed in the highest fashion; modish. S.

TIPPY, s. The ton; the fashion. At the tap of the tippy. S.

To TIPTOO, v. n. To be in a violent passion. S.

TYRANE, s. Tyrant, S.

"Succedit his son Lugtak ane odius and mischeuous tyrane." Bellend. Cron. B. v. c. 1. Fr. tyran. Hence, TYRANE, adj. Tyrannical.

Behald how God, ay sen the warld began,
Hes maid of tyrane kingis instrumentis,
To scourge pepill, and to kill mony ane man,
Quhilkis to his law wer inobedientis.

Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 119.

TYRANDRY, s. Tyranny.

Off tyrandry King Eduuard thocht him gud.

Wallace, vii. 737. MS.

TYRANFULL, adj. Tyrannical. S.

TYRANLIE, adv. Tyrannically. V. UNREST.

TYRE, s. A hat off tyre, mentioned as part of the dress of Robert Bruce, at the battle of Bannockburn.

And on his bassinet he ber
Ane hat off tyre aboune ay quhar;
And tharwpon, in to taknyng,
Ane hey croune, that he wes king.

Barbour, xii. 22. MS.

"This legat als presentit [to King William] ane bonat of tyre, made in maner of diademe of purpoure hew, to signify that he was defendar of the faith." Bellend. Cron. B. xiii. c. 8. Galerum purpureum; Boeth.

A.S. tyr is rendered by Lye, tiara, cidaris; which is either a sash about the cap or turban worn by eastern monarchs, or the cap itself. This seems formed from the Lat. designation.

The term may, however, be allied to A.S. Tir, tyr, originally one of the names of Odin, or of one of the sons of Odin; and in a secondary sense, any lord, prince, or general. It is also transferred from persons to things; so as to signify glory, power, dominion. Torhte tire, illustrious in dominion.

TYREMENT, s. Interment.

Now Pallas corpis is tyl Euander sent,
Wyth al honour accordyng hys tyrement.

Doug. Virgil, 361, 45.

The marginal note, p. 362, determines the sense. "A laug narration contenyng the honour of Pallas funeral entyrement." It is merely an abbrev. of this term.

T I R

TIRL, s. A substitute for the trundle of a mill, Shetl.

"A round piece of wood, about 4 feet in length, and fitted with 12 small boards, in the same manner as the extremity of the exterior wheel of an ordinary mill, with a strong iron spindle fixed to its upper end, supplies the place of a wheel in these mills. The iron spindle, passing through the under millstone, is fixed in the upper. A pivot in the under end of the tirl (the piece of wood above mentioned) runs in a hollowed iron plate.—The tirl occupies the same situation under this mill, as the trundles in the inner part of an ordinary mill; and it performs the same office. The diameter of the tirl is always equal to that of the millstone." P. Unst, Shetl. Statist. Acc. v. 195.

This is undoubtedly allied to Su.G. trill-a, rotari, to trundle, Dan. trilld-er.

TIRL, TIRLE, s. 1. A smart tap or stroke, S. either as allied to the v. TIRLE, or denominated from its producing a thrilling sensation. V. DIRLE.

2. A touch, in the way of intermeddling with any thing. Her nain-sell shook her naked breeches,
For she was tyred with his speeches;

She would far rather had a tirrle
Of an Aquavitae barrel.

Cleland's Poems, p. 32.

3. A dance.

—The young swankies on the green,

Took round a merry tirle. Ramsay's Poems, i. 262.

4. A gentle breeze, S. synon. a pirr of wind.

King Aeol, grant a tydie tirl,

But boast the blasts that loudly whirl.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 201.

To TIRL, TIRLE, v. a. 1. To uncover; as, to tirl a house, Gl. Shirr. Aberd. See Sup.

It seems properly to include the idea of velocity of motion, as having been originally used to denote the effect of the wind.

—Whyles on the strong-wing'd tempest flyin,

Tirling the kirks.

Burns, iii. 71.

Mr. Chalmers is therefore mistaken when he mentions it as one of Sibbald's egregious interpolations, "that he gives tirl for tirr." Works, Sir D. Lyndsay, iii. 215.

2. To pluck off lightly and expeditiously; applied to dress.

And syne this fule thay thankit of al,
That caused sik concord amang them fal.
And off his coate thay tirlit be the croun,
And on him kest ane syde clarkly gown.

Priests of Peblis, S.P.R. i. 36.

This is classed by Sibb., as if it were the same with Tirr, or a dimin. from it. But perhaps it is from a common fountain with E. twirl; Isl. thyrl-a, turbine versari subito, G. Andr. This indeed expresses the sense in which the term is still frequently used, as denoting the effect of an impetuous wind.

3. To strip, applied to property, S.

Nane gathers gear withouten care;—

Suppose then they should tirle ye bare

And gar ye fike;

E'en learn to thole.— Ramsay's Poems, i. 300.

TIRLING OF THE MOSS. The act of paring off the superficial part of the soil which lies above the peats. S.

To TIRL, v. a. To trill. S.

To TIRL at the pin. To twirl the handle of the latch. S.

To TIRL, v. n. To change; to veer about; applied to the wind. S.

TIRLIE, s. Applied to a winding in a footpath. S.

To TIRLE, v. n. To touch the chords of an instrument, so as to produce tremulous vibrations of sound.

Courage to give, was mightily then blown

Saint Johnston's Huntsup, since most famous known
By all musicians, when they sweetly sing
With heavenly voice, and well concording string.
O how they bend their backs and fingers tirle.

Muse's Threnodie, p. 133.

Evidently the same as E. trill, which Johns. derives from Ital. trillo, a quaver. But this, I apprehend, is itself derived from Su.G. drill-a, vocem inter canendum crispate; trall-a, cantillare.

It seems used in a similar sense in the S. poem, Sweet William's Ghost, Ramsay's Tea Table Miscellany.

There came a ghost to Margaret's door,
With many a grievous groan,
And ay he tirled at the pin.

i. e. caused a tremulous motion.

TIRLES, s. pl. Some kind of disease.

The Teasick, the Tooth-aik, the Titts & the Tirles.

V. FEYK. Montgomerie, Watson's Coll. iii. 14.

Fr. tarle signifies a wood worm; but there seems no affinity.

TIRLESS, TIRLASS, TIRLIES, s. 1. A lattice, grate, or rail. It is now generally applied to that used for defending a window, S. See Sup.

"At the back of the throne were two rooms on the two sides. In the one, Duke de Vanden, Duke de Valler, and other French nobles, sat; in the other, the King, Queen, Princes, Mary, the Prince Elector, and some court ladies. The tirlies that made them to be secret, the King brake down with his own hands; so they sat in the eyes of all; but little more regarded than if they had been absent; for the Lords sat all covered." Baillie's Lett. i. 259.

2. A wicket; a small gate, S.B.

"That at or near the westmost pole,—there is a tirllass, at which a single person may enter; and he recollects no other opening on any part of said planted inclosures at the north." State, Fraser of Fraserfield, p. 194.

Fr. treillis, "a grate set thick with cross bars of wood." Cotgr. Teut. trælie.

TIRLLEST, part. adj. Having grates, latticed, trellised; S. V. TERLYST.

TIRLESS-YETT, s. A turnstile. S.

TIRLY-TOY, s. A toy or trifle. Syn. Tirly-wirly. S.

TIRLYWIRLY, TIRLIEWIRLIE, s. 1. A whirligig, S.

See Sup. Tirly mirly, used as an appellative, Evergreen, ii. 20. seems originally the same.

2. A figure or ornament of any kind on stone, wood, stockings, S. See Sup.

It is used to denote clocks in stockings,
Red, blue, an' green, an' likewise pearl,
I hae to fit the little girl;—
Wi' mony a bony tirly-wirl

About the queets.

Forbes's Shop Bill, Journal, p. 13.

It would seem comp. of two synon. terms, Su.G. trill-a and hworl-a, rotare, q. something that is whirled.

TIRLIE-WIRLIE, adj. Intricate; or as conjoining the ideas of intricacy and trivial ornament. S.

TIRMA, s. The sea-pie, a bird; hoematopus ostralegus, Linn.

"The Tirma, or Sea-Pie, by the inhabitants called Trilichan, comes in May, goes away in August." Martin's St. Kilda, p. 35.

To TIRR, TIRUE, v. a. 1. To tear.

Or in quhat land lyis thou manglit and schent,
Thy fare body and membris tyrryt and rent.

Doug. Virgil, 294, 27.

It may be viewed as synon. with rent, lacerum being the only term used by Virg.

—Aut quae nunc artus avolsaque membra,
Et funus lacerum tellus habet?— Æn. ix. 491.

There is a possibility, however, that Doug. alludes to the preceding complaint of the mother of Euryalus, that she was not at hand to dress his dead body.

Veste tegens.—

Rudd. and Sibb. derive it from Fr. tir-er, to draw.

But if the sense given above be just, (and it receives confirmation from another passage to be quoted just now,) it directs us to A.S. tyr-an, tyrw-an, to tear, as the origin of our tirr.

2. To uncover in a forcible way, S. q. to tear off.

Vnto him syne Eneas geuin has,
That by his vertw wan the secund place,
Ane habirgeoun of birnist mailyeis bricht,— Quhilk he sum time, with his strang handis two,
Tiruit and rent of bald Demoleo.

Doug. Virgil, 136, 22.

Thir venerable virgins, whom the warld call witches,
In the time of their triumph, tirr'd me the tade.

Montgomerie, Watson's Coll. iii. 17.

"Scot. to tir one to the skin, i. e. strip him naked;" Rudd. Both these examples evidently suggest the idea of force.

Hence, a house is often said to be tirred by a strong wind.

"They tirred skipper Walker out of his cloaths, and clad him in rags." Spalding's Troubles, ii. 170.

3. To unroof, S. See Sup.

"He tirred the hail toofalls of the office-houses,—and carried roof and slates away, wherewith he roofed a long school." Spalding, ut. sup. p. 26.

"To tir a house, to take of the slates, tiles, &c. of a house;" Rudd.

4. Metaph. to strip one of his property, S.

The term is used in a very emphatic S. Prov. applied to a selfish greedy person: "He caresna quha be tirr'd, gin he be theikit."

Sae Fortune, tirr me steek by steek,

And hair by hair. Morison's Poems, p. 99.

5. To pare off the sward by means of a spade. Persons are said to tirr the ground, before casting peats; as they first clear off the surface that covers the moss. To tirr and burn, to cast turfs on bad ground, and burn them that their ashes may serve for manure, S.

"Terrnave.—The name is evidently a corruption of Terrae navis; but whether given it by the Romans, or since they left the country, is uncertain. To this place a superstitious regard is attached by the vulgar. Tradition asserts, that some time ago a man attempting to cast divots (turfs) on the side of it, no sooner opened the ground with the spade, than the form of an old man, supposed to have been the spirit of the mountain, made its appearance from the opening, and with an angry countenance and tone of voice, asked the countryman why he was tirring (uncovering) his house over his head? On saying this, the apparition instantly disappeared.—None has since ventured to disturb the repose of the imaginary spirit." P. Dunning, Perth. Statist. Acc. xix. 442.

The term is also used with respect to quarries.

"These quarries require very little tirring. In some places the rock has no covering of earth." P. St. Andrews, Fife, Statist. Acc. xiii. 201. Ibid. xi. 483.

It is probable indeed, that this is the true origin of turf, a term that has puzzled etymologists. As tyrf is used in the same sense in A.S. it would appear to be derived from tyrw-an, to tear; the surface being thus rent from the soil. This etymon is not materially different from that of Seren, who derives Isl. torf, id. from what he designs antiquiss. Goth. torfa, effodere; according to Wachter, (vo. Torf), the most ancient language of Iceland.

6. To undress; to pull off one's clothes. S.
To TIRR THE KIRK TO THEEK THE QUIRE. To act preposterously; to pull down with the one hand in order to rebuild with the other. S.
To TIRR, v. n. To snarl; to speak ill-naturedly, S.

TIRRACKE, s. The Tarrock, a waterfowl. S.
TIRAN, s. A tyrant; any person of a perverse humour, with whom it is hardly possible to live. S.
TIRRIVEE, s. A fit of passion; or the extravagant mode of displaying it, as by prancing, stamping, &c. S.
 This has much appearance of being of Fr. origin; perhaps from tir-er, to draw; also, to dart forth; and vif, lively, as denoting the lively action of one animated by rage.
TIRWIRR, TIRWIRING, adj. Growling; a term applied to one who is habitually chiding or quarrelling. As tirwirr as a cat, S. See Sup.
 This might seem comp. of two synon. verbs, as more forcibly expressing the habit referred to; Teut. tergh-en, (V. Tirr, v.) and werr-en, to contend, or rather Isl. verr-a, to bark.
TISCHE, TYSCHÉ, TYSCHÉY, TUSCHÉ, s. A girdle; a belt.
 Ane riche tysche or belt hynt he syne,
 The pendentis wrocht of byrnist gold maist fyne.
Doug. Virgil, 288, 52.
 And guhar hir pap was for the spere cut away,
 Of gold thairon was belt ane riche tischey.
Ibid. 28, 25.
 Holland and Dunbar use tusché in the same sense.
 Syne schyre schapin to schaw, mony schene scheild
 With tusheis of tuest silk ticht to the tre.
Houlate, ii. 8. MS.
 And of ane burde of silk, richt costlie grein,
 Hir tusché was, with silver weil besene.
V. BURDE. Maitland Poems, p. 70.
 Rudd. derives it from Fr. tissu, "a wide sort of ribbon, a girth or fillet, or tissu, participle of tist-re, to weave." Ihre views our term as allied to Su.G. taska, Alem. Isl. tasca, Belg. tassche, tessche, a bag or scrip; observing, that S. tesche denotes such a girdle as the ancients used to fix their purses to. Hence Ital. tascha, marsupium, intasc-are, to hide.
TYSDAY, TYISDAY, s. Tuesday, the name given to the third day of the week, S. See Sup.
 "Yit befor the nixt day at 12 Hours (quhilk was Tyisday the 13th of Junii) the number passit thre thousand men, quhilk be Godis Providence came unto the Lordis." Knox's Hist. p. 141.
 This name has been generally derived from Tuisco, one of the deities of the Saxons, to whom it has been supposed that this day was consecrated. In A.S. it is written Ti-wesdaeg, Dan. Tigzdag, Thysdag, Isl. Tjisdag.
 Arngrim views this as Tyrsgdag-ur, softened into Tyssdagur; deriving the term from Tyr, one of the deities of the Goths, to whom great power over battle was ascribed. V. Bartholin. de Causis Contempt. Mort. pp. 350, 351. According to G. Andr. it is from Tyr, Mercury or Mars; in the oblique cases, Ty.
 Wormius traces the name to Disa, or Thisa, the wife of Thor; who was supposed to preside over justice. From her, he thinks, the third day of the week was in Dan. denominated Thijsdag. In honour of this goddess, sacred rites were annually performed with great pomp and solemnity at Upsal in Sweden. These were called Tijsating.

T Y T

This learned writer having mentioned Tuisco, Lat. Teutas or Teutates, who was worshipped as a male divinity, observes that Tijs did not correspond to the Teutates, but to the Hesus, of Latin writers. He adds, that, according to Vossius, de Idolol. Lib. 2. c. 33. T was often prefixed to H. Monument. Dan. Lib. 1. c. 4. Fast. Dan. Lib. 1. c. 15.

 Rudd. derives tyist, as Skinner entice, from Fr. attis-er, Ital. tizz-are, accendere, or A.S. tiht-an, allicere. But perhaps our term is rather allied to Arm. tis, a train; bon train, bon allure, Bullet; or even to Su.G. tuss-a, incitare, a term used to denote the setting on of dogs.

Rudd. derives it from A.S. tid, tempus. Macpherson, more properly, from Isl. titt, ready. This seems formed from tid-r, titt, Su.G. tid, frequens, diurnans; the origin of which is evidently tijd, tempus. Su.G. tid, although primarily signifying time, is used in the sense of, quickly. Komma i tid, not to delay. Doug. Virgil, 52, 41.

To bet, i. e. much hurt, overpowered. Obruimur, Virg. A.S. to beat-an, dilacerare.

This form occurs in O.E.

"Too monithes after the batel of Poyter, the cite of Basile al to shaken and rent with an yerth quake." Leland's Collectan. i. 568.

Mr. Macpherson refers to Wachter, who in his Prolegom. Sect. v. observes that Germ. zu is used as an adverb, denoting excess, also intension. The former quotes as examples, A.S. to-cwysan (i. to-cwysan) to shake in pieces; to-broken, quite broken; to-faegen, very glad. He also refers to Tyrwhitt in vo., who observes that "to, in composition with verbs, is generally augmentative."

But both these learned writers seem mistaken, in viewing to, as if it occurred only in one sense. It is indeed augmentative, as in to-faegen, perlaetus; and in this sense may be traced to A.S. to, insuper. But it is very often disjunctive, having the force of Lat. dis. Thus, to-braecan is rendered by Lye, disrumpere, to-cwysan, not only, quater, but dissipare; to-beatan, dilacerare, diverberare, to-braedan, dilatare, to-clifan, diffindere, &c. It must be admitted, however, that in some of these compounds, it is chiefly augmentative or intensive; the v. in its simple state conveying the idea; as in to-braecan and to-clifan.

TO. Shut; close; pron. tu, as Gr. υ The dore is to, S. The door is shut.

"The first was married upon Sir William Crichton, heir to the said Lord Crichton foresaid, and got with her the land of Frendraught in tocher." Pitscottie, p. 26.

"King James III. being of the age of twenty years, taketh to wife Margaret the King of Norroway's daughter, (otherwise the King of Denmark,) and got with her, in tocher-good, the lands of Orkney and Shetland, with all right and title of right to them, pertaining to the King of Norroway at that time." Ibid. p. 72.

Sibb., after Skinner, derives it from A.S. taec-an, be-taec-an, tradere, assignare. But it is a Celt. term. Ir. tochar, a dowry; perhaps originally from Lat. douar-ium, id.

To TOCHER, v. a. To give one a dowry, S.

"He married her to his brother John Earl of Athole, the Black Knight of Lorn's son, and tochered her with the lordship of Balveny." Pitscottie, p. 56.

TOCHERLESS, adj. Having no portion, S. See Sup.

Wha bids the maist, is sure to win the prize;

While she that's tocherless, neglected lies.

Shirrefs' Poems, p. 76.

To TO-CUM, v. n. 1. To approach. 2. To come to. S.

In sic like wise Turnus was to cumyng:

And quhen that Pallas saw him cum so nere,

He mycht areik to him ane casting spere.

Doug. Virgil, 333, 8.

A.S. to-cum-an, advenire.

TOCUM, TO-CUMMYNG, s. 1. Access; approach.

Baith here and thare Turnus the greuit sire

Went on horsbak, sersand about the wall

Euery dern way and secrete passage al,

Gif ony entré or tocum espy

He mycht for till assale the city by.

Doug. Virgil, 275, 49.

And lat vs formest haist vs to the se,

And thare recounter our fais, or thay land.

Qubilk as thay fyrst set fute vpon the sand

With slyd to cummyng, half dede in affray,

Or thay thare futesteppis ferme, and tak array.

Ibid. 325, 27.

2. Meeting; encounter.

And furth thay streike thare lang speris on fer,

Drew in thare armes wyth schaftis chargeit wele far,

Tasit vp dartis, takillis, and fleand flanis,

To counter the first tocum, for the nanis.

Doug. Virgil, 385, 50.

A.S. to-cyme, adventus, accessus, an arriving, approaching; Somner. Belg. toe-homste, id. In like manner Sw. tiltrade, literally, a treading to; tilgang, a going to.

TOD, s. The fox, S. See Sup.
 "Item of ilk daker of Otter skinnis and Tod skinnis vi. d." Acts, Ja. I. 1424. c. 34. Edit. 1566.
 Sum in ane lamb-skin is a Tod.
Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 41.
 "Amang thame are mony martrikis, bevers, quhitredis, and toddies." Bellend. Descr. Alb. c. 8.
 —Thou may reid in his halie Evangell;
 "Birds hes thair nests, and tods hes thair den,
 "Bot Christ Jesus, the Saviour of men,
 "In all this warld hes nocht ane penny braid,
 "Quhairon he may repois his heavenlie head."
Lyndsay, S.P.R. ii. 249.
 The fox is vulgarly known by no other name throughout S. Yet I find no term, that has the least resemblance to it, except Isl. toa, tove, vulpes, G. Andr. tofa, Verel.
 This crafty animal is often called Tod Lowrie, and simply Lowrie, q. v.
TOD-HOLE, s. A hole in which the fox hides himself. S.
TOD-LIKE, adj. Resembling the fox; crafty, thievish. S.
TOD'S BIRDS, TOD'S BAIRNS. An evil brood; a perverse young generation.
 "Suspect ever your affectionous, what ever entisement they haue to cloake the selfe with: suspect ever the motion of them, for the Devill is in them:—Swa, they wald ever be handled as Tod's birds; for they ar aye the war of ouer great libertie." Bruce's Eleven Sermon. 1591. Sign. Y. 8. a.
 "Argyle—put some 4 or 500 on Kintyre shore, to watch on Antrim's designs; the rest on the head of Lorn, to hold the islanders and those tods birds of Lochaber in some awe." Baillie's Lett. i. 159.
 "The Tod's Bairns are ill to tame," S. Prov., "apply'd to them who are descended of an ill parentage, or curs'd with a bad education. Such are hard to be made good or virtuous." Kelly, p. 329.
 "You breed of the Tod's Bairns, if one be good, all are good," S. Prov., "spoken of a bad family, where there are none to mend another." Ibid. p. 361.
 In like manner, those called "the quhelpis of the wolfis," Acts, Ja. I. c. 115. Edit. 1566. are, in the title, denominated wolf birdis.
Birds, as applied to quadrupeds, may be merely a tropical use of the term, as denoting the young of a fowl; especially as bairns is used in a similar manner. It deserves to be mentioned, however, that Isl. byrd has the sense of, nativitas, genus, familia; Verel.
TOD and LAMBS. A game played on a perforated board, with wooden pins, S.
 This game is materially the same with the E. one, called Fox and Geese, described by Strutt, Sports and Pastimes, pp. 237, 238.
TOD'S TAILS, TOD-TAILS, s. pl. Alpine club-moss; an herb, S. Lycopodium clavatum, Linn. It seems to receive its name S. from its supposed resemblance to the tail of a fox. See Sup.
TOD PULTIS. Perhaps errat. for tod peltis, fox-skins. S.
TOD'S-TURN, s. A base trick, manifesting the low cunning of a fox. S.
TOD-TYKE, s. A mongrel between a fox and a dog. S.
TOD-TOUZING, s. A method of hunting the fox in Scotland, by shouting, guarding, hounding dogs on him, &c. S.
TOD-TRACK, s. The traces of the fox's feet in snow. S.
TOD, s. Bush, Ivy-tod, ivy-bush. S.
TOD, TODIE, TODDIE, s. A small round cake of bread, given to children to keep them in good humour. S.
TODDLE, TODLIE, s. A small cake or skon; dim. from Tod.

T O F

TODDLE, s. A designation given to a child, or to a neat person of small size. S.
TODDLER, s. One who moves with short steps. S.
TODLICH (gutt.), s. A child beginning to walk. S.
To TODLE, TODDLE, v. n. 1. To walk with short steps, in a tottering way, as children do, or those who are in some degree intoxicated, S.
 Than out thar come the Modiwart,
 Ane beist throw nature blind,
 Quho fast the eirth culd scraip and scart,
 Rest and refuge to find:
 Quhiles dodling and todling,
 Vpon fowr prettie feit.
Burel's Pilgr. Watson's Coll. ii. 22.
Todle and Dodde are undoubtedly synon. Doddle is given by Seren. as an obsolete E. word, corresponding to Lat. vacillare. Our term seems also equivalent, and allied, to diddle, a v. used by Quarles, although I have not met with it in any Dictionary.
 And when his forward strength began to bloome,
 To see him diddle up and doune the roome!
 O, who would thinke, so sweet a babe as this,
 Should ere be slaine by a false-hearted kisse!
Divine Fancies, Lib. i. 4.
 The vera wee things, todlin, rin
 Wi' stocks out-owre their shouther.—Burns, iii. 127.
 2. To purl; to move with a gentle noise, S.
 Cou'd—todding burns, that smoothly play
 O'er gowden bed,
 Compare wi' Birks of Indermay?
Fergusson's Poems, ii. 25.
 3. It denotes the murmuring noise caused by meat boiling gently in a pot, Fife; more generally tottle, S.
 A junt o' beef, baith fat and fresh,
 Aft in your pat be todlin!
A. Douglas's Poems, p. 67.
Isl. dudd-a, segnipes esse; Su.G. tult-a, minutis gressibus ire, ut solent decrepiti aut infantes; Ihre. Isl. tolt-a, id. Seren. expl. doddle by tulta. Exm. totle, a slow, lazy person, totling, slow, idle, E. totty, shaking, unsteady, seem allied. The latter is derived by Dr. Johns. from totter, which has more the appearance of being a derivative than the other.
TO-DRAW, s. A resource; a refuge; something to which one can draw in danger or in difficulties. S.
TOFALL, TOOFALL, s. A building annexed to the wall of a larger one. It now properly denotes one, the roof of which rests on the wall of the principal building, S. See Sup.
 Of the Corskyrk the ilys twa,
 Wyth lede the south yle thekyd alsua,
 The north ile, and the qwere,
 The tofallis twa war made but were.
Wyntown, ix. 6. 126.
 "The toofalls were not theeked, because they might not be overtaken this season." Spalding's Troubles, ii. 30.
TO-FALL, TOO-FALL, s. The close. To-fall o' the day, the evening, S. Toofal of the night, id.
 He shot them up, he shot them down,
 The deer but and the rae;
 And he has scour'd the gude green wood
 Till to-fall o' the day.
Jamieson's Popular Ball. i. 197.
 But e'er the toofal of the night,
 He lay a corps on the Braes of Yarrow.
Ritson's S. Songs, i. 152.

Mr. Lambe views this image as drawn from a suspended canopy, so let fall as to cover what is below. V. Gl.

TOFORE, prep. Before.

And vther quibilis walde scho raik on raw,
Or pas tofore the altaris with fat offerandis.

Doug. Virgil, 101, 42.

A.S. to-for, ante, coram.

TOFORE, adv. Before.

With thyr woundis the sprete of Dido Quene,
The quihilk tofore in luf was kendillit grene,
Now all in fyre the flambe of luf furth blesis.

Doug. Virgil, 101, 23.

TOFT, s. A place where a message has stood. S.

TOFT, s. A bed for plants. PLANT-TOFT. A bed for rearing young coleworts or cabbages. S.

TO-GANG, s. Encounter; meeting; access. S.

TO-GAUN, s. A drubbing; a beating. S.

TOGERSUM, adj. Tedious; tiresome. S.

TOHILE, Wyntown, vi. 15. 13.

Gret possessyownys thai tynt qwyte
Be mysdoaris, that had delyt
Pylgrynys to tak, and tohile,
Or ony lele men wald despoyle.

Perhaps it should be read as two words to hile, q. to imprison; A.S. hel-an, Su.G. hel-a, occultare; A. Bor. to hele, to hyll, to conceal.

TOY, s. A head dress either of linen or woollen, that hangs down over the shoulders, worn by old women of the lower classes, S. See Sup.

"The tenants wives wore toys of linen of the coarsest kind, upon their heads, when they went to church, fairs, or markets. At home, in their own houses, they wore toys of coarse plaiding." P. Tongland, Kirkcudb. Statist.
Acc. ix. 325.

I wad na been surpris'd to spy,

You on an auld wife's flainen toy.—

V. MUTCH.

Burns, iii. 230.

Germ. tuch denotes cloth of any kind, linen or woollen;
Su.G. tyg, id. natt-tyg, a night-cap. But it seems rather from Belg. tooij-en, to tire, to adorn; whence tooisel, a tire, an ornament; tooister, a tire-woman. This fashion, doubtless, when introduced, was reckoned highly ornamental.
From its formidable appearance, it may be supposed that it was at first used in full dress.

TOIGHAL (gutt.), s. A parcel; a budget; luggage. S.

To TOIR, v. a. To beat, S. toor,

Tysiphone the wrekar of misdedis
With quhip in hand al reddy fast hir spedis
All to assale, to skurge, toir and bete.

Doug. Virgil, 184, 22.

Su.G. torfw-a, verberare.

TOIT, s. A fit, whether of illness, or of bad humour;
the same with Toutt. V. EYNDLING.

TOYT, s. Toys of Tay, the name given to the freshwater mussels found in Tay.

Now let us go, the pretious pearles a fishing,
Th' occasion serveth well, while here we stay,
To catch these muscles, you call toys of Tay.

Muse's Threnodie, p. 91.

Perhaps from Teut. tote, tuyt, cornu, extremitas instar cornu; Kilian.

To TOYTE, v. n. To totter like old age, S. also tot.

We've worn to crazy years thegither,

We'll toyte about wi' ane anither.

V. TODLE.

Burns, iii. 145.

TOKEN,  s.* The name given in S. to a ticket of lead or tin, which every private Christian receives as a mark of admission to the sacrament of the Supper. See S.

T O M

The first instance, as far as I have observed, of the use of such tokens, was at the General Assembly at Glasgow 1638.

"The church gates were strictly guarded by the town, none had entrance but he who had a token of lead, declaring that he was a covenantant." Spalding's Troubles, i. 89.

TOKIE, s. An old woman's head-dress, resembling a monk's cowl, S.B. See Sup.

Fr. toque, "a fashion of bonnet, or cap, (somewhat like our old courtiers velvet cap,) worn ordinarily by schollers, and some old men;" Cotgr. Tocqué, coiffed. Span. toca, Ital. tocador, a woman's night head-dress.

TOKIE, s. A fondling term applied to a child, S.B.
Germ. tocke, a baby; a puppet.

TOLBUTHE, TOLLBOOTH, s. A prison or jail. S.

TOLDOUR, TOLDOIR, s. Cloth woven with gold thread.

TOLIE, s. A small round cake of any kind of bread. S.

TOLL, s. A turnpike, S. V. Sir J. Sinclair's Observ. p. 130.

TOLL-BAR, s. A turnpike. S.

TOLL-ROAD, s. A turnpike road. S.

TOLLIE, s. A turd. S.

TOLLING, TOWLING, s. The name given to the sound which is emitted by bees before they swarm. S.

TOLLONESELLAR, s. A dealer in tallow. S.

TOLMONTH, TOLMOND, s. A year; twelve months. S.

TO-LOOK, TOLUIK, s. A prospect; matter of expectation; as, a puir to-look, an ill prospect as to the future, S.

"Bot heirof had our proud and vane Quene no plesour, and especially efter that her husband was deid; for (thocht sche) the to-luik of England sall allure mony wowers to me." Knox's Hist. p. 277.

"Bodwell—had the Queen of England by her Ambasador ordinar—to be his Commer, and Mr. Robert Bruce, my Uncle, and me, being moderator of that Assembly, invited now and then to good cheer; having some great purpose and to-look in hand; but he was never luckié, nor honest to God nor man." Mr. Ja. Melvill's MS.
Mem. p. 196.

A.S. to-loc-ian, adspicere.

TOLOR, s. State; condition. V. TALER. S.

To TOLTER, v. n. To move unequally; to totter.

So tolter quhilum did sche it to wreye,
There was bot clymbe and rycht downward hye,
And sum were eke that falling had sore,
There for to clymbe thair corage was no more.

King's Quair, C. v. 13.

Perhaps there is an inversion, for, "so did she at times writhe herself to make it totter."

Su.G. tult-a, vacillare; Lat. tolutar-is, ambling.

TOLTER, TOLTIR, adj. Unstable; in a state of vacillation.

For sothe it is, that, on her tolter quhele
Every wight cleverith in his stage,
And failyng foting oft quhen hir lest rele,
Sum up, sum down, is non estate nor age
Ensured more, the prynce than the page.

King's Quair, i. 9.

Before his face ane apill hang also,
Fast at his mouth, apou a toltir threde,
Quhen he gapit, it rokkit to and fro,
And fled as it refusit hym to fede.

This is part of the description given of Tantalus, in the Tractie of Orpheus kyng, Edinburgh, 1508. V. the v.

TO-LUCK, s. Boot; what is given above bargain, S.
mends, synon. I got a penny to the to-luck.

This has originated from the vulgar idea of giving luck to a bargain; like Lucks-penny, q. v.

TOME, TOM, TOUM, s. 1. A line for a fishing-rod, including the whole length, S.O. Cumb. A snood denotes only one length of the hair, from knot to knot. See Sup.

2. A long thread of any ropy glutinous substance; as rosin half-melted, sealing-wax, &c. S.

To TOME, TOUM, v. a. To draw out any viscous substance into a line; pron. as Toom. S.

To TOME, TOUM out, v. n. To be drawn out into a line or long threads, like any glutinous substance. S.

TOME, s. Used perhaps for book or volume. S.

TOMERALL, s. A horse or cout two years old. S.

TOMINAUL, s. An animal of the ox kind, one year old. S.

TOMMACK, s. A hillock. V. TAMMACK. S.

TOMMY NODDIE, TOM-NODDY. The Puffin, a bird, S. Orkn. The Tam Norie of the Bass.

"Puffin, Tom-Noddy." P. Luss, Dunbart. Statist. Acc. xvii. 251.

"The Puffin (alca arctica, Lin. Syst.), the coulterneb, or tommy noddie of this place, is seen very often on our rocks; it builds in holes under ground, and lays but one egg." Barry's Orkney, p. 305.

Tom-Noddy, S.O. P. Luss, Dunbart. Statist. Acc. xvii. 251. V. NORIE.

TOMSHEE, s. A fairy-hillock. S.

TO-NAME, s. A name added, for the sake of distinction, to one's surname; or used instead of it.

Thay theifs that steillis and tursis hame,
Ilk ane of them has ane to-name;
Will of the Lawis,
Hab of the Schawis:
To mak bair wawis,
Thay thinke na schame.

Maitland of Lethington, ap. Scott's Minstrelsy, I. Introd. CLIII.

"Owing to the marchmen being divided into large clans, bearing the same surname, individuals were usually distinguished by some epithet, derived from their place of residence, personal qualities, or descent. Thus, every distinguished moss-trooper had, what is here called a to-name, or nom de guerre, in addition to his family name." Ibid. N.

TONE, part. pa. Taken.

Quhairfoir I counsall every man, that he
With lufe nocht in the feindis net be tone.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 92.

TONGUE,* s. On one's tongue, by heart. S.

To GIE AFF THE TONGUE. To deliver a message, or render an account, from recollection, or verbally. S.

TONG-GRANT, s. Acknowledgment; confession. S.

TONGUEY, adj. 1. Applied to one who is qualified to defend his cause with the tongue. 2. Loquacious; glib-tongued; rather used in a bad sense. S.

TONGUE-ROOTS, s. pl. It was juist at my tongue-roots, a phrase used to intimate that a person was just about to catch a half-forgotten term; or that he was on the point of uttering an idea in which he had been anticipated by another. S.

To TONGUE-TACK, v. a. To prevent from freedom of speech.

TONGUE-TACKED, part. pa. 1. Tongue-tied, having an impediment in speech, from the membrane which attaches the tongue to the under part of the mouth coming too far forward. 2. Applied to a person accustomed to speak a great deal, who becomes unusually silent. 3. Mealy-mouthed; not speaking the truth with becoming boldness. 4. Applied often to one who is mumbling from intoxication. S.

TONGUE-FERDY, adj. Loquacious; glib of the tongue, Ang.

Su.G. tung, lingua, and faerdig, paratus. Many words of the same formation occur in Su.G.; as spakferdig, meek, peaceable, raettferdig, hogferdig, &c. Ihre thinks, that all the words, which have this termination, acknowledge A.S. ferhth, mens, animus, as their origin. If this be the case as to some of them, others seem more nearly allied to Teut. vaerdigh, expeditus, promptus, agilis. V. Laett, Ihre.

TONGUE-RAIK, s. Elocution, S. V. RAIK.

TONNE, adj. Apparently made of tin. S.

TONNY, adj. Perhaps tawny-coloured. S.

TONNOCHED, part. pa. Covered with a plaid. S.

To TOOBER, v. a. To beat; to strike, S.O. tabour, E. and Loth.

Fr. tabour-er, to strike or bump on the posteriors, q. as on a drum; from tabour, a drum.

TOOBER, s. A quarrel, S.O.

TOOBERIN, s. A beating; a drubbing. V. TABOUR. S.

TOOFAL, s. Toofal of the night, nightfall, S. V. TO-FALL.

TOOK, s. A peculiar and disagreeable taste. S.

TOOLYE, s. A broil.

To TOOLYE, v. n. To quarrel. V. TUILYIE.

TOOM, adj. Empty. V. TUME.

TOOM-SKINN'D, adj. Hungry. V. under TUME. S.

TOOP, s. A ram; a Tup. S.

TOOPIKIN, TOOPICK, s. 1. A pinnacle; a summit. 2. A narrow pile raised so high as to be in danger of falling. 3. A dome, cupola, turret, or steeple. S.

TOOR, s. A turf. V. TURES. S.

TOORRIN, part. pr. Hay is said to be toorin, when it rises on the rake in raking. S.

To TOOT, TOUT, v. a. 1. To blow or sound a horn, S.

"Sir William Hamilton of Preston,—and the other heritors of Prestonpans parish, are convened for the riot mentioned supra,—for suffering Brown then preaching and praying to be affronted by boys, who touted horns," &c. Fountainhall's Decis. i. 182.

O lady, I heard a wee horn toot,
And it blew wonder clear.

Jamieson's Popul. Ball. i. 172.

2. To sound loudly; to spread as a report. S.

Su.G. tut-a, Isl. taut-a, Dan. tud-er, A.S. thut-an, theot-an, thiot-an, ululare; Germ. dud-en, sonare. Su.G. tuta i horn, to blow a horn, Belg. toet-en, Teut. tuyt-en, id. tuyte, a horn; Germ. dud-horn, a sounding horn. It seems to be the same Belg. v. which also signifies to buzz: tuyting der ooren, a buzzing in the ears.

Ihre observes, that Isl. taut-a, is almost always used to denote the sound made with horns, although it primarily respects the howling of wild beasts. Olaus Rudbeck refers to Chald. tit, which signifies both a horn, and the sound made by it.

To Toot, v. n. 1. To cry as if one were sounding a horn; to cry by prolonging the voice. S.

2. To make a plaintive noise, as when a child cries loudly and mournfully, S.

TOOT, TOUT, s. The blast of a horn or trumpet, S. See S.

The rattling drum and trumpet's tout
Delight young swankies that are stout.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 369.

"A new tout in an old horn;" Ferguson's S. Prov. p. 7.

TOUTING HORN, a horn for blowing, S. See Sup.

"Every individual was accoutred with a large club, and, if possible, a touting horn (the horn of an ox perforated at the small end), by blowing on which they made a loud, and not altogether a discordant sound." Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, i. 2. Note.

T O P

To TOOT, v. n. To express dissatisfaction or contempt. This v., as well as the E. interj. tut, seems formed from the sound.

Toot, interj. Expressive of contempt. E. Tut. S.

To TOOT, v. a. To drink copiously; Toot it up, drink it off. Toot, s. A hearty draught of liquor. S.

TOOTHFU', s. To tak a toothfu', to take a moderate quantity of strong liquor, S. See Sup.

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, i. 39.

TOOTH-RIFE, adj. Agreeable to the taste; palatable. S.

TOOTHsome, * adj. Not merely pleasing to the taste, as in English, but easily chewed. S.

TOOT-MOOT, s. A muttering. S.

To TOOTTLE, v. n. To mutter; to speak to one's self. S.

TOOT-NET, s. A large fishing-net anchored, Ang.

A man stands in a coble, or small fishing-boat; and, when he sees the fish enter the net, calls the fishers to haul it. He is designed the Tootsman, pron. tutsman. This net is used only, it is supposed, in the sea, or in rivers where the tide flows.

"The fishing-tackle formerly employed was of various kinds. Sometimes it consisted of a common moveable net or siene; sometimes of a toot-net, much larger and stronger than the former, extending to an indefinite length from the beach into the water, and secured at its extremity by an anchor." Case in the House of Lords, A. 1805. Charles Gray of Carse, Respondent.

This word is evidently of Belg. origin. For tootebel is defined, "a certain square net;" Sewel. Perhaps as this species of net projects so far, the term is allied to Teut. tote, rostrum.

TOP, TAIL, nor MANE. V. under TAP. S.

TOP, TAP, adj. Very good; capital; excellent. S.

TOPPER, s. Any thing excellent in its kind. S.

To TOP, TOPE, v. a. 1. To tap; to broach. 2. Used in a 'laxer sense, as equivalent to breaking bulk. S.

TOPSTER, TOPSTAR, s. A tapster. S.

To TOPT, v. a. To tap; to broach. S.

TOP ANNUELL. A certain annuity paid from lands or houses.

In the Acts of Mar. 29 May, 1551, c. 10, three kinds of annuells are mentioned, which Skene doubtfully expl. in the following manner.

"Ground annuell is esteemed to be quhen the ground or propertie of onie lande bigged or vnbigged, is disposed and annalied for ane annuell to be payed to the annalier thereof, or to ane vther person, sik as ony Chaipleine or Priest. Top annuell, is ane certaine dewtie, given and disposed furth of ony bigged tenement, or land, of the quhilk tenement the propertie remains with the disponer, & he is only oblished to paye the said annuell. Few annuell is ather when the few maill, or dewtie is disposed as ane yeirlie annuel: or quhen the land, or tenement is sette in few-ferme heretablie, for ane certaine annuel to be payed nomine feudifirmae." De Verb. Sign. vo. Annuell.

In Acts, Edit. 1566, tope is the orthography; Tope annuellaris, Fol. 149, b.: toppe, Skene.

Erskine has observed, that "the very meaning of these words, Sir John Skene, not above forty years after the statute was enacted, professes himself utterly ignorant of." Instit. B. ii. T. 3, § 52.

"The case being there of tenements within burgh, the feu-annual," according to Stair, "is that which is due by the reddendo of the property of the ground before the house was built; ground-annual is a distinct several annualrent, constitute upon the ground, before the house was built; and the top-annualrent is out of the house." Instit. B. ii. T. 5, § 7.

It is possible, that the term top may be equivalent to chief or principal, as it is often used, in this sense, S. as if it were an adj. These annuitants may be thus denominated, because the annuity alone is disposed to them, whereas the property remains with the disponer. It may have some reference to L.B. feudum capitale, Fr. fief en chef; the person, giving the annuity, still retaining his right to the lands; only with the burden of paying a certain sum annually, in consequence of his act of disposition.

It may be observed, however, that in O.Fr. we find the phrase, Terre estant entoppe, "waste (because unhusbanded, or untitled) ground;" Cotgr. L.B. topa, destructio, ruina vel alienatio; Du Cange. Carpentier denies the justness of this definition; observing that it is synon. with Vastum, i. e. waste. Ager incultus, terra pascendis animalibus destinata, a veteri Gallico Tope & Toppe, eadem notione. He shews that Tope was used in this sense, A. 1480.

I hesitate whether this correction be just. Topa is certainly used, as expl. by Du Cange. It seems, indeed, properly to refer to buildings; Et si qua alienata vel in ruinam seu topam, deducta fuerint, ad debitum statum deducam. Jurament. Canonic. Belnens. in Burgundia.

To TOPE, v. a. To oppose. See Sup.

"The King nominated one day, in face of parliament, the Earl of Morton; while Argyle topes this nomination, as of a man unmeet, because of irresponsibleness to the law for his debts." Baillie's Lett. i. 329.

Perhaps the S. phrase is allied, to be on one's tap, to assault him, either with hands, or with the tongue.

TOPFAW, s. Soil that has fallen in, or sunk from the surface. S.

TOPINELLIS, s. The lines for haling the topsails. S.

TOPMAN, s. A ship or vessel with tops. S.

TOP OUR TAILL, adv. Topsyturvy.

The pryd of princis, withowtyn faill,

Garris all the warld rin top our taill.

Lyndsay, S.P.R. ii. 97.

TO-PUT, part. pa. Affixed; put to. S.

To-PUT, s. Any thing unnecessarily or incongruously superadded; any fictitious addition to a true narrative.

To-PUTTER, s. This most nearly corresponds to E. task-master; one that holds another to work. S.

"Ill workers are ay good to-putters;" Ramsay's S. Prov. p. 43.

TOQUE, s. The cushion formerly worn on the forepart of a female's head, over which the hair was combed. S.

TOR (of a chair), s. Perhaps the round, or the semi-circular arm of a chair of state.

"Things thus put in ordour the Quene cam forth, and with no litle worldly pompe was placed in the chair, having twa faythfull supposts, the Maister of Maxwell upoun the one Tor, and Secretare Lethingtoun upoun the vther Tor of the chair, quhareupoun they waytit diligently, all the tyme of that accusatioun, sumetyme the one occupying hir ear, sumtyme the uther." Knox's Hist. p. 340.

Fr. tour, Teut. toer, circulus.

TOR (of a saddle), s. The pommel, the forepart of which is somewhat elevated, S. See Sup.

A horse he never doth bestride

Without a pistol at each side:

And without other two before,

One at either saddle tore. Colvil's Mock Poem, i. 41.

A.S. tor, a tower, an eminence.

To TORE, v. a. To tear.

T O R

Like so as quhare Jouis big foule the erne,
With hir strang tallouns, and hir punsis sterne,
Lichtand had claucht the litil bynd calf ying,
Toring the skyn, and made the blude out spring.
Doug. Virgil, 465, 40.

Rudd. is inclined to view this as the same with toir.
But this seems formed from A.S. teor-an, rumpere.
TORETT or TORRETT CLAITH. A muffler. S.
TORFEIR, TORFER, s. Hardship; difficulty. See S.
Than said he loud upone loft, "Lord, will ye lyth,
"Ye sal nane torfeir betyde, I tak upone hand,
"Na mysliking have in hart, nor have ye na dout."
Gawan and Gol. iii. 18.

It occurs in MS. Libr. Royal College of Physicians, marked H. iii. 12, supposed to be of the age of Rob. Bruce, or prior to it.

In thair speling ful wele thai spedde;
Thoh that thai wel sped als I saie,
Ful mani a torfer sufferid thaie;
Na lefte thai for na grame of man
Bot werande on the wrang thai wan.

This would seem merely Isl. torfaer-a, iter difficile et impeditum, Verel. p. 257, from Tor, a particle in composition denoting difficulty and trouble in accomplishing any thing, and faer-a, to go.

To TORFEL, TORCHEL, v. n. 1. "To pine away; to die;" Gl. Sibb. Torfle, to decline in health, A. Bor.
See Sup.—2. To relapse into disease. 3. To draw back from a design or purpose.

Sibb. derives it from Isl. thurk-a, Su.G. tork-a, siccare, arescere, abstergere, Isl. thorr, aridus, siccus. Perhaps it may signify, to be in a state of difficulty or trouble; Isl.
torfellde, torvellde, difficilis, arduus; apparently from tor, as in Torfeir, and velld, efficio, valeo, potis sum.

TORFLE, TORFEL, s. The state of being unwell; a declining state of health. S.

TORY,* s. A term expressive of the greatest indignation or contempt; often applied to a child; as, "Ye vile little tory." S.

TORYT, Wallace vii. 1240, Perth Edit. Leg. taryt, as in MS. i. e. tarried.

To TORK, TORQUE, v. a. To torture by the continued infliction of punctures, pinching, or scratching. S.

To TORN, v. a. To turn.

The cattel eik beheld thay raik on raw,— Bayth squeil and low in thay ilk plentuous gatis, Quhilk sum tyme hecht Caryne fare and large,
Quhare the housis war like ane torned barge.
Doug. Virgil, 254, 42.

TORN BUT.

And the King that angry wes,
For he his men saw fle him fra,
Said then, "Lordingis, sen it is swa,
"That vre rynnys again ws her,
"Gud is we pass off thar daunger,
"Til God ws send eftsonys grace;
"And yeyt may fall, giff thai will chace,
"Quyt thaim torn but sum dele we sall."

Barbour, ii. 438. MS.

Instead of combat in Pink. and other Edit. "It may happen, that we shall in some degree retaliate on our enemies for the victory they have obtained, if they attempt to pursue us." The most probable conjecture I can form as to the phrase is, that it is equivalent to turn about; Fr.
tourn-er, to turn and but in but a but, on equal terms.

TORNE, s. A turn, an action done to one, whether favourable or injurious.

And in remembrance of this ill torne,

T O S

Thay can his templis wourschip and adorne.
Doug. Virgil, 480, 13.

TORPIT, s. Turpentine. S.

TORRIE, s. A term applied to peas roasted in the sheaf, Fife; apparently from Lat. torreo, q. what is scorched.

TORRIE, TORY, s. A beetle that breeds in dung, and consumes grain. Torie-worm, the grub-worm. S.

TORRY-EATEN, adj. Torry-eaten land, poor moorish soil, when exhausted by cropping, and appearing puffed, and very bare, having only scattered tufts of sheep's fescue, S.B. See Sup.

To TORRIE-EAT, v. n. The same with being Torry-eaten.
TORRIS, pl.

The king faris with his folk, our firthis and fellis,— Withoutin beilding of blis, of bern, or of byre:
Bot torris, and tene wais, teirfull quha tellis.

Gawan and Gol. i. 3.

Does this mean towers (Teut. torre, turris) and mournful ways? Or shall we view tene as an error for teme, q.
empty walls?

TORT, part. pa. Tortured; distorted.

Now sal he perische, and now sal he de;
And sched his gentyl blude so pacient,
In greuous panys, be Troianis tort and rent.

Lat. tort-us. Doug. Virgil, 340, 34.

TORTOR, s. A tormentor. S.

TOSCH, TOSCHE, adj. Neat; trim; applied to trees, &c. as referring to the use of the shears or pruninghook. Also expl. happy. S.

—So as quhilom the mekil tosche fir tre
On Erimanthus the mont of Archadé,
Or in the wod of Ida with ane sound,
Vp by the rutis rent, ruschis to the ground.

Doug. Virgil, 142, 46.

As cava pinus is the phrase in Virg., and the reading in MS., according to Rudd., costhe; it seems very doubtful what had been the word, as written by Doug. Bosse would have been most natural.

I gang ay fou clean and fou tosh,
As a' the neighbours can tell.

Ritson's S. Songs, i. 99.

Sibb. mentions O.Fr. tousé, clipped, polled, pared round.
Arm. touz-er is to cut, q. to make trim. But as Doss,
S.O. is used as synon. with tosch, it may perhaps be allied to Belg. dos, array, doss-en, to clothe; transferred from neatness in clothing, to a trim appearance in whatever respect.

TOSHLY, adv. Neatly; trimly. S.

TOSCHEODERACHE, s. The deputy of a Mair of fee; also, the name given to the office itself, in our old laws. V. MAIR, MAIRE.

TOSHOCH, s. A comfortable-looking young person. S.

TOSIE, adj. 1. Topsy, intoxicated in some degree, S.

A good true Scot, who kept a stabling there,—
Frae be't he saw them, came within a blink,
And brought them wealth of meat and tosie drink.

Hamilton's Wallace, p. 41.

Mod. Sax. dosig, giddy; Isl. dus, drunken. Su.G. dus is used in relation to those who are addicted to tippling.
Isl. tos-a, to babble, to talk idly; tos, babbling.

TOSIE, TOZIE, adj. Warm and snug. S.

TOSILIE, TOZILIE, adv. Warmly and snugly. S.

TOSINESS, TOZINESS, s. Warmth and snugness. S.

TOSOT, s. An instrument of torture, anciently used in S. Perhaps for torturing the toes. S.

TOSS, s. 1. A health proposed; a toast. 2. A celebrated beauty; one often given as a toast. S.

To TOST, v. a. To tease; to vex. Also as E. v. To Toss. S.

TOSTIT, TOSTED, part. pa. 1. Tossed, used metaph. in regard to difficulties and opposition. S.

2. A term vulgarly used, as signifying that one is oppressed with severe affliction, S. B. S.

TOT, s. A fondling name given to a child, S.

Wow, Jenny! can there greater pleasure be,
Than see sic wee tots toolying at your knee;
When a' they ettle at, their greatest wish,
Is to be made of, and obtain a kiss?

Gentle Shep. Ramsay's Works, ii. 81.

O waes me! for our blooming tots!

A. Douglas's Poems, p. 41.

Perhaps contr. from totum, a term often applied to a child, from its diminutive size, in allusion to the Te-totum used by children; or from S. tot, to totter, in allusion to the motion of children. V. TOYTE. It may, however, be an ancient term, allied to Isl. tott-a, leviter sugere, applied to infants; G. Andr. p. 241, evidently akin to Teut. tote, mamilla.

To TOT, TOT about, v. n. 1. To move with short steps as a child does. 2. To move feebly in a tottering way. S.

To TOTTIE, v. n. To move with short steps. V. TODLE. S.

TOT, s. The haill tot. The whole of any number of objects. Also, the whole tot. S.

To TOTCH, v. a. 1. To toss about. 2. To rock a cradle. S.

To TotCH, v. n. To move quickly with short steps. S.

TotCH, s. A sudden jerk. S.

To TOTH, ToATH, v. a. To manure land by means of what is called a toth-fold. V. TATH. S.

TOTH, s. The manure made in this way. S.

TOTH-FOLD, TOTH-FAULD, s. An enclosure to keep in cattle during the night, that they may dung the field. S.

TOTHIR, TOTHYR, adj. 1. The other, S. pron. tither.

The tothir twa fled to thar hors agayne.

Wallace, i. 416. MS.

The tane the tothire wald have wndwne.

Wyntown, vii. 8. 76.

Tother is used in the same sense O. E.

Concupiscentia carnis men called the elder mayde,
And Couetis of eyes called was the tother.

P. Ploughman, Fol. 53, a.

His sonnes thei ne wald, the ton no the tother.

R. Brunne, p. 90.

2. The second.

For-thi haldis clerkis be thare sawe,
That custwme is the tothir lawe.

Wyntown, viii. 4. 256.

We still say, Custom's a second nature, Prov. S.

Bot fra the stok down ewynlykly

Discendand persownys lynealy

In the tothir, or the thryd gre,

Newu, or Pronevw suld be. Wyntown, viii. 3. 115.

Tother occurs in the same sense, R. Brunne, p. 169.

At none the tother day thei sauh fer in the se

A grete busse & gay, fulle hie of saile was he.

3. It seems to be sometimes used indefinitely, in the sense of another, or posterior.

The Kyng upon the tothyr day second, this seems merely other with t, or as some think, the, prefixed, after a vowel; like ta for a.

TOTTIE, adj. Warm; snug. Syn. Cosie. S.

TOTTIS, s.

Na dentie geir this Doctor seikis;

Of tottis russet his ryding breikis.

Legend Bp. St. Androis, Poems 16th Cent. p. 327.

Perhaps q. tails, as denoting the refuse or coarsest locks of wool; Su. G. totte, a handful of flax or wool.

To TOTTLE, v. n. 1. A term used to denote the noise made by any substance, when boiling gently, S.

In summer time a piece fat beef to tottle,—

Some pocket-money; these can please my mind.

A. Nicol's Poems, 1739, p. 100.

It is used, perhaps improperly, as a v. a. See Sup.

Imprimis, then, a haggis fat,

Weel tottl'd in a seething pat,

Wi' spice an' ingans weel ca'd thro',

Had help'd to gust the stirrah's mow.

V. TODLE, v.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 78.

2. To purl; applied to a stream. V. TODLE. S.

To TOTTLE, v. n. To walk with short steps. S.

TOTUM, s. 1. The game of Te-totum; the small top used. 2. A term of endearment for a child. S.

To TOUCH,* v. a. 1. Applied to an Act of Parliament, when it received the royal assent. 2. To hurt; to injure.

To TOUCH up, v. a. To animadvert upon. S.

TOUCHBELL, s. An earwig. S.

TOUCHET (gutt.), s. A lapwing. V. TEUCHIT. S.

TOUCH-SPALE, s. An earwig. S.

To TOVE, v. n. To talk familiarly, prolixly, and cheerfully, S. To tove and crack, to carry on a free conversation with great glee, without regard to the lapse of time; often applied to one whose animal spirits are elevated by strong drink. See Sup.

It may be allied to Belg. toov-en, to tarry, Teut. toev-en, prolix accipere; Kilian. But it has great appearance of being originally the same with O. E. tave, insanire, delirare; Jun. Etym. Germ. tob-en, Belg. doov-en, Alem. top-un, id.

TOVIE, adj. 1. Tipsy; a low term, synon. with Tosie, q. v. perhaps, q. loquacious, in consequence of drinking. 2. Babbling; talking in a silly and incoherent manner. 3. Comfortable; warm; as, "A tovie fire." S.

To TOVE, v. n. To give forth a strong smoke when burning. Thus a thing is said to "tove and reek." S.

To TOVIZE, v. a. To flatter; to use cajoling language. S.

TOUK, s. A hasty pull; a tug, S.

"Scot. the word is used for a touch, pull; as, to take a touk of any thing, i. e. have a touch of it," Rudd.

Sibb. properly refers to A. S. teog-an, trahere. He also mentions Teut. tucken as synon. But it signifies to touch; also, to strike. We may add Moes. G. tiug-a, Su. G. tog-a, trahere. It may be observed, however, that A. S. twicc-an, vellicare, precisely expresses the idea conveyed by our term.

To TUCK, v. a. To beat.

"Aberdeen carefully caused tuck drums through the town, charging all men to be in readiness with their best arms," &c. Spalding's Troubles, ii. 166.

To TOUK, TUCK, v. n. To emit a sound, in consequence of being beaten.

The armies met, the trumpet sounds,

The dandring drums alloud did touk.

Battle Harlaw, Evergreen, i. 85.

"Trumpets sound, and drums tuck." Spalding's Troubles, i. 167. V. the s.

TOUK, s. 1. A stroke; a blow.

Hercules it smytis with ane mychty touk,

4 D

Apoun the richt half for to mak it jouk.

Doug. Virgil, 249, 23.

2. Touk of drum, beat of drum, S. Gl. Sibb. See Sup.

In this sense, evidently from Teut. tuck-en, icere; as Sw. trumslag, drumming, from trumb, and slaa, to strike.

TOUK, s. An embankment to prevent the water from washing away the soil. Syn. Hutch. S.

TOUM, s. 1. A fishing line. V. TOME. 2. The gossamer. S.

TOUMS, adj. Ropy; glutinous. V. TOME, v. S.

TOUN, TOWN, s. Besides a city or large assemblage of houses, this term is used to denote a farmer's steading, or a collection of dwelling-houses, however small, or even a single house. S.

TOUN-GATE, s. A street. S.

TOUN-RAW, s. The privilege of a Township. S.

TOUN'S-BAIRN, s. A native of the same town. S.

TOWNSHIP, s. A farm occupied by two or more neighbouring farmers, in common, or in separate lots. S.

TOUNDER, s. Tinder.

Than vp to Mars in hy we haistit vs,
Wounder hote, and dryer than the tounder.

His face flammand, as fyre richt furious;

His bost and brag mair aull than the thunder,

Maid all the heuin most like to schaik in sunder.

Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 238.

Alem. tundere, Isl. tunthere, id. The term seems derived from tinthra, Moes. G. tand-jan, A.S. tend-an, to kindle; whence also Teind, a spark, q. v.

TOUP, s. A foolish fellow. S.

To TOUR, v. n. Perhaps to go quickly; or to turn. S.

By TOUR, adv. Alternately; by turns. S.

TOUR, TOOR, s. A turf. S.

TOURBILLON, s. A whirlwind; a tornado. S.

TOURE, s. Turn; course; in regular succession. S.

TOURKIN-CALF, TOURKIN-LAMB, s. A calf or lamb that wears the skin of an animal which is dead, that it may deceive the dam of the dead one, and be allowed to suck her. S.

To TOUSE, v. a. To disorder; to dishevel. S.

TOUSIE, TOWZIE, adj. 1. Disordered; dishevelled; as, a touzie head, one that has not been combed, S. Touslie is sometimes used. See Sup.

2. Rough; shaggy, S.

His breast was white, his towzie back

Weel clad wi' coat o' glossy black.

V. TOUSLE.

Burns, iii. 3.

To TOUSS, v. a. 1. To confuse; to put in disorder; to rumple. 2. To handle roughly. V. TOUSLE. S.

To TOUSLE, v. a. 1. To put into disorder; to dishevel; often, to rumple, S.

Frae Gudame's mouth auld warld tale they hear,—

O' gaists that win in glen and kirk-yard drear,

Whilk touzles a' their tap, and gars them shak wi fear.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 57.

2. To handle roughly, as dogs do each other.

With warwolfes and wild cats thy weird be to wander,

Dragleit through dirty dubs and dykes,

Toused and tuggled with town tykes.

Polwart, Watson's Coll. iii. 16.

Tussel is used for struggle, N. and S. of E. Grose, Prov.

Gl. This term is adopted by P. Pindar.

Thus Envy, the vile Hag, attacks my rhymes,

Swearing they shall not peep on distant times;

But violent indeed shall be the tussel.

Royal Tour, Proem.

It seems doubtful, if this has been formed from E. touse, expl. "to pull, to tear, to haul, to drag;" Johns. Germ. tusel-n signifies to beat. But the S. term has more analogy to Isl. tusk-a, luctari, tusk, lucta lenis et jocosa, G. Andr. p. 243, as it is most generally used to express the disorder of one's dress, in consequence of playful or wanton struggling. It may be a dimin. from the Isl. v., as the adj. is most commonly used, wanting the l. V. TAISSE.

TOUSLE, TOUZLE, s. Rough dalliance, S.

For tho' I be baith blyth and canty,

I ne'er get a touzle at a'.

R. Galloway's Poems, p. 214.

To TOUSLE out, v. a. To turn out in a confused way. S.

TOUST, s. Perhaps a small tax on ships for towage. S.

TOUSTIE, adj. Irascible; testy. S.

To TOUT, v. a. To sound a horn. V. TOOT.

To TOUT, TOOT, v. n. To drink copiously; to take large draughts, S. pron. toot. See Sup.

—They'll ban fu' sair the time

That e'er they toutit aff the horn,

Which wambles thro' their weym

Wi pain that day.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 52.

For now our gentles' gabbs are grown sae nice,

At thee they toot, an' never spear my price.

Ibid. p. 74.

TOUT, s. 1. A copious draught, S.

2. A drinking match, S.B. Gl. Shirr.

To TOUT aff, v. a. To empty the vessel from which one drinks; to drink its whole contents. S.

To TOUT at, v. a. To continue to drink copiously. S.

To TOUT out, To TOUT UP out, v. a. Syn. To TOUT aff. S.

To TOUTLE, TOOTLE, v. n. To tipple. S.

TOOTIE, s. A drunkard; often, "A drucken tootie." S.

TOUT, s. 1. A fit of illness; an ailment of a transient kind, S. See Sup.

Ir. tocht signifies a fit or trance. But our term greatly resembles the use of Belg. tocht, togt, wind, air; also, an expedition, a voyage. De togt van de deur, the wind that comes into the door. Zy had een zwaare togt, She had a sore bout; Sewel. It is often said, of one who has been pretty severely ill, He had a sair tout, S.

2. A transient displeasure; a fit of ill humour, Ang. See Sup. It seems to be the same which was anciently written toit, toyt, expl. "freak," Gl. Everg.

Were he ay sae, he then wad ay be kind;

But then anither tout may change his mind.

Shirrefs' Poems, p. 42.

To TOUT, TOWT, v. n. 1. To be seized with a sudden fit of sickness. 2. To be seized with a fit of ill-humour. S.

To TOUT, TOWT, v. a. 1. To toss; to put in disorder, S.

To spill the bed it war a pene,

Quod he, the laird wald not be fane

To find it toutit and ourtred. Chron. S. P. iii. 201.

2. Metaph. to throw into disorder by quibbling or litigation.

"They came in a loving & well willing manner to enquire, but we perceive the purpose is but to canvass and tout our matters here a while, that hereafter men of little skill and less conscience may decern into them as they please," &c. Mr. James Melvill's MS. Mem. p. 298.

3. To tease; to vex, S.

This might seem allied to Isl. taatt-a, to tease (wool), Seren. vo. Teaze; or Su. G. tugt-a, to chastise: But V. the s.

TOUTTIE, adj. 1. Throwing into disorder; as, a touttie wind, a boisterous wind that tosses one who is exposed to it, S.

T O W

This is much the same with Belg. togtig, windy.

2. One whose temper is very irritable, who is easily put in disorder, S. 3. Subject to frequent ailments. S.

It may be observed that Belg. togt, which in sing. signifies air, wind, in pl. (togt-en) denotes the passions. Zyne togten bedwingen, to refrain one's passions; q. to dwang ane's touts, S.

To TOUTHER, v. a. To put into disorder. S.

TOUTHERIE, adj. Disordered; confused; slovenly. S.

To TOUTLE, v. a. To put clothes in disorder, especially applied to woollen clothes. S.

TOW, s. 1. A rope of any kind; as, the bell-tow, the rope for ringing a bell; the tows of a ship, the cables, S.

His towes, I find, hes bene so fyne,

For all the stormes hes bene sensyne,

His schip come never on the schalde,

But stack still on the ancker halde.

Legend Bp. St. Androis, Poems 16th Cent. p. 314.

"The anchor-tow abideth fast within the vail." Rutherford's Lett. Ep. 15.

Su.G. tog, Isl. tog, taug, Belg. touw, restis, funis. Sw. ankartog, a cable. Ihre derives tog from tog-a, ducere, as appearing properly to denote the ropes by which nets, and things of the same kind, are drawn.

L.B. tugg-ae, ropes or harness, or traces for drawing. Cowel, in like manner, deduces this from A.S. getog-an, to tug, or pull, or draw.

Sibb. mentions towm as used in the same sense with tow; Sw. toem, habena.

2. A halter, S. See Sup.

And whoso yields alive, this tow portends,
Streight must he hing, where did our dearest friends
Who suffered for the truth.—

Muses Threnodie, p. 134.

TOWAR, s. A ropemaker. S.

TOW, s. 1. The inferior part of flax or hemp, rejected in the dressing. 2. That which especially occupies one's attention. To hae other Tow on one's Rock, to have business quite of another kind. S.

To TOW, v. n. To give way; to fail; to perish, S.B. It is used with respect to both persons and things. In the former acceptation it denotes death. Perhaps from Alem. douu-en, Su.G. do, to die.

TOWALL ROSS. Meaning not clear. S.

TOWDY, s. The breech or buttocks. S.

To TOWEN, TOWIN, v. a. 1. To beat; to maul; to subdue by severe means. S.

Ye towin'd him tightly; I commend ye for't;

His bleeding snout gae me nae little sport.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 151.

2. To tame, especially by beating, sometimes pron. as Town; as, to towin or town an unruly horse. 3. To tire; to weary out. S.

It may be allied to Su.G. toeg-a, to draw with a rope; or to Isl. thion-a, laborare. It is in favour of the latter etymon, that town properly respects taming by means of hard work. See Sup.

TOWNIN', s. A drubbing. S.

TOWERICK, TOWRICKIE, s. A summit, or any thing elevated, especially if on an eminence. S.

TOWK, s. A bustle; a set-to. A tuck on a gown. S.

TOWLIE, s. A toll-keeper. S.

TOWLING, s. The signal given in a hive, for some time before the bees swarm. V. TOLLING. S.

TOWMONDALL, s. A yearling. V. TOWMONTELL. S.

TOWMONT, TOWMON, TOMOND, s. A year; corr. of twelve-month, used in the same sense, S.

T R A

An' young weel fill'd an' daft are,
Wha winna be sae crous an' bauld
For a lang towmont after.

Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, i. 27.

Till this time tomond I'se indent,
Our claihs of dirt will sa'r.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 260.

Towmon, Jamieson's Popul. Ball. i. 295.

TOWMONTELL, s. A cow of a year old, Ayrs. This term is also applied to colts. S.

TOWNIT, s. The manufacturing of wool. S.

TOWNNYS, pl. Tuns; large casks or barrels.

Syne off he townnys the heids out strak;

A foule mellé than gan he mak.—Barbour, v. 403. MS.

TOWT, s. A fit of illness. V. TOUT. S.

TOWTHER, s. A tussling. S.

TOXIE, TOXY, adj. Tipsy. S.

TOXIFIED, part. pa. Rendered tipsy; intoxicated. S.

TOZEE, TOSIE, s. The mark at which the stones are aimed in the amusement of Curling. The Cock, The Tee.

TOZIE, adj. Tipsy; warm and snug. V. TOSIE. S.

TRACED, adj. Laced. A traced hat is a hat bound with gold lace, S.

Perhaps from Fr. tress-er, to weave, to twist.

To TRACHLE, TRAUCHLE, v. a. 1. To draggle; to trail; to abuse from carelessness or slovenliness, S.

"That night the Laird—suffered the souldiers to come a land and ly all together to the number of thirteen score, for the most part young beardless men, silly, trauchled, and hungered." Mr. James Melvill's MS. Mem. p. 186. This respects some of the soldiers who sailed on board the Spanish Armada, 1587.

It seems doubtful, whether it be allied to Belg. treyl-en, trahere, whence E. trail; or formed from Teut. traegh-en, pigrescere, tardescere; Alem. dregel-en, per incuriam aliquid perdere.

2. To dishevel.

"Hyr hayr, of the cullour of fyne gold, vas feltrit & trachlit out of ordour, hingand ouer hyr schuldiers." Compl. S. p. 106.

3. To drudge; to overtoil. I'm trachlit with sair wark, S.B. I am overfatigued with hard labour. See Sup.

4. A person is said to trauchle corn or grass, when he injures it by treading on it. S.

In this sense it would seem allied to Sw. traal-a, duro labore exerceri. V. TARVEAL.

To TRACHLE, v. n. To drag one's self onwards, when fatigued, or through a long road. S.

TRACHLE, s. A fatiguing exertion, especially in walking. S.

TRACK, s. Feature; lineament, S. Belg. trek, id. from trekk-en, to delineate.

It is evident that this v. has been formed from drag-a, to draw. For what is delineation, but drawing in a metaph. sense? Hence Draught is used as synon. with Track.

TRACK, s. Course of time. E. Tract. S.

TRACK-BOAT, s. 1. A boat used on a canal, S. 2. A boat employed in fishing, or for dragging another. S.

Belg. trek-schuyt, id. from trekk-en, to draw, because it is drawn by a horse.

TRACK-POT, s. A tea-pot, S. i. e. a pot for masking, from Belg. trekk-en, to draw. De thee wordt getrekken; the tea is infused. See Sup.

TRACTIUE, s. A treatise.

This is the title of Mr. Quintine Kennedy's (Commentator of the Abbey off Crosraguell) work.

"Ane compendius Tractiue conforme to the Scripturis of almychtie God, ressoun, and authoritie, declaring the nerrest, and only way, to establishe the conscience of ane christiane man in all materis (quhilks ar in debate) concerning faith and religioun;" A. 1558.

Fr. traicté, id.

TRAD, s. Track; course in travelling or sailing.

The Kyng hym-self in-to that quhyle
Wytht hys nawyn, that sawfyd was,
Wychtly wan owt of the presse,
And tuk the se hamwart the way,
Thare trad haldand til Orkney.
Thare than tuk land Haco that Kyng.

Wyntown, vii. 10. 212.

Mr. Macpherson refers to C.B. trawd, A.S. trode, O.Dan. Isl. tradk. The latter is expl. by Verel. Vestigiorum multiplicata impressio. Isl. troeda, proprie terra, quod teratur et calcetur, G. Andr. p. 241. q. a beaten path; from trod-a, to tread. To this Cumb. trod, a foot-path, evidently corresponds.

TRADES, s. pl. The designation given to the different bodies of craftsmen belonging to a borough. S.

TRADESMAN, s. A handicraftsman in a borough. S.

TRAE, adj. Stubborn; stiff. S.

TRAFEQUE, TRAFFECK, s. Intercourse; familiarity. S.

TRAG, s. Trash; any thing useless or worthless. S.

TRAGET, TRIGGET, s. A trick; a deceit, S. triget, Rudd. See Sup.

Thou swelth deuourare of tyme vnreouerabill,—
Of thy tragetis quhat tounge may tell the tribyll?

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 98, 10.

Rudd. derives it from Fr. trigaut, "a man that by tricks or slights makes a business hard to be decided." Sibb. views it as a corr. of tragedy.

TRAY, s. Trouble; vexation; loss.

—He tuk purpos for to rid
With a gret ost in Scotland;
For to weng him with stalwart hand,
Off tray, of trawaill, and of tene,
That done tharin till him had bene.

Barbour, xviii. 233. MS.

They wirk him mekle tray and tene.

Bannatyne Poems, p. 154. st. 7.

Treie, O.E. id. rendered by Hearne tryal, but not so properly.

Was neuer prince, I wene, that I writen of fond,
More had treie & tene, than he had for his lond,
In Scotland & in Wales, in Gasconie also.

R. Brunne, p. 235.

A.S. treg, tregre, vexatio, contumelia, damnum; treg-ian, vexare, Su.G. traeg-a, id. traege, Alem. tregre, dolor. Isl. traeg-a, lugere.

To TRAIK, v. n. 1. To go idly from place to place, S. Hence trakit, sore fatigued; perhaps implying that one is also draggled.

In winter now for purtith thou art trakit.

Dunbar, Evergreen, ii. 54. st. 9.

2. To wander so as to lose one's self; chiefly applied to the young of poultry. S.

Traikit-like expresses the appearance that one makes, when draggled and fatigued, in consequence of ranging about.

Belg. treck-en, vertreck-en, to travel, to engage in an expedition. Sw. traek-a, niti, cum molestia incedere; Seren. vo. Trace. The adj. might seem allied to Sw. traeck, dirt, filth; traeck-a, to dirty one's self.

To TRAIK after, v. a. To follow in a dangling way. S.

TRAIK, s. 1. A plague; a mischief; a disaster; applied both to things and persons.

—Suddainlie ane cruel pest and traik,
So that cornes and frutis gois to wraik,
Throw the corrupit are, and cours of heuin,
Ane dedelie yere, fer wers than I can neuin,
Fell in our membris with sic infectioun,
Was na remede, cure, nor correctioun.

Doug. Virgil, 72, 5.

Bot al this time I bid na mare, I wys,
Saif that this wensche, this vengeabil pest or traik,
Be bet doun dede by my wound and scharp straik.

Ibid. 393, 49.

It is sometimes used, in profane language, like meikle Sorrow, apparently as a designation for the devil.

The meikle Traike come o'er their snouts.—

A. Nicol's Poems, 1739, p. 22.

From the same origin with Tray, q. v.

2. The loss of sheep, &c. by death from whatever cause. S.

3. The flesh of sheep that have died of disease or by accident, S. See Sup.

4. The worst part of a flock of sheep. S.

To TRAIK, v. n. To be in a declining state of health.

It is said of one, who is very durable; "He's the gear that winna traik;" Ramsay's S. Prov. p. 33. If I mistake not, this Prov. is also applied to one, who is of so little use to society, that his death would not be regretted; as it is generally supposed that persons of this description survive others whose lives are far more valuable.

"The English bodies could not endure to be prisoned in ships.—Had we in time foreseen to have fortified Inchkeith and Inchcolm, as we did thereafter Inchgarvie, they could not have lain in our frith one month; yet, notwithstanding of all the comfort the air and water of these isles could furnish them, many of them died; and when they went home, the most part of all who remained traiked pitifully." Baillie's Lett. i. 166.

This might seem allied to Su.G. trak-a, cum difficultate progredi; tra, viribus defici. But it is most probable, that the v. has been formed from the s., the idea being transferred from sheep to men.

TRAIK, adj. Weak; in a declining state. S.

TRAIL, s. A term of reproach for a dirty woman. S.

TRAILIE, TRAILOCH, s. One who trails about in shabby or dirty clothes. S.

TRAILER, s. The hook at the end of the line, in fly-fishing. That above it is called the Bobber. S.

TRAILYE, TRELYE, s. Cloth woven in some checkered form resembling lattices or cross-bars. S.

TRAILYEIT, adj. Latticed. S.

TRAILSIDE, adj. So long as to trail on the ground.

In robbis lang also or trailsyde gounne
With thame he ioned oratouris in fere.

V. SYDE. Doug. Virgil, 466, 9.

To TRAYN, v. a. To draw; to entice.

The Lord Douglas towart thaim raid;
A gowne on his armur he haid:
And trawersyt allwayis wp agayn,
Thaim ner his bataillis for to trayn.

Barbour, xix. 354. MS.

Fr. train-er, to draw.

TRAIN, s. A rope used for drawing, Orkn. from Fr. train-er.

"The harrows are drawn side-ways by a train or side rope, (like that used in a plough,) fastened at each end." P. St. Andrews, Orkn. Statist. Acc. xx. 260.

TRAIS OF GOLD. Gold lace. S.

To TRAISSE, v. a. To tread down. To Traissle corn, to make small roads through growing corn. S.

To TRAIST, TREST, TREIST, v. a. 1. To trust.

So that the ferd buke of Eneadoun,

Twiching the luf and dede of Dido quene,
The tua part of hys volume doth contene,
That in the text of Virgill, traistis me,
The tuelf part skars contenis, as ye may se.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 6, 10.

i. e. Believe me, in the imperat.

Thocht thow be greit like Gowmakmorne,
Traist weill I sall yow meit the morne.

Lyndsay, S.P.R. i. 158.

Gude maister, I wald speir at you ane thing,
Quhar trest ye sall I find yone new maid king?

Ibid. ii. 158.

"Quhar for I treist that his diuine iustice vil permit sum vthir straynge natione to be mercyles boreaus to them, ande til extinct that fals seid ande that incredule generatione furtht of remembrance." Compl. S. p. 41.

2. v. n. To pledge faith, by entering into a truce.

Syne thai traist in the feild, throw trefy of trew:
Put up thair brandis sa braid, burly and bair.

Gawan and Gol. iv. 10.

Isl. treist-a, Su.G. traest-a, Germ. trost-en, confidere.

As the Isl. and Su.G. verbs signify both to dare, and to trust, this points out the radical affinity between durst, the pret. of dare, and trust. What is daring, but confiding in one's own strength, or means of defence; and what is trusting to another, but daring to depend on him?

Ihre has accordingly observed, that the various Northern verbs, signifying to trust, seem all to conspire in Su.G. toeras, audere; and that jag toers, and jag troester, equally mean, I dare. It is singular, he adds, that the same metathesis, which is observable in the letters here, may be traced to a very early period. The Greeks promiscuously use θαρσος (from θαρσ-ειν) and θρασος, audacia; θαρσυνω and θρασυνω, audacem reddo. He also refers to Moes.G. thrafst-jan, to trust, as bearing an obvious analogy to daur-an, to dare, whence ga-daurst-an, he durst, audebat. V. TRAIST, adj.

TRAIST, TREST, s. Trust; faith; assurance.

— Gif outhir wit or fame

Or traist may be geuin to Helenus the prophete,
Or gif with verité Phebus inspiris his sprete,
This ane thinge, son of the goddes, I the teiche, &c.

Doug. Virgil, 82, 37.

"God turnit the hazard of fortune, and tuke vengeance on Xerxes gryt pryde, quhilk suld be ane gryt exempil til al princis, that thai gyf nocht there trest in ane particular pouer of multiplie of men, bot rathere to set there trest in God." Compl. S. p. 123.

Isl. traust-r, Su.G. troest, fiducia.

TRAIST, TRAISTY, adj. 1. Trusty; faithful.

Till Erle Malcolme he went vpon a day,
The Lennox haile he had still in his hand;
Till King Eduuard he had nocht than maid band.
That land is strait, and maisterfull to wyn;
Gud men of armyss that tyme was it within.
The lord was traist, the men sekyr and trew;
With waik power thai durst him nocht persew.

Wallace, iv. 161. MS.

—We him gaif ansuere not traist ynouch,
Astonyst with the word abak he dreuch.

Doug. Virgil, 51, 44.

Be al Eneas destaneis I swere,
His traisty fayth, or rycht hand into were
Sa vailyeant at vnset and defence. Ibid. 213, 37.

Treist is used by R. Brunne, p. 175.

Your wille is euer so gode, & your treuth so treist,
Your douhtynesse of blode the Sarazins salle freist.

Isl. traust-r, fidus, fidelis, Su.G. troest, Germ. trost, id.

2. Confident.

Thair wayis towart Coigneris hald;
And herbery in the cité ta.
And than in gret hy thai haf don sua;
And raid be nycht to the cité.
Thai fand thair of wittaill gret plenté;
And maid thaim rycht mery cher,
For all traist in the toun thai wer.

Barbour, xiv. 466. MS.

Germ. treist, triest, Su.G. troest, audax, intrepidus.

3. Secure; safe.

—And gert dyk thaim sa stalwartly,
That quhill thaim likyt thar to ly,
Thai suld fer owt the traister be.

Surer, Edit. 1620.

Barbour, xvii. 273. MS.

TRAIST, s. An appointed meeting.

Syn to the traist that thaim was set
Thai sped thaim, with thair cumpany.

V. TRYST.

Barbour, vii. 280. MS.

TRAISTIS, s. pl. A roll of the accusations brought against those who, in former times, were to be legally tried.

"It is thocht expedient,—that in tyme tocum, quhen the Crownar resais his portewis & traistis, that thair be ony parsounis contenit in the samin, that will disobey him, that he dar not, nor is not of powar to arreist, in that caise the Crownar sall pas to the Lord & Barrone of the Barronie, quhair that persoun or persounis dwellis and inhabitis." Acts, Ja. III. 1487. c. 119, Ed. 1566.

"Traistis—signifies ane roll or catalogue, containd the particular dittay, taken vp vpon malefactoures, quhilk with the portuous is delivered be the justice Clerke to the Crouner, to the effect the persons, quhais names ar contained in the portuous, may be attached conforme to the dittay, contained in the traistis. For like as the portuous comprehends the names of the persons indited: swa the traistis containis the kindes of dittay, given vp vpon them: quhilk is swa called, because it is committed to the traist, faith and credit of the clerkes and crouner, quha gif they be trustie, & faithfull, suld nocht reveale, delecte, change, or alter the samin. Jam. 2. par. 6, c. 28." Skene, Verb. Sign. in vo.

TRAISTLY, adv. Confidently; securely.

Ga we, and wenge sum off the dispyte,
And that may we haiff done als tite;
For thai ly traistly, but dreding
Off ws, or off our her cummyng.

Barbour, v. 81. MS.

TRAIST, s. The frame of a table. V. TREST.

TRAYT, s. Bread of trayt, a superior kind of bread made of fine wheat.

"They make not all kindes of bread, as law requyres;
that is ane fage, symmell, wastell, pure cleane breade,— and bread of trayt." Chalm. Air, c. 9. s. 4. Panem de trayt, Lat.

"In the Stat. 5. Hen. 3. Bread of treete seems to be that bread which was made of fine wheat," Cowel. He derives it from Lat. triticum, wheat.

Panis de Treyt duos wastellos ponderabit, et panis de omni blado ponderabit ii coket. Fleta, Lib. 2. c. 9.

TRAITIS, s. pl. Apparently, draughts, lines, or streaks.

TRAKIT, part. pa. 1. Sore fatigued. V. TRAIK, v. n.

2. Wasted; in a declining state from being overdriven, starved, or exposed to the inclemency of the weather. S.

TRAM, s. 1. The shaft of a cart, or carriage of any kind, S.

I wald scho war, bayth syde and bak,
Weill batterit with a barrow tram.

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 93.

T R A

Nor is the naig the worse to draw

A wee while in the trams. Shirrefs' Poems, p. 360.

Su.G. traam, that part of a pretty long tree, which is cut into different portions, that it may be more conveniently inserted in a plough; Ihre. Germ. tram, a tree, also, a beam. Hence the forensic term tram-recht, the liberty of inserting a roof into a wall belonging to a neighbour. Moes.G. thrums, a tree.

2. A beam or bar.

"By order, the hangman brake his sword between the crosses of Aberdeen, and betwixt the gallows trams standing there." Spalding's Troubles, i. 290.

3. Used metaph., in a ludicrous sense for leg or limb; as, lang trams, long limbs, S.

TRAMALT NET, corr. from E. trammel.

Into thair tramalt net, thay fangit ane fische,
Mair nor ane quhale, worthy of memorie:
Of quhom thay haue had mony dainty dische,
Be quhome thay ar exaltit to greit glorie,
That maruellous monstour callit Purgatorie.

Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592. p. 136.

TRAMORT, s. A corpse; a dead body.

Thair wes with him an ugly sort,
And mony stinkand fowll tramort.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 29. V. also p. 94.

The last part of the word is undoubtedly from Fr. mort, dead, or Germ. mord, death. Su.G. tra, signifies to consume, to rot, tabescere; q. a dead body in a state of consumption.

To TRAMP, v. a. 1. To trample; to tread with force, S.

Behald, how your awin brethren now laitly
In Dutchland, Ingland, Denmark and Norroway,
Ar trampit down with thair hypocrisie,
And as the snaw ar moltin clene away.

Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592. p. 75.

Sw. trampa pa, conculcare. Belg. tramp-en, pedibus proculcare; Moes.G. anatramp, they pressed upon him, Luk. v. 1.

"Tramp on a snail, and she'll shoot out her horns;"
Ferguson's S. Prov. p. 30., a proverb founded on the vulgar idea, that the telescopic eyes of the snail are horns.

2. To tread, in reference to walking, S.

Frae this the human race may learn
Reflection's honey'd draps to earn;
Whether they tramp life's thorny way,
Or thro' the sunny vineyard stray.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 32.

To TRAMP, v. n. 1. To tread with a heavy step, S.

Su.G. tramp-a, cum pedum aliqua supposicione incedere.

2. To walk; as opposed to any other mode of travelling; a low sense, S.

I've trampit mony a weary fit,
And mony a tumble did I get,
Sin I set out fra hame, jo.

Jamieson's Popul. Ball. ii. 237.

3. To cleanse clothes by treading on them in water. S. TRAMP, s. 1. The act of striking the foot suddenly downwards, S.

2. The tread, properly including the idea of weight; as the trampling of horses. 3. The act of walking; a pedestrian expedition. S.

If haply knowledge, on a random tramp,
Had shor'd them with a glimmer of his lamp,—
Plain, dull Simplicity stept kindly in to aid them.

Burns, iii. 58.

TRAMP, s. A plate of iron worn by ditchers below the centre of the foot, for working on their spades. S.

To TRAMP CLAUSE. To wash clothes by treading, or tramping them in a tub. S.

T R A

To TRAMP on one's TAES. Metaphorically, to take undue advantage of one. S.

TRAMP-PICK, s. An iron instrument resembling a very narrow spade, used for turning up hard soils. S.

TRAMPILFEYST, adj. Untoward; unmanageable. S.

TRANCE, TRANSE, s. 1. A passage within a house, S. "A passage from a staircase." Sir J. Sinclair's Observ. p. 169. He derives it from Lat. transitus. Perhaps it is rather immediately from the v. transire, to pass.

2. A close or passage without a house. 3. A close or passage from one alley to another. 4. Also used metaph.

"If death—were any other thing but a friendly dissolution, and a change, not a destruction of life, it would seem a hard voyage to go through such a sad and dark trance,—as is the wages of sin." Rutherford's Lett. P. ii. ep. 47.

TRANSE-DOOR, s. The door in a transe or passage. S.

TRANSING, adj. Passing across a house from wall to wall. S.

To TRANE, v. n. To go from home; to travel.

Remane ye, or trane ye,
On fee so far of schore?

Burel's Pilgr. Watson's Coll. ii. 52.

Agayn we will besid Northallyrtoun,
Qubar King Eduuard fyrst battaill hecht to me.—
Apon the morn, the ost, but mar awyss,
Tranountyt north apon a gudlye wyss.

Ibid viii. 1560. MS.

It is used in the same sense, as denoting a retrograde march, Ibid. ii. 52. MS. tranoyntyt.

Mr. Macpherson says; "Travent or tranoint in B. Harry — seems a different word." But there appears to be no ground for this idea. The passages he refers to, are these quoted above. Could we suppose travent, or trawynt, the original orthography, the term would in form much resemble Teut. trouwant-en, otiosè vagari; Fr. truand-er, to beg, to play the rogue; from Teut. trouwant, Germ. drabant, satelles, stipator, a retainer. But what affinity would there be in signification, unless we supposed that the reference were to the clandestine arts practised by such wanderers? It seems rather connected with Fr. traine, a snare, an ambush; especially from their being conjoined in the passage quoted from the Houlate.

TRANOWINTYN, s. A stratagem of war; without any regard to marching.

We ar the fox: and thai the fyscher,
That stekis forouth ws the way.
Thai wene we may na get away,
Bot rycht quhar thai ly.—
—Our fayis for this small tranowintyn
Wenys weill we sall prid us swa,
That we planely on hand sall ta
To giff thaim opynly battaill:
Bot at this tyme thair thought sall fail.

Barbour, xix. 694. MS.

To TRANSE, v. n. To determine; to resolve.

Perplexit and vexit
Betwixt houp and despair,
Quhyls transing, quhyls panging
How till eschew the snair.

Burel's Pilgr. Watson's Coll. ii. 48.

i. e. Now resolving, then hesitating.

Fr. tranch-er, decider, parler franchement, ou avec autorité. Illico, praecisèque discernere, statuere; Dict. Trev. Fr. transe, denotes extreme fear. But the former sense seems preferable, as retaining the contrast, which occurs in the preceding lines.

To TRANSMIEW, v. a. To transmute or change. S.

TRANSMOGRIFICATION, s. Transmutation. S.

To TRANSMUGRIFY, v. a. To transform; to transmute; a ludicrous and low word, S.

Debauchery and drinking. Burns, iii. 115.

To TRANSPORT,  v. a.* To translate a minister from one charge to another, S.

"Actual ministers, when transported, are not to be tried again, as was done at their entry to the ministry." Stewart's Collect. B. i. Tit. 2, § 11.

To an English ear this seems a very odd use of the word.

TRANSPORTATION, s. The act of translating a minister, S.

"That in all Transportations in time coming, previous enquiry be made if there be a legal stipend and a decret therefore, in the Parish craving the Transportation." Acts 5. Ass. 1702.

TRANSS, s. Supposed to be a species of dance anciently in use.

He playit sa schill, and sang sa sweit,

Quhill Towsie tuik ane transs. Chr. Kirk, st. 6.

Callander views it as what the Scots call, "reel, a train, Belg. trein." But the passage may have been misunderstood. Quhill does not signify while, during, but till. Might it signify, "He continued his exquisite melody, till it cast Towsie into a trance?"

TRANSUMPT, s. A copy; a transcript. S.

TRANTLE, s. The rut made by a cart wheel, when it is deep. This is denominated the trantle of the wheel, Ang.

TRANTLE-HOLE, s. A place into which odd, broken, or useless things are thrown. V. TRANTLES. S.

Ross's Helenore, p. 37.

3. Toys used by children, S. Loth. trantles.

There seems little reason to doubt that these are only secondary senses of a term originally used to denote one of the Popish services. This contemptuous application might be introduced after the Reformation, from a conviction of the unprofitable and trivial nature of the employment. It is printed trantals, Evergreen, ii. 8, st. 12, and expl. in the Gl. by nig-nays, a S. word nearly allied in sense to trantles as now understood. V. TRENTALIS. Patter, pattering, pitter-patter, &c. have had a similar origin.

TRAP, s. A sort of ladder, a movable flight of wooden steps, S. Sw. trappa, Teut. trap, gradus.

To TRAP, v. a. 1. To correct in saying a lesson in a class at school, so as to have a right to take the place of the boy who is corrected. 2. In play to catch hold of; as, I trap you. 3. In finding any thing while others are present, if the finder exclaims I trap, or I trapse this, he means to exclude the rest from any share of it. S.

TRAP-CREEL, s. A basket for catching lobsters, &c. S.

TRAPPYS, s. pl. Trappings.

Rudd. derives this from Fr. draperie,—from drap, cloth. Although these terms are radically the same; this is more nearly allied to L.B. trappatura, ornatus è trapo seu panno, amplum equi stratum undique defluens. Du Cange. V. TRAPPYS.

Hamilton retains this term.

— Caus'd saw the boards immediately in two,

Wallace, p. 168.

But in MS. it is clearly hewyt trastis, i. e. caused beams to be hewed; from Fr. trattes, which seems to have been anciently written trastes, thus defined, Dict. Trev. Terme de charpenterie, qui se dit de gross pieces de bois de trois toises de long, et de 10 pouces de gros, posées au dessus de la chaise, d'un moulin à vent, et qui portent sa cage. Tigna majora.

TRAT, TRATTES, s. An old woman; a term generally used in contempt, S. Chaucer, trate, E. trot.

The Nun and trattes, clepit Calybe. Ibid. 221, 39.

Trat, according to Sibb., is "one who has trotted, or trudged about for a long time. Teut. trat, gressus; tratt-en, gradi." This idea is borrowed from Jun. Etym. Su.G. tratt-a signifies, to go with short steps like a child.

But the etymon given by Rudd., in his Addenda, has greater probability. "Goth. drotta, domina, Teut. truhtin, dominus, whence Dr. Hickes derives the Ital. drudo, amasia, concubina."

It must be observed, however, that in signification it is more clearly connected with some other terms proceeding from the same stock; Isl. draett-ur; Su.G. drott, a servant, whence kirkiudrott, oconomus templi, corresponding to kirkiuwaerjande, which seems nearly the same with churchwarden, E. There is an obvious analogy between this designation, and that given by Doug. to Calybe, whom he calls "the nun and trattes of Junois tempil."

T R A

Some have viewed the term as allied to Germ. drutte, a witch; saga, mulier fatidica; trot, a woman, an old woman, a witch. Wachter thinks that the latter was a designation originally given to any woman, afterwards restricted to those that were decrepit with age; and hence transferred to witches, because the vulgar generally imputed the crime of witchcraft to old women. Keyser, having made the same observation, in reference to E. trot, derives it from Drut, a female Druid. Antiq. Septent. pp. 503, 504.

The word waltrot occurs in P. Ploughman, although overlooked both by Skinner and Junius; and might be viewed as favouring the latter etymon.

—"Patriarks & Prophets haue preched here often,

That man shall man saue throughe a womans helpe,

And that was tynt through tree, tree shall it wyne;

And that dethe downe brought, deth shall relieue."

'That thou tellest,' quod Truth, 'is but a tale of waltrot;

'For Adam and Eue, Abraham and other

'Patriarkes and Prophetes yet in payne liggien,' &c.

Fol. 99, a.

This term, I strongly suspect, has some affinity. Isl. Vala, Volua, is the name of a certain Sibyl, says G. Andr., whence Voluspa, Sibyllinum vaticinium. Thus waltrot may signify, an old woman's fable.

I shall only add, that, according to some writers, Isl. troda denotes a woman, in general; foemina, Gl. Gunnlaug. vo. Lins-troda. G. Andr. however, says that they err who view this term, when standing singly, as signifying a woman; p. 241, 242.

TRATLAR, s. A prattler; a tattler. S.

Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 208.

Allied perhaps to Su.G. traet-a, detrectare.

The idea of Mr. Pinkerton, that the term, as used Maitl. P., signifies to asperse is highly probable. Junius refers to C.B. tryd-ar, to prattle.

TREE, s. A barrel, S.

"Gif ony fische, salmound, hering, or keling, beis found in sic barrellis vumarkit, the samin to be escheit, and sic-lyke the tume treis; that ane half to our Souerane Lord, and the vther to the toune." Acts, Ja. V. 1540, c. 90. Edit. 1566.

i. e. Empty barrels.

"Thir great barrells ar called Hamburg trees." Skene, Verb. Sign. vo. Serplaith.

"That no barrel be sooner made,—but the Coupers birn be set thereon,—in testimony of the sufficiency of the tree." Acts, Cha. II. 1661, c. 33.

This is a Su.G. idiom. Trae denotes a barrel used as a dry measure. Accipitur pro mensura aridorum. Hinc habemus spiltrae, dolium ex assulis confectum ad continenda arida; Ihre.

In the passage first quoted, it in like manner denotes a barrel used for a dry measure. But it also signifies a measure of liquids. A barrel for containing ale is vulgarly called a tree; as, a ten gallon tree, a twenty gallon tree, S.

A.S. aescen, a pail, and Isl. ask-r, a measure of liquids, seem likewise to derive their names from A.S. aesc, Isl. ask-r, the ash tree, as having been originally made of this wood.

TREE and TRANTEL. A piece of wood that goes behind a horse's tail, for keeping back the sunks or sods, used instead of a saddle. This is fastened by a cord on each side, and used instead of a crupper; but reaching farther down, to prevent the horse from being tickled under the tail; Perth.

TREE-CLOUT, s. A heel of a shoe, made of wood. S.

TREE-CLOUT, adj. Having wooden heels. S.

To TREESH with one. To entreat one in a kind of flattering way; to court one. S.

TREESHIN, s. Courting. S.

TREGALLION, s. 1. Collection; assortment. The haill tregallion, the whole without exception, Dumfr. See S.

2. A company, used in contempt of such as are not accounted respectable. S.

If we might suppose that this term had been originally used to denote a measure of liquids, we might view it as allied to Isl. trygill, parva trua, from trog, trua, linter. See S.

TREILIE, adj. Crossbarred; chequered; applied to cloth.

TREIN, TRENE, adj. Wooden, treein, S. as, a treein leg, a wooden leg. See Sup.

"Thay spulyeit the eucarist out of the cais of siluer, quhair it hang, & kest it in ane trein kist." Bellend. Cron. B. xiv. c. 15. In ligneam pydixem; Boeth.

Ane trene truncheour, ane ramehorne spon.

Bannatyne Poems, p. 160.

Lord Hailes renders this spout; but on what ground I cannot conceive. It evidently means a wooden plate.

A.S. treowen, arboreus, ligneus, from treeo, arbor. This word was used by E. writers, so late as the time of Camden.

"Sir Thomas Rokesby being controlled for first suffering himselfe to be serued in treene cuppes, answered; These homely cups and dishes pay truely for that they containe; I had rather drinke out of treene, and pay gold and siluer, than drink out of gold and siluer, and make wooden payment." Remains, p. 354. Hence, TREIN MARE. A barbarous instrument of punishment, formerly used in the army; E. the wooden horse.

"He caused big up a trein mare at the cross for punishing the trespassing soldiers according to the discipline of war." Spalding's Troubles, i. 243. It is called a timber mare, ibid. p. 227. V. Grose's Milit. Hist. ii. 106.

Scott, Bannatyne Poems, p. 197.
 It has been observed, (vo. Trantles,) that this term was most probably used in a contemptuous sense after the Reformation, to denote any thing mean and trifling. In this passage, it seems rather to admit this general signification. Even long before the Reformation, it appears to have been declining in its acceptance.
 And so leue lellye Lodes, forbode els
 That pardon and penaunce, & prayers done saue
 Soules that haue sinned seuen sythes deadly:
 And to trust to these trentals, truely me thinketh,
 Is not so siker for the soule, as to do well.

Ibid. 110, 86.

Seren. derives the E. v. from Isl. trekt, a funnel, infundibulum. Adhering to the same line of deduction, I would prefer Isl. tregill, alveolus; for tears, trickling down, form as it were a small trough or furrow in the cheek, or fall as water in a narrow channel.

To TRIM, * v. a. To drub; to beat soundly, S. The E. v. used metaph., in the same manner as dress. See S.

TRYME, adj. Apparently merely E. trim, nice. S.

T R Y

To SET TRYST. To make an appointment to meet. S.

To BIDE TRYST. To keep an engagement to meet with another, and wait the fulfilment of it. S.

To KEEP TRYST. To fulfil an engagement to meet. S.

To BREAK TRYST. To break an engagement. S.

To CRACK TRYST. To break an engagement. S.
 "John Forbes of Lesly broke tryst, having appointed to have settled the same." Spalding's Troubles, ii. 54.

2. An appointed meeting, S. A merry meeting among the peasantry. See Sup.
 On the Marche a day of Trew wes set.—
 Schir Davy Lord than de Lyndesay
 Was at that Triste that ilke day.
Wyntown, ix. 18. 3—16.

Markets are in various instances, denominated Trysts; because those, who design to sell or buy, have agreed to meet at a certain time and place.
 This designation has considerable antiquity. It occurs in the old Ballad, entitled Thomas the Rhymer.
 "My tongue is mine ain," true Thomas said,
 "A gudelie gift ye wald gie to me!
 "I neither dought to buy nor sell,
 "At fair or tryst where I may be."
Minstrelsy, Border, ii. 273.

"Under the article of Commerce, we must not omit the three great markets for black cattle, called Trysts, which are yearly held in the neighbourhood of Falkirk, in the months of August, September, and October." Nimmo's Stirlingshire, p. 456.
 "Tryst is a Scotch word for an appointed meeting." Statist. Acc. xix. 83. N.

3. The appointed time of meeting.
 He trystyt hyr quhen he wald cum agayne,
 On the thrid day.—
 At the set trist he entrit in the toun,
 Wittand no thing of all this falss tresoun.
Wallace, iv. 709. 731. MS.
 We sall begin at sevin houris of the day:
 So ye keip tryist, forsuith we sall nocht felyie.
Lyndsay, S.P.R. ii. 6.

"The salmons also in their season returne to the place where they were spawned: They, like skilled arithmeticiens, number well the dayes of their absence, and for no rubs in their way will they be moued to cracke their tryst." Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 1256, 1257.

4. The place appointed; a rendezvous.
 —Thai approach to the Pape in his presence,
 At the fairsaid triste quhar the treté tellis.
Houlate, i. 24.

"By thir letters came to the King's Majesty, he knew well that his navy had not passed the right way; and shortly hereafter got wit that they were landed at the town of Air; which displeased the King very greatly; for he believed surely that they had been in France at the farthest tryst." Pitcottie, p. 110.
Traist, q. v. is also used for an appointed meeting. The word evidently has its origin from the trust, or confidence, which the parties who enter into such an engagement, repose in each other. V. TRAIST, v.

5. A journey undertaken by more persons than one, who are to travel in company. The termination of such a journey is called the Tryst's end. S.

6. A concurrence of circumstances or events.
 "Indeed men cannot consider the same without acknowledging a divine hand and something above ordinary means and causes, where all did thus meet together in a solemn tryst to accomplish that people's ruin." Fleming's Fulfilling Script. p. 148.

In a sense very much akin to the fourth, trist, triste, is used in O.E., as denoting "a post or station in hunting."

Ye shall be set at such a trist,

That hart and hind shall come to your fist.

Lydgate's Squire of Low Degree.

V. Ellis's Spec. E. P. i. 336.

—He asked for his archere,

Walter Tirelle was haten, maister of that mister.

To triste was he sette, for to waite the chance,

With a herde thei mette, a herte therof gan lance.

Walter was redi, he wend haf schoten the herte,

The kyng stode ouer nehi, the stroke he laucht so smerte.

R. Brunne, p. 94.

Hearne renders it, "meta, mark, direction." The same writer uses it to denote a station in battle.

The Inglis at ther triste bifor tham bare all down,

& R. als him liste the way had redy roun.

Ibid. p. 179.

It is used in the same sense by Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 1534. V. Trista, Tristra, Du Cange; Trista and Tristis, Cowel. The latter expl. Tristis as an immunity from attending on the Lord of a Forest, when he is disposed to chase. But, according to the quotation, the immunity is from the Tristae, as denoting this attendance. Et sint quieti—de—Tristis, &c.

To TRYST, v. a. 1. To engage a person to meet one at a given time and place, S. See Sup.

"He—then trysted Mr. Williamson at London, who met the same man in a coach, near London bridge, and who called on him by his name." Fountainhall's Decisions, i. 15. V. the s. sense 3.

2. To meet with; used in relation to a divine ordination.

"The plot bath laid Leith and Edinburgh desolate.—That this should have trysted the enemy at that time and place, when we had most to do with Leith and Edinburgh, is evidently God's hand." Baillie's Lett. ii. 151.

"It is found that the most eminent and honourable service of the church, doth usually tryst her in a low and suffering condition, when there hath been but little strength, many outward disadvantages." Fleming's Fulfilling, Epist. p. iv.

3. To bespeak; "I trysted the table to be hame to-night." S.

To TRYST, v. n. 1. To agree to meet at any particular time or place, S.

"In our treaty, we prefaced with a declaration in writ, that our trysting there [in London] was no submission to the English Parliament." Baillie's Lett. i. 221.

The prep. with is often added, S.

"The particulars are,—the writing, dictating, and contriving a letter directed to the perfidious Oliver Cromwell, and trysting with him and his officers at the Lady Hume's lodgings, tending to the ruin of the late King, and these kingdoms." Wodrow's Hist. i. 85.

2. To enter into mutual engagements, S.—3. To concur with; used metaph. as to circumstances or events.

"What a marvellous concurrence of providence, and convincing appearance of a divine hand was in this judgment, the besieging of Jerusalem by the Romans, trysted with the very time of the passover, whilst so great a confluence of the people from all parts of the land were there on that account, that both sword and famine might contribute their help to destroy." Fleming's Fulfilling, p. 148.

4. It is often used, in a passive sense, in relation to one's meeting with adverse dispensations, S.

"It is a dark time now with the church of Christ, which we see every where almost suffering and afflicted, whilst the whole earth besides seemeth to be at ease, christians also even beyond others, in their private lot, trysted with very sharp trials." Fleming's Fulfilling, Epist. p. iv.

—"The proud and insolent, who do most hunt after outward glory, are usually trysted with some humbling abasing stroke; he poureth contempt on princes, and such who will not honour God shall not enjoy that honour they seek from men." Ibid. p. 113. V. following word.

TRIST, s.

Swa, on ane day, the dayis watchis tua

Come [in;] and said thai saw ane felloun mist.

'Ya,' said Wisdome, 'I wist it wald be sa:

'That is ane sang befor ane hevie trist!

'That is perell to cum, quhaeir it wist.

'For, on sum syde, thair sall us folk assaill.'

King Hart, ii. 48.

The phrase has evidently been proverbial. Trist might signify sadness, from Fr. triste, sad; or trial, affliction. The v. tryst is used in this sense, or in one equivalent. He is sore trysted; He has met with a heavy trial. This sense of the v., however, seems oblique; and if the s. ever admitted of this signification, it is now obsolete.

TRYSTER, s. A person who convenes others, as those of opposite parties, fixing the time and place of meeting.

"Mr. Blair and he [Mr. Durham] deal with Mr. Wood to be content with conference at Edinburgh.—We had drawn up an overture, as we thought, very favourable, as far as we could go, according to the Assembly's late overture for union, and by the hands of the trysters, Mr. Blair and Mr. Durham, sent in to their meeting. Also the trysters had given us both their overtures to be thought upon." Baillie's Lett. ii. 387.

TRYSTING, s. An engagement to meet, as implying a mutual pledge of safety. S.

TRYSTING-PLACE, s. 1. The place of meeting previously appointed, S.

At our trysting-place, for a certain space,

I must wander to and fro;

But I had not had power to come to thy bower,

Had'st thou not conjur'd me so.

Minstrelsy, Border, ii. 346.

2. Metaph. a centre of union, or medium of fellowship. S.

TRISTRES, s. pl. The stations allotted to different persons in hunting.

And Arthur, with his Erles, earnestly rides,

To teche hem to her tristres, the trouthe for to tell.

To her tristres he hem taught, ho the trouthe trowes,

Eche lord, withouten lete,

To an oke he hem sette;

With bow, and with barselette,

Under the bowes. Sir Gawan and Sir Gal. i. 3.

V. TRYST, s.

TRYST-STANE, s. A stone anciently erected for marking out a rendezvous. S.

To TRIST, v. a. To squeeze. V. THRIST, to thrust. S.

TRISTENE, s. The act of giving on credit or trust. S.

TRISTSUM, adj. Sad; melancholy. S.

To TRIVLE, TRIVIL, v. n. To grope; to feel where one cannot see; to feel one's way in darkness. S.

TROAP, s. A game something similar to E. Trap. S.

TROCKER, s. One who exchanges goods; a low trader. S.

TROD, s. Tread; footstep. S.

To TROD, v. a. To trace; to follow by the footstep or track. Thus one is said to "trod a thief." S.

To TRODDLE, v. n. 1. To walk with short steps, as a little child does, Ang. todde, synon.

May heaven allow me length of days to see

Their bairns trodding round and round my knee!

Morison's Poems, p. 209.

—The young things troddin rin.

Ibid. p. 46.

2. To purl; to glide gently. S.

Germ. trottel-n, tarde et pigre incedere; Su.G. tratt-a, minutis passibus ire, ut solent infantes. The origin seems to be traad-a, trod-a, calcare; although lhre derives it from trant incessus.

To TRODGE, v.n. To trudge. S.

TRODWIDDIE, TRODWODDIE, s. The chain that fastens the harrow to what are called the Swingle-trees, S.B. V. RIGWIDDIE. See Sup.

As this bar of wood is immediately joined to the harrow, and lies nearer the ground, the name may be from Isl. troda, terra, G. Andr. p. 242, and vijder, vimen, q. the ground-withy, or that which touches the earth. For it had been originally formed of twisted withes.

To TROG, v.a. To truck. TROGGER. One who trucks. S.

TROGGERS, s.pl. A name given to one species of Irish vagrants, Wigton. Persons who gather old clothes.

"The people are greatly oppressed by inundations of poor vagrants from Ireland.—They may be divided into two classes. The first are those whose only object is to beg their bread. The second are those called troggers, who carry on a species of traffic, unknown, I am persuaded, in most places. They bring linen from Ireland, which they barter for the old woollen clothes of Scotland, and these they prefer to gold or silver. Bending under burdens of these clothes, they return to their own kingdom." P. Inch, Statist. Acc. iii. 139.

This is merely q. trokers, from the v. TROKE, q. v.

TROGS. A vulgar oath. Syn. Trugs, q. v. S.

TROGUE, s. A young horse. S.

TROILYA, s. A fairy; dimin. from Troll, q. v. S.

TROISTRY, s. The entrails of a beast, offals, S.B.

Isl. tros, trash, Sw. trastyg, trumpery; Seren. Gael. turasgar, giblets.

TROYT, s. An inactive person, S.B. generally conjoined with the epithet nasty; as, a nasty troyt, one who is both dirty and indolent.

Allied perhaps to Su.G. tryt-a, to cease, conveying the idea of one who becomes weary of work; or rather, as the v. also signifies, inique ferre, pigere, taedere, whence thryt, contumacy, neglect of duty. Troett, fessus, lassus, is a kindred term; troett af arbete, fessus labore; and troett-a, fatigare.

TROYT, TROYCHT, s. Perhaps a trough. S.

To TROYTTLE, v.n. To tattle; to gossip. V. TRATTIL. S.

TROY WEIGHT,* TROYS WEICHT. A certain kind of weight, used both in S. and in E. S.

To TROKE, v.a. 1. To bargain in the way of exchange; to barter, S. truck, E.

How cou'd you troke the mavis' note

For "penny pies all piping hot?"

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 34.

Fr. troqu-er, to exchange.

2. To do business on a small scale, S.

3. To be busy about little, in whatever way, S.

TROCK, TROQUE, s. 1. Exchange; barter, S. Fr. troc, id.

2. Troques, pl. small wares; merchandise of little value, S.B.

Nae harm tho' I hae brought her ane or twa

Sic bonny trocks to help to make her bra.

Shirrefs' Poems, p. 40.

3. Small pieces of business that require a good deal of stirring, S.B.

4. Familiar intercourse, S.B. See Sup.

Nor does our blinded master see

The trocks between the Clerk and she.

Morison's Poems, p. 106.

To TROKE, v.n. To transact business in a mean way. S.

TROLY, TRAWLIE, s. A ring through which the sowme passes betwixt the two horses or oxen next the plough, and by means of which it is kept from trailing on the ground, Ang. V. SOWME.

Isl. travale, impedimentum; Teut. traelie, clathrus, a bar, lattice-work, &c. Or perhaps from Trowl, q. v. because this ring is intended to prevent the rope from being dragged.

TROLIE, TROLL, s. 1. Any long unshapely thing that trails on the ground. 2. Any object that has length disproportionate to its breadth. S.

TROLL, s. A goblin. V. TROW. S.

TROLL, s. The dung of horses, cows, &c. also of man. S.

TROLLIBAGS, TROLLIEBAGS, s.pl. A ludicrous term for the paunch or tripe of a slaughtered animal. S.

TROLOLLAY, s. A term which occurs in a rhyme used by young people, on the last day of the year, S. V. HOGMANAY.

We find a similar phrase in O.E.; but whether originally the same is uncertain.

And than satten some, and song at the nale,

And holpen erie his halfe acre, with hey trolly lolly.

P. Ploughman, Fol. 32, b.

Can this be allied to Su.G. troll-a, incantare; trall-a, canere?

TRONACH, s. The crupper used with dorsets or a pack-saddle; formed of a piece of wood, connected with the saddle by a cord at each end; Mearns.

TRONE, s. 1. An instrument, consisting of two horizontal bars crossing each other, beaked at the extremities, and supported by a wooden pillar; used for weighing heavy wares, S. This instrument still remains in some towns. See Sup.

"It is statute, that the Chalmerlane sall cause big, and mak ane Trone for weying of woll in all the Kings burghis, and in all the portis of the realme." Stat. Dav. II. c. 39. s. 1.

Du Cange expl. L.B. Trona, Statara publica, seu Trutina; supposing that it is a corr. of the latter term. Such a "Trona or beam, for the tronage of wooll, was fixed at Leadenhall in London;" Cowel.

The term, I apprehend, is originally equivalent to crane, E. an instrument for raising weights. Isl. triona signifies a beak; Rostrum porrectum, quasi serpentis vel Rajae; G. Andr. Thus the stern or beak of a ship receives this denomination; Landnamab. p. 299. Trana signifies not only a beak, but a crane; Grus, item Rostrum longiusculum, seu res porrectum; G. Andr. p. 241.

Hence it appears that the name of the bird, which we call a crane, has been used to denote a beak, or any thing extended so as to resemble the long neck of a crane. C.B. trwyn, Fr. trogne, also signify a beak.

2. The pillory, S.

"They ordain the said John Rob to be sett upon the Trone, with a paper upon his head bearing thir words (This John Rob is sett heir for being an false informer of witnesses), and ordaines his lugg to be nailed to the Trone be the spaice of ane hour." Act Sederunt 6th Feb. 1650. V. also Act 24th July 1700. In the Index to these Acts it is rendered Pillory.

"In Edinburgh the Pillory is called the Trone;" Rudd.

There seems to be no reason for the extension of this name to the Pillory, save that, as this stood in a public place, those subjected to the punishment referred to, were exhibited here.

3. A market. S.

T R O

TRONARE, s. The person who had the charge of the Trone; L.B. tronar-ius.

"The clerk of the cocquet, sall controll beath the customars, and the Tronaris." Stat. Dav. II. c. 39. s. 4.

TRONE-MEN, s. The name given to those who carry off the soot swept from chimneys, because they had their station at the Trone, Edinburgh.

To TRONE, v. a. To subject to the disgraceful punishment of the pillory.

I sall degrad the gracless of thy greis,
Scald thee for skorn, and scor thee af thy sule,
Gar round thy heid, transform thee as a fule,
And with treason gar trone thee on the treis.

Kennedy, Evergreen, ii. 68. st. 19.

Or as in Edin. Edit. 1508. l. 2. and 4.

Scail thee for skorn, and schert thee af thy scule—
And syne with treason trone thee to the treis.

V. the s.

TRONE, s. A throne, Fr. id.

Togidder he thare with mony thousand can hy,
And euin amydwart in his trone grete,
For him arrayit, takin has his sete.

Doug. Virgil, 137, 25.

Hardyng uses this term.

Belyn was kyng, and sat in royal trone.

Cron. Fol. 28, a.

TRONE, s. Truant. S.

To PLAY THE TRONE. To play the truant. S.

TRONIE, s. A truant. V. TRONNIE. S.

TRONE, TROWEN, s. A trowel used by masons. S.

TRONIE, TRONYE, s. 1. Any metrical saw, or jargon, used by children, S.B. Rane, Ratt rhyme, synon. q. v. 2. A long story. 3. Trifling or tedious conversation. 4. A darling. S.

This, I suspect, is the same with Trewane, q. v. a term used by Knox; allied perhaps to O.Su.G. troen, now trogen, true, trusty; because such rhymes, although now in general justly viewed as expressing the language of ignorance or superstition, were considered by our ancestors, as containing adages worthy of implicit confidence. Teut. trowens, bona fide.

TRONNIE, s. A boy that plays the truant. S.

To TROO the School. To play the truant. S.

TROOD, s.

"Patrick Earl of Orkney, in a disposition of the lands of Sand to Jerome Umphray, narrates—that he had evicted 6 merks from — in Cullswick for stealing bolts from his lordship's trood, probably some piece of wreck which had been drawn [driven ?] into Cullswick." P. Aithsting, Shetl. Statist. Acc. vii. 584.

It seems rather to signify wood employed for fences. Su.G. trod-r, lignum, quod materiam praebebat saepibus construendis. Timber ok trodhor, materiam aedium et sepimentorium; Leg. Ost.Goth. c. 28. ap. Ihre, in vo.

TROOKER, s. An appellation of contempt and reproach for a woman. V. TRUKIER, TRUCKER. S.

To TROOTLE, v. n. To walk quickly with short steps. S.

TROPLYS, s. pl. Expl. troops.

For all the Scottismen that thar war,
Quhen thai saw thaim eschew the fycht,
Dang on thaim with all thair mycht,
That thai scalyt thaim in troplys ser;
And till discomfitor war ner.—Barbour, xiii. 275. MS.

This is not, as Sibb. thinks, "a strange corr. of troops," but from Teut. troppel, globus, congeries; which seems derived from troppe, grex, collectio. This Wachter deduces from Germ. treib-en, agere, ut agmen ab agendo.

T R O

To TROSS, v. a. 1. To pack up; to truss, S.

2. To pack off; to set out, S.B. also turs, truss, S.A.

Thus trus is used by Minot.

Ye men of Saint Omers,

Trus ye this tide,

And puttes out yowre paviliownes

With youre mekill pride.

Poems, p. 50.

Fr. trouss-er, to truss; C.B. triosa, Isl. truts, sarcina, fasciculus.

TROSSIS, s. pl. "The small round blocks in which the lines of a ship run;" Gl. Compl.

"Than the master cryit, and bald renye ane bonet, vire the trossis, nou heise." Compl. S. p. 63.

This in the Gl. is derived from Fr. trouss-er, to truss. If the term itself do not rather signify ropes, perhaps it is allied to Sw. tross, a rope, a coil of ropes; Isl. tratsa, funis ab aliis funiculis complicatus. Sw. trissa, however, signifies a pulley.

TROT,* s. 1. Schaik a trot, seems to have been an old phrase for, Take a dance.

"In the fyrst thai dancit—Schaik a trot." Compl. S.

2. Used, perhaps in a ludicrous way, for an expedition by horsemen, synon. raid.

"The Covenanters, hearing of this trott of Turriff, and that they were come to Aberdeen, began to hide their goods," &c. Spalding's Troubles, i. 152.

Teut. trot, cursus, gressus, succussatio.

To TROT, v. a. To draw a man out in conversation, so as to make him expose himself to ridicule. S.

TROTTER, s. One who shows off another in this way. S.

TROT-COSIE, s. A piece of woollen cloth, which covers the back part of the neck and shoulders, with straps across the crown of the head, and buttoned from the chin downwards on the breast, for defence against the weather, S. See Sup.

It seems to be properly throatcosie, because it keeps the throat warm. V. COSIE.

TROTH-PLIGHT, s. The act of pledging faith between lovers, by means of a symbol. S.

TROTTERS, s. pl. Sheep's feet, S.

Secundo, then, a gude sheep's head,

Whase head was singit, never flead,

And four black trotters clad wi' grisle,

Bedown his throat had learn'd to hirsle.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 78.

This term has been formerly used in E. "Trotters, shepes fete;" Palsgrau.

TROUBLE, s. A name given by miners to a sudden break in the stratum of coal. Syn. Dyke or Gae. S.

TROVE, s. A turf, Aberd. toor, Ang.

"These lands—have for centuries been wasted by the practice of cutting up the sward into turf, for the different purposes of mixing it with the stable and byre dung, (muck-fail;) of building the walls of houses, when it is called fail; of roofing houses, when the sward is pared thin, and for fuel, which they call troves." P. Alford, Aberd. Statist. Acc. xv. 456. 457.

Su.G. Isl. torf, ima arvi gleba ad alendum focum eruta; ab antiquiss. Goth. torfa, effodere; Seren.

Einar, Earl of Orkney, about the year 912, is much celebrated by the Northern Scalds, because he taught the inhabitants of these islands the use of turf. Hence he was ever after honoured with the name of Torf-Einar. V. Barry's Orkney, p. 112.

TROUGH,* s. The same with Trow, q. v. S.
 TROUK, s. A slight but teasing complaint. S.
 TROUSH, interj. A call or cry directed to cattle; as,
 "Trough, hawkie!" V. PTRU, PRUCHIE. S.
 To TROUSS, v. a. To tuck up; to shorten by a tuck. S.
 TROW, s. The wooden spout in which water is carried to a mill-wheel, S. in some places in pl. the trows.
 It is also called a shot.

Su.G. Belg. trog, E. trough, Dan. trou, Isl. thro. Junius views C.B. trychu, truncare, as the root, whence truch, troch, incisio; because troughs were anciently trees hollowed out.

To TROW, TREW, TRUE, v. a. 1. To believe, S. See S.

Gud Robert Boyd, that worthi was and wicht,
 Wald nocht thaim trew, quhill he him saw with sycht.
Wallace, ii. 436. MS.

Moes.G. traw-an, Isl. tru-a, Su.G. tro, fidere, credere;
Tro ens ord, fidem habere alicujus dictis; To trow ane's word, S.

The prep. in is sometimes added.

Ye gart us trow in stock and stone,
 That they wad help mony one.

Spec. Godly Sangs, p. 25.

2. To trust to, or confide in.

Now I persawe, he that will trew
 His fa, it sall him sum tyme rew.

Barbour, ii. 326. MS.

The prep. to is sometimes added.

And gyff that ye will trow to me,
 Ye sall ger mak tharoff king,
 And I sall be in your helping.—Barbour, i. 490. MS.

3. To make believe; often in sport, S. as, I'm only trowing you.

TROWABIL, adj. Credible. S.

To TROW, v. a. Apparently, to curse.

Messyngieris than sic tithingis brocht thaim till,
 And tald Persye, that Wallace leffand war,
 Off his eschapp fra thar presoun in Ayr.
 Thai trowit rycht weill, he passit was that steid,
 For Longcastell and his twa men was deid.
 He trowit the chance that Wallace so was past.
 In ilka part thai war gretly agast,
 Throw prophesye that thai had herd befor.

Wallace, iii. 25. MS.

In Edit. 1648. it is thus altered;

They trowd it well, that Wallace past that stead,
 For Long-castle and his two men were dead:
 They varied the chance that Wallace so was past.

It would seem, that some early editor, while he retained the first trowit, as obviously signifying believed, changed the second to varied, as being better understood in his time.

Trow tak you, is an imprecation still used in Orkney.
 It is said that in Norse trow signifies Devil. Isl. tramen, larva vel cacodaemon; thraen, diabolus; drauge, lemur.
 Su.G. tro is used in profane swearing or imprecation.
Tro mig, tro bort mig, dispeream; tro dig, male pereas.
 Ihre conjectures that tage may be understood,—ut sit,
 Diabolus me auferat. Gloss. p. 950. 951. Germ. traun is used in a similar sense. V. Wachter.

To TROW, v. a. To season a cask, by rinsing it with a little wort, before it be used; a term common with brewers; also, to trow the brew-looms, Ang.

A.S. ge-treow-ian, in a moral sense, signifies purgare; Germ. trauen, to administer the sacerdotal blessing. We say, to sign or synd a vessel, when it is cleansed by a little water being passed through it; in allusion to the supposed purification of a person or thing, in consequence of making the sign of the cross. Trow perhaps may have a similar origin; especially as Brewers retain a considerable portion of superstition. V. BURN.

TROW, s. The Trow of the Water, the lower ground through which a river runs; as, the trow of Clyde. S.

TROW, TROWE, TROLL, DROW, s. 1. A name given to the Devil, Orkn. Shetl. Hence, "Trow tak you!"

2. In pl. it denotes an inferior order of demons. S.

HILL-TROWS, s. pl. Spirits supposed to inhabit the hills, or the mountainous parts of Orkney and Shetland. S.

SEA-TROWES, s. pl. Certain inhabitants of the sea, viewed by the vulgar as malignant spirits; Orkn. &c. S.

TROWAN, TROWEN, s. A mason's trowel. S.

TROWENTYN, Barbour, xix. 696. Leg. tranouwintyn.
 V. TRANONT.

TROWIE, adj. Sickly. S.

TROWIE GLOVES. A name given to sponges, Caithn.

"Sponges are found upon the shore in great plenty, shaped like a man's hand, and called by the people Trowie Gloves." P. Dunrossness, Statist. Acc. vii. 396. q. Make- believe gloves, because an ignorant person might view them as such. V. TROW, v.

To TROWL, v. n. In trowing, a line with a number of hooks on it, extending across a stream, and fixed to a rod on each side, is drawn gently upwards. S.

TROWNSOWR, s. A trencher. V. TRUNSCHEOUR. S.

TROWS, s. pl. A sort of vessel used in night-fishing on rivers for salmon. S.

TROWS, s. A sluice. V. MILL-TROWSE. S.

TROWTH, s. 1. Truth, Wyntown.

2. Belief.

Syne thai herd, that Makbeth aye
 In fantown fretis had great fay,
 And trowth had in swylk fantasy,
 Be that he trowyd stedfastly,
 Nevyre dyscumfyt for to be,
 Qwhill wyth hys eyne he suld se
 The wode browcht of Brynnane,
 To the hill of Dwnsynane. Wyntown, vi. 18. 363.

TRUBLANCE, s. Disturbance. S.

TRUBLY, adj. Dark; lowering; troubled; muddy; drumly, synon. Fr. troubé.

Throw help thareof he chasis the wyndis awa,
 And trubly cloudis diuidis in ane thraw.

Doug. Virgil, 108, 21.

TRUCKER, TRUCKAR, s. V. TRUKIER. S.

TRUCK-POT, s. A tea-pot. V. TRACK-POT. S.

TRVCOUR, s. A deceiver. S.

TRUDDER, s. Lumber; trumpery. S.

TRUDGE BAK.

A trudge bak that cairful cative bure;
 And crukit was his laythlie limmis bayth.

K. Hart, ii. 54.

From the rest of this description, as well as from the name of the person, Decrepitus, it is clear that the poet meant to say that he was hump-backed. The phrase is still used in this sense, S.B.

It may be from Lat. turg-ere, to swell. But I would prefer Su.G. truin-a, id. Isl. thruin-a, id. throte, a tumor.

TRUDGET, v. I dread trudget of you; I suspect that you will do some mischief, or play me some trick, Loth.

Perhaps allied to Alem. trug, fraud, trug-en, to deceive;
 as being the same with O.E. treget, deceit, treachery, Minot's Poems, p. 31.

— For all thaire treget and thaire gile.

TRUDGET, s. A sort of paste, made of barley-meal and water, used by tinkers to prevent a newly-soldered vessel from leaking. S.

T R U

TRUE-BLUE, adj. 1. An epithet formerly given to those who were accounted rigid Presbyterians, and still occasionally used, S. See Sup.

Hence the title of a pamphlet, published about the beginning of last century, "A Sample of True-Bleu Presbyterian Loyalty."

This phraseology seems to have originated during the civil wars in the time of Charles I., when the opposite parties were distinguished by badges of different colours.

"—Few, or none of this army wanted a blue ribband; but the lord Gordon and some others of the marquis' family had a ribband, when they were dwelling in the town, of a red flesh colour, which they wore in their hats, and called it the Royal Ribband, as a sign of their love and loyalty to the king. In despite and derision thereof this blue ribband was worn, and called the Covenanters Ribband by the haill soldiers of the army." Spalding's Troubles, i. 123. V. also p. 160.

2. Metaph. a person of integrity and steadiness. S.
TRUELINS, TRULINS, adv. Truly. It is also used as a s.; as, My truelins, ye're far wrang. S.

TRUE-LOVE, s. One whose love is pledged to another. S.
TRUFF, s. Corr. of E. turf, S. See Sup.

Lang may his truff in gowans gay be drest!

V. TROVE. Fergusson's Poems, ii. 8.

TRUFF, s. A trick; a deceit.

Ne bid I not into my stile for thy

To speke of truffs, nor nane harlottry.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 272, 4.

Ital. truffa, id. truff-are, to cheat, to deceive, truffiere, a deceiver. In Fr. the sense is limited to that deception that is included in mockery. Truffe, a gibe, truffer, to mock, truff-eur, a mocker. Hence perhaps,

To TRUFF, v. a. To steal, Gl. Shirr. See Sup.

TRUFFURE, s. A deceiver.

Than wox I tene, that I tuke to sic ane truffuris tent.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 239. b. 23.

TRUGS, s. A mode of profane swearing, used among the vulgar, S.B.

It is generally viewed as a corruption of troth, to which it is equivalent. But it seems rather derived from Moes.G. triggua, Su.G. trigg, faithful, triggua, a covenant. It is an affecting proof of the pertinacity of men in immoral customs, that some of the oaths used in this country seem to retain evident marks of the highest antiquity. Thus Gotha, a common profanation of the name of God, S.B. is evidently Moes.G. Gotha, the very term used to denote the Supreme Being, when Ulphilas wrote, during the reign of Constantine the Great, that is, nearly fifteen hundred years ago. V. Michaelis' Introd. Lect. sect. 68.

TRUKIER, TRUCKER, s. 1. A contemptuous designation, always implying that the person, to whom it is given, has done something that is offensive, S.

Despiteful spider, poor of sprite,

Begins with babbling me to blame;

Gowk wyte me not to gar thee griet;

Thy trattling, Trukier, I shall tame.

Polwart, Watson's Coll. iii. 2.

2. Often applied to a female in contempt, equivalent to worthless hussy. 3. A waggish or tricky person. S.

The term seems to convey the idea of deceit. O.Germ. trugh, guile, Teut. droghener, a deceiver, bedriegh-er, id. Perhaps merely a contemptuous use of Fr. troqueur, one who barter or trucks; as persons of this description have not generally been supposed worthy of implicit confidence.

T R U

TRULY. Used as a s. in My truly; By my truly. S.

TRULIE, adj. True; not fictitious. A trulie story, S.B.
Su.G. trolig, credibilis.

TRULIS, s. pl. Some kind of game.

So mony lords, so mony naturall fulis,

That bettir accordis to play thame at the trulis,

Nor seis the dulis that commons dois sustene.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 42.

Lord Hailes thinks that this may mean some game which resembles a spindle, from Fr. trouil, id. "I am informed," he adds, "that trule means some childish game, of the nature of cappy-hole." Note, p. 251.

Germ. torl signifies the game of top. The term, however, seems rather to denote some trundling sort of game, perhaps resembling the bowls; as probably allied to Su.G. trill-a, rotari, ut solet globus; lhre.

TRULLION, s. A sort of crupper, Mearns; the same with Tronach, q. v. Isl. travale, impedimentum?

TRULLION, s. A foolish person; a silly creature. S.

TRUM, s. Apparently, a drum. S.

TRUM, s. Qu. if the same as E. Thrum, thread. S.

To TRUMP, v. n. To march; to trudge, S.

With that thai war weill ner the King;

And he left his amonesting,

And gert trump to the assemblé.

Barbour, viii. 293. MS.

And than, but langer delaying,

Thai gert trump till the assemblé.

On athir sid men mycht than se

Mony a wycht man, and worthi,

Redy to do chewalry.

Ibid. xii. 491. MS.

Eneas all his oist and hale armye

Has rasit trumpin to the toun in hye.

Doug. Virgil, 379, 8.

Su.G. Isl. tramp-a, calcare; Germ. tramp-en, currere.

Hardyng, however, uses the v. with the prep. up in a different sense.

The Erle then of Northumberland throughout

Raysed up the land, and when he came it nere,

The kyng trumped up, and went away full clere.

Cron. Fol. 222, a.

It seems to signify, trussed up his goods.

To TRUMP, v. n. 1. To trumpet forth; to sound abroad; with the prep. up.

Tharefore trump up, blaw furth thine eloquence.

Doug. Virgil, 376, 14.

We have the same phraseology in the Battallye of Agynhourte.

They tromped up full meryly,

The grete battell to gederes ged.

Ap. Watson's Hist. E.P. ii. 36.

Teut. tromp-en, canere tuba.

2. To "break wind backwards."

In publyk placis fra that day

Scho wes behynd than trumpand ay:

Sa wes scho schamyd in ilk sted,

Qubil in this world hyr lyf scho led.

Wyntown, vi. 2. 98.

TRUMP, s. A Jews-harp. Fr. trompe, Sir J. Sinclair's Observ. p. 159.

"Like a sow playing on a trump;" S. Prov. "spoken when people do a thing ungracefully." Kelly, p. 232. V. CORNEPIPE.

To TRUMP, v. a. To deceive.

Than sall we all be at our will.

And thai sall let thaim trumpyt ill,

Fra thai wyt weill we be away.

Barbour, xix. 712. MS.

That fals man, by dissaitfull wordis fare,

T R U

With wanhope trumpet the wofull luffare.

Doug. Virgil, 24, 3.

Fr. tromp-er, Teut. tromp-en, id. The E. v. trump up seems to have a common origin, q. to fabricate by deceiving others. As Sw. trumph-a, id. has the same orthography with trumph-a, to play at cards, trumph the victorious card, (Seren.;) it is not improbable that the verbs, signifying to deceive, have originally a reference to this amusement, which has been so common a mean of deception.

TRUMPE, s. 1. A trifle; a thing of little value.

Ten teyndis ar ane trumpe, bot gif he tak may Ane kinrik of parisch kyrkis cuplit with commendis.
Doug. Virgil, Prol. 239, a. 10.

2. In pl. goods.

Now, haly fader, thi maieste inclyne,
Grant that our nauy thys fyre may eschape,
And from distruction delyuer and out scrape
The sobir trumpis, and meyne graith of Troyanis.
Doug. Virgil, 150, 55.

"From Belg. tromp, a rattle for little children; tromp-en, to rattle, or play with a rattle;" Rudd.

TRUMPOUR, TRUMPER, s. 1. A deceiver.

Mony proud trumpour with him trippit.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 27.

Lord Hailes renders this rattlescull; from the idea that trump signifies rattle, Belg. But Dunbar evidently uses the term elsewhere, in a moral sense, as opposed to gud men, and conjoined with schrewis.

Sum gevis gud men for thair gud kewis,
Sum gevis to trumpouris, and to schrewis.

Bannatyne Poems, p. 50.

I am not for a trumper tane. Cherrie and Slae, st. 86.

Et nulli insidias quondam simulata paravi. Lat. Par.

I cannot therefore agree with Tyrwhitt, who, referring to the passage first quoted, thinks that the word means trumpeters; Cant. Tales, Note, v. 2673.

Fr. trompeur, id.

2. Sometimes used as a contemptuous designation, without any definite meaning.

How durst thou, trumper, be sa bald,
To tant or tell, that he was ald?

Philotus, S.P.R. iii. 21.

To TRUMP, v. n. To fling as a horse; to kick. S.

TRUMP. Tongue of the trump, the chief person, or that object on which there is most dependance. S.

TRUMPH. To play trumph about, to be on a footing with, to perform actions equally valorous, S.B.

Achilles played na' trumph about
Wi' him, he says; but judge ye.

Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 29.

Trumph, S., has the same meaning with trump, E. as denoting the principal card.

TRUMPLEFEYST, s. A qualm, or fit of sickness. S.

TRUMPOSIE, adj. 1. Guileful. 2. Cross-tempered. S.

TRUNCHER SPEIR. A pointless spear, a spear having part of it lopped off.

With twa blunt truncher speirs squair,
It was thair interprise,

To fecht with baith thair faces bair,

For lue, as is the gyse. Scott, Evergreen, ii. 178.

The same with E. truncheon, Fr. tronchet, tronson; from trunc-ir, to cut off, to break into two pieces.

TRUNCHEOUR, s. A plate; a trencher, S.

Syne brade trunscheouris did thay fill and charge
With wilde scrabbis and vthir frutis large.—
Ne spare thay not at last, for laik of mete,
Thare fatale foure nukit trunscheouris for til etc.

Doug. Virgil, 208, 43, 52.

TUFF, s. A tuft of feathers, ribbons, or hair. See Sup.

My Lady, as she is a woman,
Is born a helper to undo man.—
For she invents a thousand toys,
That house, and hold, and all destroys;
As scarfs, shephroas, tuffs and rings,
Fairdings, facings, and powderings;
Rebats, ribands, bands and ruffs,
Lapbends, shagbands, cuffs and muffs;
Folding outlays [ourlays], pearling sprigs,
Atrys, vardigals, periwigs;
Hats, hoods, wires, and also kells,
Washing-balls, and perfuming smells:
French-gows cut out, and double banded,
Jet rings to make her pleasant-handed:
A fan, a feather, bracelets, gloves,
All new-come busks she dearly loves.
For such trim bony baby-clouts,
Still on the Laird she greets and shouts;
Which made the Laird take up more gear,
Than all the lands or rigs could bear.

Watson's Coll. i. 30.

Fr. touffe, a tuft, applied to hair, ribbons, feathers, &c. On faisoit il y a quelque-temps, des garnitures d'une grosse touffe de rubans. — Une touffe de plumes; c'est-à-dire, un gros bouquet, comme celui qu'on met sur les capilenes. Dict. Trev.

TUFFING, TOFFIN, s. Tow, oakum; wadding.

The tuffing kindillis betuix the plankis wak,
Quharfra ouerthrawis the pikky smok coil blak.

Doug. Virgil, 150, 39.

Dan. toi, Su.G. stuff, coactum, constipatum uti materia pilei; Ihre. Fr. touffu, thick.

T U I

To TUFFLE, v. a. To ruffle; to put any thing in disorder by handling it, or tossing it, S. Tifle, A. Bor.

This might seem allied to Su.G. taefl-a, originally to play at dice, from tafwel, tessera; in a secondary sense, to contend. But I prefer twefallt, twofold, A.S. twy-fyld-an, duplicare, to double; because things said to be tuffed, are generally such as are cressed, in consequence of being folded down. See Sup.

TUG, s. "Raw hide, of which formerly plough traces were made;" Gl. Burns, S.O.

Thou was a noble fittie-lan',
As e'er in tug or tow was drawn.

V. TEUG.

Burns, iii. 143.

To TUGGLE, TUGLE, v. a. 1. To pull by repeated jerks, S.

Now we leave Nory wi' her change of dress,—
Till we inform you of poor Lindy's fate,
That was left corded up at sic a rate.
Tuggling and struggling how to get him free,
He did great pyne and meikle sorrow dree.

Ross's Helenore, p. 43.

2. Tossed backwards and forwards, handled roughly.

—Tousled and tuggled with town tykes. V. TOSLE.

3. Fatigued with travelling or severe labour; wrought above one's strength; kept under, S.B.

Tuglit and travalit thus trew men can tyre.

Sa wundir wait wes the way, wit ye but wene.

Gawan and Gol. i. 3.

This may be either from Su.G. toeg-a, to draw, or from E. tug.

To TUGGILL, v. n. To strive; to struggle. S.

TUGHT, s. Vigour. V. TUCHT. S.

TUG-WHITING, s. Perhaps, a whiting caught by a hand-line, drawn out of the water when the fish tugs. S.

"About this time some tug-whittings were taken, and by God's providence the fishes became larger." Spalding's Troubles, i. 39.

TUHU, s. A spiritless person; one destitute of energy and incapable of exertion. S.

TUIGH, s.

A man at one for to serve lordis twayn,
The quhilk be baith contrair in opynion;—
Be trew to both, with tuigh of treson,—
It may wele ryme, but it accordis nought.

Pink. S.P.R. iii. 124.

"Touch," Gl. Pink. But it seems to signify suspicion, from A.S. tweog-an, dubitare, tweo, a doubt. Alem. zuch-on, Su.G. twek-a, to doubt, twekan, doubting. Ihre derives the v. from twaa, because in doubting the thought is as it were drawn into two parts. Hence also Su.G. twe, doubt.

TUIK, s. "He had a gude tuik at that," he had a good spell at it; evidently the same as Towk, q. v. S.

TUIK, s. A by-taste. V. TEUK. S.

TUIK, s. A cook, corruptly pronounced. S.

TUILYIE, TULYE, TOOLYIE, s. 1. A quarrel; a broil; a combat, S. 2. Ludicrously, a battle; a skirmish. S.

"Chaud-melle, — ane hoat suddaine tuilyie, or debaite, quhilk is opponed as contrair to fore-thought fellonie." Skene, Verb. Sign. vo. Chaud-melle.

Be that the bargan was all playit,
The stringis stert out of thair nokks;
Sevin-sum, that the tulye maid,
Lay gruffling in the stokks. Peblis to the Play, st. 19.
Ye do abound in coal and calk:
And think, as fools, to fley all faes
With targets, tuilies, and toom talk.

Polwart, Watson's Coll. iii. 9.

Sibb. derives Toolye from Teut. tuy-, labor. I have not observed, that this term is older than the reign of Q. Mary.

T U L

It was probably introduced by the application of a Fr. term in a particular sense; as tuill-er, to mix in a confused manner, which might be applied to a crowd in a tumultuous state, or entering into a broil. Teut. tuyt-en, however, in a secondary sense denotes rage, furere, Kilian. Gael. taghal, to contend, to drive the ball to the goal, has by some been viewed as the origin.

To TUILYIE, TOOLIE, v. n. To quarrel; to squabble, S.

"Ane French word, Melle, dissension, strife, debate; as wee say, that ane hes melled or tuilyied with ane vther." Skene, Verb. Sign. vo. Melletum.

"A tuilying tike comes limping hame;" S. Prov. Ramsay, p. 17.

Sae whiles they toolied, whiles they drank,

Till a' their sense was smoor'd. Ramsay's Poems, i. 280.

TUILYIE-MULIE, s. The same with Tuilyie, S.B.

I know not if mulie should be traced to Teut. muyl-en, to quarrel; Rostrum extendere simultatis aut irae causa, mutire, mussitare, cum indignatione et stomacho; Kilian.

V. TUTE-MUTE.

TUILYEUR, s. One who is addicted to fighting or engaging in broils. See Sup.

"Gif there be any injurious persons of their neighbours, or defamers of others, common fechtters (tuilyeurs) or any other malefactors." Chalm. Air. c. 39, s. 73.

TUILYIESUM, adj. Quarrelsome, S.

"Tuilyiesum dogs cum happing hame;" S. Prov. i. e.

Those, who are inclined to brawls, generally suffer by them.

TUILYIE-WAP, s. A play of children. S.

TUILYIE, YOKIT-TUILYIE, s. A play in which a number of boys sit down on their hunkers, holding by the clothes of each other, while two or three lay hold of the foremost and pull them all along the ice. S.

TUILL, s. "Toil, trouble," Pink.

In Scotland had not bene sic tuill,

Gif this had bein the common rewl.

Maitland Poems, p. 221.

If this be the sense, it must be allied to Teut. teul-en, laborare. But I suspect that it rather signifies contention, as the same with Tuilye, q. v.

To TUIVE, TUIVE up, v. n. 1. To swell; to rise as dough from the effect of leaven. 2. The operation of yeast, or the working of ale in a vat; "It's tuivin up." S.

TUKE, s. A hasty and rough pull; a tug. S.

TULCHANE, TULCHIN, s. 1. A calf's skin, in its rough state, stuffed with straw, and set beside a cow to make her give her milk, S.

Hence the phrase Tulchane Bishops.

"Here is a fair shew of restoring benefices of cure, great and small to the Kirk: But in effect it was to restore only titles, which noblemen perceived, could not be given conveniently to themselves; but they gripped to the commodity, in obtaining from the titulars, either temporal lands fewed to themselves, or tithes, or pensions to their servants or dependers. And therefore the Bishops, admitted according to this new order, were called in jest, Tulchane Bishops. A Tulchane is a calf's skin stuffed full with straw, to cause the cow give milk. The Bishop had the title, but my Lord got the milk or commoditie." Calderwood's Hist. p. 55.

"Mr. Patrick Adamson, in a sermon which he preached against the order of bishops, had the following observations, that there were three sorts of bishops, I. The Lord's Bishop, viz. Christ's, and such was every pastor. II. My Lord Bishop, that is a bishop who is a lord who sits and votes in parliament, and exercises jurisdiction over his brethren. III. My Lord's Bishop, one, whom some lord or nobleman at court places to be receiver-general of his rents, and to give leases for his lordship's behoof; but had neither the means nor power of a bishop. This last sort he called a Tulchan Bishop." Cant's Hist. Perth, I. Introd. p. xi.

2. A bag or budget, generally of the skin of an animal, S.B.
—"Flae him belly-flaught, his skin wad mak a gallant tulchin for you." Journal from London, p. 2.
3. The term is metaph. applied to a chubby, sometimes to a dwarfish, child, Ang.

It has been said that Tulchan is an Irish word used in the sense first mentioned; Knox's Hist. Life, xxxiii. But I have met with no evidence of this. It is not improbable, that it is of Gothic origin. Su.G. tolc signifies a model. In re architectonica dicitur modulus vel typus, ad quem plura facienda exiguntur, ut forma crassitie vel longitudine similia sint; Ihre. Isl. tulk-a signifies to entice; pellicere. Now, tulchan, in sense 1., corresponds to both terms. It is a resemblance of the animal, made as like to it as possible: and it is thus made, for the purpose of enticing the dam to give her milk.

- TULIPASE, s. A tulip. S.
TULLYAT, s. A bundle; used contemptuously. S.
TULLIE, s. A knife fixed in the haft. S.
TULLISAUL, s. V. TILLIESOUL. S.
TULSHIE, s. A sour-looking person. S.
TULSURELIKE, adj.

And at his mouth a blubbir stode of fome,
Like to ane bore quhetting his tuskis kene,
Rycht tulsurelike, but temperaunce in tene.

Henryson's Test. Creseide, Chron. S.P. i. 163.

It conveys the idea of furious.

- TUMBLER, s. A small cart, lightly formed. S.
TUMBLER, s. One of the names of the porpoise. S.
TUMBUS, s. Any thing large. A big inactive person. S.
TUMBOUS, adj. Large and slovenly; reverse of Snod. S.
TUMDEIF, s. Some kind of disease, mentioned by Sir John Roull. See Sup.
— Tumdeif or edroposy,
Maigram, madness, or missilry, &c.

V. Gl. Compl. p. 330.

The last syllable is apparently allied to Isl. deife, hebetō, viribus defraudo. Could we suppose the first to be from Su.G. tumme, pollex, it might signify want of feeling or numbness in the thumb, or other joints.

- To TUME, v. a. To empty; to evacuate, S. See Sup.
Dan. tomm-er, Su.G. Isl. toem-a, vacuare, A. Bor. toom or tume. V. TEYM.

- TUME, TOOM, TOME, adj. 1. Empty, having nothing in it, S. Toome, A. Bor. id. See Sup.

Bot other lordis, that war by,
Sayd, he had fillyd fullyly
His baggis, and thairris all tume war.

Wyntown, viii. 40. 95.

"A toom purse makes a bleit (bashful) merchant;" A. Bor. Ray. This is also used in S.
Su.G. tom, Isl. tom-ur, id.

2. Untenanted, S.
"Better a tume house than an ill tenant;" S. Prov.
It is used in the same sense by R. Brunne.
In ther way ilk dele thei fond voide als heth,
The toun of Mount Carmele, the toun of Nazareth,
The strong castelle Pilryn, that first wonne was,
Alle tok Ricardyn, Caloyn & Kayfas.
Ilkon thise thei seised, tome alle thei fond. P. 192.

Hearne, not understanding the term, renders it, "shut, enclosed, cut;" Gl. The sense is illustrated by the first verse quoted. "They found every thing in their way void as heath," or "as a desert."

3. In a state of inanition, as to food. I'm very tume;

T U P

My stomach is quite empty. Ye're no tume; You are not in want of food, you cannot be hungry, S. Clung, synon. See Sup.

4. Lean; lank. A lang tume man, one who is tall and meagre, S.

5. Shadowy; unsubstantial. See Sup.

And were not his expert mait Sibylla
Taucht him thay war bot vode gaistis all tha,—
He had apoun thame ruschit in grete haist,
And with his bitand brycht brand all in vane,
The tume schaddois smityng to haue slane.

Doug. Virgil, 173, 30.

6. Vain; as denoting the want of any proper cause for boasting.

Sum spendis on the auld vse,
Sum makis ane tume ruse.

V. TULLYIE, s. Doug. Virgil, Prol. 238, b. 3.

7. Unprofitable, what brings no return, S.

O'er lang with empty brag we have been vain,
Of toom dominion on the plenteous main.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 52.

8. Ineffectual; inefficient. S.—9. Deficient in mind. A toom chield, one who has no understanding, often with a negative prefixed, No a tume man, i. e. a sensible man, S.

TUME, s. A tume of rain, a sudden and heavy fall of rain, S.B.

TUME-HANDIT, adj. Empty-handed, in whatever respect, S.

I'll tak fat ye gee,

Ye're nae toom-handed, gin your heart be free.

Ross's Helenore, Introd.

Su.G. tomhaend, qui vacuas manus habet, qui nihil adfert; Ihre. See Sup.

TUME-HEADIT, TOOM-HEADED, adj. Destitute of understanding. S.

TUME-SKIN'D, TOOM-SKINN'D, adj. Hungry. S.

TUME-TAIL, adj. 1. To Cum back Tume-tail, to go away with a load, and return empty. 2. A plough is said to gang tume-tail, when it is drawn along without making a furrow, or without entering into the ground. 3. Metaph. used of one who returns without attaining the object he had on view in leaving home. S.

TUMFIE, s. A dumpish sort of fellow, one who is dull and stupid, S.O.; used also as an adj. See Sup.

Dan. dumt-fae, "a silly fellow, a blockhead," Wolff. As it also signifies a brute, it seems formed from dum, blockish, and fae, cattle, q. stupid as a brute.

To TUMMLE, v. a. To tumble. To TUMMLE THE WULLCAT. To tumble heels overhead. S.

TUMMOCK, s. A tuft, or small mound. S.

To TUMPLE, v. n. To roll over; to tumble. S.

TUMULT, s. The land connected with a cottar-house. S.

TUNAG, s. A short mantle still worn by old women in some parts of the Highlands of Scotland. S.

To TUNCH, v. a. To push or jog with the elbow. S.

TUNCH, s. A push or jog of this description. S.

TUNDLE-BOX, s. A tinder box. S.

TUNIE, adj. Changeable in humour or temper. S.

TUP, s. 1. The common term for a ram, S. also used Staffords. and A. Bor. — 2. A foolish fellow, S. — 3. Sometimes applied to an unpolished store-farmer. S.
This may be either a metaph. use of the term; or allied to Teut. tolpe, foolish.

To RIN LIKE A BLIND TUP-I'-THE-WIND. A phrase applied to a young woman who indiscreetly and eagerly courts the company of men. S.

TUPPENCE, TIPPENCE, s. Twopence. S.

TUP-YIELD, TUP-EILD, adj. A term applied to a ewe that proves unexpectedly barren, or not with lamb. S.

TUQUHEIT, TEUCHIT, s. The lapwing, S.

In come twa flyrand Fulis with a fond fair,
The tuquheit, and the gukkit gowk, and yede hiddie
giddie,

Rwischit bayth to the Bard, and ruggit his hare ;

Callit him thris thevisnek, to thraw in a widdie.

Houlate, iii. 15.

That the word thevisnek contains an allusion to the cry of this bird, appears from the use of it elsewhere.

"The tuechitis cryit theuis nek, quhen the piettis clattrit." Compl. S. p. 60.

The name is probably meant to imitate the sound made by this bird; like Germ. kiwit; Sw. kowipa, E. pewet, Fr. dishuit, and S. synon. Peeweep, peesweep, q. v.

TUQUHEIT STORM. The designation given to some days of severe weather, which occur in March about the time of the re-appearance of the lapwing; viewed as the last storm of the winter season. S.

TURBOT, s. The name commonly given, in our markets, to halibut, S. See Sup.

"The fish on this part of the coast, are cod, ling, skate, mackerel, hollybot, here called turbot." P. St. Vigeans, Forfars. Statist. Acc. xii. 171, N.

TURCHIE, adj. Short and thick; squat; Perth. S.

TURCUME, s. Clotted filth.

And all the day quhair euer scho go,

Sic liquour scho likkis vp also;

The turcumis of hir taill I trow,

Micht be ane supper till ane sow.

Lyndsay on Syde Taillis, Warkis, 1592. p. 309.

Perhaps allied to Su.G. traeck, sordes.

TURDION, s. "A species of galliard or gay dance; Fr. tordion;" Gl. Compl. V. BRAUL.

TURES, s. pl. Turfs; called Toors in the North. S.

TURIT, TURET, s. Perhaps, a muffler or mask. S.

TURKAS, TURKES, TURKESSE, s. 1. Pincers; nippers, S.—2. Metaph. applied to a griping oppressive man. S.

Thay wer full strenge of countenance,

Lyk turkas burnand reid.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 29.

—Wyth the grypand turkes oft also

The glouand lumpe thay turnit to and fro.

Doug. Virgil, 258, 27.

"Man's heart on earth is like a teeth in the jaw, the deeper roote it hath the more paine it causeth, when it is drawing out with the turkesse." Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 534.

Arm. turques, turkes, id. Lhuyd. Bullet says that the term is still used in this sense in Franche-Comté.

To TURKEN, v. n. To harden; to wax stout. S.

TURN,* s. A piece of work of whatever kind; often a hand's turn. S.

TURN, s. To do the turn. 1. To perform any piece of work or business, S.

"The over-lord sall doe all the turnis and affairs pertaining to the heire, and sall persew all his pleyes and actions for him," &c. Reg. Maj. B. ii. c. 41, § 7.

—"There was no pay to the waged horsemen and footmen, wherein stood the forces that were reposed in to do the turn." Mr. Ja. Melvill's MS. Mem. p. 229.

2. To be sufficient for any purpose; to give satisfaction, S.

But words I winna langer using be,

Nor will sic aff-sets do the turn with me.

Ross's Helenore, p. 85.

TURN, s. On the turn. 1. Applied to milk, beer, &c. to intimate that it is becoming acid. 2. The day's on the turn, the days begin to lengthen. S.

TURNER, s. A copper coin, formerly current in S., in value two pennies Scots money, and equivalent to a Bodle. See Sup.

"So far as I know, the copper coins of two pennies, commonly called two-penny pieces, boddles or turners, and also babees, containing sixpences, or half a shilling Scots, such as the English call half-pennies, began to be coined after the restoration, in the beginning of Charles II.'s reign." Introd. to Anderson's Diplom. p. 138.

The learned writer is mistaken, in giving so late a date to the Turner. This coin was struck in the reign of James VI.

—"King Charles' turners, stricken by the earl of Stirling, by virtue of the king's gift, were, by proclamation,—cried down from two pennies to one penny; king James' turners to pass for two pennies, because they were no less worth; and the kaird turners simpliciter discharged, as false cuinzies." Spalding's Troubles, i. 197. V. also p. 217.

Since Allan's death, nae body car'd

For anes to speer how Scotia far'd,

Nor plack nor thristled turner war'd,

To quench her drouth.

Dr. Beattie's Address, Ross's Helenore.

KAIRD TURNERS. Counterfeit money issued by tinkers. S.

Rudd. seems justly to observe, that "this name is taken from the French, who were used to call their gros, dernier [l. denier,] and doubles, Tournois, from the money coined with a great mixture of brass in the city of Tours." Ibid. p. 220. These were also current in S., on account of the friendship between the two nations. They have the inscription, Double Tournois, i. e. a Twopenny piece Tournois; of the reigns of Lewis XIII and XIV. Thus, their nominal value in S. was the same as in France. Their real value exceeded ours. For a French penny was, according to Cotgr., vo. Tournois, the tenth part of a penny Sterling, ours being only the twelfth.

TURNER-ASIDE, s. One who deviates, or turns aside, from a particular course. S.

TURN-PYK, TURNPECK, TURNPIKE, s. 1. The winding stair of a castle.

Syne the colis and crelis wyth-all

A-pon the turne-pyk lete he fall;

And ane syne blewe a horn in hy.

Than in the castell ras the cry. Wyntown, viii. 38. 74.

2. Any stair of a spiral form built without a house, and resembling one of the towers of a castle, S.

"A turnpike stair is the term used in Edinburgh, and over all Scotland, to denote a stair, of which the steps are built in a spiral form, like a screen [l. screw] winding round the same axis, in opposition to straight flights of steps, which are called scale stairs." Arnot's Hist. Edin. p. 246, N.

"Thus the King accompanied only with the sayde Maister Alexander, comes forth of the chamber, passeth through the ende of the hall (where the noblemen and his Majesties servants were sitting at their dinner,) up a turnepecke." Account of Gowrie's Conspiracy, Cant's Hist. Perth, i. 196.

"But the Earle of Gowrye and his servants made them for another way up a quiet turnepeck, which was ever condemned before, and was only then left open (as appeared) for that purpose." Ibid. 202, 203.

Teut. torn, toren, signifies a tower, baeche, a pharos, a place for observation. But whether this be the origin, is doubtful.

T U S

TURNGREYS, s. A winding stair.

A cruell portar gat apon the wall,
Powit out a pyn, the portculys leit fall—
Rychard Wallace the turngreys weill has seyn;
He folowit fast apon the portar keyn,
A tour the wall dede in the dyk him draiff,

Wallace, ix. 510. MS.

From Fr. tourn-er, to turn, and gre, contr. from degré,
pl. degrez, steps.

TURN-SCREW, s. A screw-driver. S.

TURN-TAIL, s. Used as synon. with E. turn-coat.
Perhaps it originally denoted a fugitive.

"Many of the Covenanters proved turn-tail through plain fear, and came in most willingly to him." Spalding's Troubles, i. 170.

TURRA, s. To Ride to Turra, to be in great glee. S.

TURRIS, s. pl. Turfs; a species of earthen fuel. S.

To TURS, TURSS, v. a. 1. To pack up in a bale or bundle, as E. truss, Fr. trouss-er, id. from Isl. truts, fasciculus, Belg. tross, sarcina.

2. To carry off hastily.

This jowell he gert turss in till Ingland.

Wallace, i. 128. MS.

A hundreth schippis, that ruther bur and ayr,
To turss thair gud, in hawyn was lyand thar.

Ibid. vii. 1067. MS.

Fr. trouss-er also signifies to pluck or twitch up; Cotgr.

3. To take one's self off quickly; to march with expedition.

Thy slicht and wylis sal the not bere away,
Nor hail skarth hyne do turs the hame fra vs
Vnto thy faderis hous the fals Aunus.

Doug. Virgil, 390, 26.

Thidder hail the pepill of Italia,
And all the land eik of Enotria,
Thare doutsum asking tursis for ansuere,
And thare peticiouns gettis assoilyet here.

Ibid. 207, 42.

4. To turss furth, to bring out what has been kept in store. Turssyt furth ger; Wallace.

TURSABLE, adj. What may be carried away.

"The laird, fearing some trouble to follow, displeished the place, left nothing tursable within." — Spalding's Troubles, i. 221.

TURS, TURZE, s. A turs of heather, as much heath as a horse can carry on his back; a truss. S.

To TURSE, v. n. To walk. S.

TURSKIL, s. An implement used for cutting peats. S.

TURTOUR, TURTURE, s. The turtle-dove, Lat. turtur.

— Sodeynly, a turture quhite as calk,

So evinly vpon my hand gan lycht,

And vnto me sche turnyt hir, full rycht.

King's Quair, vi. 5.

TURVES, TURVVEN, s. pl. Peats. S.

TUSCHE, TUSCHA, s. Agirdle, Dunbar. V. TISCHE. S.

To TUSH, v. n. To express displeasure.

"Nay, some were puffed up, and tushed at the fear of others, instead of being deeply affected, to see what spiritual judgments and plagues we were thereby threatened with," &c. Rutherford's Lett. Postcr. p. 514.

"The fish called tusk abounds on the coast of Brassa;
the time for fishing is at the end of May. This fish is as big as a ling, of a brown and yellow colour, has a broad tail; it is better fresh than salted." Martin's West. Islands,
p. 385.

"It is a fish much esteemed for its delicacy; the meat divides into flakes on being boiled, like that of a salmon:
for which reason, as Schonevelde tells us, the Germans call it Scheibendorsch." Pennant's Zool. v. iii. 143. Ed. 1769.

According to Pennant, its Sw. name is torsk. This, however, is rendered cod by Seren., codling by Wideg.
Our designation is nearly the same with Isl. thosh-r, asellus.

To TUSK at, v. a. To pluck or pull roughly; as when a horse tears hay from a stack. Syn. To Rusk at. S.

TUSKAR, s. An instrument used for cutting peats. S.

TUSSOCK (of wheat,) s. A tuft of wheat in a corn field, generally owing to the vegetating of the nest or granary of a field-mouse, Loth.

Sw. test, a lock; Isl. thust-r, a handful of reeds.

TUTCH, s. A small boat or packet; a pinnace. S.

To TUTE, v. n. To jut out, to project; also Tute, s.
a jutting out, a projection, S.B.

Su.G. tut, rostrum, a beak; Teut. tuyte, id. also, a horn, or any thing wreathed. Hence,

TUTE-MOWITT, adj. Having the nether jaw projected.

How fain wald I discryve perfytt

My ladye with the mekle lippis!

How scho is tute-mowitt lyk an aep.

Dunbar on ane Blak-moir Ladye, Maitland Poems, p. 97.

Mr. Pinkerton renders this thick-lipped, deriving it from Su.G. tut, rostrum. But most probably it is originally the same with Teut. tote-muyl, tuyte-muyl, bronchus; which properly signifies; "having the teeth and nether jaw more sticking out than the upper;" Ainsw. This agrees better with the similitude, like an ape, than the idea of thick lips.
The word is comp. of tuyte, rostrum, and muyl, os, oris, whence perhaps our mow, mouth. Belg. toot, signifies "a wry mouth;" Sewel. V. Mow and MOWBAND.

Tut-mouthed occurs in a similar sense in E. Somner gives it as synon. with great-lipped, when explaining A.S. wroc, bronchus. It is also expl. in the same manner by Seren.

Isl. tutna, intumescere, tutnan, tumor, and tut-ur, tumi-dus, (G. Andr. p. 243,) seem to acknowledge the same fountain. Perhaps teit-a, rostrum beluinum, ibid. p. 237.
is the s. synon. with Teut., tuyte.

TUTELE, TUTILL, s. Guardianship; tutelage. S.

TUTIE, s. Drunken Tutie, a designation given to a female who is addicted to drinking. V. TOUT, TOOT. S.

TUTIE TATIE, interj. Pshaw. It is not long since this phrase was in use, S. Hey tutti taiti, the name of one of our oldest Scottish tunes. S.

V. TOOT, v. 2. and TUT-MUTE.

TUTIVILLARIS, s. pl.

Sa mony rackettis, sa mony ketches-pillaris,

Sic ballis, sic nachettis, and sic tutivillaris, —

Within this land was nevir hard nor sene.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 44.

Lord Hailes observes from Junius, that things of no value were anciently called titivilitia, as the term denoted rotten threads which fall from the distaff, and in general the vilest things of this description, which cheats imposed on the simple instead of valuable merchandise; Note,
p. 254.

From the use of this word, however, although somewhat altered, in other places, I suspect that it is a personal designation.

In Kennedy's Flyting, it is written tutevillow, Evergreen, ii. 74. tutivillus, Edin. Edit. 1508. In a Poem in the Bann, MS. describing Cochelbie's Feast, one of the guests is a tutevillus. In another, ibid. p. 104. this designation is given to an evil spirit.

T W A

It may bear the sense of rustic; and Ir. tuatamhail, tuatavail, has precisely this signification; from tuata, id. and this from tuath, a country. V. Lhuyd, vo. Rusticus.

TUTIVILLUS, s. V. TUTIVILLARIS. S.

TUTIWING, s. Leg. Tutilling; a blast or blowing of a horn.

And, as thai war in sic effray,
A tutilling off his horne hard thai:
And thai, that hes it knawyn swith
War of his cummyn wondre blyth.

Barbour, xix. 604. MS.

This word is a dimin. from Toot, and denotes a weaker sound, or that which seems to be so, as being heard at a distance.

TUTLAR, s. Perhaps one who barterers. S.

TUT-MUTE, s. A muttering or grumbling between parties, that has not yet assumed the form of a broil, S.B. Contention is sometimes thus vulgarly described: "It began with a laigh tut-mute, and it raise to a hiech tuilyie-mulie." See Sup.

Teut. tuyt-en, to buzz; Isl. taut-a, murmurare, mutire, taut, mutum murmur, susurratio, G. Andr. Teut. muyt-en, Su.G. mutt-a, to mutter; two synon. terms being conjoined, which is frequently the case in such comp. words. Or mute may be used in the sense of quarrel. V. TUILYIE-MULIE.

TUTOR, s. A guardian appointed for a minor, whether by a testament, or by a disposition of law. S.

TUTORY, s. 1. Tutorage; that stage of life in which one is under tutors. 2. Tutelage; tender care exercised about an infant.

TUVA-KEUTHIE. Perhaps a hut on a rising ground. S.

TWA, TUAY, TWAY, adj. Two, S. See Sup.

Ibid. 129, 46.

Rudd. says that tuay and tway, are used metri causa. But although twa is the common pron. S., tway is that of the Southern counties. Twey occurs in O. E.

"No man may serve twey lordis." Wiclif, Matt. vi.

Doug. Virgil, 300, 2.
 A.S. twegen, twain, from tweg, two. Moes.G. twa has twans in the accus. Su.G. twaenne, the old feminine of twa.
 The phrase occurs in another passage, which deserves our attention.
 Wallace send Blayr, in his preistis weid,
 To warn the west, quhar freyndys had gret dreid,
 How thai suld pass, or to gud Wallace wyn,
 For Inglissmen that held thaim lang in twyn.
Wallace, ix. 1237. MS.
 This might, without any violence, signify in doubt, as
 A.S. twyn and tweon denote doubt, hesitation; and twyn-an,
 to doubt. But it seems rather to mean asunder.
 It may, however, be worth while to observe, that these terms are formed from twa, tweg, two, as Su.G. twek-a, dubitare, from twa; because, as Ihre remarks, the thoughts, in a state of hesitation, are as it were drawn into two parts. The same metaphor, he adds, prevails in almost all languages. Thus Heb. שנא, shanah, dubitare, is from שנא, sheni, duo; Gr. δων, dubium, δωαζω, &c. from δω; as Lat. ambigo, and dubito, from ambo and duo; Moes.G.
tusver-ian, haesitare, from twa, in compos. tus; Belg. twan- tel-en, Alem. zueh-on, id. from twee, and zwey.

V. U.

V, in some of our old printed books, is invariably used for W; as in the Complaynt of Scotland. It is not therefore to be supposed that W was pron. V; or that it was even written in this manner. In MSS. these letters are properly distinguished. Often indeed W is written instead of V or U; as in grewys for grevys, grieves, lewys for levys, lives. When it is thus used as a vowel, Mr. Macpherson has marked it with two dots, in this manner, W̄; to distinguish it from W consonant.

The reason why V is substituted in some old books for W, most probably is, that as this letter is not used by the French, these were either printed in France, or, although the product of the Scottish press, executed either by Fr. compositors, or with Fr. types. It may be observed that in S. books printed in France, even where W is used, great awkwardness appears. The capital letter is frequently inserted in the middle of the word. In other instances, for want of the proper letter, v. is doubled:

The words, therefore, printed with V as the initial letter, will in general be found under W.

VACANCE, s. Vacation; applied to courts, schools, &c.

VAD, s. Woad, a plant used by dyers. S.

VADMELL, s. A species of woollen cloth, manufactured and worn in the Orkneys.

"The old men and women are just in the style of their forefathers. As they are sprung from the Norwegians, they still continue to wear good strong black clothes without dying, called by the ancient Norse, Vadmell, and by them wrought in a loom called Upstagang; but now wrought in the common manner." P. Birsay, Orkn. Statist. Acc. xiv. 326.

Isl. vadmaal, pannus rusticus, seu vulgaris, Burillum, trilix, a vod; G. Andr. 244. According to Verel. it is comp. of vad, textum, and mal, mensuratum vel mensurandum. The Vadmaal web in Iceland is legally twenty-four ells, in Denmark only twenty; G. Andr. p. 250.

This cloth must be often at least, what we call in S. tweeled. For it is also denominated Shaktvadmell, pannus vilior obliquis filis textus; Verel. p. 222. Shakt has the same meaning with S. shacht. V. SHACH.

The name of this cloth is not unknown in some counties in E. "Woadmel. A coarse hairy stuff made of Iceland wool, and brought from thence by our seamen to Norfolk and Suffolk." Grose's Prov. Gl. V. Wadmal, Ihre, vo. Wad.

Compl. S. p. 172.

The v. is still used, but especially as denoting idle wandering, S. as stravaig also is.

2. Metaph. applied to discourse.

Speris the cause of that vocacioun.

Henryson's Test. Creseide, Chron. S.P. i. 165.

This v. has perhaps been formed as primarily denoting the obeisance made by servants, when they expected a vail or vale, i. e. a gratuity from visiters. Johns. derives this from avail, profit, or Lat. vale, farewell. Perhaps from Fr. veill-er, to watch, studiously to attend.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 272, 38.

Fr. vaille que vaille, Lat. valeat quantum valere potest.
Does not the phrase, as used by Doug., rather seem exactly analogous to the Lat., as signifying, "as far as possible, as far as it can go?"

The sense is evidently the same, in the following passage.

Bot thai wald, apon nakyn wyss,
Ische till assaile thaim in fechtig,
Till coweryt war the nobill King,
Bot and othir wald thaim assaillye,
Thai wald defend wailye quod wailye.

Lord Hailes conjectures that this may denote the veins of the head. But the learned writer is undoubtedly mistaken. For the phrase is evidently borrowed from Fr. Veines organiques, which, according to Cotgr., has the same meaning with Veines iliaques, "the iliac or flank veins, two main descendent branches of the hollow vein, a right and a left one, from either of which five others issue. The right one," he says, "is opened against the dropsy, and other diseases of the liver; the left one for the passion of the spleen." There is no reason, then, for supposing, with Lord Hailes, that the operation, referred to by Dunbar, was by means of cupping glasses. The carving, or opening of the organic veins, even without the use of these glasses, seems to have been then accounted a nice and important operation.

VANQUISH, s. A disease of sheep, S. Pine, &c. See S.

"The peculiar disadvantages of it are,—the pernicious quality of a species of grass to the health of the sheep in 2 or 3 farms on the side of the Dee, infecting them with a disease called the Vanquish, i. e. it weakens, wastes, and would at last kill them, unless removed to another farm; but [they] are no sooner removed than they recover their health, and gradually their strength and fatness. This disease is of a different nature from the Rot; for rotten sheep put upon these farms (I am told) often recover." P. Kells, Kirkcudb. Statist. Acc. iv. 267.

"In one or two farms a disease also prevails termed the Vanquish. It arises from feeding on dry barren moss, void of all nourishment, to which the creatures are so attached, that they will never leave it till they die of emaciation. In this disease the horns usually become red." P. Carsefairn, Kirkcudb. Statist. Acc. vii. 518.

In these quotations, the designation of this disease is evidently viewed as borrowed from the E. v. It may be observed, however, that Isl. vanke is mentioned by G. Andr. as a disease of sheep. He indeed describes it as especially affecting the brain. Mutilatio sanitatis, praesertim in cerebro. Vankadr, Laesus sanitate cerebri; ovibus accidit; Lex. p. 247.

Menage considers this as the same with Fr. valet, originally written varlet. These terms are accordingly used promiscuously in O. Fr. writings. V. Du Cange. Valetus. Tiro, operarius mercenarius. Bullet gives varled as an Arm. word of the same sense; deriving valet from it.

Some, however, have viewed varlet as a dimin. from Su. G. war, Germ. wer, Lat. vir, a man; as it does not merely denote a servant, but a stripling.

Rudd. observes that E. varlet "of old was taken in a good sense for yeomen and yeomen servants, as in a repealed Stat. 20 of Rich. II. of England." Varlet, jeune homme, jeune galant; Gl. Rom. de la Rose.

Barbour, vi. 22. MS.

Fr. vassalage is used in the old romances, as denoting valour; and, a valiant or worthy deed; Cotgr. The reason of this use of the term, according to Rudd., is, that "at first lands were given by superiors to vassals for military service, and these were best rewarded, who signalized themselves by their valour: the same way as Miles and Knight came to be titles of honour."

Wachter views vassal as a dimin. from L. B. vass-us, a client, a dependant; and this he deduces from C. B. gwas, a servant. Verel. derives it from Isl. veislumen, feudatorii, from veisla, a feast. Hence veislumen, those who were bound to serve such as sat at a feast, which was the duty imposed on feudatories by the ancient Goths. V. Seren.

This, I suppose, is from the show made, or the attention attracted, by an object of this description.

E. gaudy seems the same with our vaudie, with this difference, that the latter retains the Goth. form. Skinner derives the former from Lat. gaud-ere, to rejoice, or Fr. gaude, a yellow flower. Gaude, however, according to Cotgr., denotes the stalk of a certain plant which produces a yellow dye. Seren. derives gaudy from Isl. gaud, the name given to God by the pagan Goths; used, after the introduction of Christianity, to denote a thing of nought. Belg. weydsch might be viewed as allied to our term, as it signifies, taudry, flaunting; Sewel.

UDAL, adj. A term applied to lands held by uninterrupted succession, without any original charter, and without subjection to feudal service, or the acknowledgment of any superior.

“Previously to that aera [the Reformation,] the lands here, like those in the eastern countries, seem to have acknowledged no superior, nor to have been held by any tenure, but were called odal or udal lands; the characteristic of which is, that they are subject to no feudal service, nor held of any superior.—The holders of these lands, or, what is the same thing, the proprietors of them were, of all men, reckoned the most honourable. Hence, the frequent mention that is made, not only in the celebrated Danish historian [Torfaeus,] and in the noted deduction so often quoted [Wallace's Diploma,] but even in the elegant Latin historian of Scotland [Buchanan,] of the Proceres Orcadum, or the nobles of Orkney. This appellation, however, could not have been bestowed on all the proprietors of this description, who seem to have been very numerous, but was probably confined principally to the earls, their relations and connexions, who held their lands in this manner.” Barry's Orkney, p. 219.

This term has been viewed as synon. with allodial.

—“These udal or allodial lands are directly opposed to fees or feus, which are always subject to a rental or feuduty to a superior, to which the other never were, but only paid tithe, which appears to have been exacted from almost all lands whatever; and scat, which, in the language of the mother country, is said to signify tribute, land-tax or ground-subsidy.” Ibid.

“It is very probable that all the lands in Shetland were allodial or udal. The proprietor had no right to shew but uninterrupted succession.” P. Aithsting, Shetl. Statist. Acc. vii. 584.

The idea attached to udal corresponds to the signification of allodial.

“Allodial subjects, or subjects granted in alode, are opposed to feus. By these are understood lands or goods enjoyed by the owner independent of any superior, or without any feudal homage.” Erskine's Instit. B. ii. T. 3. s. 8.

Udal property has, in one instance, been distinguished from allodial, but, as would seem, improperly.

“There are three kinds of tenure of land in Scotland. First, the Feudal.—Secondly, the Allodial, which in the German language signifies free, without paying any quit rent, or having a superior; and Thirdly, the Udal, being a right compleat without writing; this obtains in Orkney and Zetland, and in the buildings of the Four Towns of the parish of Lochmaben.—The lands of Four Towns were granted by one of our kings to his household servants, or garrison of the castle, and the property of each being small, they were allowed, as a kind of indulgence, to hold it without the necessity of charter and sasine, bare possession being a sufficient title. The tenants pay a small rent to the Viscount of Stormont, but have no charter or sasine from him. The property of these lands is transferred from one person to another, by delivery and possession only; but they must be entered in the rental in Lord Stormont's rental-book, which is done without fee or reward.” P. Lochmaben, Dumfr. Statist. Acc. vii. 239.

The small rent paid to Lord Stormont may have been equivalent to the scat mentioned above, although afterwards consigned to a subject; otherwise, these towns cannot strictly be viewed as udal property.

In like manner, “some of the udal lands [in Orkney] pay a small proportion of yearly rent to the King, and to the kirk; and some of them do not pay any thing to the one or to the other.” P. Stronsay, Statist. Acc. xv. 393.

Allodial property has thus been distinguished from udal, on the ground that the latter implies “a right compleat without writing.” But this appears to have been merely a local peculiarity of possessions of the udal kind, forming no essential difference between them and those called allodial.

Erskine, when speaking of “the udal right of the stewartry of Orkney and Shetland,” says; “When these islands were first transferred from the crown of Denmark to that of Scotland, the right of their lands was held by natural possession, and might be proved by witnesses, without any title in writing; which had probably been their law formerly, while they were subject to Denmark; and to this day, the lands, the proprietors of which have never applied to the sovereign, or those deriving right from him, for charters, are enjoyed in this manner: but where the right of lands in that stewartry has once been constituted by charter and seisin, the lands must from that period be governed by the common feudal rules; except church-lands, whose valuation is no higher than L.20 Scots, the proprietors of which are allowed, by 1690, c. 32, to enjoy their property by the udal right, without the necessity of renewing their infestments.” Ersk. ut sup.

There is no good reason to doubt that allodial and udal are originally one term. Erskine indeed has observed, that the former “is probably derived from a, privativa, and leode, or leude, a German vocable used in the middle ages for vassal, or fidelis, (from whence the term liege probably draws its origin;) for the proprietor of allodial subjects is laid under no obligations of fidelity to a superior.” Instit. ubi sup.

Our learned countryman, Dr. Robertson, has adopted Wachter's etymon. “Alode,” he says, “or allodium, is compounded of the German particle an and lot, i. e. land obtained by lot. Wachter, Gloss. Germ. voc. Allodium, p. 35. It appears by the authorities produced by him and by Du Cange, voc. Sors, that the northern nations divided the lands which they had conquered in this manner. Feodum is compounded of od possession or estate, and feo, wages, pay; intimating that it was stipendiary, and granted as a recompense for service. Wachter, ibid. voc. feodum, p. 441." Hist. Charles V. Vol. I. Proofs, p. 270.

Alode (L.B. alod-is, alod-us, alod-ium, aloud-ium,) seems to be merely odal or udal inverted. This is the opinion of Wachter, vo. Allodium. Loccenius evidently entertained a similar idea. For he expl. odhelby, as signifying an allodial village.—Ille cum allodiali, veteri et principali pago (Odhelby), ex communi pagi silva possidebit ligna cremalia. Sueciae Leg. Provinc. p. 173. Verel. also expl. Odal, bona avita, fundi, allodium; Ind. p. 184.

Odal, according to Wormius, "denotes hereditary goods, or praedia libera, subjected to no servitude; to which feuda [S. feus] are opposed, as lying under this bondage. This word," he says, "agrees with Allodium, which denotes an inheritance derived from ancestors, and inseparable from the family. Hence Allodarii, those who held inheritances of this kind, and could enter into agreements with respect to their possessions, without consulting their lords." Mon. Danic. p. 507. 508.

The basis of the term odal, udal, undoubtedly is Su.G. od, anc. aud, oed, possession. This is analogous to the etymon of Feodum given by Robertson. It is rather surprising, that it did not occur to the learned writer, that this etymon of feodum rendered that which he gives of alode extremely suspicious, it being natural to suppose that both these terms would contain a reference to the mode of possession.

There is more difficulty in determining the origin of the termination. It has been supposed, with considerable probability, that it is from ald-ur, aetas, antiquitas, Germ. alt, old, as denoting ancient possession. Accordingly, Su.G. odaljord signifies that which has been long in possession; odalsmadr, a man who possesses an ancient property; odalboren, one who has by his birth the possession of an ancient property; odalby, a primitive and ancient village, i. e. one built by the first inhabitants of a country, as distinguished from those erected in later times. O'Brien, and after him General Vallancey, says, that "Ir. allod, ancient, is the original, upon which the Lat. allodium, signifying ancient property, hath been formed."

Verelius, perhaps with greater probability, derives allodium from all, omnis, and aude, possessio, plena et totalis possessio, q. as excluding any superior. Ind. vo. Luta, p. 163.

Some have supposed that al is contr. from Su.G., adel, noble. But there is a possibility, that, notwithstanding the change of the vowels, adel and odal may have been originally the same. This might seem to be confirmed, not only from the A.S. synonyme being sometimes written oethel, but from its also signifying, patria, regio. The presumption, however, is still stronger from the Isl. term odalboren, nobly born, being so similar to Su.G., adalborin, and A.S. aethelboren, which have precisely the same signification. Alem. adalerbi is expl. as synon. with alode, Allodium nobile, immune, liberum, hereditas et possessio libera et exempta; Schilt. Gl. vo. Adhal, p. 10.

If this conjecture be well-founded, A.S. aethel has originally conveyed the idea of one who had an allodial property, or who acknowledged no superior. V. ATHILL.

"From a comparison," it has been observed, "between the laws by which this udal property was inherited, sold, redeemed, or transmitted from one person to another, and some of the Mosaical institutions mentioned in Scripture, some have imagined that the former were derived from the latter; and indeed it must be confessed that there are between them many striking points of resemblance." Barry's Orkney, p. 219.

We cannot with certainty, however, trace it any farther back than to the irruption of the barbarous nations into the provinces of the Roman empire. The account which the elegant historian, formerly quoted, gives of the origin of allodial property, may be viewed as equally applicable to this. "Upon settling in the countries which they had subdued, the victorious troops divided the conquered lands. That portion which fell to every soldier, he seized as a recompense due to his valour, as a settlement acquired by his own sword. He took possession of it as a freeman in full property. He enjoyed it during his life, and could dispose of it at pleasure, or transmit it as an inheritance to his children. Thus property in land became fixed. It was at the same time allodial, i. e. the possessor had the entire right of property and dominion; he held of no sovereign or superior lord, to whom he was bound to do homage, and perform service." Hist. Charles V. Vol. I. p. 256.

This mode of holding property seems to have been introduced into the Orkney islands immediately from Norway, during their subjection to that country, or to Earls of Norwegian extraction. In Norway, it is said, feudal tenures were not known. V. Barry, p. 218.

"Different attempts were made to wrest this right from the inhabitants of the Orkneys. Harold Harfager, about the beginning of the tenth century, commanded Earl Einar and all the inhabitants of Orkney to pay him sixty marks of gold. The landholders reckoning the fine too great, the Earl obtained this condition for them, that he should himself pay the whole fine, oc skylldi hann eignaz tha odol oll i eyonom; omnia in insulis bona allodialia vicissim obtenturus; and that he should hold, in return, all the udal property in the islands." Long after, at Jarlar atto odol oll, "the Earls possessed all the udal property in the Orkneys, till Sigurd the son of Lewis restored it to the owners." Heimskr. ap. Johnst. Antiq. Celto-Scand., p. 11.

Harold Harfager had acted the same part in Norway, as did Einar in Orkney. We learn accordingly, that when his son Hacon succeeded him, it was reported that in all respects he was such a prince as Harold, "with this single exception, that whereas Harold greatly oppressed all the subjects, Hacon desired to live on good terms with them, oc baud at gefa baendom odol sin, having promised to the possessors of land the restitution of their allodial rights, of which Harold had deprived them." Ibid, p. 62.

It is to be observed, that although bondom and baendom occur in the original here, and are rendered in the Lat. version, coloni, the terms are not to be understood as denoting what we now call farmers. For, as we learn from Ihre, bonde, in one of its senses, denotes the possessor of his own inheritance, as distinguished from Landbo, Bryti, &c., which signify one who cultivates the land of another, paying rent, or a certain part of the produce, in return. V. HUSBAND.

UDAL-MAN, UDELAR, UDALLER, s. One who holds property by udal right.

"The Udal-men with us were likewise called Rothmen or Roythmen, i. e. Self-holders, or men holding in their own right, by way of contradistinction to feudatories." Fea's Grievances, p. 105.

There are six udelars in Deerness, persons whose property, in some parts of Orkney, is so small, as, if let to a tenant, would scarcely draw above a tub of bear, that is, about a firloft of yearly rent." P. St. Andrews, Orkn. Statist. Acc. xx. 260.

"They are occupied, at least some of them, by men here called udallers, who are little proprietors of land, that has never been held by the feudal tenure, nor subjected to either service or payment to any superior." Barry's Orkney, p. 28.

The smallness of the property of these landholders in our times is thus accounted for:

"As these udallers divided their lands among all their children, (the son got two merks, and the daughter one; hence the sister part, a common proverb in Shetland to this day,) the possessions soon became trifling, and were swallowed up by great men, generally strangers, many of whom acquired estates in a very short time." P. Aithsting, Shetl. Statist. Acc. vii. 584.

Had Dr. Barry attended to this cause of the gradual diminution of the property of these landholders, in proportion to the increase of their number, he would have seen no reason for supposing, that the appellation of Proceres, or nobles, "could not have been bestowed on all the proprietors of this description, — but was probably confined to the earls, their relations and connexions."

Eagerness for political influence has greatly contributed to diminish the number of udallers, as none of this description can vote for a member of Parliament. This is to be viewed as another reason, why, in the present time, the udal rights are to be found attached only to inconsiderable possessions. For as there are not "any persons of note, any more than of extensive property, to be found at present among that class of proprietors;" we are assured, that "all of that description have long ago relinquished their ancient udal rights, and hold their lands by the same tenures as those of the same rank in other parts of the kingdom." Barry's Orkney, p. 220. V. UDAL.

"It has long been remarked in Orkney, that if a man and a dog land upon some of the islands in vor-time, i. e. Spring, almost all the pregnant sheep take to running, and run till they fall down dead. On inquiry, I found that this was only in holms." Neill's Tour, p. 58.

The radical term seems to have been very generally diffused.

Isl. vor, Su.G. waar, Lat. ver, Gr. εαρ, Gael. earrach, id. One writer, I find, ascribes an Egyptian origin to this word. The Egyptians, he says, having no occasion for any kind of manure, because the land was sufficiently fertilized by the overflowing of the Nile, "it was ordered, that all the rotten straw, mouldy corn, dung, &c. should be gathered and set on fire the first of February.—This day, called the lighted wisps and fires, or, the feast of the purification of the air, was proclaimed by an Isis and a Horus — The Horus was called our or ourim, the fire or firebrands; from whence that season of the year has been ever since called ouer, or wer, or ver, the Spring." Meagher's Popish Mass, p. 178. V. VOR.

VELE, VEYL, s. A violent current or whirlpool.

VENDACE, s. The Gwiniad, salmo Lavaretus, Linn. S.

"It is affirmed by the fishermen, that there are 15 or 16 different kinds fit for the table, among which there is one that, from every information that can be obtained, is peculiar to that loch [Lochmaben,] as it is to be found nowhere else in Britain. It is called the Vendise or Vendace, some say from Vendois in France, as being brought from thence by one of the Jameses, which is not very probable, as it is found by experience to die the moment that it is touched, and has been attempted to be transported to other lochs in the neighbourhood, where it has always died." P. Lochmaben, Dumfr. Statist. Acc. vii. 236.

This account is evidently incorrect. For this is the Powan of Lochlomond, and the Gwiniad of Wales. Pen-nant, describing the Gwiniad, says:

"It is the same with the Ferra of the lake of Geneva, the Schelly of Hulse water, the Pollen of Lough Neagh, and the Vangis and Juwanis of Loch Mabon. The Scotch have a tradition that it was first introduced there by the beauteous queen, their unhappy Mary Stuart; and as in her time the Scotch court was much frenchified, it seems likely that the name was derived from the French ven-doise, a dace, to which a slight observer might be tempted to compare it from the whiteness of its scales. The British name Gwiniad, or whiting, was bestowed on it for the same reason." Zool. iii. 268. V. POWAN.

geld, the payment of the were, or price at which the life of every individual was estimated, according to his rank;
geld, gild, signifying payment.

The term were has evidently had its rise from A.S. wer, Moes.G. wair, a man; Su.G. waer, Isl. ver, id. Lat. vir seems to have had a Gothic origin. Herodotus informs us, that the ancient Scythians called a man αιος. Αιος γαρ καλεσαι τον ανδρα. V. Ihre, vo. Waer.

Su.G. waereld, wereld, wergeld, is the price of a man who has been killed, or the fine paid for killing him; otherwise denominated Mansbot. Germ. vergeltung, compensation; vergelt-en, to satisfy, to compensate. Wergylde

V E S

theof is a phrase used in the Laws of Ina, c. 72, as denoting a thief adjudged to pay the vergelt. This was also called Theiftbote.

Verelius, however, gives a different view of Isl. verigild, which must be radically the same. He expl. it; Mulcta solvenda secundum aestimationem damni dati,—a verde pretio, i. e. the worth or value of any thing. But he seems mistaken; especially as this opposes the Su.G. idiom.

The Welsh had their gwerth, corresponding to vergelt.
It "was not only a compensation for murder or homicide;
but for all species of injuries." V. Pennant's Tour in VICTUAL, (pron. Vittal), s. Grain of any kind; hence victualler, one who deals in grain; a corn-factor, S.

"At the Reformation, the stipends of the Protestant clergy were fixed to be paid at the rate of so many chalder of victual (the general term in Scotland for all kinds of grain), part of which was paid in kind, and part in money, converting the chalder, in the rich counties, at L.100 Scotch the chalder, and at L.80 Scotch in the less fertile ones." P. Alloa, Clackman, Statist. Acc. viii. 643. N.

In a poor country such as Scotland, where, even so late as Dr. Johnson's time, the people were supported on oats, it is not surprising that the term, which originally signifies food or means of sustenance in general, should be limited to the fruit of the husbandman's labours.

BUCHAN-VITTAL. 1. Applied to meal, of which two-thirds are of oats and one-third of barley. 2. Metaph. transferred to a person on whom one can place no dependence; as, "He's Buchan vittal that." S.

Sir D. Lyndsay's Tracts of Heraldry, MS. V. Compl. S. Prel. Diss. p. 55.

At first view this might seem to be the same word, as denoting the defender in a trial by single combat; and allied to L.B. viaria, advocatio, Fr. vouerie, for advouerie, defence, maintenance of a cause. But it seems merely the word vthir, other (alius), the letter y being ridiculously substituted for the ancient th. This appears from the use of it in the same sentence, and elsewhere in the MS.

things, as doe growe within the forrest and are greene, it is called in our olde English Greene Hewe, in Latin it is called Viridis, and thereof is framed this word Viridarius a Verderer, or one that doeth take the charge of the Vert or of Greene Hewe." Manwood's Forrest Lawes, c. 6. s. 5.

At the West Port, and bought a winsome flute,
Of plum-tree made, with iv'ry virles round.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 67.

O.E. vyroll, Fr. virolle; Palsgrau. E. verrouil, a bolt for a door, seems to claim the same origin, Lat. ferr-um.

VIRR, VIR, s. Force; impetuosity, S.B. Syn. with Birr.

When he was set, I ga'e the fire a stir,
And Bessy ran, and brought some whins, wi' vir,
Frae out the nook, and made a hearty bleeze.

VIRROCK, s. Quoted by Mr. Pinkerton as not understood.

Ane pyk-thank in a prelots chayse,
With his wawil feit, and virrok tais,
With hoppir hippis, and henchies narrow.—

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 110.

Dr. Leyden, Gl. Compl. S., justly observes, that it "signifies a corn, or bony excrescence on the feet; is in common use, and pronounced wirrok;" p. 380. He derives it from Lat. verruc-a, a wart. The name is sometimes applied to boils. I have heard it also expl., a pimple on the sole of the foot or heel, which occasions great pain, and often grows to a considerable size. Thus it is distinguished from a corn. It is sometimes written wyrock.

Ther is not in this fair a flyrock,
That has upon his feit a wyrock,
Knoul taes, or moulis in nae degre,
But ye can hyde them.—

Dunbar, Evergreen, i. 254.

A.S. wearrig, wearriht, callosus, nodosus; Tent. weer, callus, nodus, tuber; Gl. Sibb. The affinity of wyrock to the latter is rendered highly probable from a circumstance to which the ingenious Glossarist has not adverted. Teut. weer-ooghe denotes a wart or pimple on the eye-lid, a stythe, or S. stie; chalazion, exiguum tuberculum in palpebris, (Kilian;) from weer and ooghe, oculus. This seems to have been improperly applied to denote a pimple on the foot.

All thai gert thaire battis bere
To the castelle.

Mr. Macpherson inquires, if it means bows worked by screws? Fr. vis, screw. We may add Belg. vijs, id. This seems to be the only conjecture that can be made as to the signification.

WISE (in coal-mines), s. V. WEYSE. S.

VISIE, VIZY, VIZZIE, s. 1. A scrutinizing view. 2. The aim taken at an object, as when one is about to shoot. 3. The knob or sight on the muzzle-end of a gun, by which aim is taken. S.

To TAK A VIZZIE. To take an aim; as, to look along a gun, with the eye, before firing it off. S.

VIZZIE-DRAP, s. The little mark stuck up at the mouth of a gun-barrel, to guide the sportsman's view. S.

To VISIF, v. a. V. VESIE.

VISION,* s. A thin meagre person; a "mere vision." S.

To VISITE, v. a. To examine; to survey. S.

VISORNE, s. A mask or visor.

"Jhone Knox answered, The time that hes bene is evin now befor my eyis; for I sie the pure flock in no les danger than it hes bein at any tyme before, except that the Devill hes gottin a visorne upon his face." Knox's Hist. p. 341.

To VITCH, v. a. To visit, Shetl. S.

VITIOUS, adj. Fierce; fiery; ill-tempered. S.

VITIOUSNESS, s. Fierceness; unmanageableness. S.

VIVDA, s. Beef or mutton hung and dried without salt; Orkney, Shetland. See Sup.

VIVE, VIUE, adj. 1. Lively; representing to the life, S. Fr. vif.

"So wee see the viue image of a faithfull Pastor, in the Lord Jesus: he will give his life for the sheepe, as hee saith himselfe." Rollocke on the Passion, p. 16.

In this sense it is used as an E. word.

2. Brisk; vigorous, S. 3. Applied to what may be seen clearly; as, "vive prent," distinct letter-press. S.

VIVELY, adv. 1. Clearly, in a vivid light, S. 2. Distinctly, applied to objects of sound. S.

But gin ye like to ware the time, then ye
How a' the matter stood, shall vively see.

Ross's Helenore, p. 69.

VIVERIS, VIEVERS, s. pl. Provisions for the sustenance of life, victuals, S. Fr. vivres.

"Item, if it sall be asked, That thair layed money sall have passage for thair viveris? Ye sall resson the comoditie and incomoditie thareof with the counsaill." Knox's Hist. p. 222.

"He sall cume [to the hoist] weill furnished with siluer to bye vievers for his sustentation, and not in hope to burdening the cuntrie quhereby he passes, without making of payment." 1 Stat. Rob. I. c. 5. s. 6.

VIVUAL, adj. 1. Living; alive. 2. Used to express one's identity, as "the virual person," the self-same person. S.

VIVUALLIE, adv. In life; viruallie seen, seen alive. S.

ULK, WLK, s. A week. V. OULK. S.

ULLIER, s. The water that runs from a dunghill. S.

UMAN, the pron. of woman, Ang.

This might seem originally the same with Isl. omann, non vir, effeminatus, from o privat. and mann. But perhaps it is merely a corr. pron. of the E. word, or of A.S. wifman.

UMAST, UVEST, UMAIST, adj. Uppermost, highest.

Endlang the wode war wayis twa;
The Erle in the umast lay of tha.

Wyntown, viii. 31. 48.

The schaft flew toward Turnus, and him smate
Apoun his schulder, aboue the gadyis hie,
That rysis umaist thareupon we se.

Doug. Virgil, 334, 5.

Mr. Macpherson thinks that this is a contr. of outhmast, uppermost. But it is evidently from A.S. ufemest, ufemyst, supremus; from ufa, above, and mest, most, the sign of the superlative. Moes.G. auhumists, id. See S.

UMAST CLAITH, a perquisite claimed by the Vicar, in the time of Popery, on occasion of the death of any person.

Item, this prudent Connall has concludit,
Sa that our haly Vickars be nocht wraith,
From this day furth thay sal be cleane denudit,
Baith of cors-present, cow, and umest claith.

Lyndsay, S. P. R. ii. 257.

Sibb. supposes that this was "probably the sheet which covered the body." But, from the description given of it by Lyndsay elsewhere, it appears that it was the coverlet of the bed. We also learn from the same passage, a curious trait of ancient manners; that it was customary for a man to use his cloak as a coverlet in bed, and for a woman to employ her petticoat in the same way.

And als the Vicar, as I trow,
He will nocht fail to tak ane kow:
And vpmaist claith (thocht babis thame ban,)
From ane pure selie husbandman:
Quhen that he lyes for till die,
Hauing small bairnis twa or thrie:
And his thrie ky, withouttin mo,
The Vicar must haue one of tho:
With the gray cloke, that happis the bed;
Howbeit that he be purely cled.
And gif the wife die on the morne,
Thoch all the babis suld be forlorne,
The vther kow he cleikis away,
With hir pure cote of roploch gray:
And gif within twa dayis or thrie
The eldest childe hapnis to die,
Of the thrid kow he will be sure.

Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, pp. 134, 135.

This most oppressive perquisite is in Su.G. denominated Likstol; donarium Sacerdoti ob sepulturam datum. Ihre offers different conjectures as to the origin. But, as Su.G. stole signifies a garment worn by a priest, likstol may be analogous to the umaist claith as being claimed by the priest for his own use; q. the body-garment. The antiquity of the custom of giving him also a cow, appears from what is advanced by the same learned writer, vo. Ko, vacca.

U M B

To UMBEDRAW, v. n. Expl. to withdraw.

And Venus loist the bewté of hir eye,
Fleand eschamet within Cyllenius caue,
Mars vmbedrew for all his grundin glaue.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 399, 11.

Sibb. observes, after Rudd., that the initial particle um or un has "here an intensive signification, as in unloose, and in various other instances." But um is undoubtedly the prep. signifying, about, around, corresponding to A.S. umb, ymb, ymbe, Alem. umbi, Belg. om, Germ. Isl. um, Su.G. om, um, circa. Ihre marks the affinity between these and the prep. am and amb, anciently used in Lat. and retained in Amb-arvale, Amb-urbium, Amb-ire; and Gr. αμφι. Su.G. om also signifies back.

Umbedrew may, therefore, more properly be rendered, turned about, or drew back; as allied to Belg. omdraaij-en, to turn about, omgedraaid, turned about; or omdraag-en, to carry about.

VMBEKEST, pret. Explored; or perhaps, surveyed. S. UMBERAUCHT, pret. "Embarrassed, — or rather, smote, pursued; from the intensive particle un and beraucht, q. d. raucht, i. e. reached to, or did overtake;" Rudd.

The forthir coist of Italie haue we caught,
Thocht hiddirtillis harde fortoun has vmberaucht
The Troianis, and persewit vnfrendly.

Doug. Virgil, 164, 41.

Thir mony yeris I left vnprofitable,
Ay sen the fader of goddis and King of men
With thunder blast me smate, as that ye ken,
And with his fyry leuin me vmberaucht. Ibid. 60, 31.

The sense is, encompassed, environed, from um, A.S. umb, circa, and raucht, from raec-an, rac-an, to reach, to to extend, also, to overtake.

UMBERSORROW, adj. 1. Hardy, resisting disease, or the effects of severe weather. An umbersorrow bairn, a child that feels no bad effects from any kind of exposure, Border. It is sometimes corr. pron. numbersorrow.

2. Rugged, of a surly disposition, Loth.; an oblique sense. 3. Also expl., weakly; delicate. S.

The etymon of this term is uncertain. But it may either be corr. from Teut. on-be-sorght, negligens curae, non sollicitus, Kilian; or comp. of Su.G. ombaer-a, carere, also, ferre, portare, and sorg, aerumna, dolor; q. one who is devoid of care, or who bears without injury those things that cause it to others.

To UMBESCHEW, v. a. To avoid.

Bot vmbeschew this coist of Italie,
Quhilk nixt vnto our bourdouris ye se ly,
Bedyit with flowing of our seis flude,
Sen all thay cieties, with wikkis Grekis not gude Inhabit ar. — Doug. Virgil, 81, 24.

This is undoubtedly used as equivalent to eschew, v. 37.

Eschew thir cieties and thir coistis al.

Umb has perhaps been prefixed, as denoting the act of avoiding by taking a circuitous course. See Sup.

To UMBESEGE, v. a. To besiege round about, to encompass a city with armed men.

Was I not gouernour, and cheif ledar thare,
The time quhen that the Troiane adulterare
Umbesegit the cieté of Spartha,
And the quene Elene reft and brocht awa?

Doug. Virgil, 316, 34.

To UMBESET, v. a. To beset on every side, to surround.

Grekis flokkis togidder here and thare,
And vmbesettis cruelly and sare. Doug. Virgil, 52, 50.

A.S. ymb-saet-an, id. circumdare, circumsedere.

UMBEWEROUND, part. pa. Environed.

And with your leve I will me speid

All umbeweround with his fayis is he.

Barbour, xi. 640. MS.

Seren. derives environ from Sw. wir-a, omwir-a, torquere, literally, to surround with gold thread, from Isl. wyr, fila ex orichalco: Germ. wirr-en, Sw. wirr-a, implicare.

Umbeweround seems to be derived from A.S. ymbe-hwearf-an, circumcingere, circumdare, circuire, ambire; from ymbe, about, and hwearf-ian, to turn.

UMBOTH, UMBITH, adj. A term applied to Teind or tithe of an alternate description, Orkn. Shetl. S.

The corn teind is divided between the minister and the proprietor of the crown rents, and the share of the latter is denominated umbith or umboth duty. This word is—of Norwegian origin, and is said to imply a going or changing about. S.

"On page second of the rental are 385 merks of land, also in the parish of Unst, the teind of which being umboth, or free parsonage teind, is—payable to Lord Dundas, as the Crown's Donator of the Lordship of Shetland, who has right to the Bishop's reserved teinds and church-lands. —The 385 merks land—pay of Landmails 128 lisponds, &c. and of umboth or free corn teind no less than 111 cans of oil, and 48 lisponds 20 $\frac{1}{2}$ merks weight of Butter." MS. Account of some lands in P. of Unst, Shetl.

Dan. ombytt-er signifies, "to change, to exchange, to chop or swap one thing for another;" Wolff. Sw. ombyt-a, to change; ombyte, change, variation; Wideg. S.

UMBOTH, s. Tithe given by rotation or alternately. S.

"Umboth,—the great teind of either half of the parish; so called because every other year it was changed with the Minister for his half. For the word Umboth signifieth tyme about." Old MS. Explic. of Norish Words.

Na lat his hart be wencusyt all,
For na myscheiff that euir may fall.
For nane wate, in how litill space,
That God wmquhile will send grace.

Barbour, iii. 256. MS.

This seems to be merely A.S. hwilom, hwilum, hwilon, aliquando, inverted; from umb, circum, and hwile, intervallum temporis.

2. Used distributively, in the sense of now as contrasted with then.

Priests of Peblis, S.P.R. i. 3.

I find vmwhile once used by R. Brunne, in this sense, as contrasted with towhile.

Sir Robynet the Brus he durst noure abide,
That thei mad him restus, bot in more & wod side.
Towhile he mad his trayne, & did vmwhile outrage.
Chron. p. 336.

Restus is expl. by Hearne rests. But it should certainly be rescurs, i. e. rescue, O.Fr. rescousse, id. He could not wait till his friends should bring him a supply of troops. V. RESCOURS.

A.S. hwilon is used in the same manner. Hwilon an, hwilon twa; Nunc unus, nunc duo; Now (or sometime) one, now two; Somner.

3. Sometime ago; formerly.

Thair standis into the sicht of Troy an ile,
Wele knawin be name, hecht Tenedos umquhile,
Michty of gudis quhill Priamus ring sa stude:
Now is it bot ane firth in the sey flude.

Doug. Virgil, 39, 19.

We war Troianis, vmquhile was Ilioun,
The schynand glorie of Phriganis now is gon.

Doug. Virgil, 50, 5.

Skinner mentions A.S. ymbhwile as also signifying, olim, pridem. But this word seems to have been unknown to Somner, Benson, and Lye.

That this is an inversion of A.S. hwilom or hwilon, is confirmed by the use of quhilum, in this sense by Barbour.

For Rome quhilum sa hard wes stad,
Quben Hanniball thaim wencusyt had,
That off ryngis with rich stanys,
That war off knychtis fyngyris taneys,
He send thre bollis to Cartage. Bruce, iii. 207, MS.

In Edit. 1620 and 1670, it is umquhile, which might be the reading of another MS.

UMQUHILE, adj. Late; deceased. S.

"The King to the Schiref greating: Command B. that instantlie and without delay, he deliver and restore to M. quha was wife of N. her reasonabill dowrie in sic ane towne; quhilk she alledges to pertaine to her, be gift of her vmquhile husband." Reg. Maj. B. ii. c. 16. s. 53.

"That the lands, rents and riches, pertaining to his umquhile brother, should not come in the hand of foreign men, the Earl of Douglas sent to the Pope for a dispensation to marry his brother's wife, to whom a great part of the lands fell, through the decease of her said umquhile husband." Pitscottie, p. 44.

It is a singular blunder that the learned Whitaker has fallen into, somewhere in his Vindication of Q. Mary, in explaining this term as signifying uncle.

As used in this sense, it is equivalent to, who sometime was husband or brother. Belg. wylen, from wyl, sometime, in like manner, signifies deceased. Huysvrouw van Wylen N. N. i. e. Wife to the deceased N. N. See Sup.

i. e. "I hazarded myself, without regarding danger."

UNCANNAND, adj. Seems to have the same signification as S. uncanny, as denoting one who is supposed to have some preternatural power.

I bade you alway hold you weill,
And namely from that man Gray Steel:
For he is called uncannand,
And spoken of in many land.

Sir Egeir, p. 14.

UNCANNY, adj. 1. Not safe; dangerous, S.

Thus wi' uncanny pranks he fights;
An' sae he did beguile,
An' twin'd us o' our kneefest men
By death and by exile.

Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 7.

2. Not tender; not cautious; harsh, S. used both literally and metaph.

—Whinstanes, howkit frae the craigs,
May thole the prancing feet o' naigs,
Nor ever fear uncanny hotches
Frae clumsy carts or hackney-coaches.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 69.

3. Incautious; imprudent. S.

"I—was, by this experience of his watchful Providence over this great cause, made hopeful he would not suffer it to be spoiled by the imprudence of many uncanny hands which are about it." Baillie's Lett. i. 77.

4. Mischievous; applied to those with whom any interference is dangerous, S.

"It was thought meet that he and his should lie about Stirling,—to make all without din march forward, lest his uncanny trewsmen should light on to call [drive] them up in their rear." Baillie's Lett. i. 175.

5. Applied to one supposed to possess preternatural powers; no canny, synonym. S. See Sup.

They tell me, Geordie, he had sic a gift,

UNCLIMMABIL, adj. What may not be climbed. S.

UNCO, adj. 1. Unknown.

"Naesafe wading in unco waters;" Ramsay's S. Prov. p. 55. This is the primary sense; A.S. uncuth, id.

2. Not acquainted; used both with respect to persons and brute animals, that are strange to each other.

He's quite unco; He feels himself entirely a stranger, S. Uncouth is used by Bellenden in this sense, as to cattle. V. HOMYLL.

3. Not domestic. An unco man, a stranger; as distinguished from one who is a member of the family, or familiar in it, S. See Sup.

Of wikkit grane how sall gude schaf be schorne?

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 93, 18.

"In some places of Scotland they say, that one hath sown his uncorn;" Rudd. This is equivalent to sowing one's wild oats.

Teut. on-kruyd is used in a similar way, as denoting noxious weeds; zizania, lolium, herba inutilis; from on negat. and kruyd, an herb. V. ON and ONBEIST.

UNCOUNSELFOW, adj. Unadviseable, S.B.

UNCOUTHY, adj. 1. Dreary, causing fear, S.; pron. uncoudy, S.B. 2. Under the influence of fear, S.B.

Eery, synonym. 3. Unseemly. V. COUTH, COUTHY. S.

UNCOUTHNESSE, s. Strangeness; want of acquaintance.

"He speaketh of Christ's presenting his church to himself in glory at the great day, as if there were nothing but uncouthnesse and distance betwixt him and the church until then." Fergusson on the Ephes. p. 389.

UNCREDYBLE, adj. Unbelieving; incredulous.

Quhy dois he refuse my wourdis and prayeris
To lat entyr in hys dul uncredyble eris?

Doug. Virgil, 114, 48.

L.B. incredibilis, incredulous; Du Cange. Rudd. mentions S. vengeabill as used to signify, bringing vengeance or mischief.

To UNCT, v. a. To anoint.

"The barne that is to be baptizit is unctit with haly oyle upon his breist, to signifie that his hart is consecrate

VNDISPONIT, part. pa. Not given away. S.
VNDISTRUBLIT, part. pa. Undisturbed. S.
To UNDO, v. a. 1. To cut off, q. to loose.
 I am commandit, said scho, and I man
 Vndo this hare to Pluto consecrate,
 And lous the saul out of this mortall state.
Doug. Virgil, 124, 49.
 2. To unravel.
 Bot netheles Dedalus caught pieté,
 Of the grete luf of fare Ariadne,
 That was the Kingis dochter, taucht ful richt
 Of this quent hous for to vndo the slicht,
 How by ane threde the subtil wentis ilkane
 Thay nichten hald, and turne that way agane.
 Ambagesque resolvit; Virg. Doug. Virgil, 193, 26.
 3. To disclose; to uncover.
 At leist thou knawis this goldin granit tre,
 And with that word the branche schew, and vndid,
 That priuely vnder hir cloke was hid.
Doug. Virgil, 177, 49.
 A.S. un-do-en, aperire, solvere, retexere, enodare; to open, to loose; Belg. ontdo-en; Somner.
UNDOCH, UNDOCHT, UNDOUGHT, WANDOUGHT, s.
 1. A weak or puny creature, one who is good for nothing; applied both to body and mind, S. wandocht, S.B.
 "He had said before that Mr. George Graham, the undoch of Bishops, had gotten the bishoprick of Dumblane, the excrement of bishopricks." Calderwood's Hist. p. 650.
 Let never this undought of ill-doing irk
 But ay blyth to begin all barret and bail.
 V. TAIDREL. Montgomerie, p. 19.
 And when thou bids the paughty Czar stand yon,
 The wandought seems beneath thee on his throne.
Ramsay's Poems, ii. 391.
 2. Rudd. expl. it as also signifying a coward.
 Turnus, what? will thou suffir this vndocht,
 Thy lang trauell and laubour be for nocht?
Doug. Virgil, 221, 42.
 It is doubtful, if it imply the idea of a coward. The sense seems to be; "Wilt thou suffer such a silly fellow as Aeneas to frustrate all thy former labour?"
 Teut. on-deughd, vitium, dedecus; on-deughdig, inutilis, improbus, Kilian; from on negative, and deughd, virtus, valor, probitas, from deugh-en, A.S. dug-an, valere, whence S. dow.
UNDON, WNDON, part. pa. "Explained," q. d. unlocked; Gl. Wynt.
 Neww for til have wndon,
 Is nowthir brodyr na syster sone.
Wyntown, viii. 3. 111.

 The bailfull ters bryst braithly fra hys eyne.
Wallace, vi. 208. MS.
 Allace! quhat suld he do? uneist he wyst.
Doug. Virgil, 109, 33.
 R. Brunne uses vnnethis in the same sense, p. 75.
 Hors & hondes thei ete, vnnethis skaped non.—
 Clerkes vnnethis thei lete, to kirke o lyue to go.
 A.S. un-eathe, vix, scarcely; Somner. Unneth, Chaucer.
 Alem. unodo, difficulter. Ihre views Su.G. onoedig, invitus,

 FERY.
 UNFEUED, part. adj. Not disposed of in feu. S.
 UNFLEGGIT, part. adj. Not affrighted.
 —Thou canst charm,
Unfleggit by the year's alarm.
V. FLEG. Fergusson's Poems, ii. 93.
 UNFORE. Meaning doubtful. Aberd. Reg. S.
 UNFORLATIT, part. adj. 1. Not forsaken, Rudd.
 2. "Fresh, new;" Rudd. In the passages referred to, the term contains a reference to the act of racking or drawing off wine from one cask to another.
 Bot my propyne come fra the pres fute hate,

U N F

Unforlatit, not jawyn fra tun to tun.
Doug. Virgil, Prol. 126, 8.
 And quha sa lykis may taisting of the tvn
Unforlatit newe from the berry rvn,
 Rede Virgill bauldly, but mekill offence,
 Except our vulgare toungis defference.
Doug. Virgil, 482, 48.
 Belg. wyn verlaat-en, to rack wine, to draw it from one cask to another.
 UNFORSAIN'D, adj. "Undeserved;" Gl. Ross.
 My wrang, my wrang, gryte is my wrang, she says,— Wrang unforsain'd, and that we never bought,
 Rank Kettren were they that did us the ill.
Ross's Helenore, p. 29.
 Perhaps this term may have originally signified, irre-mediable, irreparable, q. that for which no atonement could be made; Teut. on negat. and verso-en; Sw. foer- son-a, to expiate.
 UNFOTHERSUM, adj. Applied to weather unfavourable to vegetation; what does not further the crop. S.
 UNFRE, adj. Discourteous.
 Thou sleugh his brether thre,
 In fight;
 Urgan and Morgan unfre,
 And Moraunt the noble knight.
V. FRE. Sir Tristrem, p. 160, st. 39.
 UNFREE, adj. Not enjoying the liberties of a burgess. S.
 UNFRELIE, UNFREELY, adj. Inelegant, not handsome.
 "Quhy is my fate," quoth the fyle, "fasseint so foule?"
 "My forme, and my fetherin, unfrelie but feir."
Houlate, i. 5.
 i. e. "Ugly without a parallel." From un negat. and Frely, q. v.
 UNFRELIE, UNFREELIE, adj. 1. Frail; feeble, S.B.
 2. Heavy; unwieldy, S.B. unfery, synon.
 This seems radically different from the preceding, as apparently comp. of Isl. un, negat. and fralig-r, swift, fleet;
 also powerful; frialeike, swiftness. Fraleig-ur madr, vir acer; Verel.
 UNFRIEND, UNFRIEND, s. An enemy.
 O Lord! I mak the supplicatioun,
 With thyne unfreindis lat me not be opprest.
Lyndsay, S.P.R. ii. 132.
 "It seems his unfriends has made such reformation of that his unadvisedness, that in all hazards he must retreat it." Baillie's Lett. i. 77.
 "Many in the house of Commons are falling off our unfriends;" Ibid. ii. 207, i. e. no longer taking part with our enemies.
 Thus, as Mr. Macpherson observes, Lat. inimicus is slightly altered from in-amicus. Teut. on-vriend, inimicus, parum amicus; on-vriend-schap, inimicitia; A.S. unfreond- lice, parum amice, inimice.
 UNFRIENDSHIP, s. Enmity. S.
 UNFRUGAL, adj. Lavish; given to expense. S.
 UNFUTE-SAIR, adj. At ease; not foot-sore. S.
 Thrie Priests went unto collatioun,
 Into ane privie place of the said toun.
 Quhair that they sat, richt soft and unfute-sair;
 Thay luift not na rangald nor repair.
Priests of Peblis, S.P.R. i. 3.
 "This passage," Mr. Pinkerton says, "seems corrupt."
 But there is no ground for this supposition. A.S. fota-sare signifies dolor pedum, a pain in the foot; Somner. This phrase with the negat. particle prefixed, seems to be here used as an adj. "They sat at their ease, without pain."
 Although the reference immediately is to pain in the feet, as arising from much walking, the expression is certainly to be understood more generally, as signifying that they were free from any cause of disturbance whatsoever. The phrase is indeed expl. a little downwards.

U N I

 Quhair that thay sat, full easily and soft.
UNGANAND, part. pr. Unfit, not becoming.
 And younder, lo, beheld he Troylus
 Wanting his armoure, the fey barne fleand.
 For to encounter Achilles vnganand.
 V. GANE. Doug. Virgil, 27, 50.
UNGANG, WNGANG, s. Perhaps the range made by a fishing-boat for one draught of the net. S.
To UNGANG, v. a. It ungangs me sair, I am much deceived; I am greatly mistaken. S.
UNGEIR'D, UNGEARIT, adj. 1. "Naked, not clad, unharnessed," S. Gl. Shirr. V. GEIR. 2. Castrated. S.
UNGLAID, adj. Sorrowful.
 Hir supplicatioun with teris ful vnglaid
 Reportis hir syster. — Doug. Virgil, 115, 12.
 A.S. un-gladu, tristis, formed like Lat. illaetabilis, id.
UNGRATE, UNDEGRATE, adj. Ungrateful. S.
VNGROND, part. pa. Not grinded, or ground. S.
VNHABILL, VNHABILE, UNHABLE, adj. 1. Unfit for any purpose whatsoever, used generally. 2. Unfit for travelling by reason of age or bodily indisposition. 3. Under a legal disability; used as a forensic term. S.
UNHALSIT, part. pa. Not saluted.
 Now hir I leif vnhaltsit, as I ryde,
 Of this dangere quhatsoeuer betyde,
 Al ignorant and wat naythyng, pure wicht.
 V. HALLES. Doug. Virgil, 285, 41.
UNHANTY, UNHAUNTY, adj. 1. Inconvenient. 2. Unwieldy; overlarge. V. HANTY. S.
UNHEARTY, adj. 1. Uncomfortable; applied to the state of the atmosphere; as, An unhearty day, a cold or damp day. 2. Applied to bodily feeling, unwell; ailing; especially as regarding the sensation of cold. S.
UNHEARTSOME, adj. Melancholy.
 "It is an unheartsome thing, to see our father and mother agree so ill; yet the bastards, if they be fed, care not." Rutherford's Lett. p. i. ep. 178.
To UNHEILD, v. a. To uncover.
 I kneillit law, and unheilded my heid.
Palice of Honour, ii. 45.
 A.S. unhel-an, revelare, unheled, revelatus. V. HEILD.
UNHELE, s. Pain; suffering.
 It nedis nocht to renew all my unhele. Houlate, i. 20.
 Chaucer, id. misfortune; A.S. un-hele, crux, tormentum; Moes.G. unhaili, infirmitas, invaletudo; un-hails, infirmus, invalidus, aegrotus; from un, negat. and hails, sanus.
UNHINE, UNHYNE, adj. Extraordinary; unparalleled; immense; excessive; generally used in a bad sense. S.
UNHIT, part. pa. Not named.
 Quha wald the, grete Cato, leif vnhit?
 Or quha with sylence Cossus pretermit?
 V. HAT. Doug. Virgil, 195, 55.
UNHONEST, adj. 1. Dishonourable. 2. Dishonest. S.
 "He had na sicht to honest nor vn honest actionis, bot allanerly to his proffet." Bellend. Cron. B. xiii. c. 12.
 Lat. inhonest-us; Fr. inhoneste.
UNHONESTIE, VNHONESTIE, s. 1. Injustice.
 "That he wald give na credite to ony man that wald murmure the saidis Lordes, or ony of them, be doing of wrang and unhonestie." Acts, Ja. VI. 1579, c. 92. Murray.
Murmure is evidently elliptical, for murmur against, or perhaps, reproach.
 2. Indecorous conduct; indecent carriage. 3. Dishonesty.
To VNY, v. a. To unite. S.
UNICORN, s. A gold coin of the reign of James III. S.

U N L

UNICORN FISH. A species of whale. S.
UNIRKIT, adj. Unwearied.
 And the Eneadanis all of his menyne
 Ithandly and vnirkit luffit haue I. Doug. Virgil, 479, 22.
UNITE, s. A gold coin of the reign of James VI. S.
UNKENSOME, adj. Unknowable.
 "A smith! a smith!" Dickie he cries,
 "A smith, a smith, right speedilie,
 To turn back the caukers of our horses' shoon!
 For its unkensome we wad be."
Minstrely, Border, i. 198.
UNKNAW, part. pa. Unknown.
 We se ane stange man, of forme vnknaw,
 Ane leuar wycht na mare pynit I ne saw.
Doug. Virgil, 88, 21.
Leuar is here viewed as an error of a copyist for lenar, leaner. V. KNAW.
VNKNWLEGE, s. Ignorance. S.
VNLAY, s. Fine; the same with Unlaw. S.
VNLANDIT, adj. Without heritable property. S.
UNLATIT, part. pa. Undisciplined; destitute of proper breeding, so as to be unable to regulate one's conduct with propriety.
 The unlatit woman the licht man will lait,
 V. LAIT, v. Fordun, ii. 376.
UNLAUCHFUL, adj. Unlawful.
 "Against the unlauchful taking of profite be captaines and keepers of the Kingis castles." Ja. VI. 1581. c. 1. 25. Tit. Murray.
UNLAW, UNLACH, s. 1. Any transgression of the law, an injury or act of injustice.
 "Seven tearmes sould be observed; — the damage and skaith modified in ane certane quantitie, the words of the court in this maner in the end of the narration, 'Vnjustlie, and against the law, with wouch, wrang and vnlaw.'" Quon. Attach. c. 80.
 "Na exception or defence sould be challenged; nor the defender sould not be estemed as not defending (as not comperand to defend) sa lang as he or his preloquoutour defends tort and non reason, that is, wrang and vnlach, (that is, to haue done na iniurie, nor vnreason against the Law)." 1 Stat. Rob. I. c. 16. s. 1.
 "Actiones of wrang and vnlaw," says Skene, "appearis to be civill actiones, and ar opposed to actiones criminall, touching life and lim." De Verb. Sign. vo. Tort.
 This seems to be the original sense of the term, from A.S. unlaga, unlage, quod contra legem est, injustitia, iniquitas; from un, negat. and lage, law.
 This word occurs, in the same sense, in O.E.
 — Guf me dude him vnlawe,
 That to the byssop from ercedekne is apel solde make.
 "Injustice," Gl. Hearne. R. Glouc. p. 473.
 2. A fine, or amerciament, legally fixed and exacted from one who has transgressed the law.
 On to the Justice him selff loud can caw;
 "Lat ws to borch our men fra your fals law,
 At leyffand ar, that chapyt fra your ayr.
 Deyll nocht thar land, the unlaw is our sayr:
 Thow had no rycht, that sall be on the seyne."
Wallace, vii. 436. MS.
 "Quha sa euer be conuict of slauchter of salmound, in tyme forbodin be the Law, he sall pay XL. S. for the vnlaw." Acts, Ja. I. 1424. c. 12. Edit. 1566.
 A fine seems to have been called an unlaw, because thus a man paid or made satisfaction for his transgression of the law. In the same manner Su.G. sak, which denotes a fault, guilt, is transferred to the penalty; mulcta, quae reatum sequitur; Ihre. It is also called sakoere, from oere, pecunia, q. guilt-money.

U N P

We learn from G. Andr., that, in the ancient Code of Isl. Laws, utlaege and utlegd, occur in the same sense; In codice Legum antiquo, mulcta.

3. Used improperly, to denote a law which has no real authority.

"These cleared, that what the high commission had done to them was not only for righteousness, but that their sentences were evidently null, according to the bishop's unlaws." Baillie's Lett. i. 121.

To UNLAW, v. a. To fine. See Sup.

"Gif ane Baxter, or ane Browster is vnlawed for bread, or aill, na man sould meddle, or intromitt therewith bot only the Provost of the towne." Burrow Lawes, c. 21. s. 1.

UNLEFULL, adj. Unlawful. S.

UNLEIF, adj. Unpleasant; ungrateful.

Ne, war not thay, thou suld me se allone,
Thus syttand in the are all wo begone,
Sustenand thus al manere of mischeif,

UNREASON, UNRESSOUN, s. 1. Injustice, iniquity.

And that ye think unressoun, or wrang,
Wee al and sundrie sings the samin sang.

V. CHESSOUN.

Priests of Peblis, S.P.R. i. 7.

"Tort, et non reason, vn-reason, wrang, and vnlaw." Skene, Verb. Sign. vo. Tort.

This sense is perhaps derived from Fr. raison, which is used to signify justice. V. UNLAW.

2. Disorder.

It is used as corresponding to Misrule, in that title, The Abbot of Unreason. V. ABBOT.

VNRECOUNSALLIT, part. pa. Unreconciled. S.

UNREDE, UNRIDE, adj. Cruel, severe.

Her fader on a day,

A stern geaunt is he.

Sir Tristrem, p. 160, st. 38, 39.

"Unrighteous," Gl. But these terms seem to be derived from A.S. un-ge-reod, un-ge-ridu, which both signify barbarous, cruel, rugged. On the latter Somner says; "Hence our unrudy." Unryde elsewhere occurs in the same sense. Schir Rannald raught to the renk ane rout wes unryde.

Gawan and Gol. ii. 25.

It is also used by R. Brunne, p. 174.

Fire the sailes threwe.

The stones were of Rynes, the noyse dredfulle & grete,

It affraied the Sarazins, as leuen the fire out schete.

The noyse was vnride, it lasted alle day,

Fro morn tille euentide, ther of had many affray.

Hearne mistakes the sense, rendering unrid, "continual," Gl. He has been misled by the words immediately connected, — it lasted, &c. whereas the phrase is synon. with noyse dredfulle & grete.

UNREGRATED, part. adj. Unnoticed; untold. S.

UNREGULAR, adj. Irregular. S.

VNREMEMBRAND, part. adj. Unmindful. S.

 And with his left hand by the hare him claucht.
Doug. Virgil, 419, 24.
 Teut. on-saecht, durus, asper, rudis, is evidently allied.
 V. SAUCHT, adj.
UNSAUCHT, s. Dispeace, trouble, inquietude, S.B.
 A.S. un-saeht, un-seht, discordia, inimicitia; Su.G. osgcht, id. o, negat. being used instead of A.S. un. Insaga, strife, contention, although nearly of the same meaning, seems to be radically different. Ihre derives it from in and sak, strife.
To UNSCHET, v. a. To open, vnset, pret. shut.

UNSEL, UNSALL, UNSILLY, adj. 1. Unhappy, wretched.
 Of Sathans senyie sure sic an unsall menyie
 Within this land was nevir hard nor sene.
Dunbar, Evergreen, i. 106.
 It is unsaal, Bannatyne Poems, p. 45.
 This may, however, signify unhallowed, as it is expl.
 by Lord Hailes. V. sense 2.
Vnsilly wicht, how did thy mind inuaid
 Sa grete wodnes?— Doug. Virgil, 143, 22.
 A.S. un-ge-saelg, un-saelig, infelix, infaustus, Teut. on- saelig, Alem. unsalih, id. Ihre views Su.G. usel, infelix, pauper, as formed from o or u privative and saell, beatus.
 Isl. usaell, pauper.

2. Naughty, worthless.
 Little angry attercap, and auld unsel ape,
 Ye grein for to gape upon the grey meir.
Montgomerie, Watson's Coll. iii. 5.
 Somner expl. A.S. un-ge-saelig, as also signifying improbus, naughty. Moes.G. sel, bonus, unsel, malus. Augu unsel, an evil eye, Matt. vi. 33. Alem. saligen and unsali- gen, in like manner, denote the righteous and the wicked.
 There is no reason to doubt that A.S. saelig, felix, saell, prosperitas, have had the same origin with Moes.G. sel, bonus. For, as Ihre observes, goodness and felicity have so many things in common, that they are fitly expressed in most languages, by common terms.
UNSELE, UNSELL, s. 1. Mischance, misfortune.
 And sum, that war with in the pele,
 War ischyt, on thair awne unsele,
 To wyn the herwyst ner tharby.
Barbour, x. 218. MS.
 A.S. un-saelth, infelicitas, infortunium.
 2. A wicked or worthless person, a wretch. See Sup.
 I can thame call but kittie unsellis,
 That takkis sic maneris at thair motheris,
 To bid men keip thair secreit counsailis,
 Syne schaw the same againe till uthiris.
Scott, Bannatyne Poems, p. 207.
 The King of Pharie and his court, with the Elf Queen,
 With many elfish Incubus, was ridand that night.
 There an Elf on an ape an Unsel begat.
Montgomerie, Watson's Coll. iii. 12.
 The term, in this sense, is very ancient; Moes.G. unsel, evil, wickedness. V. SEILE.
UNSELYEABLE, adj. Unassailable.
 Off Scotland the weir-wall, wit ye but wene,
 Our fais forses to defend, and unselyeable;
 Baith barmekin and bar to Scottis blud bene,
 Our lofes, and our liking, that lyne honorable.
Houlate, ii. 6. MS.
UNSENSIBLE, adj. Destitute of reason. S.
UNSETT, s. An attack, for onset.
 Mony debatis and vnsettis we haue done.
Doug. Virgil, 52, 21.
UNSETTING, part. adj. Not becoming. S.
VNSHAMEFASTNESSE, s. Shamelessness. S.
UNSIKKIR, UNSICKER, adj. 1. Not secure; not safe.
 Thair standis into the sicht of Troy an ile,—
 Ane rade vnstikkir for schip and ballingere.
Doug. Virgil, 39, 22.
 2. Unsteady, S.
 Dame Life, tho' fiction out may trick her,
 Oh! flickering, feeble, and unsicker
 I've found her still.
 V. SIKKIR. Burns, iv. 391.
UNSILLY, adj. Unhappy. V. UNSEL.
UNSKAITHED, part. adj. Unhurt. S.
UNSNARRE, adj. Blunt; not sharp, S.B. V. SNARRE.
To UNSNECK, v. a. To lift a latch, S.
 Tip-tae she tript it o'er the floor;
 She drew the bar, unsneck'd the door.
Jamieson's Popul. Ball. ii. 339.
UNSNED, part. pa. Not pruned or cut, S.
UNSONSIE, adj. 1. Unlucky, S.
 Mony a ane had gotten his death
 By this unsonsie tooly. Ramsay's Poems, i. 259.
 "The unsonsy fish gets the unlucky bait;" Ramsay's S.
 Prov. p. 69.
 2. Causing ill luck; fatal; as applied to the supposed influence of witchcraft. 3. Dreary, suggesting the idea of goblins. 4. Mischievous, S. V. SONSIE.

Teut. on-ghe-sonde, morbus; Kilian.

UNSPERKIT, adj. Not bespattered. S.

UNSPOILYIED, part. pa. Not subjected to spoliation. S.

UNSPOKEN WATER. Water from under a bridge, over which the living pass, and the dead are carried, brought in the dawn or twilight to the house of a sick person, without the bearer's speaking either in going or returning. S.

UNSUSPECT, part. adj. Not suspected, or not liable to suspicion. S.

UNSWACK, adj. Stiff; not agile. V. SWACK. S.

UNTELLABYLL, UNTELLIBYLL, adj. Unspeakable;
what cannot be told.

"Thair followit yit ane cruell and terrybyll bargane with untellabyll murdir." Bellend. Cron. Fol. 44. a, b.

— Thy desir, Lady, is Renewing of untellybill sorow, I wys.

Infandum, Virg. Doug. Virgil, 38, 36.

The A. Saxons used unattellandlic, as signifying innumerable; Chron. Sax. A. 1043.

UNTELLABLY, adv. Ineffably.

The fader then Euander, as they departe,
By the rycht hand thaym grippit with sad hart,
His sone embrasing, and ful tendirly
Apoun him hyngis, wepand untellably.

Doug. Virgil, 262, 47.

UNTELLIN, UNTELLING, adj. What cannot be told.

"It was untelling what land that man possessed!" S.

UNTENTED, part. pa. Not watched over. S.

UNTENTY, adj. Inattentive; not watchful. S.

UNTHINKABILL, adj. Inconceivable; what cannot be thought.

With hart it is unthinkabill,

And with toungis unpronounciabil.

Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 175.

UNTHIRLIT, part. adj. Not astricted; not thirled. S.

UNTHOCHT. To haud one unthocht lang, to keep one from wearying. It seems equivalent to the phrase still used, S. to haud one out of langer.

She's ta'en her till her mither's bower,

As fast as she could gang;

And she's ta'en twa o' her mither's Marys,

To haud her unthocht lang.

Jamieson's Popul. Ball. ii. 131. V. also p. 130.

It seems to be merely, without thinking long; un being used as a negative. Teut. ondeuchtigh, however, is rendered, Curae et timoris expers; Kilian.

UNTHOLEABLE, adj. Intolerable. V. THOLE. S.

UNTHOUGHT LANG. Without thinking long. S.

UNTHRIFT, s. Wastefulness. S.

UNTHRIFTY, adj. Unfriendly; hostile to the prosperity of another.

Quhat wyld dotage sa made your hedis raif?

Or quhat unthryfty God in sic foly

Has you bewaiffit here to Italy?

V. THRYFT.

Doug. Virgil, 299, 3.

UNTIDY, adj. Not neat; not trim; applied not to the quality of the clothes, but especially to the mode of putting them on. S.

UNTIDILIE, adv. Not neatly; awkwardly. S.

UNTILL, prep. Unto. V. SKAIR.

UNTIMEOUS, adj. Untimely; unseasonable. S.

UNTYNT, part. pa. Not lost.

The riall child Ascanus full sone,—

Turssis with him of thi auld Troiane gere,

V. TYNE.

Doug. Virgil, 34, 38.

UNTO. Sometimes used in the sense of untill. S.

UNTRAIST, adj. Unexpected.

"That he mycht be untraist suddante the more cruelte exerce, he made his army reddy to inuade the Scottis on the nixt morrow." Bellend. Cron. Fol. 8. a.

— Ilk court bin untraist and transitorie,

Changing as oft as weddercok in wind.

V. TRAIST, adj. Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 198.

VNTRAISTIE, adj. Faithless; unworthy of trust. S.

VNTRANSUMYT, part. pa. Not transcribed. S.

UNTRETABYLL, adj. "That cannot be intreated;
inexorable;" Rudd.

Happy war he knew the cause of all thingis,

And settis on syde all drede and cure, quod he,

Vnder his feit that tredis and doun thringis

Chancis untretabill of fatis and destany.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 160, 26.

Properly, unmanageable, untractable; Lat. intractabilis.

V. TRETABYL.

UNTRIG, adj. Not trim; slovenly. V. TRIG. S.

UNTROWABILL, adj. Incredible.

— Quhilk till descryue I am nocht abill,

Quhose number bene so untrowabill.

V. TROW, v. Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 78.

UNVICIAT, part. adj. Productive; not deficient. S.

UNWAR, UNWER, adj. or adv. Unwary; or unawares.

Ane fule he was, and witles in ane thing,

Persaut not Turnus Rutuliane King

So violentlie thring in at the yet,

Quham he unwar within the cieté schet.

Doug. Virgil, 304, 18.

Les sche unwer but caus hir deith puruayit,

Hir list na thyng behynd leif vnassayit.

Ibid. 114, 23.

A.S. unwar, unwaer, unwer, incautus. The Su.G. seems to supply us with the root. For war, Isl. var, cautus, is from war-a, videre. Thus war properly respects circumspection; videns, qui rem quandam videt.

UNWARYIT, part. pa. Not accursed.

Than wod for wo so was I quite myscaryit,

That nothir God nor man I left unwaryit.

V. WARY.

Doug. Virgil, 63, 33.

UNWYNNABILL, adj. Impregnable. See Sup.
"This crag is callit the Bas unwynnabill be ingyne of man." Bellend. Descr. Alb. c. 9. Inexpugnabile, Boeth.
This is nearly allied to A.S. un-winna, invincibilis; from winn-an, vincere.

UNWINNE, adj. Unpleasant.
The leuedi of heighe kenne,
His woundis schewe sche lete;
To wite his wo unwinne,
So grimly he can grete.
Sir Tristrem, p. 78. st. 11.

A.S. un-winum, injucundus, inamoenus, asper. V. WIN.

UNWOLLIT, part. adj. Having the wool taken off. S.

UNWROKIN, part. pa. Unrevenged.
And sayand this, hir mouth fast thristis sche
Doun in the bed: Vnwrokin sall we de?
Inultae, Virg. Doug. Virgil, 123, 17.
A.S. un-wrecen, inultus; from un negat. and wrec-an, ulcisci, wreog-an, id. V. WRAIK, WROIK.

UNYEMENT, s. Ointment.
"Quhen Schir James Douglas was chosyn as maist worthy of all Scotland to pas with Kyng Robertis hart to the haly land, he put it in ane cais of gold with arromitike and precious unyementis." Bellend. Cron. B. xv. c. 1. Lat. unguent-um.
"The unyementis & drogareis that our forbearis usit mycht not cure the new maledyis." Ibid. Fol. 17, b.

VOALER, s. A cat. S.

VOAMD, s. Meat injured by being too long kept. S.

VOCE, s. Voice, S.B.
Ane feyndliche hellis voce scho schoutis schill;
At quhais sound all trymblyt the forest,
The derne woddis resoundit est and west.
Doug. Virgil, 225, 37.

VODDER, s. Weather. V. WODDER. S.

VODE, adj. 1. Empty; void.
Unto thir wordis, he nane answer maid,
Nor to my vode demandis na thing said.
Doug. Virgil, 48, 32.

2. Light; indecent.
The rial stile, clepit Heroicall,
Full of wourschip and nobilnes ouer all,
Suld be compilit, but tenchis or vode wourde,
Kepand honest wise sportis, quhare euer thay bourde.
Doug. Virgil, Prol. 271, 30.

To VODE, v. a. To void; to empty.
Eftir all was vodit, and the lycht of day
Ay mare and mare the mone quencht away,—
Within hir chalmer alone scho langis sare,
And thocht all waist for laik of hir luffare.
Doug. Virgil, 102, 25.

Ubi digressi, Virg. When the company were all gone.

VOE, s. An inlet; a creek or bay, Orkney, Shetl.
"This inlet or voe furnishes several excellent harbours, such as Busta Voe, South Voeter, and Alnafirth." P. Delting, Shetl. Statist. Acc. i. 390.
"Voes,—in the ancient language of these islands, signify such creeks or bays as penetrate far into the land." Barry's Orkney, p. 39.
"The parish is every where intersected with long narrow bays, called here Voes or Friths." P. Aithsting, Shetl. Statist. Acc. vii. 581.
Isl. vogr., fretum; G. Andr. p. 257. V. Brand's Orkney, p. 65.

VOGIE, VOKIT, adj. 1. Vaip, S.

V O L

Of your consent, he says, I'm mair nor fain,
And vogie that I can ca' you my ain.
Ross's Helenore, p. 112.

"Whisht," quoth the vougy jade,
"William's a wise judicious lad,
"Has havins mair than e'er ye had,
"Ill-bred bog-stalker."
Ramsay's Poems, ii. 338.

"I was fidgen fain an' unco vokie fan I got out ouer her, for as laggart an' trachel'd as I was wi' taavin amo' the dubs." Journal from London, p. 4.

To Waistgude luk and beir neid that I lefe;
To Covatyce syn gif this bleis of fyre;
To servant Voky ye beir this rown slef.
K. Hart, ii. 66.

Voky seems to be Vanity in dress personified. "In Scotland," Mr. Pinkerton remarks, "they say a man is voggy when he is proud." Note, Maitland's Poems, p. 379. But it properly denotes ostentation.

This might seem allied to Isl. allvoglga, magnifice, honorifice, veg-ur, honor, Su.G. vaeg-a, honorare; or to A.S. bog-an, Belg. pochg-en, to boast, to vaunt. It may, however, have been formed from Fr. vogue, Ital. voga, fame, pre-eminence.

2. Merry; cheerful; an oblique sense, S.B. See Sup.

VOYAGE, s. A journey. S.

To VOYCE, VOICE, v. n. To vote. S.

To VOICE out, v. a. To elect by vote. S.

VOICER, s. A voter.
"—That his voicing should not import his approbation of the commissions of any voicer against whom he was to propone any just exception in due time."—Baillie's Lett. i. 99.

The v. is also used, as by Shakspeare.

VOICING, s. The act of voting. S.

VOLAGE, VOLLAGE, adj. 1. Giddy; inconsiderate; fickle; Fr. volage. See Sup.
"—The ingement of Gode (quhilk virkis al thyng) is ane profound onknauen deipnes, the quhilk passis humaine ingyne to comprehend the grounde or limitis of it: be cause oure vit is ouer febil, oure ingyne ouer harde, oure thochtis ouer vollage, ande oure yeiris ouer schort." Compl. S. p. 32.

2. Profuse; prodigal; "He's unco volage o' his siller." S.

VOLE MOUSE. The Short-tailed Field Mouse, Orkn. The field campagnol. See Sup.
"The Short-tailed Field Mouse (mus agrestis, Lin. Syst.) which with us has the name of the vole mouse, is very often found in marshy grounds that are covered with moss and short heath." Barry's Orkney, p. 314.
Perhaps vole has the same sense with field; A.S. wold, planities; Su.G. wall, solum herbidum.

To VOLISH, v. n. To talk ostentatiously. S.

VOLISHER, s. An ostentatious talker. S.

VOLOUNTE, s. The will.
The ilk stounde of his awin fre volounté,
Ioue callis Juno, and thus carpis he.
Doug. Virgil, 340, 5.

Fr. volonté, Lat. volunt-as.

VOLT, s. Vault or cellar. V. VOUT. S.

Thy tour, and fortres lairge and lang,
Thy nychbours dois excell.—
Thy groundis deip, and toppis hie
Uprising in the air;
Thy voltis plesand ar to sie,
Thay ar so greit and fair.
Prayse of Lethingtoun, Maitland Poems, p. 255.

Vaults, Pinkerton. But perhaps rather applied to the roofs; from Fr. voulte, which not only signifies a vault, but "a vaulted or embowed roof;" Cotgr. V. VOUT.

V O U

VOLT, s. Countenance; aspect. V. VULT. S.
VOLUPTUOSITIE, s. Voluptuousness. S.
VOLUSPA, s. Explained as synonymous with Sybil. S.
To VOME, v. a. To puke; to vomit. S.
VOMITER, s. An emetic. S.
VOR, s. The spring-time, Orkney, Shetl. V. VEIR.
VOTE, s. A vow.

He "maid solempnit vote that he & his posterite sall use na ansenye in tymes cumyng (quhen tyme of battal occurrit) bot the croce of Sanct Andro." Bellend. Cron. B. x. c. 5. Voit, Ibid. B. xiii. c. 7. Lat. vot-um.

To VOTE, v. a. To devote. Votit, part. pa.

"Becaussa gret trubill risis daylie aganis the Cristin pepill, the maist catholik prince Charlis hes votit hym to the deith in defence thair of aganis the ennymes of God." Bellend. Cron. B. x. c. 2. Devovisse, Boeth.

VOTH, s. Outlawry.

"Voth signifies outlawrie, vtlagium." Skene, Verb. Sign. in vo.

Allied perhaps to Isl. vode, Su.G. waada, (pron. voda) periculum. V. YOUTHMAN.

VOUR, s. The seed-time. V. VEIR. S.

VOURAK, s. Wreck. "The vourak of the schip." S.

VOUSS, s. The liquor, or tea, of hay and chaff boiled. S.

To VOUST, v. n. To boast, S.

In siclyke wyse this Juturna belive
 Throw out the oistis can the horsis driue,
 —And schew hir brothir Turnus in his chare,
 Now brauland in this place, now voustand thare.

Doug. Virgil, 427, 13.

Great as it is, I need na voust.

Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 3.

VOUST, VOIST, s. Boasting, S. a boast; a brag, Gl. Shirr.

And lo as Pharon cryis and doys roust,
 With haltand wourdis and with mekle voust,
 Eneas threw an dart at him that tyde,
 Quhilk, as he gapit, in his mouth did glide.

Doug. Virgil, 327, 10.

Thare sal thou se, thare sal thou know anone,
 Quhom to thys wyndy glore, voist and avantis,
 The honour, or with pane the louing grantis.

Ibid. 390, 4.

Whare then was a' your windy vousts?

Ye that is now sa kneef!

Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 23.

Perhaps radically the same with boast, v and b being letters of the same organs. Junius derives boast from C.B. bostio, id.; Seren. from Goth. buse, biesse, rex, dominans. Isl. biasse, pugil; Ihre, vo. Biesse. See Sup.

VOUSTER, s. A boaster, S. Rudd. V. WOISTARE.

VOUSTY, adj. Vain; given to boasting.

And chiels shall come frae yont the Cairn-a-mounth right vousty,

If Ross will be so kind as share in

Their pint at Drousty.

Beattie's Address, Ross's Helenore, st. 16.

VOUT, s. A vault, S. O.E. id.

"Vout vnder the ground, (Fr.) uoute," Palsgraue; also voulte. This seems of Gothic origin; Sw. hwalfd, arched, vaulted, hwalfw-a, to arch, to vault, also written waelfw-a, vaelfw-a; A.S. hwalf, convexus; Isl. hioel, sphaera.

YOUTH, adj. or s. Prosecuted, or prosecution, in course of law; a forensic term.

"Youth signifies persewed, calling, or accusation, from Voucher, id. est, Vocare, used in the auld French and English lawes." Skene, Verb. Sign. vo. Voth.

U P B

But the origin is evidently A.S. wothe, clamor.

YOUTHMAN, s. An outlaw.

"In our auld Scottish langage ane Youthman is ane outlaw, or ane fugitiue fra the lawes." Skene, Verb. Sign. vo. Voth.

This, in connexion with the preceding word, may perhaps point out the origin of Voth, as signifying outlawry. Youthman may have denoted one who was legally called, and not compeirand, or presenting himself in court, was outlawed.

VOW, interj. Expressive of admiration or surprise, S.

Yonder he comes; and vow! but he looks fain:

Nae doubt he think's that Peggy's now his ain.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 144.

Isl. vo, metuendum quid; also, repentè, ex improviso.

V. Verel. & G. Andr. V. WAAH.

VOWBET, s.

Yet wanshapen Vowbet of the weirds invytit,

I can tell thee how, when, where, and what gat thee,

The quhilk was neither man nor wife,

Nor human creature on life.

Montgomerie, Watson's Coll. iii. 12.

It might be conjectured that the word were comp. of two Isl. terms; vo (resembling Lat. ve in Vejovis, vegrandis, vesanus) signifying vain, unlucky, also, what is to be feared; and baete, bot-a, to bless; q. what bears the marks of the curse, or cannot be mended. The term here denotes a child supposed to be carried off by the Fairies; according to a vulgar idea still prevailing in some parts of Scotland.

But the original sense is determined by what is said elsewhere.

A warlock, and a warwolf, a vowbet but hair.

Ibid. p. 25.

It therefore seems the same word with wobat, S.A., a hairy worm, which crawls on vegetables, somewhat of the caterpillar kind.

Sibb. renders woubit, oubit, one of those worms which appear as if covered with wool, Gl., as if the term wool or woo entered into the composition. But more probably it is from A.S. wibba, a worm.

A voubet but hair, is a worm in so imperfect a state, that the hair is not yet grown. Wobat is said to be "a hairy caterpillar." Edin. Rev. Oct. 1803, p. 206. O.E. "Warbot, a worme; escarbot," Fr. Palsgraue. V. WOBAT.

VOWKY, adj. Vain. S.

To VOWL, v. a. A term used at cards when one of the parties loses all in a game. S.

VOWL, s. The state of being quite out of hand in a game of cards, or of losing every thing. S.

UPCOIL, s. A kind of game with balls.
And now in May to madynniss fawis,
With tymmer wechtis to trip in ringis,
And to play vpcoil with the bawis.
Scott, Evergreen, ii. 186, MS.
This seems to refer to the ancient custom of tossing up different balls into the air, and catching them before they reached the ground. V. Strutt's Sports and Pastimes, p. 132.
UPCOME, s. 1. Promising appearance; ground of expectation as to the future; the idea being probably borrowed from the first appearance of the braird, or blade after sowing.
"The king on a time was discoursing at table of the personages of men, and by all mens confession the prerogative was adjudged to the Earle of Angus. A courtier that was by (one Spense of Kilspindie,) whether out of envie to hear him so praised, or of his idle humour onely, cast in a word of doubting and disparaging. It is true, said he, if all be good that is up-come; meaning if his action and valour were answerable to his personage and body," Hume's Hist. Douglas, p. 235.
2. Advancement in stature; bodily growth. S.
A.S. up-cyme, up-comyng, ortus; a springing or coming up; Somner. Isl. uppkomid, proditum est.
To UPDAW, v. n. To dawn.
Thus draif thai our that deir nicht with dauteing [and chere;]
Quhill that the day did updaw. —
Dunbar, Maitland's Poems, p. 63.
Belg. op-daag-en, to rise, to appear, is given by Sewel, as a compound term from daag-en, to dawn. V. DAW, v.
UPDORROK, adj. Worn out. S.

UPLANDS, UP OF LAND, UPON-LAND, UPLANE, adj.

1. One who lives in the country, as distinguished from the town.

"Ane Burges may poynd ane vplands man, or the Burges of ane other burgh, within or without the time of market, within or without the house." Burrow Lawes, c. 3. s. 1. Foris habitantes, Lat.

This term, as Mr. Pinkerton observes, is equivalent to landwart frequently used in our laws, as opposed to borough.
2. Rustic; unpolished.

Thus sang ane burd with voce upplane;
"All erdly joy returnis in pane."

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 87.

John Up-on-land's Complaint is the title of one of our old poems, Ibid. p. 144., borrowed perhaps from Chaucer's Jache Uplande.

A.S. up-land, highland, a hilly country or region; also, a midland country far from the sea. Up-landisc man, monticola, rusticus, one that dwelleth on a hilly or mountainous soil, or far from the sea-coast; Somner. To ealcan cyrcean uppeland; To every country kirk; Chron. Sax. 192, 34.

 Mr. Macpherson thinks that, when this word has no addition, it is "generally understood of good fortune." But it seems to be used quite indefinitely. He refers to Arm. O.Fr. eur, "retained in bonheur, malheur, which etymologists derive from heure, hour, as if the words signified metaphorically good hour, bad hour; whereas the meaning is obvious and simple without any metaphor." Gl. Wynt.
Eur is used in the sense of hazard, Rom. de la Rose. Teut. ure, vicissitudo. It might be supposed, without any great stretch, that these terms were radically from Isl. urd, Alem. urdi, fate, or the designation of the first of the Fates. But it must be acknowledged, as unfavourable to this etymon, that Teut. ure also signifies hora. Hence the phrase, Ter goeder uren, fortunately, i. e. in a good hour; exactly corresponding to Fr. A la bonne heure.
 URE, s. "Practice, toil;" Gl. Pink. See Sup.
 A thrid, O maistres Marie! make I pray:

U R E

And put in ure thy worthie vertews all.
For famous is your fleing fame; I say,
Hyd not so haut a hairt in slugish thrall.

Maitland Poems, p. 267.

In this sense it may be allied to Teut. ure, commoditas, temporis opportunitas; Kilian.

URE, s. The point of a weapon.

"And gif he hurtis or defoulis with felonie assailyeand with edge or vre, he sall remaine in presoun but remeid, quhill assyth be maid to the partie, and amendis to the King or to the Lord, that it belangis to as effeiris." Acts, Ja. I. 1426, c. 108. Edit. 1566.

Edge or ure, i. e. edge or point. This is the same with ord, orde, horde, O.E.

Hys sword he drough out than,
Was scharp of egge, and ord.

Lybaeus, Ritson's E.M.R. ii. 81.

Horn tok the maister heved

Ywaine and Gawin, Ibid. i. 3.

Su.G. or, anc. aur, a weapon; Isl. aur, an arrow. Ord is merely the A.S. term rendered acies, cuspis, "the point of any thing, the point or edge of a weapon;" Somner. Perhaps they have some affinity to Isl. or, acer. Ure seems radically the same with Wyr, q. v.

URE, s. 1. Ore; in relation to metals, S. See Sup.

2. The fur or crust which adheres to vessels, in consequence of liquids standing in them, S.B.

This seems only an oblique sense of the same word.

URY, adj. Furred; crusted, S.B.

URE, s. A denomination of land in Orkney and Shetland. Also in Sweden. See Sup.

"In these parishes there are 1618 merks 4 ures of land. An ure is the eighth part of a merk. The dimensions of the merk vary not only in the different parishes of Shetland, but in different towns of the same parish; and though in some of the towns in these united parishes, it will not measure above half a Scots acre, yet so much does it exceed the Scots acre in others, that the whole of the arable land cannot be less than 1600 acres." P. Tingwall, Shetl. Statist. Acc. xxi. 278.

V. MERK. To what is said there, it may be added that A.S. ora, ore, was a denomination of money, whether coined, or reckoned by weight, constituting an ounce or the twelfth part of a pound. As this term was introduced into E. by the Danes, it must have been originally the same with Isl. auri, both the A.S. and the Isl. word signifying an ounce. Auri, est octava pars marcae, tam in fundo, quam in mobilibus; Verel, p. 23. The mode of reckoning, however, was different; Isl. auri being the eighth part of a pound or mark. For the mark in Isl. contains eight ounces. V. G. Andr. p. 175.

URE, s. Colour; tinge, S.B.

This may be allied to Belg. verw, Sw. ferg, id.

URE, s. Soil. An ill ure, a bad soil, Ang.

Ir. Gael. uir, mould, earth, dust; Isl. ur, gravelly soil.

URE, s. Sweat; perspiration, Ang. Hence ury, clammy, covered with perspiration.

URISUM, URUSUM, adj. 1. Troublesome; vexatious. Astablit lyggis styl to sleip, and restis—
The lytil mydgis, and the vrusum fleis,
Lauborius emottis, and the bissy beis.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 450, 6.

2. "S. frightful, terrifying;" Rudd.

This learned writer derives it from S. ery, fearful; evidently founding his etymon on the vulgar use of the term. But most probably it is quite a different word. There cannot, at any rate, be the least affinity between ery and urusum, as signifying troublesome. This seems allied to Su.G. orolig, inquietus, (the term sum being used instead of lig or like.) from oro, inquires, comp. of o negat. and ro, quies; like Germ. unruhe, id. from un and ruhe. This exactly corresponds to the sense; "the restless flies." V. ROIF, rest.

URLUCH (gutt.), s. adj. "Silly-looking," Gl. Ross. i. e. having a feeble and emaciated appearance, S.B. See S.

Ayont the pool I spy'd the lad that fell,
Drouked and looking unco urluch like.

Ross's Helenore, p. 43.

Perhaps q. oorielike, as chilled by cold, or in consequence of being drenched with water; as the person referred to is supposed to have been nearly drowned, p. 42.

I thought therein a lad was like to drown,

His feet yeed frae him, and his head went down.

V. OORIE.

But, perhaps, it is rather q. wurl-like. V. WROUL and WARWOLF. The latter derivation seems confirmed by the use of A. Bor. url, to look sickly; urled, stunted in growth; whence urling, a little dwarfish person.

To URN, v. a. To pain; to torture. V. ERN, v. See S.

Quhat I haiff had in wer befor this day,

Presoune and payne to this nycht was bot play;

So bett I am with strakis sad and sar,

The cheyle wattir vrned me mekill mar;

Eftir gret blud throu heit in cauld was brocht,

That off my lyff almost no thing I roucht.

Wallace, v. 384. MS.

Wined, Perth Edit. In Edit. 1648, it is altered still more strangely;

The shrill water then burnt me meikell more.

The term is still used, Ang. To urn the ee, to pain the eye, as a mote or a grain of sand does. This term might have been originally limited to what causes pain by the sensation of heat; as allied to Isl. orne, calor, orn-a, calefacio, orn, focus. V. Verel. vo. Ornaz, and G. Andr. A.S. ym-ed signifies afflicted, tormented. But we cannot view this as the origin of our term, without supposing that it has been corrupted.

To URP, v. n. To become pettish. V. ORP. S.

URUS, s. The name given to the wild white bull that was formerly so common in the Caledonian forest. S.

 Like Robbie Burns.
Shirrefs' Poems, p. 337.
Vung is more commonly used as a s., denoting the sound made by a stone discharged from a sling, or any similar sound, as that of a humming-top when emitted from the string.
 It has a far better claim, than many other words, to be viewed as ex sono ficta. But it may be derived from Teut.
 Germ. bunge, a drum, which Wachter deduces from Su.G.
baeng-ia, to beat. The adv. glibly is improperly conjoined.

Some learned writers have viewed this letter as corresponding to the Iolic Digamma; and have observed, that it is frequently prefixed to words beginning with a vowel or diphthong. In this way they account for the resemblance between many Gothic and Greek terms. “Thus,” says Junius, (Observ. in Willeram.
 p. 32,) “from ασις, lutum, is formed wast, limus;

from εργον, opus,—werk; from εσις, dissidium, concer-tatio,—werre, dissidium, bellum; from εσεσθαι, esse, fieri,—wes-en; from ειλ-ειν, versare, circumagere,— weil, orbiculus versatilis, a spinning wheel; from ουρειν

Gower, Conf. Am. Fol. 16, b.

Su.G. wad, A.S. wed, Isl. vaed, ved, Dan. vedde, Belg. wedde, Alem. uueti, Germ. wette. Ihre supposes that the Su.G. term is derived from wad, cloth; because, this kind of merchandise being anciently given and received instead of money, when at any time a pledge was left, a piece of cloth was commonly used for this purpose, and hence a pledge in general would be called Wad. According to this view, the Goth. word must be more ancient than Lat. vas, vad-is, a pledge; whence vadimonium, a promise or engagement. It seems evident, at least, that L.B. vad-ium is from the Goth. The term, indeed, assumes a great variety of other forms in L.B., as wad-ium, guad-ia, gag-ium, &c. V. Du Cange.

From A.S. wed, pignus, Junius derives the v. wed, to marry; with some hesitation, however, whether it be not rather from C.B. gwed, a yoke. But the first is certainly the most natural idea, as it was customary to espouse by means of a wad or pledge.

Hence L.B. Vadiare Mulierem, Eam sibi in sponsam pignore asserere; Du Cange, vo. Vadium, p. 1385.

WADDS, s. "A youthful amusement, wherein much use is made of pledges;" Gl. Sibb., S. See Sup.

In this game, the players being equally divided, and a certain space marked out between them, each lays down one or more wads or pledges at that extremity where the party, to which he belongs, choose their station. A boundary being fixed at an equal distance from the extremities, the object is to carry off the wads from the one of these to the other. The two parties, advancing to the boundary or line, seize the first opportunity of crossing it, by making inroads on the territories of each other. He who crosses the line, if seized by one of the opposite party, before he has touched any of their wads, is set down beside them as a prisoner, and receives the name of a Stinker; nor can he be released, till one of his own side can touch him, without being intercepted by any of the other; in which case he is free. If any one is caught in the act of carrying off a wad, it is taken from him; but he cannot be detained as a prisoner, in consequence of his having touched it. If he can cross the intermediate line with it, the pursuit is at an end. When the one party have carried off, to the extremity of their ground, all the wads of the other, the game is finished.

Su.G. wadsaett-a, Isl. vaedsett-ia, oppignerare, to set, place, or lay in pledge. Su.G. saett-a itself has this signification. The A.S. phrase, settan wedd, stabilire foedus, is evidently allied.

WADSETTER, s. One who holds the property of another in wadset, S.

"The creditor, to whom the wadset is granted, gets the name of wadsetter, because the right of the wadset is vested in him." Erskine's Instit. B. ii. Tit. 8, § 4.

WAD-SHOOTING, s. Shooting at a mark for a wad, or prize which is laid in pledge, Ang.

"Christmas is held as a great festival in this neighbourhood.——Many amuse themselves with various diversions, particularly with shooting for prizes, called here wad-shooting." P. Kirkden, Forfars. Statist. Acc. ii. 509.

WAD, pret. v. Wedded. S.

WAD, s. Woad. V. WADD. S.

WAD, s. The name of a hero of romance. S.

WAD, v. aux. Would. S.

WAD-BE-AT, s. One who aims at something above his station, as in dress, living, &c. q. "would be at." S.

WADAND, part. pr. Expl. fearful.

Bot the fell qwhile, that thai had,
Sa dowlant than thare hartis made
That thai war all rycht wadand
To fecht in gret rowt hand to hand.

Wyntown, viii. 40. 249.

"Ir. uath, fear;" Gl. Perhaps there is an error here.

Rad is used in another MS. for made, 1. 2.

WADD, s. Woad, used in dyeing. See Sup.

"Of listers burgesses quha puts their hands in the wadd." Chalmerlan Air, c. 39, § 69.

Skinner renders the term, as here used, a pledge. But the phrase denotes dyers who work with their own hands; as in the preceding section fleshers are mentioned, "quha slay mairts with thair awin hands."

Wad is here put for dye-stuffs in general, because of its being used for laying the foundation of many colours. In le wadd; Lat.

WADDER, s. A wedder. S.

WADDER, s. Weather. V. WEDDYR.

WADDIE, s. Apparently the same as Widdie; E. withe.

A.S. wad, waad, Teut. wedde, Alem. wode, Sw. weide,

Fr. guesde, guedde, Ital. guado, Hisp. L.B. gualda, O.E. wad.

WADDIN, part. pa. Strong; like two pieces of iron beat into one, or welded. S.

This yungman lap upoun the land full licht,
And mervellit mekle of his makdome maid.

Waddin I am, quoth he, and woundir wicht,
With bran as bair, and breist burly and braid.

Henryson, Bannatyne Poems, p. 131.

"Strong, like two pieces of iron beat into one;" Lord Hailes. Perhaps corr. from Waldyn, q. v.

WADER, s. The name of a bird, Aberd.

"Among the resident birds, may be reckoned,—owzel, bat, tomtit, common and green linnet, yellow-hammer, blackbird, and the wader, a bird frequenting running water." P. Birse, Aberd. Statist. Acc. ix. 108.

Supposed to be the common Water-hen; or perhaps the Water-rail.

WADGE, s. A wedge. S.

To WADGE, v. a. To shake in a threatening manner, to brandish, S.B.; as, he wadged his nieve in my face, he threatened to strike me with his fist. He wadg'd a stick at me; he brandish'd one.

Su.G. waeg-a, Isl. veg-a, Belg. weeg-en, librare.

WADY, adj. Vain. V. VAUDIE.

WADMAAL, s. A species of woollen cloth manufactured and worn in Orkney and Shetl. V. VADMELL. S.

WAE, s. Wo. V. WA.

WAEFUL, adj. 1. Woful; sorrowful, pron. waefu', S. Gl. Shirr.

Crule Murry gar't thi waefu' quine luke out,
And see hir lover an' liges slayne.

Ritson's S. Songs, ii. 17.

A waefu' wanderer seeks thy tower,

Lord Gregory ope thy door.

Burns, iv. 38.

2. Causing sorrow, S.

But now the day maist waefu' came,
That day the quine did grite her fill,

W A F

For Huntlys gallant stalwart son
Wis heidit on the heidin hill.

Ritson's S. Songs, ii. 17.

WAENESS, s. Sorrow; vexation, S.

WAESUCKS, WAESUCK, interj. Alas; wo is me! common in Clydes.

Ye trust waesucks! in works. Falls of Clyde, p. 133.

Perhaps q. A.S. wa, and Dan. Sax. usic, usich, usig, vae nobis, wo is to us; the pl. of wae is me.

WAESOME, adj. Woful; melancholy. S.

WAEFLEED, WAMFLET, s. The water of a mill-burn, after passing the mill. Syn. Wefflin, Wefflum, q. v. S.

WAESE, WEESE, WEEZE, s. 1. A waese of strae, a bundle of straw. 2. A circular band of straw, or a stuffed roll of cloth, open in the middle, worn on the head for the purpose of carrying a pail of milk, or a tub or basket, &c. 3. A bundle of sticks or brushwood, placed on the wind side of a cottage-door to ward off the blast. S.

WAE WAGS YE. An exclamation, or imprecation. S.

WAFF, WAIF, WAYF, adj. 1. Strayed, and not as yet claimed. See Sup.

"There is ane other moueable escheit, of any wayf beast, within the territorie of any lord; the quhilk suld be cryed vpon the market dayes, or in the Kirk, or in the Sciref-dome, sundrie tymes." Quon. Attach. c. 48, § 14.

In this sense waive is used, O.E.

Some serven the kyng, and his siluer tellen,
In cheker and in chauncery challenge his dettes
Of wardes & warmottes, of waives & strayues.

P. Ploughman, Pass. 1. A. ii.

Fr. choses guesves, vuayves, waifs and strays, Cotgr. Isl. vof-a, to wander, seems the natural origin; Germ. web-en, fluctuate.

2. Solitary; used as expressive of the awkward situation of one who is in a strange place where he has not a single acquaintance, S.

3. Worthless. A waff fellow, one whose conduct is immoral; or whose character is so bad, that those, who regard their own, will not associate with him, S. Hence Waff-like, one who has a very shabby or suspicious appearance, S. 4. Low-born; ignoble. 5. Paltry; inferior; not much to be accounted of. 6. Feeble; worn out. S.

WAFFIE, s. 1. A vagabond, Ang. 2. A worthless person; one addicted to idleness, and to low or immoral company. S.

WAFFNESS, s. Shabby appearance. S.

To WAFF, WAIF, WAUFF, v. n. To wave; to fluctuate; to wave to and fro. See Sup.

To waif with the wynd. Gawan and Gol. ii. 10.

Apoun the top of mount Cynthus walkis he,
His waiffand haris sum tyme doing down thryng
Wyth ane soft garland of laurer sweet smellyng.

Doug. Virgil, 104, 53.

A.S. waf-ian, Sw. weft-a, vacillare.

To WAFF, WAIF, v. a. To wave; to shake, S. See S.

For Venus, efter the gys and maner thare,
Ane actiue bow apoun hir schulder bare,

As sche had bene ane wilde huntreis,

With wind waffing hir haris lowsit of trace.

Doug. Virgil, 23, 2.

WAFF, WAIF, WAIFF, s. 1. A hasty motion, the act of waving, S.

W A G

The grisly serpent sum tyme semyt to be
About hyr hals ane lynkit golding chenye;
And sum tyme of hyr courtche lap with ane way,
Become the seluage or bordour of hyr quaif.

Doug. Virgil, 218, 51.

"The devil—caused you renew your baptism, and baptised you on the face, with ane waff of his hand, like a dewing, calling you Jean." Records Justiciary, Septr. 13. 1678. Arnot's Hist. Edin. p. 194. N.

2. It is used to denote a signal; as one made by the waving of a handkerchief. 3. A transient view, a passing glance. I had just a waff o' him, S. This resembles the use of the term, A. Bor. See Sup.

"In the county of Carmarthen, there is hardly any one that dies, but some one or other sees his light or candle. There is a similar superstition among the vulgar in Northumberland: They call it seeing the Waff of the person whose death it foretells.—I suspect this northern vulgar word to be a corruption of whiff, a sudden and vehement blast, which Davies thinks is derived from the Welch, chwyth, halitus, anhelitus, flatus." Brand's Popular Antiquities, p. 99.

4. A slight stroke from any soft body, especially in passing, S. 5. A sudden affection, producing a bodily ailment. Thus, to denote the sudden impression sometimes made on the human frame, in consequence of a temporary exposure to chill air, it is said that one has gotten a waff or waif of cauld, S. V. the v. n. See Sup. 6. Transient effluvia or odour. 7. Metaph. used to denote the contagious and fatal influence of a sinful course; in allusion to the effect of bad air, or of a suffocating wind. 8. A benevolent influence, as if communicated in passing. 9. Waff is used as equivalent to Wraith. S.

WAFFINGER, WHIFFINGER, s. A vagabond. V. WAFF. S. To WAFFLE, v. a. To rumple. S.

WAFFLE, WAFFIL, adj. 1. Limber; pliable. 2. Feeble; senseless. "A waffil dud," a person who is without strength or activity. S.

WAFROM, s. Perhaps an errat. for Wisser, a mask or visor. S.

WAF, WEFT, WOFT, s. The woof in a web, S.

"Is not this pain and joy, sweetness and sadness to be in one web, the one the weft, the other the warp?" Rutherford's Lett. P. I. ep. 29.

"The threads inserted into the warp, were called Subtlemen, the woof or weft." Adam's Roman Antiq. p. 523.

"The woft was chiefly spun by old women." Statist. Acc. (Aberdeen,) xix. 207.

A.S. wefta, Su.G. waest, id. from waefw-a, to weave, whence also waef, a web.

WAF, s. Synonymous with Waff, sense 8. S.

WAF, s. One who, under the appearance of friendship, holds another up to ridicule. S.

WA-GANG, WAYGANG, s. 1. A departure. See Sup.

"Frost and fawshood have baith a dirty waygang;" Ramsay's S. Prov. p. 27.

2. A disagreeable taste in the act of swallowing, or after a thing is swallowed, S.B.

"It tasted sweet i' your mou, bat fan anes it was down your wizen, it had an ugly knaggim, an' a wauch wa-gang." Journal from London, p. 3.

"Waugh wa-gang, a disagreeable bye-taste;" Gl. q. the relish any thing has in going away; Teut. wegh-ga-en, abire, discedere; wegh-ganch, abitus.

3. The canal through which water runs in its course from a mill. The wa-gang o' the water. S.

W A G

WA-GANG CRAP. The crop which the tenant has before he quits his farm. Way-gangin' crop. S.

WAG-AT-THE-WA', s. 1. A clock which has no case, frequently used in the country; thus named from the motion of the pendulum. 2. A spectre supposed to haunt the kitchen, and to take its station on the crook, wagging backwards and forwards before the death of any one in the family. S.

WAGE, s. A pledge, a pawn.
Or thay thare lawde suld lois or vassallage,
Thay had fer lewar lay thare life in wage.
Doug. Virgil, 135, 14.

This phrase is analogous to that used by Blind Harry. V. WED, s. and WAIDGE.

Rudd. derives it from Fr. gage, id. But it must ultimately be traced to Su.G. wad, pignus.

WAGEOURE, s. A stake, E. wager; used by Bp. Douglas as properly signifying a prize for which different persons contend.
Nixt eftir quham the wageoure has ressaue,
He that the lesche and lyame in sounder draue.
Virgil, 145, 44.

Fr. gageoure, sponsio. V. WAGE.

WAGEOUR, VAGEOURE, VAGER, s. A soldier, one who fights for pay.
And of tressour sua stuffyt is he
That he may wageouris haiff plenté.
Barbour, xi, 48. MS.

—Achemenides vnto name I hate,
Cumyn vnto Troy with my fader of late,
But ane pure vageoure clepit Adamastus —
My fallowschip vnwitting foryet me here.
Doug. Virgil, 89, 12.

War I ane Kyng, —
I sould gar mak ane congregatioun
Of all the freirs of the four ordouris,
And mak yow vagers on the bordouris.
Lyndsay, S.P.R. ii, 234.

Bellenden distinguishes wageours from legionary soldiers.
"Suetonius come in Britane with twa legionis and x. m. wagiouris of sindry nationis." Cron. Fol. 41. b.

Formed immediately from wage, like soldier, Fr. soldat, from Germ. sold, merces. Fr. gage, L.B. vad-ia, gag-ia, &c. merces; of which the common origin is Goth. wad, pignus.

It deserves observation, however, that Seren. views E. wage, conducere, (to wage soldiers,) as allied to Isl. veig, res pecuniaria, veig-ur, pretium, pretiosum quid.

We find the phrase vageit men used as equivalent to this. V. VAGEIT.

WAGGLE, s. A bog, a marsh, S.B. also wuggle.
"Depones, that he knows the place called the Waggle, between which and the water there was a bog, or swell that beasts would have laired in. — Interrogated, If he remembers a high point of land projecting into the Allochy grain, nearly opposite to the Waggle or bog above mentioned?" State, Leslie of Powis, &c. 1805. p. 74.

Allied perhaps to Teut. waggel-en, agitare, motitare; because marshy ground shakes under one's tread. It can have no affinity, surely, to Isl. vegafall, Sw. waegfall, a way destroyed by the overflowing of rivers, so as to be rendered unfit for travelling.

WAGHORN, s. A fabulous personage, who, being a liar nineteen times greater than the devil, was crowned king of liars. Hence extravagant liars are said to be as ill as Waghorn. S.

WAG-STRING, s. One who dies by means of a halter.
"An euill lad is in the way to proue an olde wag-string."
Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 982.

WA'-HEAD, s. The vacancy on the top of the inside of a cottage-wall, that is not beam-filled, where articles not constantly in use are deposited. S.

To WAIBLE, v. n. To move unsteadily in walking, as one who is very feeble. S.

WAID, s. The dye-stuff called woad. V. WADD. S.

To WAIDE.
Armour al witles in his bed sekis he,
Armour ouer al the lugeing law and he,
The grete curage of irne wappinis can waide,
Crewell and wylde, and al his wit invaide
In wikkit wodnes battal to desire,
Quharon he birnis hait in felloun ire.
Doug. Virgil, 223, 18.

"Wade (through) penetrate, possess or employ (his thoughts);" Rudd. Sibb. But this is evidently a mistake. Waide is either to render, or to become furious; from A.S. wed-an, insanire, furere. V. WEDE.

To WAIDGE, v. a. To pledge.
Yit Hope and Courage hard besyde,
Quha with them wont contend,
Did tak in hand us all to gyde
Unto our journeys end;
Implaidging and waidging,
Baith twa thair lyves for myne.
Cherrie and Slae, st. 104.

Su.G. waedja, sponsionem facere; L. B. vadiare, guagiare, ingag-iare, id. This points out the origin of E. engage, q. to give a wad or pledge for one. V. WAGE.

To WAIGLE, WEEGGLE, v. n. To waddle, to waggle, S.
Belg. waegel-en, waggel-en, motitare; from waeg-en, vacillare; Su.G. wackl-a, id. A.S. wicel-ian, id. titubare. The word appears in a more simple form in Moes.G. wagian, agitare, and Su.G. wek-a, wick-a, vacillare, which Ihere deduces from wek, mollis.

WAY-GOE, s. Run; course; place where a body of water breaks out. S.

WAIH, WAIHE, s. The watch. To convene the waih. S.

To WAIK, v. a. To enfeeble, E. weaken.
Nor yit the slaw nor febil vnweildy age
May waik our sprete, nor mynnis our curage.
Doug. Virgil, 299, 28.

Su.G. wek-a, vacillare, from wek, mollis; wik-a, cedere.

To WAIK, v. a. To watch, S. wauk.
The King, that all fortrawaillyt wes,
Saw that him worthy slep nedwayis;
Till his fostyr brodyr he sayis,
"May I traist in the, me to waik,
"Till Ik a litill sleping tak?"—Barbour, vii, 179. MS.

A.S. wac-ian, vigilare, E. wake.

WAYKENNING, s. Knowledge of one's way from a place.

To WAIL, WALE, v. a. To veil.
Ane lenye wattry garmond did him wail,
Of cullour fauch, schape like ane hempyn sail.
Velabat, Virg. Doug. Virgil, 240, b. 41.

Thus mekyll said sche and tharwyth bad adew,

Ibid. 445, 9.

WAIL, s. The gunwale of a ship.

On cais thare stude ane meikle schip that tyde,
Her wail joned til ane schore rolkis syde.

Doug. Virgil, 342, 16.

Probably from A.S. weal, munimentum; q. the fortification of the side of a ship.

To WAIL, v. a. To choose; to select. V. WALE. S.

WAILE, WALE, s. Vale, avail.

K. Hart, ii. 39.

Perhaps a wand or rod; Su.G. wal, C.B. gwal-en, id.;
Fr. gaule, a switch.

WAILYE QUOD WAILYE. V. VAILYE.

WAILL, s. A vale, or valley.

Syn in a waill that ner was thar besid,
Fast on to Tay his buschement can he draw.

Wallace, iv. 428, MS.

WAILL, s. Advantage, contr. from avail.

Than Wallace kest quhat was his grettest waill.
The fleand folk, that off the feild fyrst past,
In to thair king agayne releiffit fast.
Fra athir sid so mony semblit thar,
That Wallace wald lat folow thaim no mar.

Wallace, vi. 603, MS.

Then Wallace cast what was his best availe.

Edit. 1648.

This is probably the meaning of the word as used in
Gawan and Gol. i. 17.

Wynis went within the wane, maist wourthy to waill,
In coupis of cleir gold, brichtest of blee.

S.P.R. iii. 76. Vaill, edit. 1508.

WAYMYNG, WAYMENT, s. Lamentation, such as implies a flood of tears. See Sup.

There come a Lede of the Lawe, in londe is not to layne,

And glides to Schir Gawayne, the gates to gayne;
Yauland, and yomerand, with many loude yelles;
Hit yaules, hit yamers, with waymyng wete.

Sir Gawan and Sir Gal. i. 7.

Bare was the body, and blak to the bone,
Al biclagged in clay, uncomly cladde,
Hit waried hit wayment, as a woman;
But on hide, ne on huwe, no heling hit hadde.

Ibid. st. 9.

i. e. It varied its mode of wailing, like a woman. Or perhaps for the pret.; it cursed, it lamented like a woman.

Waymenting, Chaucer, id. "I wement, I make mone;"
Palsgraue. A.S. wea-mod is rendered angry; but Somner thinks that it more properly signifies lugubris, sorrowful; adding, "We sometimes, (with Ryder) say wayment for lamentor." Teut. weemoedig, mournful, lacrymabundus, ad lacrymas pronus, Kilian; from wee, grief, woe, and moed, mind.

WAYN, WAYNE, s. Plenty; abundance.

Wyld der thai slew, for othir bestis was nayn;
Thir wermen tuk off venysoune gud wayn.

Wallace, viii. 947, MS.

Off horss thai war purwaide in gret wayn.

Ibid. x. 707, MS.

Su.G. winn-a, sufficere, is the only word I have observed, to which this seems to have any affinity.

WAYN, s. A vein.

Wallace, i. 361, MS.

To WAYND, v. n. To change; to turn aside; to swerve.

I love you mair for that lofe ye lippen me till,
Than ony lordschip or land, so me our Lorde leid!
I sall waynd for no way to wirk as ye will,
At wiss, gife my werd wald, with you to the deid.

Houlate, ii. 12, MS.

A.S. waend-an, mutare, vertere, versari; Su.G. waend-a, vertere; cessare.

To WAYND, v. n. To care, to be anxious about.

Quhar he fand ane without the othir presance,
Eftir to Scottis that did no mor grewance;
To cut hys throit or steik him sodanlye
He wayndit nocht, fand he thaim fawely.

Wallace, i. 198.

He cared not, fand he them anerly.

Edit. 1648.

It is most probably the same word which Gawin Douglas uses, expl. by Mr. Pink. "fears."

Richt as the rose upspringis fro the rute;—
Nor waindis nocht the levis to out schute,
For schyning of the sone that deis renew.

Wallace, ii. 132, MS.

Perhaps from A.S. wen, spes, expectatio.

To WAYNE, v. n.

Strete on his steroppis stoutely he strikes,
And waynes at Schir Wawayn als he were wode.
Then his leman on lowde skirles, and skrikes,
When that burly barne blenket on blode.

Sir Gawan and Sir Gal. ii. 16.

It seems to denote the reiteration of strokes; allied perhaps to Su.G. waan-a, to labour, winn-a, id. also to fight, pugnare, configere. "The Bishop shall accuse the Parish;
aen ther widhir then wigit wan; and it shall accuse the person who begun the struggle." WestG. Leg. ap. Ihre, vo.
Winna. A.S. winn-an. Theod winth ongean theod; Nation shall fight against nation; Matt. xxiv. 7. Hence ge-winn,

 In creische that did inress.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 30. st. 9.

"Spendthrift;" Lord Hailes. But the adj. for this in S. is waisterfow. Perhaps the meaning is, that in consequence of gluttony, their bellies were so much swelled, that they seemed to have no waists.

To WAIT, WAIT, WATE, WAT, v. n. To know, E. wot.
See Sup.

"It is blinde also, in respect they waite not whom fra it commeth." Bruce's Eleven Sermon, Z. 2. a.

Wat is commonly used, S. wait, S.A., as an act. v.

"To wait a person, signifies, in popular language, to know from experience." Gl. Compl. p. 379.

I question much, however, if the ingenious editor be right in adding, that "it is also used by Minot," in the following passage.

Thare was thaire baner born all doune,
 To mak slike boste thai war to blame;
 Bot nevertheles ay er thai boune
 To wait Ingland with sorow and schame.

Poems, p. 4.

It seems rather to signify pursue. V. next word.

Su.G. wet-a, A.S. Moes.G. wit-an; Ihre. Ulphilas uses the phrase, Ni wait; I know not, S. I watna. A.S. ic wat, scio, S. I wat.

W A I

To WAYT, WATE, v. a. To hunt; to pursue; to persecute.

Thare wywys wald thai oft forly
 And thare dowchtrys dyspytwsly;
 And gyve ony thare-at war wrath,
 Wayt hym welle wyth a gret skath.

Wyntown, viii. 18. 38.

A.S. waeth-an, Su.G. wed-a, Isl. veid-a, Germ. weid-en, venari. Ihre derives this Goth. term from wed, a wood, as being the place for hunting. It may perhaps be allied to Moes.G. wethi, a flock. Su.G. wedehund, a dog used in the chase. A.S. waethan mid hundum, to hunt with dogs. It may be observed, by the way, that our modern term hunt, although immediately from A.S. hunt-ian, id. must be traced to hund, a dog. V. WAIT, s. 3.

WAYTAKING, s. Removing or carrying off. S.

To WAITE, v. a. To blame. Syn. Wite, q. v. S.

WAITER, s. A token; a sign, Border. V. WITTER.

WAITER, s. The name formerly given to the persons who kept the gates of Edinburgh. S.

WAITER, WAETER, WETER, s. Water. S.

WAITH, s. 1. Perhaps, cloth made into garments. See S.

Philotus is the man,—

Ane ground-riche man, and full of graith:

He wantis na jewels, claith, nor waith,

Bot is baith big and beine.—Philotus, S.P.R. iii. 8.

Claith nor waith seems to have been a Prov. expression; perhaps q. "neither cloth in the piece, nor cloth made into garments." Su.G. wad, A.S. waede, Alem. uad, indumentum; Franc. uat, whence uath-us, vestiarium, uatt-en, vestire, Willeram.

2. A plaid; such as is worn by women, S.B.

Bannocks and kebbocks, knit up in a claith,

She had wiled by, and row'd up in her waith.

Ross's Helenore, p. 53.

WAITH, s. Danger.

— Him thoct weill,

Giff he had haldyn the castell,

It had bene assegyt raith;

And that him thoct to mekill waith.

For he ne had hop off reskewyng.

Barbour, v. 418. MS.

Quharfor, quha knew thair herbery,

And wald cum on thaim sodanly,—

With few mengye men mycht thaim scaith,

And eschaip for owtyn waith. Ibid. vii. 305. MS.

The chyftane said, sen thair King had befor

Fra Wallace fled, the causs was the mor.

Fast south thai went, to byd it was great waith.

Douglace as than was quyt off thair scaith.

Wallace, ix. 1734. MS.

In edit. 1648, absurdly rendered wrath.

This word has no connexion with waith, as signifying the chase, or wandering. I can see no reason why Mr. Pink. should say, (Gloss. Maitl. P.) that waith in Henry's Wallace seems to mean accoutrements. It is evidently allied to Su.G. waada, danger; discrimen, periculum, anc. wade; Isl. vode. Jak skilde mik gaerna aff thenna wade; Lubenter hanc aerumnam vitarem; Hist. Alexand. M. ap. Ihre. It also denotes any accidental loss or misfortune. Su.G. vaadabot, a fine for accidental homicide; vaadeld, accidental fire. Dan. vaade, danger; vaadedrab, accidental homicide.

WAITH, WAITHE, WAITHING, s. 1. The act of hunting.

We ar in the wode went, to walke on oure waith,

To hunt at the hertes, with honde, and with horne;

We ar in our gamen, we have no gome-graith.

Sir Gawan and Sir Gal, ii. 8.

Murning Maidin, Maitland Poems, p. 208.

2. The game taken in hunting, or the sport in fishing.

Wallace meklye agayne ansuer him gawe.
"It war resone, me think, yhe suld haif part."
"Waith suld be delt, in all place, with fre hart."
He bad his child gyff thaim of our waithyng.
The Sothroun said, "As now of thi delyng
"We lycht not tak; thou wald giff ws our small."
He lychtyt down, and fra the child tuk all.

Wallace, i. 385. 386. MS.

This respects fishing. But it would appear unquestionable, that the term, as anciently used in S., like Isl. veid-a, was applied to both fishing and hunting. Isl. veid-a, venari; piscari; veidi, venatio, vel praeda venatione capta; veidifaung, veidiskap-ur, id. allskonar veidifaung, Res omnes quae venatu, aucupio, piscatu, acquiruntur, ferae, pisces, aves, ova; Verel. Veide, venatio; G. Andr. Fara a veidar met hundum; To go a hunting with dogs; Specul. Regal. p. 619. V. WAYT, v.

WAITH, WAYTH, adj. 1. Wandering; roaming. See S.

"Scot. they say, a waith horse, i. e. a horse that wanders in pursuit of mares," Rudd.

2. Impertinent.

Thocht Crist grund oure faith,
Virgillis sawis ar worth to put in store :
Thay aucht not to be hald vacabound nor waith,
Full riche tressoure they bene & pretius graithe.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 159, 27.

Rudd. is mistaken, in supposing this to be "the same originally with the E. waif, i. e. a thing that is found and claimed by nobody." The same idea is thrown out by Ritson, Robin Hood, Notes, LXXV. Lye, (Addit. to Junius) derives it from A.S. waeth-an, venari. It may have been used to denote wandering in general, as originally applied to wandering in pursuit of game. Wathe, "vagatio; a straying, a wandering;" Somner. Wide wathe; lata vagatio; Caed. 89. 4. Hence wathema, vagabundus. Whether Su.G. wad-a, ire, ambulare, is allied, seems doubtful.

3. Wandering; roving.

He buskyt hym thare-eft belyve,
And to the se has tane his way,
Quhare that he trawalyde mony day
In wayth and were and in bargane
Quhyll that he werounyd haly Spayne.

Wyntown, iii. 3. 51.

The term may, however, be understood as signifying danger. V. WAITH, id.

WAITHMAN, WAYTHMAN, s. A hunter.

Mr. Macpherson renders this would, supposing that the principal verb is wanting, as recover, reclaim, or the like.
But wald seems itself to be the proper verb, as signifying to possess, enjoy, or obtain; from A.S. weald-an. Thus,

K. Hart, i. 18.

Mr. Pink. gives this as not understood. The obvious sense is, "moved forward;" Su.G. wall-a, to make a journey, to stroll, to roam abroad; Alem. uall-en, Fenn. wall- en, id. A.S. wael-an, to travel as an exile. Teut. wal-en, wael-en, wall-en, id. To this source Ihre traces Fr. all-er, which, he thinks, was originally written gall-er.

To WALK, v. a. To watch.

Than till a kyrk he gert him be Broucht, and walkyt all that nycht.

Barbour, xiii. 543. MS.

That nycht thai maid thaim mery cher;
For rycht all at thair eyss thai wer:

thairfor." Abp. Hamiltoun's Catechisme, 1552, Fol. 46, a.

L, without any good reason, is inserted here, as in many other ancient S. words. It occurs in O.E. in its simple form.

"Se ye wake ye, and preye ye, for ye witen not whanne the tyme is." Wiclif, Mark xiii.

"—Abide ye here and wake ye with me—Myghtist thou not wake with me oon our? Wake ye and preie ye that ye entre not into temptacioun." Ibid. Mark xiv.

WALKRIFE, WAKRIFE, adj. 1. Watchful, S. wakrife.

W A L

How many fedderis bene on hir body fynd,
Als mon[y] walkrife ene lurkis thare under.

Doug. Virgil, 106, 15.

"The sentence pronounced by the Synod of Fife against the rest was approven and ratified by the whole Assembly, acknowledging therein the special benefit of God's providence in stirring up the spirits of his servants to be wake-rife, carefull, & courageous." Mr. Ja. Melvill's MS. Mem. p. 227.

2. Metaph. ; kept still alive.

Ane hundreth tempillis to Jupiter he maid,
Ane hundreth altaris, quhareon the walkrife fyre
He dedicate, all times birnand schire.

Doug. Virgil, 106, 49.

From A.S. wacce, Germ. wache, watchfulness, (in like-walk, lyk-waik) and rife, abundant.

WALKRYFENESSE, s. Watchfulness. S.

To WALK, v. a. To awake ; used to denote the renewal of a prosecution which has been dormant. S.

To WALKIN, WALKEN, v. a. 1. To awake ; to waken, E.

2. To raise a legal prosecution anew ; a forensic term. S.

To WALKIN, v. n. To walk. V. SEYNE, to see. S.

To WALL up, v. n. To boil up, S. See Sup.

Su. G. waell-a, A.S. weall-an, Alem. uall-an, Belg. Germ. well-en, Isl. vell-a, aestuare, fervere.

WALL, s. A wave.

From Jupiter the wylde fyre down sche flang
Furth of the cloudis, distrois thare schyppis all,
Ouerquhelmit the sey with mony wyndy wall.

Doug. Virgil, 14, 27.

The huge wallis weltres apon hie. Ibid. 15, 39.

Germ. Sax. Sicamb. walle, unda, fluctus ; O. Teut. id., abyssus, profundum ; ebullitio. Alem. uual, uuala, abyssus. The root is undoubtedly Teut. wall-en, ebullire, to boil up. Various terms, indeed, which signify a wave, are evidently formed from verbs expressive of instability or agitation. Thus, Su. G. waag, unda, is from Moes. G. wag-jan agitare ; boel-ia and E. billow, from bulg-ia, to swell, Gr. οὐδ-μα, from οὐδ-εω, id. Lat. fluctus, from flu-ere, to flow ; and wave itself from Isl. vef-ia, to fluctuate. Wall is from the same root with Wele, well-eye, q. v. and E. well, a fountain ; all as conveying the idea of ebullition.

This term exhibits the origin of the name given to the whale in the Goth. dialects. Alem. uuala, uuel, Belg. Germ. wal, also walfisk, Flandr. walvisch, q. the fish of the abyss, whose enormous size requires a great depth of water.

WALLY, adj. Billowy ; full of waves.

Quhaim baith yfere, as said before haue we,
Saland from Troy throw out the wally see,
The dedly storme ouerquhelmit with ane quhiddir.

Doug. Virgil, 175, 8.

To WALL, v. a. To beat two masses into one. V. WELL.

To WALLACH (gutt.), v. n. 1. To use many circumlocutions, Ang.

2. To cry as a child out of humour ; to wail, Ang.

The first sense might seem allied to Su. G. wall-a, to roam ; the second has evidently an affinity to Ir. walligh-in, to howl.

WALLACHIE-WEIT, s. The lapwing ; from Walloch, to wail, and Weit, the sound made by this bird. S.

To WALLAN, v. n. To wither ; to fade. Syn. Wallow. S.

WALLAWAY, interj. Alas ; E. welaway.

Now nouthir grettest Juno, walloway !
Nor Saturnus son hie Jupiter with just ene
Has our quarell considerit, na ouer sene.

WALLEE, s. The same as Well-ey ; that part of a quagmire in which there is a spring. S.

WALLER, s. A confused crowd in a state of quick motion ; as, a waller of birds, a waller of bairns. S.

To WALLER, v. n. To toss about as a fish on dry land. S.

WALLEES, s. Saddlebags, S.

Belg. valleys, Fr. valise, a portmanteau. Ihre derives the Fr. term from wad, cloth, and laes-a, to include, or lock up, vo. Wad, indumentum. The Su. G. synon. term is waetsaeck, watsaeck, q. a sack for carrying clothes.

WALLET, s. A valet. S.

WALLY, adj. Beautiful ; large. V. WALY.

WALLY-DYE, s. A toy ; a gew-gaw. V. WALY. S.

WALLY-DYE, interj. Welladay ! welaway ! alas ! S.

WALLIDRAG, WALLY-DRAGGLE, s. 1. A feeble ill-grown person ; S. wallidraggle, S. B. wary-draggel ; synon. wrig and werdie.

I have ane wallidrag, ane worm, ane auld wobat carle,
A waistit wolroun, na worthe bot wourdis to clatter.

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 48.

2. A drone ; an inactive person.

Full mony a waistless wally-drag
With waimis unweildable did furth wag.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 30.

3. A slovenly female, who, from feebleness or from want of exertion, cannot keep herself out of the mire, or in a cleanly state. S.

According to Lord Hailes, it seems "corrupted from wallowit dreg, a withered outcast, and thence by an easy metonymy signifies any thing useless or unprofitable ;" Note, Bann. P.

But this is by no means satisfactory. It appears primarily to signify the youngest of a family, who is often the feeblest. It is sometimes used to denote the youngest bird in a nest ; which in Teut. receives the dirty and contemptuous designation, kack-in-nest ; postremo exclusus, postremus in nido ; Kilian. Drag or draggle may perhaps mean, the dregs. Teut. dragt, however, signifies birth, offspring, from drag-en, kindt dragen, to be pregnant. The first part of the word may have been formed from a term used among the vulgar, synon. with Su. G. gaell, testiculus ; resembling the formation of its synon. Pockshakings, q. v., although with still less claim to delicacy.

It is probable, in wary-draggel, the pronunciation of S. B., is the proper one. In this case it seems to be merely the Goth. phrase, used in the old laws of Iceland, warg draege, the son of an exiled person ; filius ab exule genitus ; G. Andr. p. 248. Germ. warg and wrag in like manner, denote an exile ; also, an infamous person. V. WARY-DRAGGEL.

WALLY-DRAGGLE, s. Three sheaves of grain set up together, without the hood-sheaf, to be more speedily dried. S.

WALLOCK, s. The lapwing. V. WALLOCH. S.
To WALLOP, WALOP, v. n. 1. "To move quickly, with much agitation of the body or clothes," Rudd. S. B.

2. To gallop. See Sup.

He sprentis furth, and full proude waloppis he,
Hie strekand vp his hede with mony ane ne.

Doug. Virgil, 381, 20.

And sum, to schaw thair courtlie corsis,
Wald ryd to Leith, and ryn thair horsis;
And wichtlie wallop ouer the sandis:
Ye nouthir spairit spurris nor wandis.

Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592, p. 265.

Rudd. views this as from the same origin with Fr. gallop-er, E. gallop; observing that G is frequently changed into W. But whence gallop itself? Seren. derives wallop from A. S. weal-an, Su. G. waell-a, to boil; and gallop, from Su. G. loep-a, to run, Moes. G. ga being prefixed. They seem, however, radically the same: and we find Teut. wal-oppe, Fland. vliegh-walop, rendered, cursus gradarius, i. e. a gallop. This, I suspect, has originally been an inversion of Teut. op-wall-en, op-well-en, scaturire, ebullire, from wall-en, to boil, and op, oppe, up.

WALLOP, s. l. Quick motion, with agitation of the clothes, especially when in a ragged state. 2. The noise caused by this motion. 3. A sudden and severe blow. S.

To WALLOW, WALOW, v. n. 1. To wither; to fade. Cumb. dwallow, id.

So brynt the feildis, al was birnand maid,
Herbis wox dry, wallowing and gan to faid.

Doug. Virgil, 72, 16.

Laggerit lewis wallowit fernis schew. Ibid. 201, 5.

2. Metaph. applied to the face.

S. fealw*, yellow, which is evidently allied to Lat. flav-us.

WALLOWAE, s. The devil. S.

WA-LOOK, s. The suspicious downcast look of those who look away from the person to whom they address themselves. S.

WALROUN, s. V. WOLROUN.

WALSH, WELSHE, adj. Insipid, S. walsh, A. Bor. "insipid, fresh, waterish." Ray. Lincolns. id.

Doug. Virgil, 180, 4.

E. wallowish, id. Skinner derives it from Teut. walghe, nausea. Rudd. and Sibb. view S. warsh, id. as radically the same. But although walsh, and warsh, are synon., the first must be traced to Teut. gaelsch, ingratus, insuavis sapore aut odore; the second, to versch, (versse, R. Glouc. p. 216.) fresh, q. tasteless. Thus, we say that any kind of food is warsh, when it wants salt. Teut. walghe, mentioned above, gives origin to another term, nearly allied in sense. V. WAUGH.

Wamble is used in E., but only as denoting the action of the stomach, when it rolls with nausea; a sense in which the term is also used, S.

But stomach wambles, I must close,

And with my fist must stop my nose.

Cleland's Poems, p. 95.

Sibb., with considerable ingenuity, derives our v. from wame, as properly denoting the motion of an animal on its belly. Su. G. hwimla has a similar sense. Dicitur de motu vermiculari; Ihre. See Sup.

WAMBRASSEIRIS, s. Armour for the forepart of the arm. E. vambrace.

Wallace, vii. 814. MS.

—Persauyt the mornyng bla, wan and har,
Wyth cloudy gum and rak ouerquhelmyt the are.

Doug. Virgil, 202, 25.

Rudd. takes no notice of this term. It is evidently A.S. wan, wann, wonn, Wan wolcen, atra nubes. Tha wonnan niht mona onlihteth; Atram noctem luna illuminat; Boet. p. 165. V. Wonn, Lye.

2. Dark-coloured; or rather, filthy.

Sum nakit fled, and gat out off that sted,
The wattir socht, abaissit out off slepe.
In the furd weill, that was bath wan and depe,
Feill off thaim fell, that brak out off that place,
Dowkit to ground, and deit with outyn grace.

Wallace, vii. 488. MS.

Editors, not understanding the term, have substituted long; as they have changed furd to Friers.

In the Friers well that was both long and deep.

A.S. wan, wonn, also signify filthy; foedus. Wonne wagas, luridi, foedi fluctus; Boet. iii. 19. wonne waelstremas, foedi gurgites aquarum; Ibid. 30. 12. ap. Lye.

It seems uncertain, however, whether wan, in the passage last quoted, does not merely signify, lurid, q. the dark weill, or eddy of the ford.

WAN. A particle expressive of negation prefixed both to adjectives and substantives. V. VANHAP. S.

WAN, adj. Not fully round; not plump; not filled up. S.

This cumlie court thair king thai kest to keip.

That noy hes none bot newlie novaltie,

And is nocht wount for wo to woun and weip.

Full sendill sad, or [f. ar] soundlie set to sleip.

No wandrethe wait, ay wenis welthe endure.

K. Hart, i. 11.

Sibb. derives it from Teut. neg. particle wan, un, and rouwe, or rest, quies. But the term is pure Gothic. Isl. vandraedi, maxima difficultas, unde quis vix se expedire potest; Verel. p. 282. Su.G. wandraede, discrimen, difficultas. Ther eigh aeru i wandraedom; Who are not in danger of losing life. WestG. Leg. ap. Ibre. From Isl. vand-ur, difficult, full of labour and danger, vandi, any thing full of trouble and danger, Su.G. wand, evil, difficult; and raed, casus, chance, accident.  This may perhaps be traced to Su.G. wipp-a, motitare se, sursum deorsum celeriter ferri; Isl. veif-a, Teut.
wipp-en, vibrare. I hesitate whether this may not be viewed as the origin of the v. Wap. Isl. wipp-a, to vault, to leap over.
 To WAP, v. a. To wrap; to envelope; to swaddle.
 Gae, fetch a web of the silken claith,

 Dan. waaben, arma. As Alem. waffen occurs as synon.
 with harnesch, our harness,) Ihre thinks that it may have originally denoted defensive armour, as the breast-plate, &c. from waffen, to surround. But may it not be conjectured, with as much reason, that it originally signified offensive arms; from Isl. veif-a, Teut. wipp-en, to brandish?
 WAPINSCHAW, WAPINSCHAWING, s. An exhibition of

 "It was ordanit in the secound Parliament of our Souerane Lord the King, that ilk Schiref of the realme sould mony placis as war speidfull, within his Baillierie." Acts, Ja. I. 1425, c. 67. edit. 1566.

 The names of all who appeared, were to be enrolled.
 These meetings were not designed for military exercise, but only for shewing that the lieges were properly provided with arms; from A.S. waepn, weapon, and sceaw-ian, to shew. It was also provided, that a captain should be chosen for each parish to instruct the parishioners in the military exercise; for which purpose they were to assemble twice at least every month, during May, June, and July.
 The Swedes had formerly a term of a similar signification, wapna-syn, from wapn, arma, and syn-a, monstrare. V.
Ihre, vo. Moenstra. He derives the modern military term muster from Lat. monstrare.
 Our word evidently differs, in its signification, from E.
wapentake, which seems to be synon. with that division of a county called Hundred. Some, apparently without foundation, derive the term from A.S. waepn, and taec-an, to teach, q. a certain district to be taught the use of arms.
 Dr. Johns. says, that "upon a meeting for that purpose they touched each other's weapons in token of their fidelity and allegiance." Hoveden indeed derives it a tactu armo- rum; but gives a more probable account of the ceremony.
 When any one, he says, was appointed prefect of the wapentake, on a fixed day, in the place where they were wont to assemble, all the elders rose up to him, as he dismounted from his horse. He, having erected his spear, all that were present came and touched it with their lances; and thus they gave a pledge of their mutual engagement, by the contact of arms. V. Cowel.
 4 M

This practice was undoubtedly borrowed from the ancient Goths. Among them the mode of decreeing edicts by the people at large, by the clashing of their arms, was called Wapntak. The same word denoted the confirmation of a judicial edict by the touch of arms. The votes being collected, the Judge reached forth a spear, by touching which all his assessors confirmed the sentence. V. Verel. and Ihre in vo. Spelman, vo. Wapentachium, thinks that this custom is to be traced to that of the ancient Germans, and also of the Macedonians, who, when displeased with any measure in their public assemblies, were wont to express their dissatisfaction by striking their shields.

WAPPIN, s. A loose sort of dress, worn by fishermen when at work instead of their usual clothes. S.

The only sense given of wappit by Mr. Pink. is "warped, turned." But here it certainly signifies, wrapped, enveloped; Su.G. wep-a, to lap about.

To WAR, WARE, WAIR, WAYR, v. a. 1. To lay out, as expense, S., as, to war siluer, to lay out money, S., A. Bor. See Sup.

A similar phrase is used concerning one who is supposed to deserve any cross accident that befalls him; It's weil war'd on him, or at his hand, S.

3. To waste; to squander; to throw away.

Isl. ver-ia, to buy, to purchase; to sell; to make merchandise; Veria varu sinni, to sell his wares; Teut. waer-en, to promise a price. This has been deduced from waer, true, Alem. war-en, to plight faith, i. e. to verify, to give assurance that the goods sold are sufficient; as the seller was anciently bound to do. Hence E. ware, wares, mer-

Na for to stynt thare fays mycht.

Wyntown, v. 10. 547.

A.S. waren-ian, cavere sibi, defendere se. Lye (Addit. Jun. Etym.) derives E. warrant from A.S. war-ian, defendere. This is obviously the origin; analogous to Su.G. waer-a, tueri. Hence waern-a, id. waern, a tower, resembling A.S. waering, a mound, a rampart, a fortress.

WARAND, WARRAND, s. 1. A place of shelter or defence from enemies.

And thai that saw sa sudandly
That folk come egyrly prikand
Rycht betwix thaim and thair warand,
Thai war in to full gret effray. Barbour, vi. 422. MS.
The chiftanis brak array, and went thare gate,
The baneris left al blout and dyssolate,
Socht to warrant on horsbak, he and he,
Frawart thare fais, and held to the cieté.

Doug. Virgil, 397, 7.

It occurs in the same sense, O.E.

The targe was his warrant,
That none till him threw.

V. the v. Rob. de Brunne, Ellis's Spec. i. 121.

2. A surety; one who secures the fulfilment of any bargain, or warrants a purchase made by another. S.

WARBLE, s. 1. A sort of worm that breeds betwixt the outer and inner skin of beasts, S. a swelling on the back of a cow or ox, A. Bor. See Sup.

2. A lean person; a scrag. S.

A.S. wear, Teut. weer, a knot, puff, or bunch; any thing callous.

To WARBLE, v. n. To wriggle, &c. V. WRABIL.

WARD, s. 1. A division of an army.

Apoun this wyse the oistis and wardis hale
On athir part returnyt in batale.

Doug. Virgil, 430, 17.

2. A small piece of pasture ground, enclosed on all sides, generally appropriated to young quadrupeds; as, the calf-ward, the place where calves are enclosed for pasture, S. See Sup.

Within the ward I might have clos'd thee

Where well thou mightest have repos'd thee,

Amang the Laird's best fillies. Watson's Coll. i. 49.

Thus Su.G. waard, not only signifies custodia, but sepes, sepimentum, i. e. the means of keeping in safety; A.S. geard.

To WARD, v. a. To imprison.

"It appears from the old records, that a company of players were in Perth, June 3d., 1589. In obedience to an act of the General Assembly, which had been made in the year 1574—5, they applied to the consistory of the church for a licence, and shewed a copy of the play, which they proposed to exhibit. The words of the record, some of them a little modernised, are, 'Perth, June 3d. 1589, The minister and elders give licence to play the play, with conditions, that no swearing, banning, nor one [onie] scurrility shall be spoken, which would be a scandal to our religion which we profess, and for an evil example unto others. Also, that nothing shall be added to what is in the register of the play itself. If any one who plays shall do in the contrary, he shall be warded, and make his public repentance.' That is, he was to be imprisoned, and afterwards to appear in the church to be rebuked in the public place of repentance." Statist. Acc. (Perth.) xviii. 522.

E. put in ward; Su.G. waerd-a, custodire.

To WARD, v. n. To go to prison; to submit to confinement; to enter one's person in ward. S.

WARDOUR, s. A prisoner; one kept under ward. S.

WARD AND WARSEL. Security for; pledge; responsibility, S.B. "To remane upoun his ward and warsall." S.

— Ye may meet with skaith,

There's fouk gangs here, that's abler than we baith.

E'en sit you still, and rest you here with me,

And I sall ward and warsel for you be.

Ross's Helenore, p. 31.

As ward signifies keeping, warsel seems corr. from wardsel, perhaps from A.S. weard, custodia, and sell-an, tradere; q. security for delivery of what has been kept. Wachter observes that the Germ. sal, from sel-en, tradere, conveys this idea. Traditionem, praebitionem et exhibitionem ejus rei, cui annectitur — significat; Proleg. Sect. V. Su.G. waerd-a, praestare, sensu juridico.

To WARD, v. n. To award; an old forensic term. S.

WARDE, WARD, s. A decision; a determination; a forensic term, Interloquutour, synonym. See Sup.

"And ilk soytour before he is admitted and received be the Judge, should be examinat in thrie courts, gif he can make recorde of the court (of ane proces deduced in court) or report ane sufficient warde (interloquutour) or dome, anent wardes or exceptions asked in the court?" Quon. Attach. c. 36, § 3.

L.B. warda, E. award. Su.G. waer-ia signifies, in a forensic sense, to purge one's self by oath, (an oblique use of the v. signifying to defend;) whence ward, he who has purged himself in this manner; Ihre. Veria the hanum vari varder; Si juramento praestito defendens, liber erit; Seren. Addend. vo. Award.

WARDATOUR, s. The person who has the wardship of lands while the heir is a minor. S.

WARDEN, s. The name of a particular kind of pear. S.

WARDLE, s. The world, Buchan. S.

WARDOUR, s.

Off ferlifful fyne favour war thair faces meik,
All full of flurist fairheid, as flouris in June,
Quhyt, seimlie, and soft, as the sweet lillies;
New upspred upon spray as new spynist rose,
Arrayit ryallie about with mony riche wardour.

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 45.

Mr. Pink, inclines to render it "ward or division; what we call plot of a garden;" Note, p. 387. But perhaps it rather means verdure.

WARDRAIPPER, s. The keeper of the wardrobe.

The wardraipper of Venus' bour

To giff a joblet he is als doure,

As it war off ane fute syd frog.

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 90.

Joblet is probably an error for doblet, a doublet.

From wardreip, wardrep, wardrip; as wardrobe is written by Dunbar, Ibid. pp. 90, 91, 92. See Sup.

To WARE, v. a. To expend, &c. V. WAR.

WARE, s. Price; estimation.

The Dowglas in thay dayis, duchtie alquhare,

Archibald the honorable in habitationis,

Weddit that wlowk wicht, worthye of ware,

With rent and with riches. — Houlate, ii. 19.

For A.S. wer, were, capitis estimatio; or rather from ware, Su.G. waru, merx.

From the latter is formed,

WHOLE-WARE, s. The whole of any thing; the whole lot or assortment; a phrase borrowed from mercantile transactions.

"He saith, In the whole-ware of these things, the life of my soul standeth." Bruce's Eleven Sermon. l. 6. 1. V. HALE-WARE.

WARE, s. A tough and hard knot in a tree.

Bot fessynyt sa is in the ware the grip
That by na maner force, thocht he was wicht,
Furth of the stok the schaft vp pul he nicht.

Doug. Virgil, 440, 40.

A.S. wear, Belg. weer, callus, nodus, tuber; Rudd. Sibb. renders it as an adj. "War nott, hard knot in a tree;" Gl.

WARE, WAR, pret. v. Wore; from wear.

He bad him bring with him the sceptour vand,—
The collare picht with orient peirles als
That sche umquhile war about hir hals.

Doug. Virgil, 33, 42.

WARE, WAIR, s. 1. The sea-weed, called alga marina; sometimes sea-ware, S. pl. waris.

— As ane roik of the se,—

Skellyis and fomey craggis thay assay,
Rowtand and rarand, and may nocht empare,
Bot gyf thay sched fra his sydis the ware.

Doug. Virgil, 228, 31.

— Suffir that the palmes of our airis,
Hirssil on the crag almaist ilk routh and waris.

Ibid. 133, 2.

"Besydis this Kelnsay forsaid, layes Berneraybeg, haffe ane myle lange, and ane myle of breadthe, ane laiche rough ile, full of little rough craiges and how betwixt, of naturall fertile eirthe, with infinite sea-ware on every stane of the same." Monroe's Isles, p. 43.

"On this coast, great quantities of sea-weed, called ware, are thrown up on the shore, which the farmers lay on the ground, and find very profitable in raising crops of barley." P. Gamrie, Banffs. Statist. Acc. i. 472.

A.Bor. waar, or weir; in Thanet island, wore, or woor; Somner.

2. Fucus vesiculosus.

"Bladder Fucus, or common Sea Wrack. Anglis. Sea-ware, Scotis." Lightfoot, p. 904.

Spelman and Skene derive it from Fr. varech. But this properly signifies wreck, or all that is cast out by the sea. It is evidently the same with A.S. war, waur, Belg. wier, alga marina. Sae-waur, Gl. Aelfric.

WARD, part. pa. Manured with sea-weed, Orkn.

"In the spring season, after the oats are sown, the farmer gives the warded land one ploughing, which they call their fallow." P. Westray, Statist. Acc. xvi. 253.

WARE-BEAR, s. Barley raised by means of sea-weed. S.

INCOME WARE. Weeds cast in by the sea as distinguished from those which adhere to the rocks. S.

WARE, s. A wire. S.

WARE, WAIR, s. The spring. V. VEIR. S.

WARETYME, s. 1. The season of spring. 2. The early period of life; the spring-season of life. S.

WARE-COCK, s. A black-cock; perhaps cock of spring. S.

WARESTALL, s. Perhaps a stall for holding wares. S.

WARF, s. A puny contemptible creature; a dwarf. S.

To WARY, WARRY, WARYE, WERRAY, v. a. 1. To curse; to execrate; Lancash. to wish evil to. See S.

The time sal cum, quhen Turnus sal per fay
Hate and warye this spulye and this day.

Doug. Virgil, 335, 10.

Thay curs and wary fast this vengeabil were.

Ibid. 368, 40.

"The day, the day, the terrible day sall cum quhen the unhappy avaricious man sall warry the time that ever he had the brother, or sone, to quhame he bure sic fleschelic and ungodlie favour, as to steir him up to be ane gydare and rewar of Christis floke, quhilk culd not gyde himself. The malheurius prince sall warry the tyme that ever he tuke on hym the charge, quhilk wes na wayis convenient for him." Abbot of Crosraguell. Compend. Tractive, Keith's Hist. App. p. 203.

2. To bring a curse upon; wariit, wareit, really accursed.

"About this tyme deceissit the wariit creature Machomete, quilk was in the tyme of kyng Ferquhart." Bellend. Cron. B. ix. c. 21.

"Cursit and wariit is he that honouris nocht his father and mother." Abp. Hamiltoun's Catechisme, Fol. 7, b.

Thane wareit war thy weirdis and wanhap.

Maitland Poems, p. 163.

It occurs in O.E.

"Than he began to warye and to swere." Wiclif, Matt. xxvi.

"I warrye, I banne or curse.—This is a farre northren terme;" Palsgraue.

A.S. weri-an, waerg-ian, waerig-an, maledicere, execrari. Moes. G. warg-ian, damnare, and wroh-jan, accusare, seem radically the same. Junius views A.S. wreg-an, to accuse, as formed from werig-an, to curse; Gl. Goth. V. WAR-RACH.

WARYING, s. A curse; an execration.

"And to ilkane of thir cursingis & waryingis afore rehersit, the peple ansuerd Amen." Abp. Hamiltoun's Catechisme, Fol. 7, b.

To WARY, v. a. To alter, for vary.

Bot laith me war, but vther offences or cryme,
Ane rural body suld intertrik my ryme,
Thocht sum wald swere, that I the text haue waryit,
Or that I haue this volume quite myscaryit.

Doug. Virgil, Pref. 11, 55.

To WARY, v. a. To defend; to protect. S.

WARIDRAG, s. A puny hog or young sheep that loiters behind the flock. V. WALLIDRAG. S.

WARYDRAGGEL, s. "One who is dragged with mire," S.B.

"—They saw how blubber'd an' droukit the peer wary-draggels war fan they cam in." Journal from London, p. 7.

Far wary-drabble, an' sharger elf,
I hae the gear upo' my skelf,

Will make them soon lay down their pelf.

Forbes's Shop Bill, Ibid. p. 12.

V. WALLIDRAG and WRIG.

WARING, s. Wares; as synon. with Gudis. S.

To WARYS, v. a. To guard; to defend.

King Arthur Jhesu besoght, seymly with sight,

"As thou art soverane God, sickerly, and syre,

"At thow wald warys fra wo Wavane the wight!"

Gawan and Gol. iv. 1.

Su.G. waer-a, waer-ia, id. L.B. guar-ire, tueri, protegere. A.Bor. warist is evidently allied; "that hath conquered any disease or difficulty; and is secure against the future;" Grose.

WARISON, WARYSOUN, WARESONE, s. Reward.

—And hycht all Fyfe in warysoun

Robert the Bruce, that wes his fa.

Barbour, ii. 206, MS.

Luve preysis, but comparesone,
Both gentill, sempill, generall;

W A R

And of fré will gevis waresone,
As fortoun chansis to befall.

Scott, Bannatyne Poems, p. 192.

Lord Hailes renders it "remedy, recovery." In this case it would be from Fr. guarison, id. from guarir, guerir, to heal. But it seems rather to signify, reward.

This is its signification in O.E.

—Alle that him serued he brouht to warisoun.

R. Brunne, p. 24.

Chaucer uses this term for merite, in the original of Rom. Rose. Tyrwhitt observes that warisoun is donativum, Prompt. Parv. Garysoun, wareson, reward, riches; Gl. R. Glouc.

I apprehend that Fr. guerdon, and E. reward, are both from the same origin with this; which probably is Su.G. waerd, pretium, or waerd, dignus; Moes.G. wairths. For a reward is that which is given to one who is accounted worthy in some respect.

As used by Gower, it seems merely to signify provision, sustenance.

My father here hath but a lyte
Of waryson, and that he wende
Had all be lost, but nowe amende
He may well through your noble grace.

Conf. Am. Fol. 26, b. col. 1.

WARISON, s. Expl. "Note of assault."

Either receive within thy towers
Two hundred of my master's powers,
Or straight they sound their warison,
And storm and spoil thy garrison.

Lay of the Last Minstrel, C. iv. 21.

This seems radically different from the preceding; perhaps q. war-sound, from Fr. guerre, and son.

To WARK, WERK, v. n. To ache, A. Bor. yerh, S.

For quhy throw falset and subillitie,
Thay chaist away Justice, and Equitie,
For laik of quhilks my heid dois wark and yaik,
And all my body trymbill dois and schaik.

Lament. L. Scott. A. ii. 6.

The Ingliss men tuk playnly part to fle,

To socour thaim, with mony werkand wound.

Wallace, iii. 204. MS.

In edit. 1648, absurdly rendered working.

A.S. waerc, Su.G. waerk, dolor; hufwudwaerk, capitis dolor, a head-ache; waerk-a, dolere; werk, Chaucer, id. A. Bor. wark, a pain or ache. See Sup.

WARK, WARKE, s. 1. Work, S. See Sup.

"—The ministerie, as I have said, is ane warke, and no idleteth." Bruce's Eleven Sermon. A a. 8. a.

"Wark bears witness of wha well does;" Ramsay's S. Prov. p. 74.

2. In pl. The warks o' a lock or key, the ward.

WARKLY, adj. Given to work; diligent, S. Germ. wirklich, effective.

WARKLOOM, s. A tool or instrument for working, in whatever way, S. Thus the term is used as to a pen.

But gowked goose, I am right glad,
Thou art begun in write to flyte;
Sen, Lown, thy language I have laid,
And put thee to thy pen to write;
Now, Dog, I shall thee sae despite,
With pricking put thee to sick speid,
And cause thee (Curr) that warkloom quite,
Syne seek a hole to hide thy head.

V. LOME. Polwart, Watson's Coll. iii. 3.

WARKMAN, s. 1. A labourer; one who, in the country, engages in any work he can find; a jobber, S.

"So he man be a faithfull and a woorthie warkman." Bruce's Eleven Sermon. A a. 8. b.

W A R

2. Improperly used for a porter; a bearer of burdens. S. To HALD or HAUD a WARK with one. To make much of, or much ado about one. S.

WARK-DAY, s. A day on which one may lawfully work. S.

WARK, s. A fortification; as in Burnswark. S.

WARLD, s. 1. The world, S. See Sup.

I wou to God, that has the warld in wauld.

Wallace, x. 579.

Su.G. wereld, id., which has been deduced from Moes.G. wairs, Isl. ver, man, and alld, old, (aetas) age.

2. A great multitude, S.

—Standing there, I sawe

A warld of folk, and by thaire contenance

Thair hertis semyt full of displesance.

King's Quair, iii. 9.

3. It's new warlds, i. e. a complete change of customs has taken place. S.

WARLDLIE, adj. 1. Belonging to the world. 2. Secular; temporal. 3. Parsimonious; as, a warldlie body. S.

WARLD-LIKE, adj. Having nothing unnatural or monstrous in one's appearance; like the rest of mankind. S.

WARLD'S GEAR. Worldly substance. S.

NAE WARLD'S GEAR. Nothing of any description. S.

WARLD'S-WASTER, s. A complete spendthrift. S.

WARLD'S-WONDER, s. A person whose conduct is notorious and surprising. World's winner, Aberd. S.

WARLIEST, adj. Most wary; used metaph.

"Yone is the warliest wane," said the wise king,
That ever I wist in my walk in all this warld wyde.
And the straitest of stuf with richese to ring,
With unabasit bernys bergane to abide.

Gawan and Gol. ii. 15.

Instead of wist, it is vist edit. 1508.

The meaning is, "Yonder house is the best defended."

A.S. waerlic, cautus.

WARLO, s. A term used to denote a wicked person.

Hud-pykis, hurdars and gadderaris,

All with that warlo went.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 28.

This is the account given of Couatyce, or Covetousness, personified.

I haif ane quick divill to my wyfe,
That haldis me evir in sturt and stryfe:
That warlo, and sche wist
That I wald come to this gud toun,
Sche wald call me fals ladrone loun.
And ding me in the dust.

We men that hes sic wickit wyvis

In grit languor we leid our lyvis,

Ay dreifland in diseiss.

Lyndsay, S. P. R. ii. 6.

It is sometimes used as an adj. Thus the title of a poem in the Evergreen is,

A bytand ballat on warlo wives,

That gar thair men live pinging lives.

I. 51.

The term, throughout the poem, is synon. with evil, especially in reference to the temper, A.S. waer-loga, a hypocrite, a covenant-breaker; a wicked person; compounded of waere, a covenant, and loga, a liar.

WARLOCK, s. A wizard; a man who is supposed to be in compact with the devil, or to deal with familiar spirits, S.

"Warlock in Scotland is applied to a man whom the vulgar suppose to be conversant with spirits;" Johns. Dict.

"This Barton's wife had been likewise taken with him, who declared that she never knew him to have been a warlock before; and he likewise declared, that he never knew her to have been a witch before." Satan's Invisible World, p. 87.

A curious anecdote is told concerning the justly celebrated John Napier of Merchistoun, inventor of the logarithms, who, during great part of the time when he was making his calculations, resided at Gartness in the parish of Drymen.

"He used frequently, in the evening, to walk out in his night gown and cap. This, with some things which to the vulgar appeared rather odd, fixed on him the character of a warlock. It was firmly believed, and currently reported, that he was in compact with the devil; and the time he spent in study was spent in learning the black art, and holding conversation with Old Nick." P. Killearn, Stirlings. Statist. Acc. xvi. 108.

Sibb. views warlo as synon. with this term. But I have met with no proof that it is ever used in relation to sorcery. Warlock seems radically different, bearing strong marks of affinity to Isl. vardlok-r, an incantation, or magical song used for calling up evil spirits. Carmen quoddam magicum quo concinne cantato invitatur mali genii ad indicandum futura; Verel. Ind. p. 284.

It seems to have been a received opinion in this country, that the devil gave all those, who entered into his service, new names, by which they were to be called in all their nocturnal meetings; and that, if any one of them was accidentally designed by his or her proper name, the spell was dissolved. V. Satan's Invisible world, p. 14.

The same idea prevailed in Iceland. It was also believed in that country, that the souls of those, acquainted with magical arts, left their bodies in a sort of lifeless state, when they made those expeditions through the air, which were called Hamfarir, and which were undertaken for magical purposes.

Trew Scottis men that fewté maid him thar,
And gaiff gretly feill gudis at he wan;
He warnd it nocht till na gud Scottis man.

Wallace, vi. 777. MS.

In old editions, it is changed to spared.

It is also used in a neut. sense.

And swa the land abandownyt he,
That durst nane warne to do his will.

Barbour, iv. 392. MS.

A.S. wern-an, wyrn-an, to refuse, to deny; whence waernung, denial, wearne, repugnance, obstacle. Su.G. Isl. warn-a, prohibere, denegare. These may perhaps be traced to Moes.G. war-jan, prohibere. Ihre views Gr. απ-σφμα, nego, as a cognate term.

To WARNIS, v. a. To warn. S.B. A.S. warnig-an, id.

WARNISIN, s. Warning; "I've gien ye warnisin." S.

To WARNYS, v. a. To furnish a castle, or any fortified place, with that provision which is necessary, whether for defence, or for the support of the defenders.

Till Edinburgh he went in hy,
With gud men in till cumpany,
And set a sege to the castell;
That than was warnyst wondre weill
With men and wyttallis, at all rycht,
Swa that it dred na mannys fycht.

Barbour, x. 311, MS.

—Thai sa styth saw the castell,
And with that it was warnyst weill;
And saw the men defend thaim swa,
That thai nane hop had thaim to ta.

Ibid. iv. 102, MS.

It is used by R. Brunne, p. 293.

His vitale he has purueid in Brigges forto be,

His wyne were ther leid, & warnised that cite.

Su.G. waern-a, to defend, to protect; whence waern, a fortification, a castle, or the walls surrounding a castle. Germ. warn-en, munire, instruere armis. Fr. garn-ir is evidently from this source; and, among other things, signifies, to furnish, to fortify a weak place. Ihre derives waerna from waer, custodia, and naa, capere, q. to keep guard.

WARNSTOR, s. Provisions laid up in a garrison, for the sustenance of those to whom the defence of it is committed.

Than Wallace said, Falowis, I mak yow knawin,
The purwyance, that is within this wanyis,
We will nocht tyne; ger sembyll all at anys,
Gar wern Ramsay, and our gud men ilkan;
I will remain quhill this warnstor be gan.

Wallace, ix. 1197, MS.

It is one word in MS. In edit. 1648,

I will remain till all the stuffe be gone.

Warinstour, as used by R. Brunne, is expl. "defence, fortification;" Gl. Hearne.

That castelle hight Pilgrym, of alle it bare the flour:
The Sarazins kept it that tym for ther chefe warinstour.
P. 180.

It seems properly to signify, magazine, or a strong-hold for preserving provisions.

From Su.G. waern-a, to defend, or waern, a fortification, and store, Germ. steur, used nearly in the same sense as the E. word; vectigal, collecta. Thus the idea is, store laid up in a place of defence. By a similar composition, Alem. heristeura signifies military pay; brandsteur, a collection of combustibles; and Sw. kriigs-behoer, stores for an army or town.

To WARP, v. a. 1. To throw.

WARP, s. A designation in reckoning oysters, being the term used for four, Loth.

"A hundred, as sold by the fishers contains 33 warp, equal to six score and twelve. The retail hundred contains only 30 warp. Four oysters make a warp." P. Preston-pans, Statist. Acc. xvii. 69.

This is undoubtedly from the v. warp, to throw, to cast; as, in like manner, a cast of herring includes four. Both terms allude to the act of the fishermen, in throwing down a certain number at a time, when counting their fish.

To WARP, v. n. To open; patere, Virg.

For bot thou do, thir grete durris, but dred,
And grislie yettis sall neuer warp on bred.

Doug. Virgil, 164, 25.

The hundreth grete durris of that hous with thys
At thare awin willis warpit wyde, I wys.

V. preceding v.

Ibid. 165, 32.

To WARP, v. a. To surround; to involve.

Thre velis tho, as was the auld manere,
In wourschip of Erix he bad down quel,
And ane blak yow to God of tempestis fel:
Syne chagit all thare cabillis vp beliue,
His awin hede warpit with ane snod oliue.

Doug. Virgil, 153, 53.

And vther thre Euris from the deip wallis
Cachit amang the schaldis, bankis of sand,
Dolorus to se them, schap of ground, and stand,
Like as ane wall with sand warpit about.

Ibid. 16, 36.

This is undoubtedly the same with E. wrap. Dan. wrafla samen, implicare; Isl. reif-a, fasciis involvere, reif-ar fasciae.

WARPING, s. A mode of making embankments by driving in piles, and intertwining them with wattles. S.

To WARPLE, v. a. To intertwine so as to entangle. S.

To WARPLE, v. n. 1. To be intertwined; applied to children who, in tumbling and tossing, twist their limbs one through another. 2. Used in a moral sense to denote the confusion of any business. S.

To WARRACH, v. n. (gutt.) The term warrachand is applied to those who, from impetuosity of temper, are given to scolding, or to the use of abusive language, S. B.

It seems radically the same with WARY, q. v. Perhaps Isl. varg-ur, furiosus, is allied.

WARRAY, WERRAY, adj. True; real.

It is my purpos nowe til hast
Throwch wertu of the Haly Gast,
And be werray relatyowne
Thare personale successyowne,
That has ws in that fredwme set.

Wyntown, vi. Prol. 43.

Barbour, xix. 29, MS.

Belg. waar, waarachtig, Alem. uuar, Germ. wahr; Lat. ver-us, O.Fr. veraie. Wachter apprehends that the root is waer-en, esse, a word of general use in the Goth. dialects; a thing being said to be true, because it is, or really exists. To this source he is disposed to trace the Lat. term.

WARRALY, WERRALY, adv. Truly.

Doug. Virgil, 129, 36.

Belg. worstel-en, id. Teut. wersel-en, reluctari, reniti, obniti, Kilian; most probably from wers, wars, contrarius, adversus: for what is wrestling, but one opposing another, by an exertion of strength? From wers is formed O. Teut.

wers-saem, contrarius, and from wersel-en, werse-linghe, repugnantia, contrarietas. This analogy indicates their radical affinity. It is equally clear, that E. wrestle is a vitiated mode of pronunciation.

Skinner seems rightly to derive this from A.S. ware, observation, caution, and sett-an, to set; as denoting a dog employed by a thief, for watching and interrupting the deer in the forest.

WARSH-CROP, s. The third crop from Outfield. S.

WARST, adj. Worst. The superlative from War. S.

WART, in composition of adverbs, is the same with ward in Mod. Eng., as, inwart, inward, utwart, outward. Moes.G. wairths, A.S. weard, Isl. vert; Gl. Wynt. Add Alem. uerti. Wart, locus, is probably the origin. This Wachter deduces from war, ubi, E. where.

WART, WARD, s. 1. A tumulus or mound thrown up on high ground, in the Orkney and Shetland islands, for the purpose of conveying intelligence. See Sup.

"To convey intelligence readily from one place to another, and particularly to spread the alarm in case of the approach of an enemy, the latter were generally thrown up on the highest hill, and had fires of wood and other combustible matter lighted on them; and the name of Warts, or Wards, which they at present bear, has a manifest allusion to this circumstance." Barry's Orkney, p. 95.

Sometimes these were intended for beacons to direct navigators.

"The ancient inhabitants of these islands set up on the eminences around the harbours, warts, or marks to direct the course of vessels sailing along the coast, placing one near the point of each arm of the harbour, and a third near the bottom." P. Unst, Shetl. Statist. Acc. v. 184, N. 2. The beacon or fire kindled on the mound. S.

This is the same with Isl. vard, Su.G. waard, excubiae, custodia, vigilia, E. watch and ward; from vard-a, waard-a, attendere, custodire. Hence Isl. Strandavard, Su.G. strandawaard, excubiae littorales, Ihre; excubiae in litore, Verel.; Botavard, botawaard, excubiae ad speculas positae, Ihre; excubiae in promontoriis ad strues lignorum incendendas, visa classe hostili; Verel.

With warwolfis, and wild cats thy weird be to wander,

Tousled and tuggled with town tykes.

Montgomerie, Watson's Coll. iii. 16.

2. A puny child, or an ill-grown person of whatever age; pron. warwoof. Ang.

A.S. were-wulf, Su.G. warulf, Germ. werwolf, vir-lupus, lycanthropos, man-wolf. It is undoubtedly the same word which is also pron. wurl, wroul, and worlin, S. used precisely in sense second. Sibb., without any probability, thinks that "warlock may be a corruption of this word."

In Fr. the term is inverted; loup garou, or wolf-man. Wachter says, that garou is derived from Celt. gur, vir; C.B. gwr, pl. gwerin. Gwr-a, to wed; gwrach, a woman, a wife. There is no good reason to doubt that gwr is radically the same with Goth. wer, man, Isl. vair; and, may we not add Lat. vir? But as Fr. guaroul is also used, it is evident that this is merely the Goth. term with g prefixed. Hence it appears that loup, in the other, is redundant.

The Gr. term. λυκανθρωπος, corresponding in signification to warwolf, was formed from the same idea which prevailed among the Northern nations, that a man might transform himself into the shape of a wolf, and roam in search of prey, actuated by the disposition of that ferocious animal.

Cornelius Agrippa introduces Virgil, Pliny, and Augustine, as attesting this transformation.

"Virgill also speaking of certayne hearbes of Pontus, sayde:

With these, O Merim, haue I seene,

Oft times a man to haue

The fearfulle shape of wilde wolfe, and

Him selfe in woodes to saue.—

"And Pliny saithe, that one Demarchaus Pharrhasius in a sacrifice of mans bodie, which the Arcadians offered to Jupiter Liceus, tasted the inwards of a sacrificed childe & was turned into a wolfe, for the which transformation of men into wolves Augustine thinketh that Pan was called with another name Liceus, and Jupiter Liceus. The same Augustine [De Civitate Dei, Lib. xviii. c. 18.] doth recompt, that when he was in Italie, certaine women witches, like Circes, when they had giuen enchantments in cheese to straungers, they transformed them into horses, and other beasts of cariage, and when they had caried the burdens that they listed, againe they turned them into men: and that this chaunced at that time to one Father Prestantius." Vanitie of Sciences, Fol. 56, b.

Pliny elsewhere rejects this idea; Homines in lupos verti, rursumque restituti sibi, falsum esse confidenter existimare debemus, aut credere omnia quae fabulosa tot seculis comperimus. Hist. Lib. viii. c. 28.

Solinus, speaking of the Neuri, a Scythian nation, says; Neuri, ut accepimus, statis temporibus in lupos transfigurantur; dein exacto spatio, quod huic sorti attributum est, in pristinam faciem revertuntur; c. 15. See Sup.

Some, among whom we may reckon the learned Kilian, have ascribed the origin of this fable to the idea which has been entertained by persons disordered in mind, that they were actually transformed into the likeness of other animals. But Wachter justly rejects this view, as those, who were called lycanthropi, were supposed to produce this change at pleasure, and in consequence of an act of their own wills; whereas the idea, proceeding from disease, has always been a source of suffering. He apprehends that the fable had its origin from those who, at stated times, and for the purpose of celebrating certain mysteries, clothed themselves in the skins of animals, and that it was propagated by those, whose interest it was that it should be believed, that this was a real metamorphosis by the power of the deity whom they worshipped.

Finn, in his Dissertation concerning the Speculum Regale, adopts an hypothesis nearly allied to this. He observes that, as the fable of men being transformed into wolves, was common amongst the ancients in almost every country, it probably originated from the sports, in which persons appeared masked, which were celebrated from time immemorial about the season of Christmas.

Cotgr. explains Loupgarou as if equivalent to Cannibal; "a mankinde wolfe, such a one as being flesht on men and children, will rather starve than feed on any thing else."

It is surprising that Verstegan should give credit to all the fables connected with this term. "The Were Wolvis," he says, "are certain sorcerers, who having their bodies annointed with an ointment, which they make by the instinct of the Devil; and putting on a certain enchanted girdle, do not only unto the view of others seem as wolves, but to their own thinking have both the shape and nature of wolves, so long as they wear the said girdle. And they do dispose themselves as very wolves, in wourrying, and killing, and most of humane creatures.

"Of such, sundry have been taken and executed in sundry parts of Germany, and the Netherlands. One Peter Stump, for being a Were-wolf, and having killed thirteen children, two women, and one man, was at Bedbur, not far from Cullen, in the year 1589, put unto a very terrible death, the flesh of divers parts of his body was pulled out with hot iron tongs, his arms, thighs and legs broken on a wheel, and his body lastly burnt. He died with very great remorse, desiring that his body might not be spared from any torment, so his soul might be saved." Restitution, pp. 263, 264.

Those who wish to have further information on this subject, may consult Wachter, vo. Werwolf, and Keyser, Antiq. Septent. pp. 453, 494—496. V. WORLIN. The accounts given, by Isl. writers, of the Berserker, greatly resemble the fables concerning warwolves. V. EYTTYN.

Among the other fanciful names given to pieces of ordnance, or to engines for throwing stones, we find the War-wolf mentioned. It was used by Edw. I. at the siege of Stirling. With it, as we learn from Camden, he "pierced with one stone, and cut as even as a thread two vauntmures [or outer walls,] as he did before at the siege of Brechin, where Thomas Maile [Maule] the Scots man scoffed at the English artillery, with wiping the wall with his handkercheif, until both he and the wall were wiped away with a shot." Remains, Artillery, p. 266.

Matth. of Westminster calls this engine lupus belli, p. 449. Annals of Scotl. I. 279. N. If he has not mistaken the meaning of the term, as used by the E. in military affairs, it must be understood as having a different origin from that which has been explained. It may seem to confirm this, that Langtoft [ii. 826.] mentions an engine used at this siege, called a ludgare or lurdare. "This," Lord Hailes has observed, "is plainly a corruption of loup de guerre, lupus belli, warwolf." Annals, ii. 346.

Grose views the Lupus mentioned by Procopius, De Bello Goth. Lib. i. c. 27, as the same instrument with the war-wolf. Du Cange considers it as different, and as only used for defence, vo. Lupus.

Leg. gylefat.

Lyndsay, S.P.R. ii. 192. 193.

This mode of washing, which certainly does not suggest the idea of great refinement, has probably been transmitted from the Goths. It is retained in Iceland to this day. Van Troil, speaking of the fulling of wadmal, or coarse cloth, says that for this purpose "they make use of urine, which they also employ in washing and bucking, instead of soap and pot-ashes." Letters on Iceland, p. 114.

"Learn your gooddam to kirk wash;" Ramsay's S. Prov. p. 49. This has evidently the same meaning, and has a common origin, with another Proverb; "Learn your Gooddam to make kail." This is "spoken to them who officiously offer to teach them who know more than themselves." Kelly, pp. 233, 234.

Vastellum, Lat. copy. L.B. wastell-us, id., defined by Du Cange, "a more delicate kind of bread, or cake." Fr. gâteau.

It has generally been supposed, that this was the bread used with the wastell-bowl, in drinking which the Saxons, at their public entertainments, wished health to one another, in the phrase of Waes heil, i. e. Health be to you. V. Cowel. The origin ascribed to this custom in England, is so well known, that it is scarcely necessary to mention it. Rowena, the daughter of Hengist, by the counsel of her father, who wished, by the influence of her charms, to have Vortigern king of the Britons completely under his power, presented him with a bowl of wine, at an entertainment given by Hengist, saying, Waes heil, Hlaford Kyning.

W A T

It seems doubtful, however, whether the term is not rather derived from Isl. Su. G. veitsla, weitsla, a feast, from wet-a, a v. used to denote the invitation of many guests. Isl. blotveitzlor, in pl. commessiones sacrae.

The minstrels, who go about playing in the night season, both in S. and E., especially before the new year, are called waits; not, as Skinner supposes, because they wait on magistrates, &c., but because they seem to have been anciently viewed as a sort of watchmen. The word was written wayghtes, in the reign of Edw. III.; "players," says Ritson, "on the hautboy or other pipes during the night, as they are in many places at this day." E. Metr. Rom. I. WATER, WATTER, s. 1. A river, or pretty large body of running water, S.

"Baith seys and watteris geuis be vnjust merchis als mekle to sum landis, as thay reif fra vther." Bellend. Descr. Alb. c. 1.

Bellenden generally uses it to denote a river, sometimes as distinguished from a rivulet.

"Sindry small burnis discendis fra the hillis of Cheniot, and vthir montanis lyand thair about deuiding Cumbir fra Annardail, and fallis in the watter of Sulway;" Ibid. c. 5. Solveum fluvium, Boeth. It is also used when amnis occurs in the original; Ibid. See Sup.

It does not appear that A.S. waeter denoted a body of running water. Nor is Ir. uisge, easc, mentioned in Dictionaries as having a similar sense. But it is reasonable to suppose, that this was the case in ancient times; as we find it in the composition of the names of many places situated on rivers. Besides, esk and watter, in some parts of S., are promiscuously used to denote a river. Thus, in Angus, North Esk is most commonly called The Nord Watter, and South Esk The Soud Watter.

Germ. wasser is used in the sense of river, torrent, &c. V. Wachter.

2. As a generic word, it denotes any body of running water, whether great or small, S.

"Rivers in Scotland are very frequently called waters." Pennant's Tour in S. 1769, p. 93. N.

Bellenden's orthography of the word marks the pron. universally retained in S., except in the Southern counties, where it is sounded q. waitter.

3. The ground lying on the banks of a river, S.

"The water, in the mountainous districts of Scotland, is often used to express the banks of the river, which are the only inhabitable parts of the county." Minstrelsy, Border, I. 109. N.

4. The inhabitants of a tract of country watered by a certain river or brook, S.

Gar warn the water, braid and wide,

WATER-COW, s. A sort of spirit of the waters, believed to inhabit inland lakes. S.

WATER-CRAW, s. The water ouzel, S. Sturnus cinclus, Linn. Statist. Acc. xvii. 249. See Sup.

WATERFALL,* s. V. WATERSHED. S.

WATERFAST, adj. Capable of resisting the force of rain. S.

To WATER-FUR, v. a. To form furrows in ploughed ground for draining off the water. S.

WATERGANG, s. 1. The race of a mill.

"The parliament hes statute and ordanit, that the breif vnder writtin, haue cours quhil the nixt parliament, allanerly of watergangis, that is to say, of mylne leidis and nane vther thingis." Acts, Ja. I. 1433. c. 149. Edit. 1566.

2. A servitude giving a person privilege to draw water along his neighbour's ground to water his own. S.

WATERGATE, s. "I'll watch your watergate;" S. Prov.; That is, "I'll watch for an advantage over you." S.

WATER-HORSE, s. The Water Kelpie. V. KELPIE, S.

WATER-KAIL, s. Broth made without any meat in it. S.

WATER-KELPIE, s. The spirit of the waters. V. KELPIE.

WATER-MOUSE, WATER-ROTTEN, s. The water-rat. S.

WATER-MOUTH, s. The mouth of a river, vulgarly Watter-mow, S.B. Thus the mouth of South Esk is denominated in Angus.

"Prout caedem piscariae et lie cruiffies respective bon-dantur et jacent a lie water-mouth dictae aquae de Done." —Chart. K. Ja. VI. 1617. State, Fraser of Fraserfield, p. 298. Lie seems an errat. for le.

"In the mean time, I'd be glad to see one of the original charters granted by the town to the heritors of Nether Don, to know whether they have got a right to the town's fishing 'twixt the water mouths, or if the town gave it to the heritors of Dee." Lett. 1727, State, Fraser of Fraserfield, p. 320.

"—Through a great speat, of the water of Dee, thir hail four ships brake loose—and were driven out at the water-mouth by violence of the speat." Spalding's Troubles, I. 60.

WATER-PURPIE, s. Common brooklime; an herb, S. Veronica beccabunga, Linn. It seems to receive the latter part of its designation from its being somewhat of a purple colour. It is also called Horsewell grass, S. See S.

WATER-SHED, s. The highest ground in any part of a country, from which rivers descend in opposite directions, S. See Sup.

"Strathcluony, in Inverness-shire—is a very high inland tract, being the water-shed of the country between the two seas." Prize Essays, Highl. Soc. S. ii. 20.

WATER-SLAIN MOSS. "As peat earth is readily diffused in water and carried off; wherever it comes again to be deposited, we have water-born peat, or, as it is sometimes called by our country people, water-slain moss." Dr. Walker, Prize Essays, Highl. Soc. S. ii. 13.

WATER-STOUP, s. 1. A bucket for carrying water. 2. The common periwinkle; Turbo terebra, Linn. S.

WATER-TATH, s. Luxuriant grass proceeding from excess of moisture. V. TATH. S.

WATER-WADER, s. A very bad home-made candle. S.

WATER-WAGTAIL, s. The wagtail or Motacilla. S.

WATER-WRAITH, s. The spirit of the waters, S.B. V. WRAITH. See Sup.

To BURN THE WATER. To kill salmon by torchlight. S.

To GAE DOWN THE WATER. To go to wreck; to be totally lost; like corn carried down a river by a flood. S.

To RIDE THE WATER. He's no to ride the water on, he is not to be depended on; like a stumbling horse, who might drown one in crossing a ford. S.

WATER, s. The name given to a disease of sheep. S.

WATERKYLE, s. Meadow-ground possessed by the tenants of an estate by rotation. Syn. Alterkyle, perhaps a change by lot of the share. V. CAVEL. S.

WATH, s. A ford.

"The small river, Kirtle, touches the N.E. part of the parish, & the Solway Firth, or Booness water, as it is called, as its Southern boundary." P. Dornack, Dumfries. Statist. Acc. ii. 15.

"The same Scottiswath is also called Myreford by old English writers." Pinkerton's Enquiry, II. 207.

A.S. wad, Belg. waede, Lat. vad-um.

WATLING STRETE, VATLANT STREIT. A term, used to denote the milky way.

Of euery sterne the twynkling notis he,
That in the stil heuin moue cours we se,
Arthurys hufe, and Hyades betaiknyng rane,
Syne Watling strete, the Horne, and the Charle wane.
Doug. Virgil, 85, 43.

Henryson uses it in the same sense, in his account of the journeys of Orpheus, first to heaven, and then to hell, in quest of his wife Euridice.

Quhen endit was the sangis lamentable,
He tuke his harp, and on his brest can hyng,
Syne passit to the hevin, as sais the fable,
To seke his wife: but that auailit no thing.
By Wadlyng strete he went but taryng;
Syne come down throw the spere of Saturn ald,
Qubilk fader is of all thir sternis cald.

Traitie of Orpheus, Edin. 1508.

"It aperis oft in the quhyt circle callit Circulus Lacteus, the quhilk the marynalis callis Vatlant Streit." Compl. S. p. 90.

It has received this designation, in the same manner as it was called by the Romans Via Lactea, from its fancied resemblance to a broad street or causeway, being as it were paved with stars. The street itself, it is said, was thus denominated "from one Vitellianus, supposed to have superintended the direction of it; the Britons calling Vitellianus, in their language, Guctalin." Statist. Acc. xvi. 325. N.

WATRECK, interj. Expressive of astonishment; sometimes perhaps of commiseration. V. RAIK, s. 2. S.

WATTEL, s. V. WATTLE. S.

WATTY. Ye look like Watty to the worm, your look expresses disgust or great reluctance. S.

WATTIE, s. A blow; a stroke, Ang. Su.G. hwat, celer? S.

WATTIE, s. An eel, anguilla. S.

WATTIRTEICH, adj. Watertight. S.

WATTLE, s. A tax paid in Shetland. See Sup.

"Another payment exacted by the grantees of the Crown, is called the Wattle. In the beginning of the 16th century, when Popery blinded mankind, the priests begged, from these islands, money under the name of Wattle, in consideration of the extraordinary benefit which the people were to receive from the liberal distribution of holy water among them." P. Northmaven, Shetl. Statist. Acc. xii. 353.

WATTLE, s. A billet of wood. S.

To WAUBLE, v. n. "To swing; to reel," Gl. Burns, S.O.

That day ye was a jinker noble,
For heels an' win'!

An' ran them till they a' did wauble,
Far, far behin'. Burns, iii. 142.

Perhaps rather, to hobble. See Sup.

WAUCH, s. Wall.

Ay as the gudwyf brocht in,

Ane scorit upon the wauch.—Peblis to the Plav, st. 11.

A.S. wah, paries; A. Bor. wogh, id.

This marks the antiquity of the custom, retained to this day, in country tippling-houses, of marking the bill with chalk on the wall, or behind the door.

WAUCHIE, adj. Sallow and greasy. S.
 WAUCHIE (gutt.), adj. Swampy. S.
 To WAUCHLE, v. n. 1. To move from side to side in walking, like a young child. 2. To walk after a fatigued manner; WAUCHLING, walking, yet almost exhausted. S.
 To WAUCHLE, v. a. 1. To fatigue very much. 2. To puzzle. S.
 To WAUCHT, WACHT OUT, WAUGHT, WAUCH, v. a.
 To quaff; to swig; to take large draughts, S.
 And for thir tithingis, in flakoun and in skull
 Thay skynk the wyne, and wauchtis cowpys full.
Doug. Virgil, 210, 6.
 Do waucht and drink, bring cowpis full in handis,—
 And with gude will do skynk and birll the wynis.
Ibid. 250, 47.
 So Sathan led men steidfast be the mane;
 That nather Lord nor Knicht he lute alane,
 Except his coup war wachtit out alway,
 Seasonit with blaspheme, sacrilige, disdayne,
 All godlie lyf and cheritie to slay.
 Thus Nicol Burne, an apostate, writes of the Reformation; Chron. S.P. iii. 454.
 And, as thai talkit at the tabil of mony taill funde,
 Thay wauchit at the wicht wyne, and warit out wourdis;
 And syne thai spak more spedelie, and sparit no materis.
Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 46.
 Here wauch is used, and rather as a n. v.
 Sibb. supposes, without any sufficient ground, that it is "probably from Queych, a drinking cup." Rudd., with more verisimilitude, refers to A.S. veaht, irriguus. For the primary idea seems to be that of moistening the throat well. Isl. vokua, madeferi, Teut. weyck-en, macerare. V. WAK.
 E. swig is probably from a common origin, s being prefixed. Johns. derives it from Isl. swiga. He seems to have mistaken the word used by Junius, which is Isl. siug-a, sorbere, rather sugere. This may indeed be the root of the E. word. For a child is said to wacht, S. when sucking so forcibly as to swallow a considerable quantity at once. See Sup.
 WAUCHT, WAUGHT, s. A large draught of any liquid, S.
 Neist, "O!" cries Halbert, "cou'd your skill
 But help us to a waught of ale,
 I'd be oblig'd t' ye a' my life."
Ramsay's Poems, ii. 527.
 To WAUE, v. a. "To toss; to agitate."
 Quhat aenture has brocht the leuand hidder?
 Quhidder wauit wilsum by storme of the sey,
 Or at command of goddis, cum thou, quod he?
Doug. Virgil, 182, 41.
 A.S. waf-ian, fluctuare.
 To WAVE, v. a. To move backwards and forwards; to wave.
 He mov'd his shoulders, head did fling,
 From van to rear, from wing to wing.
 Some were alledging, that had good skill,
 He could not speak if he had stood still.
 Like some school boy, their lessons saying,
 Who rocks like fiddlers a playing.
 Like Gilbert Burnet when he preaches,
 Or like some lawyers making speeches;
 He making hands, and gown, and sleives wavel,
 Half singing vents this reavel ravel.
Cleland's Poems, p. 107.
 From the same origin with WAUIL and WEFFIL, q. v.
 WAVE, s. A slug or worm found in bakehouses, among the flour scattered on the earthen floor. S.

W A U

WAVELOCK, s. An instrument for twisting ropes of straw, hay, rushes, &c. Syn. Thrawcrook. S.
 To WAVER,* WAWER, v. n. 1. To wander; from A.S. waf-ian.
 And in that myrk nycht wawerand will, &c.
Wyntown, vi. 13. 105.
 V. WILL, adj. and HAMALD, adj. sense 2.
 I have not observed that the word is used in this literal sense in E. V. BELL-WAVER.
 2. To exhibit slight symptoms of delirium, in consequence of fever or some other disease. S.
 To WAUFF, v. n. To wave. V. WAFF. S.
 To WAUFLE, v. n. To waver in the air, as snow, chaff, or any light substance. S.
 WAUFLE, s. A slight fall of snow. S.
 WAUGH, WAUCH, adj. 1. Unpleasant to the taste; nauseous, S.
 "It tasted sweet i' your mou', bat fan anes it was down your wizen, it had an ugly knaggim, an' a wauch waggang," Journal from London, p. 3.
 2. A heavy, damp, unwholesome smell; as that of a newly-opened grave. 3. In a moral sense, bad, worthless; as, waugh fouk, worthless or disorderly people. S.
Teut. walghe, nausea, walgh-en, nauseare, walghigh, nauseosus. Isl. mig velger, nauseo, velge, nausea. But this is only a secondary sense. The primary meaning of the Isl. v. velg-ia is, tepefacere; G. Andr. p. 257. The transition is very natural; as liquids in a tepid state excite nausea.
 WAUINGEOUR, WAUYNIGOUR, s. A vagabond; a fugitive.
 Rutulianis, hynt your wappinnis, and follow me,
 Quham now yone wauingeour, yone ilk strangere,
 Affrayis so wyth hys vnwourthy were.
Doug. Virgil, 417, 32.
 Lye, (Addit. Jun. Etym.) properly refers to wafe, bestia erratica. V. WAFF.
 To WAUK, WAULK, WALK, v. a. 1. To full cloth, to thicken it, S. pron. wauk.
 "The sheep supply them with wool for their upper garments; this, when spun and woven, is fulled, or walked, as they term it, in a particular manner by the women." Garnet's Tour, I. 157.
 The idea of Dr. Garnet, as to the origin of the term, is similar to that of Skinner, (vo. Walker, fullo.) He derives it from the circumstance of the women sitting round the board and cloth, and "working it with their feet, one against another." "It is this part of the operation," he says, "which is properly called walking, and it is on this account that fulling mills, in which water and machinery are made to do the work of these women, are in Scotland and the north of England frequently called walk-mills." Ibid. p. 158.
 The custom, of fulling cloth with the feet, would seem anciently to have been also practised in England.
 Cloth that cometh fro the weuing is not comely to wear,
 Til it be fulled vnder fote, or in fulling stocks,
 Washen well wyth water, and with tasels cratched,
 Touked and teynted, and vnder taylours hande.
Pierce Pl. p. 84. b.
 2. To make close and matted. 3. To render callous; as when the palm of the hand is hardened by severe work. S.
 WAUKITNESS, s. Callousness. S.
 Su.G. walk-a, pressare, volutare, ut solent, qui fulloniam exercent; Belg. walck-en, Ital. gualc-are, id. Ray and Skinner view Lat. calc-are, to tread, as the origin. This has great appearance of probability, especially as A.S. swurner, a fuller, is from swern-ettan, calcitrare, conculcando agitare. But there is one difficulty. The synon.

A.S. term wealcere is undoubtedly from wealc-an, volvere, revolve, to roll; whence wealc, a revolution. This A.S. v., however, is viewed by Somner and Johns. as the origin of E. walk, to go.

To WAUK, v. n. To shrink in consequence of being wetted, S.

WAUKER, WAUK-MILLER, s. A fuller, S. walker, Lancash. Belg. walcker, Su.G. walkare, Germ. waukmul-ler. V. the v. See Sup.

WAUK-MILL, WAULK-MILL, s. A fulling-mill, S. A walk-mill, A.Bor.

"The parish—has within itself, or is in the close neighbourhood, of mills of many kinds, not only meal-mills, but flour-mills, wauk-mills, lint-mills, barley-mills, and malt-mills." P. Calder, Invern. Statist. Acc. iv. 353.

To WAUK, v. a. To watch. V. WALK. S.

WAUKER, s. A watchman, one who watches clothes during night, S. A.S. waecer, Belg. waaker. V. WALK, v.

WAUKING, s. The act of watching.—WAUKING OF THE CLAISE. The act of tending, during night, a washing of clothes, spread out on the grass to be bleached or dried. S.

WAUKING O' THE FAULD. The act of watching the sheep-fold, about the end of summer, when the lambs were weaned, and the ewes milked. S.

WAUKING O' THE KIRK-YARD. Watching the dead after interment, to prevent the inroads of resurrection-men. S.

To WAUKEN, v. a. To chastise; perhaps from Whauk. S.

To WAUKEN, v. n. 1. To awake from sleep. 2. To become animated; as, "He wauken't on his sermon."

3. To become violent in language, as in scolding. S.

WAUKENIN, s. 1. The act of awaking. 2. An outrageous reprehension. 3. Cauld waukenin, a very bad farm. S.

WAUKFERE, adj. Able to walk about. S.

To WAUL, v. n. 1. To look wildly; to roll the eyes. See S.

And in the breist of the goddes graif thay
Gorgonis hede, that monstour of grete wounder,
Wyth ene wauland, and nek bane hak in sounder.

Doug. Virgil, 257, 51.

Bot fra the auld Halesus lay to de,
And yeildis vp the breith with wawland E,
The fatall sisteris set to hand anone,
And gan this young Halesus so dyspone,
That by Euandrus wappinnis, the ilk stound,
He destynate was to caught the dethis wound.

Canentia lumina, Virg. x. 418. Ibid. 331, 16.

2. To gaze with a drowsy eye, overpowered with sleep. S.
Rudd. derives it from A.S. weall-an, furere. But it is rather from wealw-ian, to roll, Lat. volvere.

WAUL, adj. Agile; nimble. V. YAUL, or YALD. S.

WAULIE, adj. Used in the same sense. S.

WAUL, interj. Expressive of sorrow. S.

It is used by Wiclif.

"And a great storm of wynd was maad and keste wawis into the boot, so that the boot was ful." Mark iv.

A.S. waeg, weg, id. pl. wacgas. Teut. Germ. wacghe, fluctus; gurgis. Moes.G. weg-os, pl. undae, from wegs, motus, fluctuatio. The origin is evidently A.S. wag-ian, wecg-an, &c. movere, to move, to shake. The Moes.G. v. must have also been wagian, as appears from the part. pa. wagids, agitatus.

Maitland Poems, p. 279.

WAW, s. A measure of twelve stones, each stone weighing eight pounds. See Sup.

"Ane waw sould contene twelue stane: the wecht quhereof contenes aucht pound." Stat. Rob. III. c. 22. § 7.

This is certainly the same with E. wey; as, a wey of wool, cheese, &c. from A.S. waeg, waga, weg, a load. Su.G. wag signifies a pound, in which sense the A.S. term is also used.

To WAW, v. n. To caterwaul, to cry as a cat, S. A.Bor.

This seems the same with E. waul, allied perhaps to Isl.

vaele, ejulo, plango; if not formed from the sound. See S.

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 110.

It denotes feet, so loosely connected with the ankle-joints as to bend to one side when set on the ground. Thus, the phrase, shachling feet, is still used. This is evidently the same with Weffil, q. v.

To WAWL, v. n. To look wildly. V. WAUL, v. S.
 WAWS, s. pl. Waws of cheese, the crust round the width. S.

 WE, WEY, WIE, s. Conjoined with litill; 1. As denoting time.

Till his fostyr brodyr he sayis;
 "May I traist in the, me to waik
 "Till Ik a litill sleping tak?"
 'Ya, schyr,' he said, 'till I may drey.'
 The King then wynkyt a litill wey;

 And wyth-draw ws a litil we:
 Fast folow ws than sall thai,
 And sone swa moné thai brek aray.

Wyntown, viii. 38. 146.

3. As expressing degree.

Nere quham thare grew an rycht auld laurer tre,
 Bowand toward the altere ane litill we,
 That with his schadow the goddis did ouer heild.

Doug. Virgil, 56, 18.

A wee, S. signifies a short while. Ibid. 218, 55.

Ye hardy heroes, whase brave pains
 Defeated ay th' invading rout,
 Forsake a wee th' Elysian plains,
 View, smile, and bless your lovely sprout.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 104.

It is also sometimes used as equivalent to, in a slight degree. Wee, little; Wee and weny, very small, A.Bor.

This word has been viewed as an abbrev. of Teut. weinigh, little; Macpherson, Sibb. But both terms are used, A.Bor. Or of A.S. hwene, few; Lye, Addit. Jun. Etym. vo. Way-bit. But this is far from being satisfactory; as, if I mistake not, no instance of a similar abbreviation can be produced, where only part of the first syllable is retained. Teut. weinigh being apparently from the A.S. word, it is extremely improbable that these terms should be retained in our quhene, few, and at the same time in an abbreviated form.

I cannot, however, pretend to give any etymon that is not liable to objection. It is observed by Wachter, vo. Wan, that Lat. ve, in composition, has the power of diminution; as, ve-grandis, little, literally, not great; Ve-jovis, parvus Jupiter, concerning whom Ovid thus writes;

Vis ea si verbi est, cur non ego Ve-jovis aedem, Aedem non Magni suspicer esse Jovis?

As in all the examples of the use of this term, which I have observed in our old works, it occurs as a s., the sense of which is determined by the adj. conjoined, I have been apt to suspect, that we did not originally signify little, but may have been a term expressive of time or space. The use of waybit, A.Bor., for a short way, S. a wee bit, might seem to indicate, that the term had been merely A.S. waeg, weg, Isl. weg, as primarily denoting distance as to space. Way-bit would thus signify a bit of a way. It may be observed, however, that Isl. va is used to denote weight, being applied to that which contributes very little to it. Thad er va litil; parvi ponderis est: vel nullius momenti est; Verel.

WE, WEE, WIE, adj. 1. Small; little, S. See Sup.

Shakspeare has adopted this word.

"—He hath but a little wee face, with a little yellow beard." Merry Wives of Windsor.

2. Mean, as regarding station; as, "wee fowk;" people of the lowest ranks. 3. Mean, applied to conduct. S. WEENESS, s. Smallness; littleness; mean-spiritedness. S. WEAM-ILL, s. The belly-ache. V. WAMBE.

WEAN, WEEANE, s. A child, S. bairn, synon.

—Ilka day brought joy and plenty,

Ilka year a dainty wean.—Macneill's Poems, i. 19.

The name the weeane gat, was Helenore,
 That her ain grandame brooked lang before.

Ross's Helenore, p. 12.

Perhaps from A.S. wen-an, O.Belg. wenn-en, Sw. af-waen-ia, ablactare, E. to wean; Dan. afvenner, to take away lambs from their dam. It has, however, been viewed, q. wee ane, synon. with little ane, S. id. Hence Johns., in expl. wee, observes; "In Scotland it denotes small or little: as, a wee ane, a little one, or child; a wee bit, a little bit."

WEANLY, adj. Feeble; slender; ill-grown. S.

To WEAR, v. a. To conduct to the fold, or any other enclosure, with caution; as, "Stand on that side and wear that cow, dinna drive her." S.

To WEAR aff, or off, v. a. To defend from or against; as, "The lasses should wear the lads aff them," or, the lasses should keep the lads at a distance. S.

To WEAR in, v. a. 1. To gather in with caution; used to express the manner in which a shepherd conducts his flock into the fold, in order to prevent their rambling, S.

Will ye go to the ew-bughts Marion,
 And wear in the sheep wi' me?

Teut. weer-en, propulsare. Ritson's S. Songs, i. 49.

2. As a neut. v., to move slowly and cautiously. One who is feeble, when moving to a certain place, is said to be wearing in to it, S.

To WEAR inby. To move towards a place cautiously. S.

To WEAR up, or up weir. To drive cautiously, as a thief drives the cattle he has stolen. S.

To WEAR, v. a. To guard; to defend. V. WER, WERE, v. s.

To WEAR, WEIR, v. a. To stop; to restrain. S.

WEAR, WEIR, s. Force; restraint. S.

To WEAR, v. n. To last; to endure; as, "That hame-made clath wears weel." S.

WEAR, s. Clothing; apparel. "Everyday wear," a person's common dress. S.

To WEAR, v. a. Wear the jacket. To be allowed to wear the jacket of the Caledonian Hunt, without being of rank to entitle one to become a member. S.

WEARY, adj. 1. Feeble; as, a weary bairn, a child that is declining, S. 2. Vexatious, causing trouble, S. as, "the weary, or weariful fox;" Gl. Sibb. 3. Vexed, sorrowful; Gl. Ritson's S. Songs. 4. Tedious; causing languor or weariness to the mind from prolixity. S.

Sibb. derives it, in sense 2., from wary, to curse. And indeed, A.S. werig signifies malignus, infestus, from werigan, to curse. In sense 1. it is from werig, lassus, fatigued; and also in sense 3., as the same word signifies, depressus animo.

WEARIFUL, adj. 1. Causing pain or trouble; pron. wearifow, S. V. WEARY, sense 2. See Sup.

2. Tiresome in a great degree. S.

To WEARY for, v. a. To long for; to desire eagerly. S.

To WEARY on, v. a. To become weary of; to long for. S.

WEARY FA'. An imprecation. A curse befall! S.

WEARY ON. An imprecation. Equivalent to Weary Fa'. S.

WEASSES, s. pl. A species of breeching for the necks of work-horses, Orkn.; synon, with breacham.

"The oxen be yoked with cheatts [l. theatts] and haims and breachams, which they call weassis, albeit they have horns." MS. Adv. Libr. Barry's Orkn. p. 447.

Allied perhaps to Su.G. wase, Isl. vasi, a bundle of twigs or withes; as the furniture of horses was anciently made of these. V. RIGWIDDIE, TRODWIDDIE.

WEATHER, s. A fall of rain or snow, accompanied with boisterous wind; a tempest. S.

WEATHERIE, WEATHERFU', adj. Stormy. S.

WEATHER,* s. Fair weather, flattery. S.

WEATHER-GAW, s. 1. V. WEDDIR-GAW, under WEDDYR. 2. Any change in the atmosphere, known from experience to presage the approach of bad weather.

3. Any day too good for the season, indicating a reverse. 4. Any thing so very favourable as to seem an indication of a reverse. S.

WEATHER-GLEAM, s. V. WEDDIR-GLIM. S.

To WEAVE, v. a. and n. To knit; applied to stockings. S.

WEAVER, WYVER, WYBISTER, s. A knitter of stockings.

WEAVIN, s. A moment, Aberd.

"The auld wife complain'd sae upo' her banes, that you wou'd hae thought she had been in the dead-thraw in a weaven after she came in." Journal from London, p. 7.

A.S. wiffend, breathing; as we say, in the same sense, in a breath, S. This seems also the origin of E. whiff, which Johns., after Davies, derives from C.B. chwyth, flatus.

WEAZLE-BLAWING, s. A disease seeming to have its existence only in superstition. V. CATTER. S.

WEB, s. The covering of the entrails, the cawl, or omentum, S. apparently denominated from its resemblance to something that is woven; as in Sw. it is called tarm-naet, q. the net of the intestines.

WEBSTER, s. 1. A weaver, S. A. Bor.

Need gars naked men rin,

And sorrow gars websters spin.

Ferguson's S. Prov. p. 26.

2. A spider, because it weaves a web to catch its prey. S.

A.S. webbestre, textrix, a female weaver. The use of this term indicates that, among our forefathers, the work of weaving was appropriated to women. This, it is well known, was the case among the Greeks and other ancient nations, who reckoned it an employment unworthy of the dignity of man. Hence the frequent allusions to this, in the poets.

—— Tibi quam noctes festina diesque
Urguebam, et tela curas solabar aniles.

Virg. Æn. ix. 489.

We find, indeed, that the Roman writers make mention of Textores, or male weavers. But this name was given to the slaves employed in this business, when, in consequence of the increase of luxury, it came to be despised by women of rank. For, in early ages, it was accounted an employment not unworthy of queens. It appears that, among the Jews also, and other eastern nations, women were thus engaged. A loom seems to have been part of the furniture of the faithless Delilah's chamber; as she was no stranger to the art of weaving, Judg. xvi. 12—14. Solomon gives such a description of the good wife, as implies that she wove all the clothing worn by her household; Prov. xxxi. 18—24. V. WOB, WOBSTER.

WECHE, s. A witch.

"Ane weche said to hym, he suld be crounit kyng afore his deith." Bellend. Cron. B. xvii. c. 8.

A.S. wicca, wicce, id.

WECHT, WEIGHT, WEGHT, s. 1. An instrument for winnowing corn, made in the form of a sieve, but without holes.

—— Ane blanket, and ane wecht also,

Ane schule, ane scheit, and ane lang flail.

Bannatyne Poems, p. 159.

—Ay wi' his lang tail he whiskit,

And drumm'd on an ald corn weight.

Jamieson's Popular Ball. i. 299.

"You shine like the sunny side of a shernie weight."

S. Prov. Kelly, p. 378. Weght, Ramsay. V. SHARNY.

Meg fain wad to the barn gaen,

To win three wechts o' naething;

But for to meet the deil her lane,

She pat but little faith in.

Burns, iii. 134.

The rites observed in this daring act of superstition, are thus explained in a note.

"This charm must likewise be performed, unperceived, and alone. You go to the barn, and open both doors, taking them off the hinges, if possible; for there is danger, that the being, about to appear, may shut the doors, and do you some mischief. Then take that instrument used in winnowing the corn, which, in our country dialect, we call a wecht; and go through all the attitudes of letting down corn against the wind. Repeat it three times; and the third time an apparition will pass through the barn, in at the windy door, and out at the other, having both the figure in question, and the appearance or retinue, marking the employment or station in life."

There are two kinds of wechts, S.B. The one is denominated a windin wecht, immediately used for winnowing, as its name intimates. This is formed of a single hoop covered with parchment. The other is called a maund-wecht, having more resemblance of a basket, its rim being deeper than that of the other. Its proper use is for lifting the grain, that it may be emptied into the windin wecht. It receives its designation from maund, a basket.

Germ. faecher, fechel, focher, fucher, an instrument for winnowing; Belg. wayer, more properly written vecher, a fanner or winnower, from Germ. wech-en, weh-en, Belg. wai-en, ventum facere; Wachter. Su.G. weft-a, ventilare. This is the natural origin of wecht; and there is every reason to suppose that it is a very ancient term. As Lat. vent-us, has been deduced from Gr. αειν, flare, E. wind is evidently allied; being formed from wai-en, id. of which Junius views it as the part. wayend, q. blowing.

2. A sort of tambourin. See Sup.

In May the plesant spray vpspringis;
In May the mirthfull mavis singis:
And now in May to madynnis fawis,
With tymmer wechtis to trip in ringis,
And to play vpcoill with the bawis.

Scott, Evergreen, ii. 186. MS.

It seems to receive this name from its resemblance of the instrument employed in winnowing; the word tymmer being conjoined, for the sake of discrimination, to denote that it is wooden, whereas the proper wecht is made of skin.

To WECHT, v. a. To fan; to winnow. S.

WECHTFUL, s. As much as a wecht can contain, S.
pron. wechtful.

WECHT, s. 1. Weight. 2. The standard by which any thing is weighed.—To WECHT, v. a. To weigh. S.

WECHTY, adj. Expensive. S.

WED, s. A pledge.

To WED, v. a. To pledge. V. WAD, Hence,

WEDKEEPER, s. One who preserves what is deposited in pledge.

"For as to this conscience, it is a faithfull wedkeeper; the gages that it receiveth, it randeris, of good turnes it giveth a blyith testimonie, of evil turnes it giveth a bitter testimonie." Bruce's Eleven Sermons, 1591, Sign. C. 4. 2.

WED, s. Woad. V. WADD. S.

To WED a Heretage. To enter on possession of an estate. S.

WEDDERBOUK, s. The carcass of a wedder. S.

WEDDERDAIS, WEDDERDAYIS. A particular season of the year, but uncertain; perhaps the time of sheep-shearing, or mild weather; or the Borrowing Days. S.

WEDDERFU', WEATHERFU', adj. Unsettled; stormy; applied only to the weather in a very bad day. S.

WEDDYR, WEDDIR, WEDDER, s. 1. Weather; used as a general term. See Sup.

He thoct he to Kyntyrr wald ga,
And sa lang soiwyrnyng thar ma,
Till wyntir wedder war away.—Barbour, iii. 387. MS.
And in the calm or loune weddir is sene,
Aboue the fludis hie, ane fare plane grene.

Doug. Virgil, 131, 42.

I traist not with this wedder to wyn Itale,
The wynd is contrare brayand in ouer bak sale.

Ibid. 127, 49.

2. Wind.

And all the weddrys in thaire fayre
Wes to thare purpos all contrayre.

Wyntown, vi. 20. 105.

And thare be a tempest fell
Of gret weddrys scharpe and snell,
Of fors thai behowyd to tak
Quhyle land, and thame for battayle make.

Ibid. vii. 10. 184. also viii. 6. 54.

A.S. waeder, Teut. weder, Alem. weter, Isl. vetur, coeli temperies, "the weather good or bad," (Somner,) Su.G. waeder, id. also the wind; O.Dan. vedur, ventus, turbo. This shews the origin of the term weather-bound, i. e. detained by wind or bad weather. One might almost conjecture, that this were the origin of the term winter, which in Isl. is vetur, very nearly allied to vetur, vedur, weather; as if denominated from the storminess of the weather, which is the characteristic of this season. Ihre, however, derives it from waat, humidus.

Weder seems to retain the sense of storm, Ywaine and Gawin.

The king kest water on the stane,
The storme rase ful sone onane,
With wikked weders kene and calde,
Als it was byfore-hand talde;
The king and his men ilkan
Wend tharwith to have bene slane;
So blew it stor with slete and rayn.

Ritson's E.M.R. i. 55. V. also p. 16. v. 411.

WEDDIR-GAW, s. Part of one side of a rainbow, appearing immediately above the horizon, viewed as a prognostic of bad weather; pron. weather-gaw, S. In some parts of the country, this is called a dog, also a stump.

The term weather-gaw, although I have not observed it in any dictionary, is used in England, to denote the secondary rainbow. This is analogous to Germ. wasser-gall, repercussio iridis; from wasser, humor, moisture, and gall, splendor. Hence Wachter renders wasser-gall, splendor pluvius; referring to A.S. gyl, splendit, Benson.

A weather-gaw, as the term is used in S., corresponds to Isl. vedr-spaer, literally, that which spaes or foretells bad weather; Landnamab. p. 264. Our term seems formed in the same manner with Isl. haf-galle, which has precisely the same signification; Meteorum perlustre in mari, ante ventos apparens; G. Andr. p. 82, col. 2. As haf signifies the sea, one might suppose that the other component term were Isl. galle, naevus, vitium, q. a defect in the weather; did not the explanation given by G. Andr. confirm the sense assigned to gall by Wachter.

WEDDIR-GLIM, s. Expl. "clear sky near the horizon; spoken of objects seen in the twilight or dusk; as, between him and the wedder-glim, or weather-gleam, i. e. between him and the light of the sky." Gl. Sibb.

A.S. weder, coelum, and gleam, glaem, jubar, splendor; Teut. weder-licht, coruscatio.

To WEDE, WEID, WEYD, v. a. To rage; to act furiously, part. pr. wedand.

In this meyne tyme Athelred,
Edgare the pesybil sowne, we rede,
Of Ingland tuk possessyowne,
Scepter, and coronatyowne,
Quhen the Denmarkis wes wedand,

Wyntown, vi. 15. 63.

Off thir paynys God lat you neur preiff,
Thocht I for wo all out off wit suld weid.

Wallace, ii. 204. MS.

Quhen Wallace saw scho ner of witt couth weid,
In his armess he caught hir sobrelly,
And said, "Der hart, quha hass mysdoyne ocht, I?"
"Nay I," quoth scho, "hass falslye wrocht this trayn;
"I haiff you sald, rycht now ye will be slayn."

Ibid. iv. 752. MS.

Mr. Ellis interrogatively expl. it, "She could not imagine any contrivance;" Spec. I. 355.

And he for wo weyle ner worthit to weide;
And said, Sone, thir tithingis sittis me sor.

Ibid. i. 437. MS.

The term not being understood, editors have taken the liberty of altering the phraseology, as in Edit. 1648.

And he for woe neare swelt of this weede.

In this passage it might be viewed as a s.

So mekill baill with in his breyst thar bred,

This is certainly the same with wytenon-fa, Aberd.

"I was fley'd that she had taen the wyten-on-fa, an' inlakit afore supper, far she shuddered a' like a klippert in a cauld day." Journal from London, p. 7.

This is rendered "trembling, chattering." But it is the term generally used in the North, to express that disease peculiar to women, commonly called a weid; weidinonfa, Ang.

We might suppose that it were allied to A.S. wite, pain, suffering, calamity, witn-ian, to punish, to afflict, wit-nung, punishment; Su.G. wit-a, to punish, wite, punishment, also any physical evil, &c. But Wedonfaw is merely the onfall or attack of a weid, Border. Onfaw and weid are sometimes used as synon. V. WEID, s.

Dr. Johns. very oddly derives the E. word from Fr. eaux, waters. But both the S. and E. terms are evidently allied to Isl. vos, voesa, veisa, humor, mador, humectatio, perfusio aquae; G. Andr. vo. Vaete, pp. 249, 250. Dan.-Sax. waes, id.; A.S. wos, wose, liquor, wosing, moist, "Succi plenus, full of juice or moisture," Somner. G. Andr. views Germ. wasser as formed from wass the genit. of Isl. wattn; and Isl. oes signifies the mouth of a river.

WEIGHT, WEGHT, s. An instrument for winnowing corn. V. WECHT.

WEIK, WEEK, s. A corner or angle. The weiks of the mouth, the corners or sides of it, S. wikes, A. Bor. id. The weik of the ee, the corner of it, S. See Sup.

Auld Meg the tory took great care

To weed out ilka sable hair,

Plucking out all that look'd like youth,

Frae crown of head to weeks of mouth.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 496.

It is sometimes written wick. V. example, in Wick, s. a bay.

Su.G. wik angulus, oegen wik, the corner of the eye; Alem. geuwig, id. Teut. flexio, cessio. Perhaps hoeck, angulus, is radically the same.

The terms, in different languages, originally denoting any angle or corner, have been particularly applied to those formed by water. A.S. wic, the curving reach of a river; Teut. wijk, id. Su.G. wik, Isl. vik, a bay of the sea; whence pirates were called Viking-ur, because they generally lurked in places of this description. See Sup.

The town of Wick in Caithness seems to be denominated from its vicinity to a small bay, although it has been otherwise explained.

"The ancient and modern name of this parish, as far as can now be ascertained, is that of Wick, an appellation common all over the Northern continent of Europe, supposed to signify the same with the Latin word vicus, a village or small town, particularly when lying adjacent to a bay, or arm of the sea, resembling a wicket." P. Wick, Caithn. Statist. Acc. x. i. V. WICK, s.

To HING BY THE WEIKS OF THE MOUTH. To keep the last hold of any thing; to keep hold to the utmost. S.

WEIL, WEILL, s. 1. Prosperity; advantage, See S.

Wallace, ix. 706. MS.

Sibb. justly observes that this, as prefixed to adjectives, is "commonly used in a good sense, as sere [sair] in a bad." V. FEIL.

To WEILD, v. a. 1. To obtain, by whatever means; to manage, so as to accomplish. Weild be his will, if he obtain his desire.

He rekkys nowthir the richt, nor rekles report,

Al is wele done, God wate, weild he his wyll.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 238. a. 28.

2. To enter on possession of an estate ; used as a n. v.

Giff ony deys in this bataille,

A.S. wem, wemm, labes, macula. E. wem signifies a spot ; also, a scar. V. WEMMYT, UNWEMMYT.

WEIR of Law. The act of a person, charged with a debt of which there is no legal evidence, whether by contract or by the presence of witnesses, who engages, in the next court, to clear himself of it by his own oath, supported by the oaths of five compurgators, who shall attest their belief that he swears truly. This is synon. with the English forensic phrase, Wager of Law. S.

—"A Borgh is foundin in a court vpon a weir of law," &c. Acts, Ja. I. 1429, c. 130. V. BORCH, s.

Perhaps from A.S. waer, wer, foedus, pactum ; whence waer-borh, wer-borh, fidejussor, sponsor.

To STREK A BORGH APONE A WEIR OF LAW. To enter into suretyship that the person shall legally purge himself from the crime charged against him. S.

WEIRD, WERD, WERDE, WEERD, s. 1. Fate ; destiny, S.

Now will I the werd rehers,
As I fynd of that stane in wers ;

Ni fallat fatum, Scoti quocumque locatum Invenient lapidem, regnare tenentur ibidem.

B[u]t gyf werdys falyhand be,
Quhare-evyr that stane yhe segyt se,
Thare sall the Scottis be regnand,
And Lorddys hale oure all that land.

Wyntown, iii. 9, 43, 47.

How euer this day the fortoun with thame standis,
Bruke wele thare chance and werd on athir handis.

Doug. Virgil, 317, 18.

But they'll say, She's a wise wife that kens her ain weerd.

Song, Ross's Helenore, p. 133.

2. It seems used as equivalent to prediction.

Altho' his mither, in her weirds,

Foretald his death at Troy,

I soon prevail'd wi' her to send

The young man to the ploy.

Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 18.

Weird Sisters, the Fates. This corresponds to Lat. Parcae.

The remanant hereof, quhat euer be it,
The weird sisteris defendis that suld be wit.

Doug. Virgil, 80, 48.

i. e. forbid that it should be known.

The weird sisters wandring, as they were wont then,
Saw ravens rugand at that ratton by a ron ruit.
They mused at the mandrake unmade like a man,
A beast bund with a bunewand in an auld buit.

Montgomerie, Watson's Coll. iii. 12.

They are sometimes denominated the Weirds.

Wo worth (quoth the Weirds) the wights that thee wrought ;

Threed-bair be thair thrift, as thou art wanthrevin.

Ibid. p. 14.

3. It is used in the sense of fact, as denoting something that really takes place ; as, "After word comes weird ; fair fall them that call me Madam." 4. Fate is also personified under the name of Weird used in the singular.

A.S. wyrd, fatum, fortuna, eventus ; Wyrde, Fata, Parcae ; Franc. Urdis. Isl. Urd is the name of the first of the Fates, which G. Andr. derives from verd, fio, verd-a, fieri, in the same manner as our weird, werd, seems to be from Teut. werd-en, A.S. weord-an, wyrd-an, id. V. WORTH, v. To WEIRD, WEERD, v. a. 1. To determine or assign as one's fate.

An' now these darts that weered were

To tak the town o' Troy,

To get meat for his gabb, he man

Against the birds employ.

Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 6.

The part. pa. is commonly used, S.B.
2. To predict; to assign as one's fate in the language of prophecy.

I weird ye to a fiery beast,
And relieved sall ye never be,
Till Kempion, the kingis son,
Cum to the crag, and thrice kiss thee.

Minstrelsy, Border, xi. 103.

And what the doom sae dire, that thou
Doest weird to mine or me?

Jamieson's Popul. Ball. i. 238.

3. To make liable to, to place in the state of being exposed to, any moral or physical evil. S.

WEIRDLESS, WIERDLESS, adj. 1. Thriftless; not prosperous, S. It is applied to those with whom nothing prospers; and seems to include both the idea of their own inactivity, and at the same time of something cross in their lot.

2. Destitute of any capacity to manage worldly affairs. S.
WEIRDIN, WIERDIN, part. adj. Employed for the purpose of divination. S.

WEIRDLESSNESS, s. Wasteful mismanagement. S.

WEIRDLY, adj. Happy; prosperous. S.

WEIRIEGILLS, WEERIGILLS, s. pl. Quarrels. In the weiriegills, in the act of quarrelling or brawling. S.

WEIRS. In weirs, in danger of. V. WIERS. S.

To WEISE, WYSE, v. a. 1. To use caution or policy, for attaining any object in view; to prevail by prudence or art, S., pron. as E. wise.

He warily did her weise and wield,
To Collingtoun-Broom, a full good beild,
And warmest als in a' that field. Watson's Coll. i. 41.

2. To guide; to lead; to direct, S. "to train," Gl. Shirr.

To wyse a-jee, to direct in a bending course. See S.

Driving their baws frae whins or tee,

Their's no nae gowfer to be seen;

Nor dousser fowk wysing a-jee

The byast boulds on Tamson's green.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 205.

3. "To turn; to incline;" Gl. Sibb. S. See Sup.

To weise a stane, to move it when it is a heavy one, rather by art than by strength.

"Every miller wad wyse the water to his ain mill." Ramsay's S. Prov. p. 25.

4. To draw or let out any thing cautiously, so as to prevent it from breaking; as in making a rope of tow or straw, one is said to weise out the tow or straw. 5. To Weise in or out, To allow to go in or out, by removing any impediment; as by opening a door. S.

From Teut. wys-en, Su.G. wis-a, docere, ostendere, whence wise, dux; Alem. uuis-en, Germ. weis-en, ducere. Die dine scaf uuisen ad pascua vitae; Who lead thy sheep to the pastures of life; Willeram. i. 7.

This word may have been originally borrowed from a pastoral life. To weise the sheep into the fauld or bught, is a phrase still used by our shepherds.

To WEISE, WYSE, v. n. To incline, S.

But see the sheep are wysing to the cleugh;

Thomas has loos'd his ousen frae the pleugh.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 7.

WEYSE, VISE, s. The indication of the direction that a mineral stratum has taken, when interrupted in its course. S.

WEYSH, WYSHE, interj. A term used for directing a horse to turn to the right hand. V. HAUP. S.

W E L

WEIST, s. The west. S.

To WEIT, v. n. To try; to make inquiry.

Refreschit he wes with meit, drynk, and with heit,
Quhilk causyt him throuch naturall courss to weit
Quhar he suld sleipe, in sekyrnes to be.

Wallace, v. 346, MS.

This v. is undoubtedly formed from that which signifies to know, S. wat, wait, E. wit, wot. The same formation occurs in other Northern languages. Su.G. wit-a, to prove, is formed from wet-a, to know; Germ. wiss-en, certificare, facere ut cognoscat, from weiss, certus. Moes.G. wit-an, to know, is also used as denoting observation and watching. A.S. wit-an primarily signifies, scire; in a secondary sense, to take care, curare, providere. Wachter indeed denies the affinity between the two ideas. "It is one thing," he says, "to know, and another to verify." But the observation made by Ihre is unanswerable. Speaking of wit-a, probare, he says; Est verbum facessans a wet-a, scire; quid enim aliud est argumentis probare, quam facere, ut alter rem certo resciscat?

WEIT, WEET, s. Rain, S.

Skars was this said, quhen that ane blak tempest
Brayis but delay, and all the lift ouerkest,
Ane huge weit gan down poure and tumbill.

Doug. Virgil, 151, 6.

—To the weet my ripen'd aits had fawn.—

Fergusson's Poems, xi. 6.

A.S. waeta, humiditas, Isl. vaeta, pluvia. This seems radically the same with Moes.G. wate, aqua, whence water.

To WEIT, WEET, v. a. To wet, S.

"Ye breed of the cat, you wad fain hae fish, but you hae nae will to weet your feet;" Ferguson's S. Prov. p. 35.

White o'er the linns the burnie pours,

And rising weets wi' misty showers

The birks of Aberfeldy.

Burns, iv. 271.

WEIT, WEET, adj. Wet, S. Weety, S.B.

To WEIT, WEET, v. n. To rain; as, "It's ga'in to weet." S.

To WEIZE, v. n. To direct. V. WEISE. S.

WELANY, s. Damage; injury; disgrace.

Bot Schyr Amery, that had the skaith

Off the bargane I tauld off er,

Raid till Inland till purches ther

Off armyt men gret cumpany,

To weng him off the welany

That Schyr Eduuard, that noble knycht,

Him did by Cre in to the fycht.

Barbour, ix. 545, MS.

In like manner, Hardyng says of the battle of Cressy;

The kyng Edward had all the victory,

The kyng Philip had all the vilany.

Chron. Fol. 183, a.

L.B. villania, injuria, probum, convicium; Du Cange. WELCOME-HAIM, s. 1. The repast presented to a bride, when she enters the house of a bridegroom, S.

The entertainment given, on this occasion, is in Isl. called hemkomsel, from hem, home, kom-a, to come, and oel, a feast, literally, ale (cerevisium;) q. the feast at coming home. Convivium, quod novi conjuges in suis aedibus instruunt; Ihre, vo. Jul.

2. A computation among the neighbours of a newly-married pair on the Monday after they have been kirked. S.

To WELD, v. n. To possess. V. WEILD.

WELE, WELL, s. A whirlpool; an eddy, S. pron. wiel, wheel; Lancash. weal. See Sup.

My mare is young, and very skiegh,
And in o' the weil she will drown me.

Minstrelsy, Border, i. 202.

Whyles in a wiel it dimpl't.

Burns, iii. 137.

A.S. wael, Teut. weel, wiel, vortex aquarum. These terms might seem to have a common origin with wall, a wave; A.S. weall-an, Germ. wall-en, to boil, to bubble up; wallen des meers, the swelling of the sea. It must be observed, however, that Teut. wiel seems the same with the term corresponding to our wheel. Hence Kilian renders it; Profundus in amne locus quo aqua circumagitur.

V. WELL-EY. Hence,

WEIL-HEAD, s. The same with weil.

They douked in at ae weil-head,

And out ay at the other.

Minstrelsy, Border, xi. 47.

To WELL, WALL, v. a. 1. To forge, in the way of beating two or more pieces of metal into one mass, by means of heat, S.; weld, E. See Sup.

Ane huge grete semely tergett, or ane scheild,

Qubilk onlie nicht resisting into feild

Agane the dynt of Latyn wappinnis all,

In euery place seuen ply thay well and cal.

Doug. Virgil, 258, 16.

Rudd. refers to A.S. well-en, furere, aestuare; "because, before the separate pieces can be incorporated, they must be almost boiling hot." This learned writer does not seem to have observed, that the A.S. v. signifies to be hot, or very hot, in general. Hence weallende fyr, fervens ignis. Bryne the wealleth on helle, Incendium quod fervet in inferno; Lye. As far as we can judge from analogy, this seems to be the origin. For Su.G. waelt-a, aestuare, is used in the same sense, signifying also to weld. Seren., however, thinks that it may be traced to Isl. vaul-r, vol-r, jugum in cultro, versus aciem; as in Sw. aeggwella yxor, ferrum securibus jungere, ut apta fiat acies.

2. In a neut. sense, to be incorporated; used metaph.

Thy Lords chaste loue, and thy licentious lusts

From thy divided soule one other thrusts.

Pleasure in him, and fleshlie pleasure fall

So foule at strife, they can, nor mixe nor wall.

More's True Crucifixe, p. 200.

3. To Wall to. To comply with; to consent to; from the idea of uniting metals into one mass. S.

As v. n. it is also used literally. Coals are said to wall, S., when they mix together, or form into a cake.

WELL, s. Good; nearly the same with E. weal.

"The wise man Solomon, the mirrour of wisdom, and wondir of the world, was sent into this world as a spy from God for the well of man." Z. Boyd's Last Battell, pp. 477, 478.

WELL IS. Well is that man in whose mouth this word is put; an old phraseology. S.

WELLE, s. Green sward.

Al in gleterand golde gayly ho glides

The gates, with Sir Gawayn, bi the grene welle.

Sir Gawan and Sir Gal. i. 3.

It seems evident, that this is originally the same with Fail, q. v.

WELL-EY, WALL-EE, s. That part of a quagmire, or shaking marsh, in which there is a spring. S.

"Thay knew nocht the ground, and fell sumtymes in swardis of mossis & sumtyme in Well Eys." Bellend. Cron. B. v. c. 3.

WELL-HEAD, s. The spring which supplies a marsh. S.

WELL-STRAND, s. A stream from a spring. S.

WELL-GRASS, s. Water-cresses. Syn. Well-herbes. S.

WELLIT, Houlate, ii. 15.

The wayis quhair the wicht went wer in wa wellit,

Wes nane sa sture in the steid mycht stand him astart.

This may either signify, drowned in sorrow, from A.S. waell-an, aestuare; or, vexed with sorrow, Su.G. waell-a, angere, A.S. waelled, waelid, vexatus.

WELL-KERSES, s. pl. Water-cresses, S. called also wall- or well-grass.

A.S. wille-cerse, rivorum, i. e. aquaticum nasturtium; from wille, scaturigo, rivus, and cerse, nasturtium.

WELL-MAKER, s. A person who digs or forms wells. S.

WELL-SET, part. adj. Well-disposed; partial. S.

WELL-SITTING, part. adj. Favourably disposed. S.

WELL-WILLAND, s. A wellwisher.

—All othire gudis halyly,

That langyd til hym, or til hys men,

And of his welle-willandis then,

Of this Erle the mychty kyn

Had gert bathe hery, wast, and bryn.

V. WEIL-WILLIE.

Wyntown, vii. 9. 562.

WELL-WILLING, adj. Complacent.

"They came in a loving & well-willing manner to enquire."—Mr. Ja. Melvill's MS. Mem. p. 298.

WELSCHE, adj. Insipid. V. WALSH.

To WELT, v. a. 1. To throw; to drive.

For the Troianis, or euer thay wald ceis,

Thare as the thekest rout was and maist preis,

Ane huge wecht or hepe of mekil stanys

Ruschis and weltis down on thame attanis.

Doug. Virgil, 295, 32.

2. v. n. To roll.

And than forsoith the granys men nicht here

Of thaym that steruyng and doun bettin bene,

That armour, wappinnis, and dede corps bedene,

And stedis thrawand on the ground that weltis,

Mydlit with men, quhilk yeild the goist and sweltis.

Doug. Virgil, 387, 1.

i. e. Which roll on the ground in agony, or in the throes of death.

A. Bor. to walt, to totter, to lean one way; to overthrow. Moes.G. walt-ian, A.S. waelt-an, Isl. vaelt-a, Dan. vaelt-er, volvere, Lat. volut-are. Welter has the same origin; although more immediately allied to Teut. welter-en, Sw. weltr-a, Fr. veault-er.

To WELTER, v. a. 1. To roll. To welter a cart, S. to turn it upside down. The E. v. seems to be used only in an active sense; although O.E. waultre is synon. with wallow; Huloet. V. WELT.

For sum welteris ane grete stane vp ane bra,

Of quhom in noumer is Sisyphus ane of tha.

Doug. Virgil, 186, 12.

2. To overturn.

Thare is na state of thare style that standis content,

Knycht, clerk nor commoun,

Burges, nor barroun,

All wald haue vp that is doun,

Welterit the went.—Doug. Virgil, Prol. 239, a. 20.

WELTERER, WALTERAR, s. A person who overturns by violent means. S.

WELTH, s. 1. Welfare; Wyntown.

2. Abundance of any thing, S.

WEMELES, adj. Blameless; immaculate.

Thow sall rew in thy ruse, wit thow but wene,

W E N

Or thou wonde of this wane wemeles away.

Gawan and Gol. i. 8.

"Without appetite," Gl. Pink. But it is merely A.S. wem-leas, faultless. V. WEIN.

WEMMYT, part. pa. Disfigured; scared.

Sa fast till hewyn was his face,
That it our all ner wemmyt was.
Or he the Lord Douglas had sene,
He wend his face had wemmyt bene.
Bot neur a hurt tharin had he.
Quhen he unwemmyt gan it se,
He said that he had gret ferly
That swilk a knycht, and sa worthi,
And prysst of sa gret bounté,

And he answerd thar to mekly,
And said, "Lowe God, all tym had I
"Handis my hed for to wer."

Barbour, xx. 368. 370. MS.

Mr. Pink. expl. v. 368. "His face was all hewed as with a chissel, scared with wounds." This is undoubtedly the sense. But neither in his, nor in any former edition, as far as I have observed, is the reading of the MS. given. He gives wonnyt, and unwonnyt. In other editions we find wounded and unwounded.

A.S. waemm-an, wemm-an, to corrupt, to vitiate, to make foul; wemm, a blot, a blemish; Somner., A. Bor.

To WENDIN, v. n. To wane; to decrease.

Than will no bird be blyth of thé in boure;
Quhen thy manheid sall wendin as the mone,
Thow sall assay gif that my song be seur.

Henrysone, Bannatyne Poems, p. 132.

From Teut. wend-en, verttere, or A.S. wan-ian, decrease, whence E. wane.

WENE, s. But wene, doubtless.

This gowand graithit with sic grit greif,
He on his wayis wiethly went, but wene.

Henrysone, Bannatyne Poems, p. 133.

A.S. wene, opinio, conjectura; Somner.

WENE, s. A vestige or mark by which one discovers his way.

I knaw and felis the wenys and the way
Of the auld fyre, and flamb of luffis hete.

Doug. Virgil, 100, 6.

Evidently the same with the preceding word.

To WENG, v. a. To avenge.

— He tuk purpos for to rid
With a gret ost in Scotland;
For to weng him, with stalwart hand,
Off tray, of trawail, and of tene,
That done tharin till him had bene.

Fr. veng-er. Barbour, xviii. 232. MS.

WENNYNG, WENNYT, Barbour, v. 171. 273. V. WENNYNG.

WENS DAY, s. Wednesday, S. O.E. Wensdaye, id. Huloet. Abcedar.

Belg. Weensdagh, Isl. Wonsdag; i. e. the day consecrated to Woden or Odin.

To WENT, v. n. To go; A. Bor. wend, id.

And thy Ferand, Mynerve my der,
Sall rycht to Paryss went, but wer.

Barbour, iv. 257. MS.

Scho prayde he wald to the Lord Persye went.

Wallace, i. 330. MS.

Hys maich Pompey sall strecht agane him went

With rayit oistis of the oryent.—Doug. Virgil, 195, 29.

This seems formed from A.S. wend-an, ire, procedere; whence O.E. wend, commonly used by our writers. Alem. went-en is synon. with wend-en, verttere.

W E R

WENT, s. 1. A way, course in a voyage.

And now agane ye sall torne in your went,
Bere to your Prince this my charge and commandement.
Doug. Virgil, 214, 55.

Swiftlye we slide ouer bullerand wallis grete,
And followit furth the samyn went we haue,
Quharto the wind and sterisman vs draue.

Cursum, Virg. Ibid. 76, 40.

2. A passage.

From that place syne vnto ane caue we went,
Vnder ane hyngand heuch in ane dern went.

Doug. Virgil, 75, 22.

3. The course of affairs; metaph. used.

All wald haue vp that is down,

Welterit the went.—Doug. Virgil, Prol. 239, a. 20.

V. WELTER.

Alem. went-en, verttere; allewent, quoquoersum, ubique.

To WER, WERE, WEIRE, v. a. To defend; to guard.

—He answerd thar to mekly,

And said, "Lowe God, all tym had I

"Handis my hed for to wer."—Barbour, xx. 370. MS.

Wallace wesyd quhar Butler schup to be;

Thiddyr he past that entré for to wer,

On ilka syd thai sailye with gret fer.

Wallace, xi. 425. MS.

For thi manheid this forthwart to me fest,

This is the counsall and intent

Of gud King Robert's testament.

Fordun. Scotichr. ii. 232. N.

Dreire, perhaps errat. for deir, dere, injury.

A.S. waer-ian, wer-ian, Su.G. war-a, waer-ia, Isl. ver-ia, Alem. uer-ien, Germ. wehr-en, Belg. weer-en, defendere, tueri. Moes.G. war-jan, to forbid. Ihre has observed, that, in most languages, "these two ideas of prohibition and defence have been conjoined, the same words being used for expressing both." And indeed, what is a prohibition, but the defence of some object in a particular way,—by the interposition of the authority of him who claims a right to forbid the use of it to others; the prohibition being generally enforced by a certain penalty? Hence waard, custodia, E. guard.

WER, WAR, adj. Aware; wary.

This ilk man, fra he beheld on fer

Troyane habitys, and of our armour was wer,

At the first sicht he styntit and stude aw.

Doug. Virgil, 88, 34.

Or ye bene war apoun you wil thay be.—Ibid. 44, 46.

Su.G. war, videns, qui rem quandam videt, Germ. gewar, Ihre.; from war-a, videre. The same analogy may be remarked in Gr. $\beta\lambda\epsilon\pi\omega$, which primarily signifies to see; in a secondary sense, to take heed, to act with caution or circumspection.

WER, WERE, adj. Worse.

S.

WERD, s. Fate. V. WEIRD.

WERDY, adj. Worthy; deserving, S.B. wardy.

My werdy Lordis, sen that ye haif on hand

Sum reformatioun to mak into this land,

And als ye knaw it is the Kingis mynd,

Tent. weerdigh, Sw. werdig, id. from werd, pretium.

WERDIE, s. The youngest or feeblest bird in a nest,
Fife; synon. wrig, wallidraggle. Isl. war, deficient; wardt, quod aliqua sui parte deficit; G. Andr. p. 247.
WERE, WER, WEIR, WEER, s. 1. Doubt; hesitation;
S.B. But were, for owtyne wer, undoubtedly.

Bot he fulyt, for owtyne wer,
That gaiff throuch till that creatur.

Barbour, iv. 222. MS.

Saynet Awstynne gert thame of Ingland

Wyntown, v. 13. 79.

And of youre moblis and of all vthir gere
Ye will me serf siclike, I have na were.

Doug. Virgil, 482, 38.

2. Apprehension, fear, I haif nae weir of that, I have no fear of it, S.B.

This seems evidently the sense in the following passage, in which Dunbar represents the devil as going off in fiery smoke.

With him methocht all the house end he towk,
And I awoik as wy that wes in weir.

Bannatyne Poems, p. 26.

In wehere, as used by R. Brunne, although expl. "cautious, wary," Gl. evidently signifies, in fear.

Mykelle was the drede thorgh out paemie,
That Cristendam at nede mot haf suilk cheualrie.
The Soudan was in wehere the cristen had suilke oste,
Sir Edward's powere ouer alle he dred moste.

P. 228.

Were is used by Gower, apparently in the sense of doubt.

Ha father, be nought in a were.

I trowe there be no man lesse

Of any maner worthinesse,

That halt hym lasse worthy than I

To be beloued—

Conf. Am. Fol. 18, b.

It is also used by Chaucer, Rom. Rose, v. 5699, as signifying confusion, according to Tyrwhitt, who derives it from Fr. guerre, which is the term used in the original.
This is analogous to the idea thrown out by Rudd. "Perhaps it may be nothing else but the S. weir, i. e. war." In sense second, however, it might seem allied to Belg. vaer, fear. Nor is the conjecture made by Skinner unnatural, that were, as signifying doubt, may be from A.S. waere, ware, cautio; butan ware, sine cautione: for, says he, he who doubts exercises caution. It may be added, that the
A.S. phrase greatly resembles our but were.

WERE, WER, WEIR, s. War, S.

Horssis ar dressit for the bargane fele syis,

Were and debait thyr steidis signifyis.

Doug. Virgil, 86, 34.

Wallace, iv. 527. MS.

Pembroke's a name to Britain dear

For learning and brave deeds of weir.

Ramsay's Poems, i. 140.

Weir is still used in this sense, S.B. V. JOUKRY-PAUCKRY.

Hence Feir of Were. V. FEIR.

A.S. waer, Alem. Germ. wer, O.Belg. werre, Fr. guerre, Bellend. Cron. B. i. Fol. 6, a.

Thir wermen tuk off venysoune gud wayn.

Wallace, viii. 947. MS.

WERE-HORSE, WEIR-HORSE, s. 1. A war-horse.

'Or he was near a mile awa,'

She heard his weir-horse sneeze;

"Mend up the fire, my fause brother,

"Its nae come to my knees."

Jamieson's Popular Ball. i. 78.

2. "Weir-horse, in Moray, at present, signifies a stallion, without any respect to his being employed as a charger." Ibid. vol. ii. Gl.

WERELY, WEIRLY, adj. Warlike.

On bois helmes and scheildis the werelely schot

Maid rap for rap, reboundand with ilk stot.

Doug. Virgil, 301, 51.

Of ferss Achill the weirly deids [dedis] sprang,

In Troy and Greice, qubyle he in vertue rang.

Bellend. Evergreen, i. 46.

WERE-WALL, WEIR-WALL, s. A defence in war, murus bellicus; a designation given to the gallant and illustrious house of Douglas.

—Off Scotland the weir-wall, wit ye but wene,

Our fais forses to defend, and unselyeable.

Houlate, ii. 6. MS.

The same designation is given to this family, Bellend.

Cron. B. xiv. c. 8.

WERIOUR, WERYER, s. 1. A warrior.

Thare anerdis to our nobill to note, quhen hym nedis,

Tuelf crounit kingis in feir,

With all thair strang poweir,

And meny wight weryer

Worthy in wedis.

Gawan and Gol. ii. 8.

2. An antagonist.

Bot thrang hir foreschip formest, as sche mocht,

So that Pristis hir weriour al the way

Hir forestam by hir myd schip haldis ay.

Doug. Virgil, 133, 43.

To WERY, WERRY, WYRRIE, v. a. 1. To strangle.

—The first monstres of his stepmoder sle

Ligging ane bab in creddil stranglit he,

That is to say, twa grete serpentis perlay,

The qubilk he weryit with his handis tway.

Doug. Virgil, 251, 31.

Children I had in all vertewis perfyte,

To Peice and Justice was thair haill delyte.

Sum of displeasure deit for wo and cair,

Sum wyreit was, and blawin in the air;

And sum in Stirling schot was to the deid,

That mair was gevin to peice nor civile faid.

Lament. L. Scotland, A. iii. a. 6.

In that verse, Sum wyreit, &c., the author evidently alludes to the murder of Darnley.

2. To worry.

It happynyde syne at a huntynge

Wytht wolwys hym to weryde be.

Wyntown, iii. 3. 129.

—He has sum younge grete oxin slane,

Or than werryit the nolthird on the plane.

WERLOT, s. VARLET.

Obeys and ceis the pley that thou pretends,

Weak waly-draig and werlot of the carts.

Kennedy, Evergreen, ii. 49.

Here there is undoubtedly an allusion to playing at cards. Werlot is the knave. V. VARLOT.

I know not, if there be any affinity to A.S. waerlotas, astutiae, fraudes, policies, guiles, &c. Somner.

WERNAGE, s. Provision laid up in a garrison. V. VERNAGE.

WERNOURE, s. "A covetous wretch; a miser."

Sum wernoure for this warldis wrak wendis by hys wyt.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 238, b. 53.

Perhaps from A.S. georn, avidus, cupidus, geornor, avidior. It may, however, be from Su.G. warn-a, to defend, q. one who anxiously guards his property; or who lays up in store. V. WARNSTOR.

Rudd. views this as probably the same with Warnard, O.E.

Wel thou wotest warnard, but if thou wilt gabbe,

Thou hast hanged on me, halfe a leuen times,

And also griped my gold, giue it wher the liked.

P. Ploughman, Fol. 14. b.

To WERRAY, v. a. To make war upon.

W E S

Mr. Macpherson views it as perhaps an error "for corslet, a light kind of armour for the body, such as might be proper to wear in hunting." But the corslet must rather have been an encumbrance in hunting. The connexion would indicate that the term denotes a quiver, perhaps from Belg. weer, arms, or wyr, an arrow, and shuyt-en, to enclose, q. an implement for holding arrows. Or, light raiment, Su.G. war, tegmen, (Isl. ver, substamen,) and laett, levis, or slaett, simplex; as we still say, a licht wear.

WERTEWS, s. pl. Accomplishments, particularly in relation to music. S.

WERTH, s. Fate; destiny; for werd or weird.

— All mirth in this yerth

Is fra me gone, soche is my wickid werth.

Henryson's Test. Crescide, Chron. S.P. i. 169.

WERTHAR, adj. More worthy.

I wow to God, ma I thi maistyr be

In ony feild, thow sall fer werthar de

Than sall a Turk, for thi fals cruell wer;

Pagans till ws dois nocht so mekill der.

Wallace, x. 494. MS.

These are the words of Wallace to Bruce, at their pretended interview on the banks of Carron. Hé declares, that Bruce deserved death more than a Turk. In edit. 1648, rather is substituted. Moes.G. wairths, Su.G. waerd, werd, Germ. wert, A.S. weorth, dignus, weorthra, dignior. Junius inverts the etymon, deriving the substantive from the adjective. V. WERDY.

WESTLAND, WESTLIN, adj. Western.

"Our westland shires had, in the rates of monthly maintenance in bygone times, been burthened above other shires." Baillie's Lett. ii. 344.

From the use of westland by Blind Harry, (V. WESELY above,) the origin is obvious.

WESTLANDER, s. An inhabitant of the west of Scotland. S.

WESTLINS, WESTLINES, adv. Towards the west, S.

 WHIFFINGER, s. A vagabond. V. WAFFINGER. S.
 WHIG, WHIGG, s. 1. A thin and sour liquid, of the lacteous kind. V. WIGG.
 2. A name imposed on those in the seventeenth century, who adhered to the Presbyterian cause in S.
 By rigid Episcopalians, it is still given to Presbyterians in general; and, in the West of S., even by the latter, to those who, in a state of separation from the established church, profess to adhere more strictly to Presbyterian principles.
 The origin of the term has been variously accounted for, by different writers.
 "The South-west counties of Scotland have seldom corn enough to serve them round the year: and the northern parts producing more than they need, those in the west come in the summer to buy at Leith the stores that come from the north: and from a word Wiggam, used in driving their horses, all that drove were called the Whig- gamors, and shorter the Whiggs. Now in that year [1648], after the news came down of Duke Hamilton's defeat, the ministers animated their people to rise, and march to Edinburgh; and they came up marching on the head of their parishes, with an unheard-of fury, praying and preaching all the way as they came. The Marquis of Argyll and his party, came and headed them, they being about 6000.
 This was called the Whiggamors inroad: and, ever after that, all that opposed the court, came, in contempt, to be called Whiggs: and from Scotland the word was brought into England, where it is now one of our unhappy terms of distinction." Burnet's Own Times, I. 58.
 "The poor honest people, who were in raillery called Whiggs, from a kind of milk they were forced to drink in their wandrings and straits, became name-fathers to all who espoused the interest of Liberty and Property through Britain and Ireland." Wodrow's Hist, I. 263.
 The latter is the etymon generally adopted. But the former is more probable, even in the opinion of Wodrow, who adds; "If the reader would have another, and perhaps better origination of the word, he may consult Burnet's Memoirs of the House of Hamilton." Ibid.
 The common etymon is liable to this objection, that it is founded on a fact which was posterior to the use of the term. The other receives confirmation from the title of a ludicrous poem in MS. penes auct. "The Whiggamer Road into Edinburghe. To the tune of Graysteell; 28th
 November 1648." It bears the same date at the end.
 A. Bor. whig is expl., "a beverage made with whey and herbs;" Gl. Grose.

WHIG, WIG, s. A species of fine wheaten bread.
 "Whigs, Chelsea buns." Sir J. Sinclair's Observ., p. 151. V. WYG.

To WHIG, v. n. To go quickly. Syn. Whid.—To WHIG
Awa, v. n. To move at an easy and steady pace; to jog. S.
 To WHIG, v. n. Churned milk, when it is kept long and throws off a sediment, is said to whig. S.

WHIGAMORE, s. A cant term of the same meaning with Whig, but apparently more contemptuous. S.

WHIGGERY, s. The notions or practices of a Whig. S.

To WHIGGLE, WHIGGLE alang, v. n. To wriggle; to waddle; the same with Wiggle. V. WAIGLE. S.

To WHIGGLE, v. n. To trifle. S.

WHIGGLE, s. A trifle; a toy; a kickshaw; a gimcrack. S.

WHIGMELEERIE, s. 1. The name of a ridiculous game which was occasionally used, in Angus, at a drinking club. A pin was stuck in the centre of a circle, from which there were as many radii as there were persons in the company, with the name of each person at the radius opposite to him. On the pin an index was placed, and moved round by every one in his turn; and at whatsoever person's radius it stopped, he was obliged to drink off his glass.

This is one, among many expedients, that have been devised for encouraging dissipation.

As the term has most probably had a ludicrous origin, it may have arisen from contempt of the Whigs; as the people of Angus were generally not very friendly to them, and might thus intend to ridicule what they accounted the austerity of their manners.

2. In pl. Whigmeleeries, "whims, fancies, crotchets," Gl. Burns, S.

But gin ye be a brig as auld as me,—
 There'll be, if that date come, I'll wad a boddle,
 Some fewer whigmeleeries in your noddle.

Burns, iii. 54.

3. A fantastical ornament in masonry, dress, &c. S.

WHIGMALEERIE, adj. Dealing in gimcracks; whimsical. S.

WHIHE (gutt.), s. The hissing noise of an adder. S.

To WHIHER, v. n. To laugh in a suppressed way;
 to titter, Ang. To wicker, to neigh or whinny, A. Bor.

WHILE, conj. Until. V. QUHILL. S.

WHILEOMS, adv. At times; sometimes. V. QUHYLUM. S.

WHILES, adv. At times; occasionally. V. QUHILE. S.

To WHILLY, WHULLY, v. a. To cheat; to bamboozle;
 to gull, properly by wheedling means, S.

They spoil'd my wife, and staw my cash,
 My Muse's pride murgullied;
 By printing it like their vile trash,
 The honest leidges whully'd.

Ramsay's Address to the Town Council of Edinburgh, A. 1719.

"Wise men may be whilly'd with wiles;" Ramsay's S.
 Prov. p. 79.

Shirrefs writes whilly, Gl. V. WHILLIE-WHA.

WHILLIE-BILLOU, WHILLY-BALLOO, s. An uproar;
 a tumult with noise. A variety of Hilliebalow. S.

WHILLIEGOLEERIE, s. A hypocritical fellow; a wheedler; one who speaks fair from selfish motives. S.

WHILLIE-WHA, WHILLY-WHAE, s. 1. A person on whom there can be no dependence; who shuffles between opposite sides, delays the performance of his promises, or still deals in ambiguities.

We fear'd no reavers for our money,
 Nor whilly-whaes to grip our gear.

Watson's Coll. i. 12.

Alas he's gane and left it a';

May be to some sad whilliwha

Of fremit blood. Ramsay's Poems, i. 223.

"A kind of insinuating deceitful fellow," Gl.

2. A cheat. 3. A wheedling speech; coaxing language. S.

Perhaps from Isl. ryl-a, dubitare, haerere suspenso animo; or, as implying the idea of intentional procrastination, from Su.G. hwil-a, il-a, quiescere, cunctare; ila, cunctator.

WHILLIE-WHAW, adj. Not to be depended upon. S.

To WHILLY-WHAW, v. n. To talk in a kindly and cajoling way, like two lovers. S.

To WHILLYWHA, v. a. To cajole; to wheedle. S.

WHILLYWHÄING, WHULLYWÄING, s. Wheedling. S.

To WHILLIEWHALLIE, v. a. To coax; to wheedle. S.

To WHILLIE-WHALLIE, v. n. To dally; to loiter. S.

WHILLILU, s. An air in music. S.

WHILOCK, WHILEOCK, WHILOCKIE, s. A little while. S.

WHILPER, s. Any individual larger than the ordinary size of its genus. "What a whilper of a trout." S.

WHILT, s. A-whilt, having the heart in a state of palpitation; in a state of confusion or perturbation.

My page allow'd me not a beast,

I wanted gilt to pay the hyre;

He and I lap o're many a syre,

I heuked him at Calder-cult;

But long ere I came to Clypes-myre,

The ragged rogue caught me a whilt.

Watson's Coll. i. 12.

WHILTIE-WHALTIE, adv. In a state of palpitation, My heart's aw playin whiltie-whaltie, S. See Sup.

Isl. vellt, vallt, yllte, volutor; or hwell-a, resonare.

To WHILTIE-WHALTIE, v. n. To palpitate. S.

To WHILTIE-WHALTIE, v. n. To dally; to loiter. S.

To WHIMMER, v. n. To cry feebly, like a child. S.

WHIMWHAM, s. 1. A whim; a whimsey. 2. A kickshaw, in relation to food. S.

WHIN, WHINSTANE, s. That in England called toadstone, or ragstone, S.

"Whin-stone, or porphyry, (called toad-stone, rag-stone, &c. in England) differs from moor-stone in this, that the former contains iron and also some lime." P. Dalmeny, Statist. Acc. i. 257. V. QUHYN.

WHIN, s. A few. V. QUHEYNE. S.

To WHINGE, v. n. To whine, S. See Sup.

Poor cauldrie Coly whing'd aneath my plaid.

V. QUHINGE. Ramsay's Poems, ii. 389.

WHINGER, WHINGAR, s. A sort of hanger, which seems to have been used both at meals, as a knife, and in broils. See Sup.

"Wherefore said he [James V.], gave my predecessors so many lands and rents to the kirk: was it to maintain hawks, dogs and whores to a number of idle priests? The king of England burns, the king of Denmark beheads you, I shall stick you with this whingar. And therewith he drew out his dagger, and they fled from his presence in great fear." Melvill's Memoirs, p. 4.

"Mony ane tines the haff-merk whinger for the half-penny whang." Ferguson's S. Prov. p. 25.

And whingers, now in friendship bare,

The social meal to part and share,

Had found a bloody sheath.

Lay of the Last Minstrel, C. v. 7.

This may be merely a corr. of E. hanger. It must be observed, however, that E. whiniard, whinyard, is used for a short sword; which Seren. thinks may be from Isl.

W H Y

hwin, furunculus, and yeard, ulnus, q. the instrument used clandestinely.

WHINGICK, s. A snuff-box, Shetl. S.

WHINYARD, s. Ashort crooked sword. V. WHINGER. S.

To WHINK, v. n. To bark in a suppressed manner, like an untrained dog in pursuit of game. S.

WHINK, s. The shrill suppressed bark above described. S.

WHINKENS, s. pl. Flummery, S.B. sowens, synonym.

Perhaps from Su.G. hwink-a, vacillare, to move backwards and forwards, because of their flaccidity. The E. term flummery is, in like manner, applied to any thing that is loose or wants solidity.

To WHINNER, v. n. To pass with velocity, S.B.

Isl. hwyn-a, resonare, sonum edere obstreperum; hwin, voces obstreperae et resonabiles; G. Andr. p. 126.

WHINNER, s. 1. The sound caused by rapid flight or motion; whizzing noise. 2. The blow which causes such a sound. 3. A smart resounding box on the ear. S.

WHINNERIN', part. adj. A whinnerin' drouth, a severe drought, accompanied with a sifting wind. S.

WHIN-SPARROW, s. The Field-sparrow. S.

To WHIP aff, or awa', v. n. To fly; to get off with velocity, S. sometimes pron. weep.

Isl. hwapp-ast, repente accidit; Su.G. wipp-a, motitare se, sursum deorsum celeriter ferri.

WHIP. In a whip, adv. In a moment, S. See Sup.

Alem. wipphe, O. Teut. wap, nictus oculi. Sw. wippen is equivalent to our word: paa wippen, upon the point of doing any thing; Mod. Sax. up de wippe, id. Ihe views the Su.G. v., mentioned under the preceding term, as the origin. We also say, He was within a whip of such a thing, S.B.

Kilian, however, gives fax, lumen, vibratio luminis, as the primary sense. According to this, the term originally conveys the very same idea with blink, S. In a blink, i. e. in a twinkling. The v. wipp-en also signifies to glance, to shine at intervals. Kilian views that as the same word, used in a secondary sense, which signifies to vibrate, to be agitated with a tremulous motion.

On this ground, whip is to be classed with that variety of terms, denoting a moment, or the smallest portion of time, which are borrowed from the motion of light, or refer to it; as, Blink, Glint, Glisk, Gliff, Gliffin, &c.

WHIP-LICKER, s. A cant term for a person who keeps a cart and horse for hiring. S.

WHIP-MAN, s. A common carter. S.

WHIPPER-SNAPPER, s. 1. A little presumptuous fellow. 2. A cheat. 3. A fraudulent trick. S.

WHIPPER-TOOTIES, s. pl. Silly scruples about doing any thing; frivolous difficulties, S.

This is probably corr. from the Fr. phrase apres tout, after all; pour dire, Apres avoir bien consideré, bien pesé, bien examiné toutes choses. Omnibus perpensis; Dict. Trev. One, attached to Gr. etymons, might deduce this from ὑπερ, propter, and τετο, hoc.

WHIPPET, adj. Hasty and tart in demeanour, or in the mode of doing any thing. Hence whippert-like, indicating irritation, by the manner of expression or action, S.

Isl. hwop-a signifies lightness, inconstancy. But perhaps it is rather formed from the v. Whip, q. v.

WHIPPY, s. A term of contempt applied to a girl or young woman; a malapert person. S.

WHIPPY, WHUPPY, adj. Active; clever; rather sharp. S.

To WHIR, WHIRRY away, v. n. To fly off like a partridge or moorcock with a whirring noise. S.

To WHYRIPE, v. n. To mourn; to fret. S.

W H I

WHIRKINS, s. pl. The posteriors. V. WHEERIKINS. S.

WHIRL, WHURL, s. An apple, the Thorle pippin. S.

WHIRLIWHAW, s. A whirligig. S.

WHIRRET, s. A smart blow; a sounding stroke. S.

To WHIRRY, v. a. Apparently corr. of E. To hurry. S.

WHIRROCK, s. A knot in wood, caused by the growth of a branch from the place. V. VIRROCK. S.

WHISH, WHUSH, s. 1. A rushing or whizzing sound, S.B. 2. A whisper, S.B. whisht, Loth.

Lat her yelp on, be you as calm's a mouse,
Nor lat your whisht be heard into the house.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 2.

Su.G. hwacs-a, to whizz; wis-a, Isl. kwis-a, susurrare, qwis, susurrus; G. Andr. p. 157. See Sup.

To WHISH, v. a. To hush; part. pa. whist.

"The keeping of the castle of Edinburgh was the last act of opposition, and with the yielding of it, all was whist." Hume's Hist. Doug. p. 246.

Seren. vo. Hush, refers to Sw. wysch, interj. used by nurses when lulling their babes; and hwisk-a, to whisper.

WHISHT, interj. Hush, be silent, S. hist, whist, E. Chaucer, huiste. It seems to be properly the imperat. of the v.; q. be hushed. See Sup.

But whisht, it is the knight in masquerade,
That comes hid in this cloud to see his lad.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 111.

WHISKER, WHISCAR, s. 1. A bunch of feathers; a small besom or brush. 2. The sheath used for holding the end of a wire while a woman is knitting stockings. S.

WHISKER, WHISQUER, s. A blusterer. S.

WHISKIE, s. A kind of gig or one-horse chaise. S.

WHISKY, s. A species of ardent spirits, distilled from barley; the best is made from malt. S.

WHISKIT, part. adj. A whiskit mare, apparently a mare with a switched tail for whisking off the flies. S.

WHISKS, s. pl. A machine for winding yarn. S.

WHISTLE, s. Change of money, S.

—Now they'se get the whistle of their groat.

V. QUHISSEL. Ramsay's Poems, i. 56.

WHISTLE, s. Apparently, used metaph. for the throat, in the phrase, to weet one's whistle, to take a drink, sometimes applied to tipplers, S.

It is, however, O.E. "I wete my whystell as good drinkers do;" Palsgrae.

WHISTLE-BINKIE, s. One who attends a penny-wedding, but without paying any thing, and therefore has no right to take any share of the entertainment; a mere spectator, who is, as it were, left to sit on a bench by himself, and who, if he pleases, may whistle for his own amusement; Aberd.

WHISTLER, s. A bird so named. V. LOCH-LEAROCK. S.

WHISTLERS, s. pl. Farmers upon an extensive estate, who give the proprietor information as to the value of their neighbours' farms when he wishes to increase his rents. S.

WHISTLE-THE-WHAUP, a phrase addressed to one who is supposed to play upon another, West of S.

Q. "If you are for sport, call upon the curlew;" referring, probably, to the folly of such an attempt, because this bird delights in sequestered places.

To WHIT, v. a. To milk closely; to draw off the dregs. S.

WHITTINS, s. pl. The last part of what is called "a male of milk;" which is considered as the richest. S.

To WHITE, v. a. To cut with a knife, S. See Sup.

For he's far aboon Dunkel the night,

Maun white the stick and a' that.

V. QUHYTE.

Burns, i. 363.

WHITER, s. 1. One that whittles. 2. A knife in respect of its being well or ill adapted for this purpose. S.

WHITINS, s. pl. Thin slices cut off with a knife. S.

To WHITE, v. a. To flatter; to flatter for favour. S.

WHITIE, WHITELIP, s. A flatterer. An auld whitie. S.

WHITE-ABOON-GLADE. The hen-harrier, Stirlings. Falco cynaeus, Linn.

"But of all the birds of prey amongst us, the hen-harrier, or white-aboon-glade, as he is called, is the most destructive to game, both partridges and muir-fowl." P. Campsie, Statist. Acc. xv. 324.

This name corresponds to that of Lanarius albus, Aldrov., Le Lanier cendré, Brisson. and Grau-weisse, Geyer of Frisch. V. Penn. Zool. p. 193.

WHITE BONNET, a name given to the person, who, in a sale by auction, bids for his own goods, or who is employed by the owner for this purpose, S.

This metaph. term seems to signify a marked person, or one who deserves to be marked; in allusion, perhaps, to the custom in Italy by which the Jews are obliged to wear yellow bonnets for distinction, or of bankrupts wearing green bonnets, according to the laws of France. The term is most probably a literal translation of a Fr. phrase, the meaning of which is now lost. For the expression, Bonnet blanc, ou blanc bonnet, is still proverbially used to denote things that are exactly alike, and which may be indifferently put the one for the other.

WHITE-CRAP, s. A name applied to a crop of grain, to distinguish it from grass, turnips, and other green crops.

WHITE-FEATHER. To have a white feather in one's wing, to show the white feather, proverbial phrases denoting timidity or cowardice. S.

WHITE FISH IN THE NET, a sport formerly common in Angus, although now almost gone into desuetude. Two persons hold a plaid pretty high. The rest of the company are obliged to leap over it. The object is to entangle, in the plaid, the person who takes the leap; and if thus intercepted, he loses the game.

WHITE FISH. Haddocks, cod, ling, tusk, &c. S.

WHITE FOLK. A designation given to wheedlers. S.

WHITE HARE. The Alpine hare. S.

WHITE HAWSE. A favourite pudding; that which conducts the food to the stomach with sheep. S.

WHITE-HORSE, a name given to the Fuller ray, a fish. "Raia fullonica, the White-horse;" Sibb. Fife, p. 119.

WHITE-IRON or AIRN, s. Tin-plate. S.

WHITE-IRON SMITH. A tin-plate worker. S.

WHITE-LEGS, s. pl. The smaller wood, such as branches, &c. of a hag or cutting. S.

WHITE-LIVER, s. A flatterer. S.

WHITE-MEAL, s. Oatmeal; as distinguished from what is made of barley, called Bread-meal. S.

WHITENIN, s. Chalk for whitening walls or floors. S.

WHITE PUDDING. A pudding made of meal, suet, and onions, stuffed in one of the intestines of a sheep. S.

WHITE SHOWER. A shower of snow. S.

WHITE-SILLER, s. Silver money, or coined silver. S.

WHITE-WAND. V. WAND OF PEACE. S.

WHITIE-WHATIES, s. pl. Silly pretences, from a design to procrastinate or to blind; frivolous excuses, circumlocutions meant to conceal the truth, S.

Whittie-Whaws is used in the same sense. S.

Perhaps the last part of this reduplicative term is the radical one, from A.S. hwata, omina, divinationes, auguria;

"gesses, forespeakings, luck good or ill; divinations, soothsayings;" Somner. Warna the that thu ne gime drycraefta, ne swefena, ne hwatena; Take care that thou do not follow incantations, or dreams, or divinations; Deut. xviii. 10.

Thus it might originally be equivalent to freits. Isl. thwaett-a, however, signifies nugari; thwaetting-r, nugamenta; G. Andr. p. 268. Belg. wisiewasie seems to have been formed on the same plan; "fiddle-faddle, whim-wham;" Sewel. This has much the appearance of an Alem. origin, s. in that language, being frequently substituted for t in other dialects, Germ. waschen, garrire; Wachter. V. WISHY-WASHIES. Drycraefta, in the quotation, is from dry, a magician, and craeft, craft. According to Somner and Wachter, (vo. Druiden,) the term dry had found its way into Germany from the name of the Druids, to whom great skill in magic was ascribed.

WHITE-WIND, s. Flattery; wheedling; a cant term. S.

WHITE-WOOD, s. The white and soft wood, which decays first, on the outside of a tree. S.

To WHITHER, v. a. To beat; to belabour. S.

From A.S. hwit, albus, and lic, similis.

WHITLING, WHITEN, WHITING, s. A species of sea-trout, S.

In some parts of the Ern, there are pike; and, in some seasons of the year, great numbers of sea-trouts, from 3 lb. to 6 lb. weight. The fishermen call them whitlings, on account of the scales they have at their first coming up the river from the sea." P. Muthil, Perth. Statist. Acc. viii. 488.

"There is also in this river a larger sort of a fish, called a whitling; it is a large fine trout, from 16 inches to 2 feet long, and well grown; its flesh is red, and high coloured, like salmon, and of full as fine a flavour." P. Dunse, Berwicks. Ibid. iv. 380.

"From the end of June, till close-time, there is abundance of fish, after floods, in Esk, and the lower end of Liddel; such as salmon, grilse, sea-trout, and whitens, as they are named here, or herlings, as they are called in Annandale." P. Canoby, Dumfr. Ibid. xiv. 410.

It is sometimes written whiting.

"This fish is well known to those who fish in the Annan and the Nith by the name of the hirling. But it is called by other names in other parts of the country. In the Esk, in Dumfries-shire, and in the Eden at Carlisle, it is termed the whiting, from its bright silvery colour. In the Tay, above Perth, it is called the Lammas whiting, from its appearance in the river at that season. In Angus, the Mearns, and Aberdeenshire, it goes by the name of the Phinoc." Dr. Walker, Transact. Highl. Soc. S. ii. 354.

Whiting or whiten would seem to be the same with whitling. But according to Dr. Walker, the whiting or hirling, after passing the winter in the sea, on its return to the river in March and April, is "called the whitelings, or, as it is commonly pronounced, the whitling ;—in the Spey and other rivers in the North,—known by the name of the white trout." Ibid. p. 355.

This learned naturalist views the whiting as a salmon ; which he supposes to pass through the different states of the samlet, hirling, whitling, and grilse, before it comes to maturity. Ibid. p. 363. It has, however, been urged with great probability, that they are different species ; because the whitings or hirlings have roes, and of course are understood to spawn ; Ibid. p. 354. N. Besides, the phinoc, which Dr. Walker views as the same with the whiting, is said "always to retain the distinctive mark of yellow fins, as well as particular spots greatly different from those on salmon." Mackenzie, Ibid. pp. 377, 378.

Sw. hwitling signifies a whiting.

WHORLE, s. 1. A very small wheel, as that in a child's cart, S. 2. The fly of a spinning-rock, made of wood, sometimes of a hard stone, S. whirl, E. See S.

"In one of them [graves] was found a metal spoon, and a glass cup that contained two gills Scotch measure ; and in another, a number of stones, formed into the shape and size of whorles, like those that were formerly used for spinning in Scotland." Barry's Orkney, p. 206. He adds, in a note, "A round perforated piece of wood, put upon a spindle."

It appears from Minsheu, that wharle and whorle were formerly used in this sense in E.

"O.E. wharle for a spyndell, peson," Fr. Palsgrau. Su.G. harfwel, hwirfwel, id. verticillum ; from hwerf-a, to be whirled round ; O. Sw. hworla, rotare.

Scott, Chron. S.P. iii. 169.

It is written wighe, O.E.

Coudst thou not wish vs the wai, where the wighe wonnith?

P. Ploughman, Fol. 29. a.

Su.G. wig, anciently wig-er, which primarily signifies, fit for war, is used, in a secondary sense, to denote an adult; in the same manner as A.S. wiga, of which the primary sense is heros, miles, is used to denote a man of any condition. The origin is wig, battle, contest. For our Goth. ancestors, as Ihre observes, scarcely acknowledged any other virtue than that of valour or strength for war.

WIAGE, WYAGE, s. A military expedition or incursion; used like jornay.

For Rome quhilum sa hard wes stad,
Quhen Hanniball thaim wencusyt had,
That off ryngis with rich stansys,
That war off knychtis fyngyris taneys,
He send thre bollis to Cartage;
And syne to Rome tuk his wiage,
Thar to distroye the cité all.

Wallace, ii. 198. MS.

The knycht Fenweik conwoide the caryage;
He had on Scottis maid mony schrewide wiage.

Ibid. iii. 118. MS.

Vyage is still used S.B. in its primary sense, for a journey; Fr. voyage, id. from voye, a way, Lat. via. Viage occurs in the same sense, R. Brunne, p. 315.

To Scotland now he fondes, to redy his viage,
With thritti thousand Walsh redy at his banere.

WYANDOUR, s. A gud wyandour, one who lives or feeds well.

This Kyng wes wys and debonare;
Gud wyandour, and fed hym fare.

Wyntown, ix. 10. 40.

Fr. viand-er, to feed. Mr. Macpherson has observed, that Chaucer, "in the description of the Frankelein, has viended, well supplied with meat."

WICHT, adj. 1. Strong; powerful.

Schir Jhon the Grayme, with Wallace that was wycht,
Thom Haliday, agayne retorned rycht
To the Torhall, and thar remanyt but dreid.

Wallace, v. 1057. MS.

This seems to be the sense, in which the term is generally used concerning Wallace, although rendered bold by Mr. Ellis, Spec. I. 352.

Is nane sa wicht, sa wyse, na of sik wit,
Agane his summond suithly that may sit.
Suppose thay [thow] be als wicht as ony wall,
Thow man ga with him to his Lord's [Lordis] hall.

Priests of Peblis, S.P.R. i. 45.

Sa pasand was this cote, that skarsly mycht
Phegeus and Sagaris, tua seruandis wicht,
Bere it on thare nek chargit many fald,
Bot tharwith cled Demoleo ryn fast wald.

Doug. Virgil, 136, 29.

"A wicht man never wanted a ready weapon," S. Prov.

Worthit wycht, was in a state of convalescence, recovered from disease, regained strength.

In presence ay scho wepyt wndyr slycht;

Su.G. wig, alacer, agilis, vegetus.

3. Denoting strength of mind, or fertility of invention.

For he wes rycht wycht at devys,
And of rycht gud cownsale, and wys.

Wyntown, viii. 31. 123.

4. Strong, as applied to inanimate objects. See Sup.

The Wardane has this castelle tane,
A wycht hows made of lyme and stane.

Wyntown, viii. 37. 170.

On ilka nycht thai spoilyeid besylé;
To Schortwode Schaw leide wittail and wyn wicht.

Wallace, iv. 501. MS.

Flaikis thai laid on temyr lang and wicht.

Ibid. vii. 984. MS.

In this sense Dunbar opposes wicht fowlis to those that are weak and diminutive in size.

Syne crownit scho the Egle King of Fowlis,—
And bad him be als just to awppis and owlis
As unto pakokkis, papingais or crenis,
And mak a law for wicht fowlis and for wrennis.

Thistle and Rose, Bannatyne Poems, p. 5.

i. e. One law for both.

Ihre observes, that Su.G. wig is used to denote whatsoever in its nature is powerful or firm; wigir gard, a compact hedge. Owig expresses the opposite idea; owig bro, a decayed or ruinous bridge.

Wight, as used by Chaucer, conveys the idea of active.

— She coud eke

Wrastlen by veray force and veray might,
With any yong man, were he never so wight.

Monkes T. v. 14273.

Thus it is used by Gower.

And cryed was, that they shulde come Unto the game all and some
Of hem that ben delyuer and wyght.

Conf. Am. Fol. 177, b.

It has also been rendered swift, in reference to that passage in Chaucer.

I is ful wight—as is a ra.

Reves T. v. 4084.

Wight seems to have been also used in O.E. in the sense of strong.

Help him to worke wightlye, that winneth your fode.
P. Ploughman, Fol. 31, a.

Different writers have remarked the affinity of this term to Lat. vig-eo, q. I am wight; veget-us.—Hence,

- WICK, WIC, s. 1. An open bay. 2. A word used in the termination of the names of places, signifying a kind of bay, S. See Sup.
- "Where wick is the terminating syllable, the place is not only maritime, but there is always, in its vicinity, an opening of the coast, larger than a creek, but smaller than a bay, whose two containing sides form an angle, similar to that of the lips, terminating in the cheek. It is remarkable, that in the Scotch dialect, this is always termed the wick of the mouth. It does not therefore appear, that there is the least affinity betwixt wick and vicus. The former vocable is for the most part, if not always, maritime: the latter, from the meaning of the word, can have no possible respect to local situation." P. Canisbay, Caithn. Stat. Acc. viii. 162, N.
- "All those places, whose names terminate in ic, which, in the Danish language is said to signify a bay, as Tosgic, Cuic, Dibic, and Shittic, hath [have] each of them an inlet of the sea." P. Applecross, Ross, Statist. Acc. iii. 381.
- It is perhaps the same term that occurs in the names Greenock, Gourock, &c., especially as there is the bay of Gourock. It has been said, indeed, that the former is from Gael. Grianeg, the Sunny Bay, or the Bay of the Sun. Statist. Acc. v. 559. 560. But I can observe no similar Gael. word signifying a bay. Su.G. wik, angulus; sinus maris: A.S. wic, sinus maris, fluminis sinus; portus. Franc. in giuwiggin strazzono, in the corners of the streets. *V. - Ay wavering like the willow wicker.
Burns, iv. 391.
- Expl. in Gl. "willow, of the smaller sort."
2. A wand; a small switch, S.
Spenser uses this word as an adj. Dan. vige, vimen. The origin seems to be viger, to yield, or Teut. wick-en, vibrare, because of its pliant quality; as Su.G. sweg, virga, from sweig-a, incurvare.
- To WICKER, v. a. To twist the thread overmuch. S.
- WICKER O' A SHOWER. A quick sharp shower, and the rattling noise made by it on a window. S.
- WICKET, s. The back-door of a barn, Ang.
Belg. wincket, wicket, portula, Fr. guichet. Spegelius derives the term from Su.G. wick-a, itare, domum saepius introire et exire, a frequentative from Isl. wik-a, incedere. C.B. gwichet, posticum, has been traced to gwich, stridor.
- WIDDE, s. Perhaps, a band; a chain. S.
- WIDDEN-DREME, WINDREM, WIDDRIM, s. In a widden dream, or windream, all of a sudden; also, in a state of confusion, S.B.
"At last we, like fierdy follows, flew to't flaughtbred, thinkin to raise it in a widden-dream." Journal from London, p. 5.
Bess out in a widden-dream brattled,
And Hab look'd as blate as a sheep.
Jamieson's Popul. Ball. i. 297.
- One is said to waken in a widdrim, when one awakes in a confusion or state of perturbation, so as to have no distinct apprehension of surrounding objects for some time. Sibb. explains it, "a sudden gust of passion, without apparent cause;" Gl.
- Could we be assured that windream were the more ancient pronunciation, the term might be traced to A.S. wyn-dream, "gaudium, jubulum, jubilatio; joy, jubilation, great rejoicing," Somner; from wyn, joy, and dream, jubilation. Thus, it might be used to signify the confusion produced by the noise of great mirth, especially when heard unexpectedly. Sibb. refers to Wod as the origin. And indeed A.S. woda-dream is rendered, furor, madness; Somner. Thus the term may have some relation to Wodin or Oden, that deity of the Germans and Goths, who was believed to preside over the rage of battle, and whose name has been rendered by Lat. furor. V. Adam. Bremens. ap. Ihre vo. Oden. Thus A.S. woda dream, S. widdendreme, might be viewed as originally denoting a dream proceeding from the inspiration of Oden; as the term implies the idea of confusion or distraction of mind. In Gl. Popul. Ball. it is, in like manner, supposed to allude to "the dream of a madman."

Quhilk double sentence wes baith suith and sair.

Montgomerie, MS. Chron. S.P. iii. 506.

"The word Widdirsins, Scot. is used for contrary to the course of the Sun, as when we say, to go or turn widdirsins about, i. e. to turn round from West to East: a Belg. weder, weters, A.S. with, wither, contra, and Sonne, Sunne, Sol, Scot. Bor. Sin," Rudd.

According to this idea, Belg. wederschyn, Germ. widerschein, a reflected light, the reflection of brightness, might seem allied. Our term is indeed used to denote what is contrary to the course of the sun; this being the most obvious emblem of any thing opposed to the course of nature. But I am convinced, that neither sonne, nor any word conveying the idea of light or shining, can properly be viewed as entering into the composition of this term. It is merely Teut. weder-sins, contrario modo, Kilian. This is the sense, as used in both passages by the Bishop of Dunkeld. In the first, indeed, Rudd. too strictly adhering to the original, Steteruntque comae, renders it, straight up, upright. But Doug. means literally to say, that the hair of Æneas stood the wrong way, or the way contrary to nature.

In Sw. raettsyles denotes that which follows the course of the sun. The term, expressing the reverse, is andsyles.

Our ancestors ascribed some preternatural virtue to that motion which was opposed to the course of the sun, or to what grew in this way. This was particularly attended to in magical ceremonies.—Hence Nicnevin, the Hecate of the Scots, and her damsels are thus described.

Some be force in effect the four winds fetches,
And nine times withershins about the throne raid.

V. CATINE. Montgomerie, Watson's Coll. iii. 17.

This is gravely mentioned as the mode of salutation given by witches and warlocks to the devil.

"The women made first their courtesy to their master, and then the men. The men turning nine times widder shines about, and the women six times." Satan's Invisible World, p. 14.

Ross, in his Additions to that old song, The Rock and the Wee Pickle Tow, makes the spinster not only attend to the wood of her rock, that it should be of the rantree, or mountain-ash, that powerful specific against the effects of witchcraft, but also to the very direction of its growth.

I'll gar my ain Tammy gae down to the how,
And cut me a rock of a widdershins grow,
Of good rantry-tree, for to carry my tow,
And a spindle of the same for the twining o't.

Ross's Poems, p. 134.

The inhabitants of Orkney ascribe some sort of fatality to motion opposed to that of the sun. "On going to sea, they would reckon themselves in the most imminent danger, were they by accident to turn their boat in opposition to the sun's course." P. Kirkwall, Statist. Acc. vii. 560.

Among the Northern nations, a similar superstition prevailed. Helga, a Scandinavian sorceress, when wishing to give efficacy to some Runic characters, for doing injury to others, observed this mode. "Taking a knife in her hand, she cut the letters in the wood, and besmeared them with her blood. Then singing her incantations, oc geck aufug rangsaelis um treit, she went backwards, and contrary to the course of the sun, around the tree. Then she procured that it should be cast into the sea, praying that it might be driven by the waves to the island Drangsa, and there be the cause of all evils to Grotter." Hist. Grotter. ap. Bartholin. Caus. Contempt. Mortis, pp. 661, 662.

This is opposed to the Deasil of our Highlanders, which has been considered as a relique of Druidism.

"The Deasil, or turning from east to west, according to the course of the sun, is a custom of high antiquity in religious ceremonies. The Romans practised the motion in the manner now performed in Scotland. The Gaulish Druids made their circumvolution in a manner directly the reverse.

"The unhappy lunatics are brought here [to Strathfillan] by their friends, who first perform the ceremony of the Deasil, thrice round a neighbouring cairn; afterwards, offer on it their rags, or a little bunch of heath tied with worsted; then thrice immerse the patient in a holy pool of the river, a second Bethesda; and, to conclude, leave him fast bound the whole night in the neighbouring chapel. If in the morning he is found loose, the saint is supposed to be propitious; for if he continues in bonds the cure remains doubtful." Pennant's Tour in S. 1772. P. II. p. 15.

"On the first of May the herds of several farms gather dry wood, put fire on it, and dance three times southwards about the pile.—At marriages and baptisms they make a procession round the church, Deasoil, i. e. sunways, because the sun was the immediate object of the Druids' worship." Id. Tour in 1769, p. 309.

"That the Caledonians paid a superstitious respect to the sun, as was the practice among many other nations, is evident, not only by the sacrifice at Baltein, but upon many other occasions. When a Highlander goes to bathe, or to drink water out of a consecrated fountain, he must approach by going round the place, from east to west on the south side, in imitation of the apparent diurnal motion of the sun. When the dead are laid in the grave, the grave is approached by going round in the same manner. The bride is conducted to her future spouse, in the presence of the minister, and the glass goes round a company, in the course of the sun. This is called, in Gaelic, going round the right, or the lucky way. The opposite is the wrong or the unlucky way. And if a person's meat or drink were to affect the wind-pipe, or come against his breath, they instantly cry out, Deisheal! which is an ejaculation praying that it may go by the right way." P. Callander, Perths. Statist. Acc. xi. 621. N.

The custom of sending drink round a company from left to right, is by many supposed to be a vestige of the same superstition. There are still some, even in the Lowlands, who would reckon it unlucky to take the opposite course.

Pennant derives the term from Gael. Deas, or Des, the right hand, and Syl, the sun. When referring to this motion as practised by the Romans, he quotes Plin. Hist. Nat. Lib. xxxviii. c. 2. But this is undoubtedly an error for xxviii. 2. For the passage referred to seems to be this.

In adorando dexteram ad osculum referimus, totumque corpus circumagimus: quod in laevum fecisse, Galliae religiosius credunt.

WIDDIE, WIDDY, s. 1. Properly, a rope made of twigs of willow; used to denote a halter, S. Sometimes improperly written Woodie. See Sup.

He had purgation to mak a theif
To die without a widdy.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 20. st. 6.

This Prouerb is of veritie,
Quhilk I hard red intill ane letter;
Hiest in court nixt the widdie,
Without he gyde him al the better.

Lyndsay's Warkis, 1592. p. 303.

"When justice," as Sibb. observes, "was executed upon the spot, the first tree afforded an halter. It was an ingenious idea of a learned person on the continent, to examine the analogy between language and manners." Chron. S.P. II. 6. N.

The term is vulgarly understood in S. as if it denoted the gallows itself. But it is merely such a withe as had formerly been employed at the gallows, and is accordingly distinguished from the fatal tree.

Ane stark gallows, a widdy, and a pin,
The heid poynt of thy Elders arms are;
Written abune in poysie, Hang Dunbar.

Kennedie, Evergreen, ii. 69.

"An Irish rebel put up a petition that he might be hanged in a withe, and not in a halter, because it had been so used with former rebels," Bacon. V. Withe, Johns. Dict.

2. This name is given, in Caithness, to a twig, having several smaller shoots branching out from it; which being plaited together, it is used as a whip, the single grain serving for a handle.

Teut. wede, wyd, wiede, salix, vimen. Su.G. widia, vimen, vinculum vimineum, from wide, salix; A.S. withig, id. E. withy. Moes.G. with-an, conjungere, copulare. V. WETHY.

Fr. har, hard, a withe, is used in the same sense. Sur peine de la har; on pain of the halter. Tu merites la hard; you deserve the gallows; Fontaine.

To CHEAT THE WIDDIE, or WUDDIE. To escape the gallows, when it has been fully deserved. S.

WIDDIFOW, VIDDIFUL, s. 1. It properly signifies one who deserves to fill a widdie or halter. This appears from the Prov.

"Ye're a widdy-fou against hanging-time;" Ramsay's S. Prov. p. 85.

Now, my lord, for Goddis saik lat nocht hang me,
Howbeid thir widdy fowis wald wrang me.

Lyndsay, S.P.R. ii. 183.

Thou art but Glunschoch with the giltit hipps,
That for thy lounrie mony a leisch has fyld;
Vain Widdifow, out of thy wit gane wyld.

Dunbar, Evergreen, ii. 53.

2. Equivalent to brave boys, in sea language.

"Viddefullis al, viddefuls al. grit and smal, grit and smal. ane and al, ane and al. heisau, heisau. nou mak fast the theyrs." Compl. S. p. 63.

3. A romp, S.

In Gl. Compl. and Sibb. it is deduced from Teut. wood, rabies, woodigh, furiosus. But the phrase, fill a widdie, being still used with respect to one who, it is thought, will come to a violent death, this seems the most probable origin. The Swedes have an analogous term. They call a rogue Galgemat, i. e. one who will soon have the gallows for his mate or companion; Ihre, vo. Mat. Dunbar, indeed, virtually expl. the term as equivalent to gane wyld out of one's wit. But this might be merely for the sake of the alliteration. At any rate, it only proves his own idea of the signification.

WIDDIFOW, adj. Expl. "wrathful. A widdifou wicht is a common expression for a peevish angry man;" Gl. Compl.

The laird was a widdiefu' bleerit knurl;
She's left the gude-fellow and taen the churl.

Burns, iv. 54.

The widdiefow wardannis tuik my geir,
And left me nowdir horss nor meir,
Nor erdly gud that me belangit:
Now walloway I mon be hangit!

Lyndsay, S.P.R. ii. 186.

This seems merely an oblique sense of the preceding term, used as an adj.

To WIDDILL, v. n. pron. wuddil. 1. The sense of this v. is rather indeterminate. It is generally used in connexion with some other v., as, to widdil and ban, to widdil and flyte, &c., S.

Lyke Dido, Cupido
I widdil and I warie,
Quha reft me, and left me
In sic a feirie-farie.

Cherrie and Slae, st. 18.

i. e. I break out into cursing against Cupid. It is evidently intensive. For it is thus translated, Lat. vers. 1631.—Sceleratum taliter arcum, Crudelemque Deum, diris ter mille dicavi.

May it be viewed as a derivation from wod, furiosus, or wed-an, furere; q. I wax wroth?

"Quha brekis the secund command? Thai that sweris be the name of God fulehardie, nocht taking tent of an euil vse, thai that sueris ane lesing, mainsueris thame self, wariis, bannis and widdillis thair saule, to excuse thair fault, or for ony vaine mater.—Thai that will nocht chasteis or snibe thair barnis fra lesingis, sweiring, banning & widling, and techis thame nocht to lofe God and thank him at al tymes." Abp. Hamiltoun's Catechisme, 1552. Fol. 31. b. 32. a.

2. We also use this v. S. in the same sense with E. wriggle or waddle.

3. To attain an end by short, noiseless, or apparently feeble but prolonged exertions. S.

4. It has also an active sense, like E. wriggle, as signifying to writhe, to winch, to introduce by shifting motion, or (metaph.) by circuitous courses, S.

It's Antichrist his Pipes and Fiddles,
And other tools, wherewith he widdles
Poor caitiffs into dark delusions,
Gross ignorance and deep confusions.

Cleland's Poems, p. 80.

The term, therefore, as used in sense 1., may literally signify, to writhe one's self from rage. A. Bor. to widdle, to fret.

Johns. defines waddle, "to shake in walking from side to side; to deviate from a right line;" deriving it from Belg. waghelen. But surely, Germ. wedel-n is preferable, which signifies, caudam motitare, q. to shake one's tail.

WIDDIL, s. A contention. S.

WIDDLE, s. Wriggling motion; metaph. struggle, or bustle, S. See Sup.

Lyndsay, S.P.R. ii. 223.

"An old wyfe; an old woman. None are wives but such as are married, which old women sometimes are not." Sir J. Sinclair's Observ. p. 53.

This term, as Sibb. observes, is generally applied to a woman past middle age.

A.S. Su.G. wif, mulier, foemina. Of this word various etymons have been given. Ihre derives it from Su.G. wif, hwif, a woman's coif or hood, as gyrdel, cingulum, and linda, balteus, are used for man and woman, in the Laws of Gothland; and, among the Ostrogoths, hatt and haetta, pileus et vitta, had the same signification. Wachter and others derive it from wefw-a, to weave, this being the proper work for females. V. Jun. Etym.

WIFE-CARLE, s. A cotquean; a man who attends more to housewifery than becomes his sex. S.

WIFFIE, s. A little wife; also a fondling term. S.

WIFLIE, WYFELIE, adj. Feminine, belonging to woman.

The word is retained, A. Bor. "Wig. A bun or muffin. North." Gl. Grose.

Teut. wegghe, panis triticeus; libum oblongum, et libum lunatum; Kilian. Su.G. hetweg, a kind of hot bread, baked with various kinds of aromatics, and eaten on the day preceding Lent. Ihre derives the word from het, hot, and weck-en, which in Mod. Sax. signifies a round sort of bread. Germ. weck, id. Kilian gives wegghe as synon. with Maene. V. MANE, Breid of Mane.

WIG, WYG, s. This seems to signify a wall. A thing is said to gang frae wyg to waw, when it is moved backwards and forwards from the one wall of a house to the other, q. at full swing, S.B. See Sup.

WIGGIE, s. A name given to the devil. S.

To WIGGLE, v. n. To wriggle. V. WAIGLE.

WIGHT, s. The Shrew-mouse, Orkn. Sorex araneus, Linn.

"The wild quadrupeds of this parish are, rabbits, the brown or Norwegian rat, the short-tailed field mouse, common mice, and a small species of mice, commonly called here wights, which I have never observed in Scotland." P. Birsay, Statist. Acc. xiv. 317.

This animal is very particularly described in Museum Wormian. p. 321. &c. It seems to have received its Orcadian name from the smallness of its size; as Su.G. wickt denotes any thing that is very small in its kind, being radically the same with waet, aliquid; A.S. wiht, a creature.

Or its name might originate from its supposed noxious qualities; as the ancients believed it to be injurious to cattle, an idea now exploded. Wormius mentions its bite as venomous, whence the name, Sorex aranea; as resembling the spider for poison. Now, Ihre observes that the Su.G. term, already referred to, is especially used in relation to noxious and monstrous animals. Hence, perhaps, its E. name.

Su.G. wel-a, to deceive, Isl. vael-a, callidus esse, G. Andr.; curam gerere, Verel. Su.G. wel denotes art, stratagem; used, as Ihre says, in a good as well as in a bad sense. Isl. vel, id. Verel. Hence Fr. guile, g being prefixed. To WILE, WYLE, v. a. To select.

Rudd. thinks that the designation may perhaps be from E. wily, "because by its not being seen, it does as it were cunningly or slyly keep men warm." The origin seems quite uncertain.

WYLFULL, adj. Willing; q. full of will.

I than, set in lyk assay,

WILFULLY, adj. Willingly.

Of Rainfrwe als the barowny
Come to thare pes full wilfully.

Wyntown, viii. 29. 240.

WILL,* s. What's your will? a common Scoticism for, "What did you say?" It is also given as a reply to one who calls. It is used by Foote; and is perhaps common in low E.

This is at least as old as the time of Gawin Douglas.

"May thow not heir? Langar how I culd schout!"

'What war your will?' "I will eum in but doubt."

King Hart, ii. 3.

WILL,* s. 1. O' will, spontaneously. 2. At a' will, to the utmost extent of one's inclination or desire. 3. To Tak one's will o'. (1.) To treat or use as one pleases. (2.) To take as much of any thing as one pleases. 4. In the sense of hope. "I hae nae will o' that, I hope that is not the case, &c. S.

WILL, s. Apparently, use; custom; pl. willis.

Use, edit. 1620. Barbour, xiii. 515. MS.

It may, however, merely mean, study, endeavour; A.S. will, Teut. willa, studium.

WILL, aux. v. 1. "Be accustomed, make a practice of;" Gl. Wyntown. 2. It is often used for shall. It is sometimes equivalent to must; as implying the idea of constraint, or of necessity. S.

Wyntown, ix. 13. 53. 55.

This is still a common idiom in S. But, as far as I have observed, it is especially used by those who border on the Highlands, or whose native tongue is Gaelic.

WILL BE is used to express what is meant only as a probable conjecture, nearly equivalent to may be; as, "The kirk will be about a short mile from the manse." S.

WILL, WYLL, WIL, WYL, adj. 1. "Lost in error, uncertain how to proceed," S.

It is very frequently conjoined with a s. As, will of rede, at a loss what to do, inops consilii; V. REDE, s. Will of wane, at a loss for a habitation.

Than wes he wondir will off wane,
And sodanly in hart has tane,
That he wald trewaile our the se,
And a quhile in Parys be. Barbour, i. 323, MS.

It is used by Blind Harry, not directly as signifying, at a loss for a place of habitation, but for a place of security.

The woman than, quhilk was full will off wayne,
The perell saw, with fellone noyis and dyn,
Gat wp the yett, and leit thaim entir in.

Wallace, vi. 179. MS.

"Scot. I'm will what to do. It. He's so will of his wedding, that he kens na whare to woo; Prov. Scot. i. e. There are so many things which he may obtain, that he is in doubt which of them to choose;" Rudd.

Ramsay gives it differently; "Ye're sae will in your wooing ye watna where to wed;" S. Prov. p. 85.

Su.G. will, also willt, willse, Isl. vill-ur, id. vill-a, Sw. willa, error; Isl. vill-a, Su.G. foerwill-a, to lead astray. These terms are also transferred to the mind.

2. Desert; unfrequented.

Aucht thou yit than leif this weifare and ioy?

Ibid. 110, 31.

Isl. vill is also used in the sense of ferus; as, vill goltr, a wild boar; Su.G. willa diur, wild animals.

The word is undoubtedly radically the same with E. wild. The Su.G. term is often thus written; and S. to gang wild, is synon. with will. It is probable, that the primary sense is that first given above. Animals might be denominated wild from their going astray.

WILL-GATE, WULL-GATE. 1. Literally, an erroneous course. 2. In a moral sense, any course that is improper. S.

WILSUM, adj. In a wandering state, implying the ideas of dreariness, and of ignorance of one's course, S. pron. wullsum.

Vpoun sic wise vncertainlie we went

To WIN, v. n. To dwell. V. WON.

To WIN, WYN, WINNE, v. a. 1. To dry corn, hay, peats, &c. by exposing them to the air, S. Sibb. writes won as the v. But this is properly the pret., anciently wonnyn.

It fell about the Lammas tide
When yeoman wonne their hay,
The doughtie Douglas gan to ride.
In England to take a prey.

Hume's Hist. Dougl. p. 104.

"Little attention is paid, by the general run of farmers, to win the grain in the stook." P. Wattin, Caithn. Statist. Acc. xi. 267, N.

"The place quhar he winnes his peitts this yeir, ther he sawis his corne the next yeire, after that he guidds it weill with sea ware." Monroe's Iles, p. 46. This respects the island of Lewis.

"Cutting, winning, and carrying home their peats, however, consumes a great deal of time." P. Wattin, Caithn. Statist. Acc. xi. 268.

2. Often used to denote harvest-making in general.

For syndry cornys that thai bar
Wox ryp to wyn, to mannys fud :
That the treys all chargyt stud
With ser frutis, on syndry wyss.
In this suete tyme, that I dewyss,
Thai off the pele had wonnyn hay,
And with this Bunnok spokyn had thai,
To lede thair hay, for he wes ner.—
And sum that war with in the pele
War ischyt on thair awne wnsele,
To wyn the herwyst ner tharby.

Barbour, x. 189. 198. 219. MS.

"The labourers of the ground—might not sow nor win their corns, through the tumults and cumbers in the country." Pitscottie, p. 10.

"Becaus kyng Henry was this tyme in France, and the corne to be won, thay war content on all sydis to defend thair awin but ony forthir inuasion of othir quhill the nixt yeir." Bellend. Cron. B. xiii. c. 4. Jam messis instaret; Boeth.

Su.G. wann-a, Alem. wann-on, Belg. winn-en, A.S. wind-wian, ventilare. Su.G. Isl. winn-a, to wither. In Isl. it is used especially with respect to herbs and flowers. Forwyned is an O.E. word of the same meaning, mentioned by Skinner, and expl. marcidus, arefactus. But he erroneously derives it from A.S. dwyn-an, tabescere. Ihere gives Wisna as synon. with Win-a. V. WIZZEN.

Teut. winn-en corresponds to sense 2.; colligere fructus terrae. The origin of the A.S. v. wind-wian, is wind, ventus; and, as it is a compound v., perhaps Teut. wij-en, purgare. V. WECHT.

To WIN, v. a. 1. To raise from a quarry, S. won, part. pa.

"Gif onie person be not infest with sik priviledge, hee may na-waies forbid, trouble or molest the King, or ony of his lieges to do the premisses: Or to win staines, quarrell, or to exerce ony vther industrie to thair awin profite and commoditie, within the fload marke of the sea." Skene, Verb. Sign. vo. Ware.

"Narrest Seunay layes ther a little iyle callit in Erische leid Ellan Sklait, quherin there is abundance of skalyie to be win." Monroe's Iles, p. 10.

"On the 9th instant, at a stone quarry near Auchtermuchty, while James Ranken, mason, was winning some stones, the upper part of the quarry giving way, he was killed on the spot." Edin. Even. Courant, March 21, 1805.

2. To dig in a mine of any kind. See Sup.

Bellenden gives the following curious account of pit-coal.

"In Fiffe ar won blak stanis (quhilk he's sa intollerable heit quhen thai ar kendillit) that thai resolve & meltis irne, & ar thairfore rycht profitable for operation of smythis. This kynd of blak stanis ar won in na part of Albion, bot allanerlie betuix Tay and Tyne." Descr. Alb. c. 9. Effoditur ingenti numero lapis niger; Boeth.

"In Clidisdail is ane riche myne of gold and asure won but ony laubour." Ibid. c. 10.

Elsewhere he uses the word both as to quarries and mines. V. TYLD.

"The convention of estates—made an act,—that no coals should be transported to any burgh of Scotland, or to any foreign country, but all to be winn and sent to London." Spalding's Troubles, II. 107.

A.S. winn-an, Su.G. winn-a, Isl. vinn-a, laborare, labore acquirere; because of the toilsome nature of the work.

To WIN OUT. To raise as from a quarry; metaph. used.

"Years and months will take out now one little stone, then another, of this house of clay, and at length of time shall win out the breadth of a fair door, and send out the imprisoned soul to the free air in heaven." Rutherford's Lett. P. I. ep. 129.

Sothe thing :

So neighe come never man,

Bot mi lord the king."—Sir Tristrem, p. 125, st. 105.

And aye the o'er word o' the sang

Was—"Your love can no win here."

Minstrely, Border, ii. 9.

"It was said the marquis of Huntly was desired by Argyl's letter to meet him at Brechin, but the marquis excused himself, saying, he could not win." Spalding's Troubles, I. 113.

— His stile is Bonnyha';

And bonny is't, and wealthy, wealthy he,

Well will she fa' that wins his wife to be.

Ross's Helenore, p. 78.

It is often joined with an adj.; as, to win free, to win loose; sometimes with a s., as, to win hame, to get home, S. It is also used with a great variety of prepositions.

To WIN ABOON. 1. To get the pre-eminence; also, to obtain the mastery; to get the better of; to overcome; as, I have won aboon all my fears, S. He's no like to win aboon't, It is not probable that he will recover from this disease, S.—2. It also signifies to recover one's spirits after some severe calamity. S.

W I N

That thai had bene rebutyt sua.

Barbour, xvi. 655. MS.

The worthi Scottis did nobilly that day
About Wallace, till he was woun away.

Wallace, iv. 668. MS.

Baith here and thare sone vmbeset haue thay
The outgatis all, thay suld not wyn away.

Doug. Virgil, 289, 50.

Win away occurs in Ritson's R. Hood, i. 107. But the poem, as he conjectures, is undoubtedly Scottish.

2. To set off, as opposed to delay. S.—3. It also sometimes signifies to die; as, He's wun awa', q. he has obtained release from the sufferings of the present life, S.

"I look not to win away to my home without wounds and blood." Rutherford's Lett. P. III. ep. 24.

To WIN BACK. To have it in one's power to return from a place. S.

To WIN BEFORE. To get the start of, S.

No travel made them tire,
Til they before the beggar wan,
And cast them in his way.

Ritson's R. Hood, (Scot. Poem.) i. 106.

To WIN BEN. To be able to go to, or to obtain admittance into, the inner apartment; to win but, to be able to go to the outer apartment, S.

"Ye're welcome, but ye winna win ben;" Ramsay's S. Prov. p. 85.

Won up, won up, my good maister;
I fear ye sleep o'er lang.

Glenkindie, Jamieson's Popul. Ball. i. 95.

3. To rise from one's knees.

O when she saw Wise William's wife,
The queen fell on her knee;
"Win up, win up, madame!" she says:
"What needs this courtesie?"

Minstrelsy, Border, ii. 85.

To WIN UP TO, OR WITH. To overtake, S.

To WIN WITHIN. To get within.

The menstral wan within ane wanis
That day full weil he previt,
For he come hame with unbirst bainis,
Quhair fechtars wer mischevit. Chr. Kirk, st. 15.

This term has been occasionally used, in some of these senses, by O.E. writers.

—That no schyppe sholde in wynne.

Rich. Cueur de Lyon.

—"That no creature might wynne to her."

Fabyan's Chron.

Syns at our narrow doores they in cannot win,
Send them to Oxforde, at Brodgate to get in.

Heywood's Epigrams, Warton's Hist. E.P. iii. 90.

Warton renders it enter in, observing that win is probably a contraction for go in. To winne to, to attain, Chaucer, Rom. Rose, v. 3674. Palsgraue mentions this word. "I winne to a thing, I retche to it." He subjoins, however; "This terme is farre northren."

A.S. Alem. winn-an, Germ. winn-en, signify in general, to obtain, to acquire. But our term, although perhaps originally the same, is rather to be traced to Su.G. and Isl. In these languages, the v. assumes different forms; Su.G. inna, hinna, hwinn-a, winn-a, Isl. vinn-a. But Ihre reckons winn-a the most ancient; viewing win, labor, as the root. In Su.G. it is sometimes used without, at other times with, a preposition. Jag wet ej huru laengt jag hwinner i dag; Nescio, quatenus hodie pergere valeam; Ihre, vo. Hinna. I wat na how fer I may win, the day, S. I know not, how far I may be able to proceed on my journey to-day, E.

Erke Biskopen tha ey laengre wann,

An til Nykoeping, ther do hann.

Archiepiscopus ulterius ire non valuit.

Chron. Rhythm. p. 308. Ibid.

"The Archbishop wan na ferrer than til Bykoping," &c. S.

Hinna upp en, aliquem praegressum assequi; Ibid.; to overtake one who has gone before, E. to win up to him, S. Laga at du hinner up din broder i studier; Take care to equal your brother in learning, Wideg. Tak care to win up to, or with, your brother, S. Han skall komma, om han hinner; He shall come, if he has time, Wideg.; according to the S. idiom, If he can win. Hinna til corresponds to win to or til, S. Han sprang, men hann icke til maalet; He ran, but did not reach, (win to) the goal. Hinna aat, to reach; Jag han icke hinna aat baegaren; I can't reach, E., (I can na win at, S.) the pot.

WIN, s. Gain.

He sailit over the sey sa oft and oft,
Qubil at the last ane semelie ship he coft;
And waxe sa ful of warldis welth and win,
His hands he wish [washed] in ane silver basin.

Priests of Peblis, S.P.R. i. 10.

It is elsewhere used in the same poem. V. BUD.

They tine thir steps, all thay quhaevir did sin
In pryde, invy, in ire, and lecherie;
In covetice, or ony extreme win.
—And covetice of warldly win
Is bot wisdom, I say for me.

Lyndsay, S.P.R. i. 246, 247.

A.S. win signifies labour, the proper source of gain. But I do not find that it ever occurs as denoting gain itself. Germ. winne, is used in the latter sense; as well as Belg. Sw. winst, from winn-en, winn-a, lucrari.

To WIN, v. a. To wind (yarn,) S., corr. from the E. word.

An' ay she win't, an' ay she swat,
I wat she made nae jaukin.

Burns, iii. 130.

WINACHIN. This term is equivalent to winnowing, in the Buchan dialect. But as used by Forbes, the meaning must be different.

For Agamemnon winachin,
Diana's wench had stown;
An' wad na gie her back again,
Bat kept her as his own.

Poems in the Buchan Dialect, p. 20.

To WYN AND TYNE. "A man able to win and tyne," a man of substance, or as in S. a sponsable man. S.

WYNAKIR, s. Vinegar. S.

WINARE, s. One who sells wines. S.

WINCH, s. The act of wincing. S.

WINCHEAND, part. pr. Wincing. S.

He stert till ane broggit stauf,
Wincheand as he war woode.

Peblis to the Play, st. 13.

Mr. Pink. rightly explains it wincing; Select Scot. Ball.

Gl. V. WINZE.

WYND, s. An alley; a lane, S.

—Thai til Edynburgh held the way;
In at the Frere Wynd entryd thai,
And to the Crag wp throwch the town

Thai held thare way in a rawndown.

Wyntown, viii. 30. 48.

"There is little or no change made on the other passages called wynds and raws. Only it is to be observed, that in all those which have been made in the city or suburbs for at least fifty years past, we have neither gates nor wynds; they are all streets and lanes." Statist. Acc. (Aberdeen) xix. 183.

"Edinburgh and Stirling, two of the principal towns in Scotland, are situated on hills, with one wide street, and many narrow lanes leading from thence down the sides of the hills, which lanes, from their being generally winding, and not straight, are called winds." Sir John Sinclair's Observ. p. 165.

I hesitate if this be the origin. These lanes are generally straight. Perhaps rather from A.S. wind-an, to turn, as these are turnings from a principal street.

WYND, s. A warrior.

Then Schir Golograse, for greif his gray ene brynt,
Wod wrath; and the wynd his handis can wryng.

Gawan and Gol. iii. 10.

In edit. 1508, it seems to be, Wod wraithand, &c.

Germ. winn, winne, certator, bellator; winne, bellum, A.S. win.

To WYND, v. n. 1. To turn towards the left; a term applied to animals in the yoke, and opposed to Haup, to turn towards the right. 2. Metaph. applied to an obstinate person. "He'll neither haup nor wynd," he'll neither turn to the right nor left. S.

To WIND AGAIN, v. n. To turn to the left again, when it is meant that a plough or cart should turn round and proceed in an opposite direction. S.

To WYND, v. a. To separate from the chaff. E. to winnow.

To WIND, v. n. To magnify in narration; to tell marvellous stories, S.; perhaps from wind, ventus, as by the same metaph. a person of this description is said to blow. Hence, WINDER, s. One who deals in the marvellous, S.

Nearly synon. is Germ. windmacher, a braggadocio, a noisy, pretending, swaggering fellow.

To WIND, v. a. To dry by exposing to the air. S.

To WIND one a PIRN. To do something injurious, or what will cause regret, to one. V. PIRN. S.

WINDAK, s. A window. S.

WINDASSES, s. pl. Fanners for winnowing grain. S.

WIND-BILL, s. An acceptance or promissory note, granted for the accommodation of a person, and for which no corresponding value has been received. S.

WINDCUFFER, s. The name given to the Kestrel, Orkn.

"The Kestrel (falco tinnunculus, Linn. Syst.) which from its motion in the air, we name the wind-cuffer, may frequently be observed, as if stationed with its eyes fixed on the ground to discover its prey." Barry's Orkney, p. 312. V. STANCHELL.

WYNDE, s. A certain length of cloth, now unknown. S.

WYNDEL-STRAY, WINDLESTRAE, s. 1. "Smooth crested grass, S., A. Bor." Rudd. Crested dog's-tail grass, Cynosurus cristatus, Linn. See Sup.

Branchis brattlyng and blaiknyt schew the brayis,
With hirstis harsk of waggand wyndil strays.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 202, 29.

Now piece and piece the sickness wears away;
But she's as dweble as a windle-strae.

Ross's Helenore, p. 56.

2. Metaph. used to denote any trifling obstacle.

"He that is red for windlestraws should not sleep in lees." Ferguson's S. Prov. p. 14.

VOL. II.

681

"No windlestraws, no bits of clay, no temptations, which are of no longer life than an hour, will then be able to withstand you."—Rutherford's Lett. P. i. ep. 214.

A.S. windel-streowe, "calamus; a reed, a cane, a wheate or oaten straw, of some at this day called a windel-strowe;" Somner. Calamus, ex quo conficiuntur sportae, Lye; from windel, sporta, a basket, Lancash. a windle.

WINDFLAUGHT, adj. With impetuous motion, as driven by the wind, S.

—Yit then

For yettis he not Eurialus luf perfay,
Bot kest him euin ouerthortoure Salius way,
Grufing as he micht apoun the sliddry grene,
Maid him licht windflaucht on the ground vncleue.

Doug. Virgil, 138, 47.

Teut. wind-vlaeghe, turbo, procella.

WINDY,* adj. 1. Vain; ostentatious. 2. Boastful. S.

WINDIN, s. The smallest or most trifling matter. S.

WINDINGSHEET,* s. To prevent the effects of frantic sorrow, it was said, that if a tear fall on a windingsheet, it disturbed the ghost of the dead and was fatal to the living. S.

WINDIS, s. A pulley. S.

WINDY-WALLETS, s. pl. 1. A ludicrous term for one accustomed to break wind backwards. 2. One habituated to fibbing, or to magnify in conversation. S.

To WINDLE, v. a. To make up (straw or hay) into bottles, S. Teut. windel-en, fasciis vel fasciolis involvere; Gl. Sibb. Hence, WINDLEN, WONLYNE, s. A bottle of straw or hay, S.

"Let the muckle horse get the muckle wonlyne;" Ramsay's S. Prov. p. 50. V. STRAE.

It is now written windlen, which more properly marks its origin. V. KEMPLE.

To WINDLE, v. n. To walk wearily in the wind. S.

WINDLES, WINNLES, s. An instrument used by women for winding yarn. S.

WINDOCK, WINNOCK, s. A window, S. See Sup.

"Faill not, but ye tak guid heyd that neither the dasks, windocks, nor duris, be ony ways hurt or brokin—eyther glassin wark or iron wark." Letter, Ergyll, Stewart, &c. Statist. Acc. (P. Dunkeld) xx. 422, N.

"When poverty comes in at the door, friendship flies out at the winnock." Ramsay's S. Prov. p. 77.

Isl. vindauga, vindoega, Su.G. windoega; according to Ihre, from wind, the higher part of a house, and oega, an eye, because of the round form of the window. And indeed, round windows are often used in the upper part of buildings.

WINDOW-BOLE, s. A cottage window filled by a wooden blind that may occasionally be opened. V. BOAL. S.

WINDOW-BROAD, s. A window-shutter. S.

WIND-RAWIN, WIND-ROWING, s. The act of building up peats in narrow heaps, to be dried. V. WINRAW. S.

WIND-SKEW, s. An instrument used for preventing smoke. It consists of a broad piece of wood, to which is fixed a long handle. This is placed on the chimney-top, and the handle hangs down the vent. It is altered from its former position, according to the change of the wind; Mearns.

Perhaps from Su.G. wind, and skufw-a, sky, vitare, Alem. scu-an, sciuh-en; q. what eschews the wind. Or wind may be from Su.G. wind-a, torquere, because of its change of place.

This, in Ang., is called a wriggle, perhaps q. wrangle, from Teut. wringh-en, torquere; or from Su.G. wrick-a, id. The reason of both designations may thus be viewed as nearly the same.

4 R

There is a possibility, however, that windskew may be originally the same with Isl. Su.G. windsked, a little varied in signification. Asseres tecti, qui culmen et corticem tegunt, ne a vento dissipentur; Verel. p. 294. Asser prominulus, qui a pariete pluviam defendit; a sked, assula; Ihre. He views wind as here signifying the higher part of a house.

WIND-SUCKER, s. A horse accustomed to fill his stomach with wind by sucking the manger. S.

WINDUSMAN, s. A person that is employed about a coal-heugh at the windlass. S.

WINDWAVED, part. adj. Having the stem whirled about by the wind, so that the roots are loosened. S.

WYNE AND ONWYNE, adv. "To the right and left hand, every where," Gl. Ross.

Seek wyne and onwyne, miss no height nor how,
And cry whene'er ye come upon a know.

Ross's Helenore, p. 45.

From E. wind, to turn.

WYNE, s. Apparently end; termination. S.

WINE-BERRY, s. 1. The common currant, S.B.

She led hym in to a fayr herbere,
That frute groand was gret plenté;
The fygge, and also the wynne bery.

True Thomas, Jamieson's Popul. Ball. ii. 20.

"In the north of Scotland, the common currant is called the wine berry;" N. Ibid.

2. This term was formerly used in S. for grapes. S.

WINED. Wall. v. 384. Edit. Perth. V. URN.

WYNELL, s. An alley; for S. Vennal. S.

WYNER, s. The foremost ox on the right hand in a team. WYNERs, pl. The foremost pair abreast. S.

WYNE SECT. The wine called sack. S.

To WINFREE, v. a. 1. To raise from the ground; to disentangle, Aberd. Winfreed, raised from the ground, Gl. Shirr. 2. To liberate; to set free in a general sense. S.

"Twa or three o's winfreed the wife, and gat her out."
Journal from London, p. 5.

This v. seems composed of Win, to have in one's power, q. v., to which an active sense is improperly given, and free, q. to get loose from any entanglement.

WINGED ROW. A half-penny roll baked with flat sides like wings; called also a Luggit row. S.

WINGEL, s. A tumour or soft growth. E. Wind-gall. S.

To WINGLE, v. n. 1. To move with difficulty under a load. 2. To wriggle; to walk feebly. 3. To hang loosely, and nearly in a detached state. S.

To WINGLE, v. a. To carry in a dangling way. S.

To WYNIS, v. n. To decay; to pine away, S.B. A wynist bairn, a child decayed by sickness.

Either corr. from E. vanish, or from Belg. quyn-en, to decay.

WINK, s. In a wink, in a moment, S.B. See Sup.

Snap went the sheers, then in a wink,
The fang was stow'd behind a bink.

Morison's Poems, p. 110.

This is analogous to BLINK, q. v.

WINKERS, s. The eye-lashes, S.

WIN-KILL, s. A hollow in a stack of corn, hay, &c. to prevent it from being heated. Syn. Fause-house. S.

WINKIT, adj. Somewhat turned; a term applied to milk, when it has lost the sweet taste, Loth. Wyntit, Dumfr., A. Bor. wented, id. Blinkit, bleezed, synon. S.

If winkit be the original term, it may refer to the supposed influence of an evil eye; as milk, more than any other species of food, has been considered as under the power of witchcraft. If wyntit be the true pron., perhaps from wind, as denoting the effects of exposure to the air. Alem. uwint, aura.

To WINKLE, v. n. Diminutive from E. v. to wink. S.

WINKLOT, s. A young woman; a wench.

Ane winklot fell,——

Wow, quod Malkin, hyd yow;

Quhat neidis you to maik it sua?

Peblis to the Play, st. 8.

A.S. wencle, wincle, a handmaid, a maid servant.

WYNLAND, part. pr. Whirling; moving in a circular manner.

——Bot the gynour

Hyt in the aspyne with a stane

And the men that tharin war gane

Sum ded, sum dosnyt, come doun wynland.

Barbour, xvii. 721. MS.

Teut. windel, wendel, trochlea; windt-el-en, wendtel-en, volvere, circumagere, circumvolvere; from wind-en, torquere.

WINNEL-SKEWED, adj. Under the influence of an illusion in sight. S.

WINNLE, s. The same with Windlen, a bottle of straw. S.

WINNOCK, s. A window. V. WINDOCK. S.

WINNOCK-BROD, s. A window-shutter. S.

WINNOWSTER, WINNISTER, s. A machine for winnowing corn. S.

WINRAW, s. "Hay or peats put together in long thin heaps, for the purpose of being more easily dried," S. Gl. Sibb. q. a row for winning. V. WIN, v. to dry. See Sup.

To WINRAW, v. a. To put in rows for winning or drying. S.

WINS, prep. Towards, in the direction of, pointing out the quarter, Ang., as, Dundee-wins, in the direction of Dundee.

WINS. Used as a termination, as in Willawins, q. v. S.

WYNSCOTT, s. Wainscot. S.

WINSEY, adj. Of or belonging to wool, S.B. apparently corr. from E. woolsey. Cotton-winsey denotes what is made of cotton and wool; Linen-winsey, of linen and wool, linsey-woolsey.

WINSIE, s. Cloth of the linsey-woolsey kind. S.

WINSH, s. A windlass. S.

WYNSIK. Ballade, S.P.R. iii. 133.

He sall clim in, and thay stand at the dure.

For warldly wynsik walkis, quhen wysar wynkis;

Wit takes na worschip, sic is the aventure,

Sen want of wyse men makis fulis to sitt on binkis.

Covetousness, eagerness for gain; from Teut. win gewin, gain, and soech-en, to seek. Thus ghe-win-soecker is rendered by Kilian, Lucrio, homo quaestuosus. The term is printed wynsik, edit. 1508.

WINSOME, adj. 1. Gay; merry; cheerful, S.B.

Near what bright burn or crystal spring,

Did you your winsome whistle bring?

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 108.

I gat your letter, winsome Willie.——

Burns, iii. 248.

* This seems the more ancient sense. A.S. winsum, wynsum, jucundus, laetus, amoenus, gratus; suavis, dulcis; Franc. wunnisam; hence wunnisam feld, Paradisus; Otfrid. ap. Schilter. O. Teut. wonsaem, jucundus, laetus; Kilian. Lye derives the A.S. word from wyn, joy; Alem. wunne, Teut. wonne, winne, id.

2. Comely; agreeable; engaging, S.

W Y N

Nane eir durst meet him man to man,
He was sae brave a boy;
At length wi' numbers he was taen,
My winsome Gilderoy. Ritson's S. Songs, ii. 27.
The Galliard to Nithside is gane,
To steal Sim Crichton's winsome dun.

Minstrelsy, Border, i. 284.

A. Bor. wunsome not only signifies, "lively, joyous," but, "smart, trimly dressed;" Grose.

The Franc. phrase used by Otfrid, wunnisam sconi, approaches to this; delectabilis pulchritudo, Schilter.

It is possible, however, that the word in this sense may be radically different. For Su.G. waen, Isl. vaenn, signify beautiful, pulcher, amoenus. Hun war miog vaen pijka ok frid; Erat puella admodum pulchra et venusta; Biblia Isl. Gen. 24.—Ihre views this word as very ancient; as allied to A.S. wine, delectus, to Lat. venustus, and also to the name of Venus.

WINSOMELIE, adv. In a cheerful and engaging way. S.

WINSOMENESS, s. Cheerfulness; engaging sweetness. S.

WINSTER, s. A disease of sheep kept in rich pastures, from excessive fatness, similar to apoplexy. S.

WINT, pret. v. Weened.

"Then James Douglas, seeing the King in his bed, wint that all had been sicker enough, and past in like manner to his bed." Pitscottie, p. 140.

WINT, v. impers. Befall; as "Wae wint ye." S.

WINTER, s. 1. The last cartful of corn that is brought home in harvest. 2. The autumnal feast held after the complete ingathering of the crop. S.

WINTER, s. An implement at times hung on the grate to keep the tea-kettle, &c. warm. S.

WINTER, WINTER-SOUR, s. Soft curds and butter mixed together, and eaten with bread. Crowdy-mowdie. S.

To WINTER, v. a. To feed cattle, &c. through the winter.

WINTER-HAINING, s. The act of preserving grass from being fed on during winter. S.

WINTER-DYKES, s. pl. 1. Wooden frames erected out of doors for drying clothes. 2. Improperly, a screen or frame used for drying clothes before the fire. S.

WINTERER, s. Horse, sheep, or cows, kept to feed in a particular place during winter. S.

WINTER-FISH, s. Fish caught about the middle of August, split and allowed to remain in the brine till the end of spring, when they are washed and dried for exportation, are called winter-fish. Shetl. S.

WINTERIN, WINTERLING, s. An ox or cow of one year. S.

WYNTYR, s. 1. Winter, Wyntown, i. 13. 72.

2. A year.

Thretty wynter and foure than
Edan regnyd mac-Gowran. Wyntown, iv. 8. 41.

Combust, as oure story sayis,—
Wes twenty wyntyr Kyng regnand.—Ibid. v. 7. 337.

It is justly observed, Gl. Wyntown, that this mode of reckoning prevailed among all the nations in high latitudes, the greatest part being put for the whole; and that, for a similar reason, the southern nations computed by summers.

The learned Spelman asserts, perhaps rather fancifully, that in honour of the infernal gods, the ancient northern nations did not reckon by days and years, but by nights and winters; according to that of Tacitus, Nox diem ducit. Hence, he adds, their nocturnal sacrifices. Vo. Herthus.

Moes.G. wintr-us, hyems; also, annus. Be the warth twalib wintrus; When he was twelve years old; Luk. ii. 42. A.S. winter has both senses. And thus the same passage is rendered, A.S. version; And tha he waes twelf wintre. Hence gewintrad, grandis aetate, grown to full age, Su.G. winter is used in both senses; and Isl. vetur; hiems, pro integro anno, Verel.

WINTROUS, adj. Wintry; stormy.

"The more wintrous the season of the life hath beene, looke for the fairer summer of pleasures for euermore." Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 283.

WYNTIT, adj. A little soured. V. WINKIT.

To WINTLE, v. n. 1. "To stagger; to reel," Gl. Burns, S.O.

—Now ye dow but hoyte and hoble,

An' wintle like a saumont-coble. Burns, iii. 142.

2. To wind round. 3. To wriggle; to writhe. S.

WINTLE, s. A staggering motion, S.O.

He by his shouter gae a keek,

An' tumbld wi' a wintle,

Out-owre that night. Burns, iii. 134.

WINTON-MONEY, s. Money given to a herd to induce him to take care of cattle put under his charge. S.

WINZE, s. A curse or imprecation, S. To let a winze, to utter a curse.

He—loot a winze, an' drew a stroke. Burns, iii. 136.

Teut. wensch signifies not only, votum, desiderium, but imprecatio, Kilian. Germ. wunsch-en, adprecari. V. WINCHEAND.

To WIP, WYP, v. a. To bind round; as, to wip the skair of a rod, to bind a division of a fishing-rod with thread frequently and tightly brought round it, S. Wypit, part. pa.

Thair bricht hair hang glitterand on the strand

In tressis cleir, wypit with goldin threidis.

WYP, s. A wreath; a garland.

With lynning valis, or lyke apronis lycht,

Thay war arrayit, and thare hedis dycht

In wyppys of the haly herb varuane.

Doug. Virgil, 411, 3.

Varuane is the herb vervain, much used by the Romans in their sacred rites. Wyp seems to be originally the same with Moes.G. waip, wipja, corona, the term used to denote the crown of thorns plaited by the Roman soldiers (Joh. xix. 5.) apparently in resemblance of the wreaths or chaplets given to victors. This is nearly allied to Oop, q. v.

WYPE, s. A blow given by accident, or carelessly. S.

WIPPEN, s. The cloth round the handle of a golf-club. S.

WYR, s. An arrow.

"Than till his boy he said in hy,

"Yon men will slay ws, and thai may.

"Quhat wapyn has thow?" "Ha Schyr, perfay,

"I haiff bot a bow, and a wyr."—

He taisyt the wyr, and leit it fley,

And hyt the fadyr in the ey,

Our term might seem allied to Su.G. waer-ia, Belg. ge-weer, Germ. wehr, ge-wehr, ge-waer, any kind of arms or warlike instruments, from waer-ia, weer-en, wehr-en, to defend.

To WYR, v. a. To "sling down," Pink. It is used to denote the circling motion of a crane, employed by those within the walls of a besieged town, to let down burning faggots on the works of the besiegers.

Johne Crab, that had his geir all yar,
In his fagaldis has set the fyr;
And our the wall syn gan thaim wyr,

Doug. Virgil, 15, 2.

Than Patience sayis, 'Be na agast:
'Hald hoip and treuthe within thé fast;
'And lat Fortoun wirk furthe hir rage.'

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 126.

2. To make; to form.

Quhat sall I do? Alace that I was wrocht!
Get Symon wit it war my undoing.

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 78.

Moes.G. waurk-jan, facere; A.S. wirc-an, wyrc-an, id. used with respect to creation; Uton wircean man; Let us make man, Gen. i. 26. Alem. uuirch-on, Isl. virh-ia, verk-a.

For me to trow that Simon isna near.
Nae wishy washies, lad, lat's hear bedeen;
Ye've news, I'm sear, will glad mair hearts than ane.
Shirrefs' Poems, p. 31.

This seems precisely synon. with Whitie-whaties, q. v. It is nearly the Belg. term.

WISHT, interj. Hist; hush! S.

To WISY, v. a. To examine, &c. V. VESY.

To WISK, v. a. 1. To give a slight brushing stroke with any thing pliant, as twigs, hair, a piece of cloth, &c. 2. To hurry away, as if one quickly swept off any thing with a besom.

Bot quhen I walknyt, al that welth was wiskit away.
Doug. Virgil, 239, b. 15.

The E. v. whisk is now used in the same way, S. Germ. wisch-en, to wipe; Su.G. wiska, hwiska, a besom.

WISK, s. A slight brushing stroke with any thing pliant. S.

To WISK away, v. n. To move off nimbly, S. whisk, E. Bot suddanly away thay wisk ilkane Furth of our sicht, hie vp in the sky.
Doug. Virgil, 75, 50.

WYSK, s. A quick motion, S. whisk.

Bot the King, that him dred sum thing,

WISP, s. Perhaps a wreath of any kind. S.

WISP, s. An ill-natured person; a wasp. S.

To WISP the Shoon. To stuff straw into the shoes or brogues of the peasantry, to keep the feet comfortable.

To WISS, WISSE, v. a. To wiss one to any place or thing; to direct; to guide; to put in the way of obtaining it, S. Can ye wiss me to the way? Can you direct me to it?

Wisse is used as signifying to guide, Sir Tristrem.

To Crist his bodi he yald,
That don was on the tre;—
—"Lord, mi liif, me bi hold,
In world thou wisse me,
At wille;

Astow art lord so fre,
Thon let me never spille. P. 27. st. 36.

'Dame,' said the King, 'wald thow me wiss
'To that place quhar thair repair is,
'I sall reward the but lesing.'—Barbour, iv. 478. MS.

In S. wiss is often used for E. wish. But there is no affinity to this v.

Wissa is the imperf. and pret. of Moes.G. wit-an, scire; A.S. wis-ian, wiss-ian, docere, instruere, monstrare, dirigere: Ladmenn that the wegas wissigeon; Conductores qui tibi vias monstrent; Gen. xxx. 15. Isl. vys-a, Dan. vys-er, Alem. uweiz-an, Germ. weiss-en, (certificare,) Su.G. wis-a, id. ostendere. Wisa wagen, viam ostendere.

"Anes wood, never wise, ay the worse;" S. Prov. Ferguson, p. 5.

"Most of this winter was spent in the discovery and examination of witches and sorcerers. Amongst these, Agnes Samson (commonly called the wise wife of Keith) was most remarkable, a woman not of the base and ignorant sort of witches, but matron-like, grave, and settled in her answers, which were all to some purpose." Spotswood, p. 383.

Wise woman is synon. in E.

"Pray, was't not the wise woman of Brainford?" Shakspeare.

"At this daie it is indifferent to saie in the English toong; She is a witch; or She is a wise woman." Scott's Discouerie of Witchcraft, B. V. c. 9.

In the same manner, witches are in Germ. called weisen-frauen; in Belg. a witch is witte-vrouwe. Stylo Francorum et Alamannorum vaticinari dicuntur non solum divinitus inspirati, quos prophetas vocamus, sed etiam conjectores et hariolatores. Gloss. Keron. propheta, uuizzago; Gloss. Pez. arioli, uuizzagun, pythouessa, uuizzaga; Wachter, vo. Weissagen, vaticinari. The Egyptian magicians are in the A.S. version called wisustan witan, Gen. xli. 8. from the superl. wisest, wisust, sapientissimus. Witega, witga, denotes both a true prophet, and a diviner.

Isl. vit, knowledge, is used, in a secondary sense, to denote magical arts; and vaett, for a witch. Hence, says the author of Gl. Landnamab., our old term, vitk-r, a magician. To the same source he traces E. witch; although this has been generally referred to A.S. wicca, id. Wico-ian signifies to fascinate, to use enchantments. West-Goth. wit-a, to fascinate; Seren. vo. Witch. E. wizzard is evidently from Alem. uuizz-an, scire.

These designations all equally originate from the claim made by witches and sorcerers to superior wisdom; or from the supposed extent of their intelligence, in the judgment of others. V. Keysler. Antiq. Septent. p. 504.

This mode of expression has been used very early. In Egypt, the term wise-men seems to have been synon. with magicians. "Pharaoh called for all the magicians in Egypt, and all the wisemen thereof;" Gen. xli. 8. Ex. vii. 11. In our own country, whatever knowledge was ascribed to persons of this description, it was, however, generally believed that their own lot remained a secret to them. Hence the reflection, in that humorous Song, The Rock, &c. which seems to have been proverbially used in former times:

But they'll say, She's a wise-wife that kens her ain weerd. V. Ross's Helenore, p. 133.

WYSS-LIKE, adj. 1. Possessing the appearance of propriety; prudent; decent; becoming. See Sup.

2. Befitting one's situation or circumstances. S.

To WISTER, WYSTER, v. n. To be engaged in a broil or scuffle, accompanied with high words. S.
WISTER, WYSTER, s. A scuffle of this description. S.
WYSURE, s.

For oft with wysure it hes bene said a forrow,
Without glaidnes awailis no tressour.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 54. st. 1.

"Wisdom," Gl. Lord Hailes. But perhaps with wysure signifies, with men distinguished for wisdom ; from A.S. wisra, sapientior. It may, however, be referred to Belg. wyser, Alem. wiser, prudens.

To WIT, WITT, v. a. To know, part. pa. wit.

Doug. Virgil, 80, 48.

Moes.G. A.S. wit-an, scire, noscere.

WIT, WITT, s. Intelligence ; information ; tidings. To get wit of a thing, to obtain information with respect to it ; to let wit, to make known ; to communicate intelligence, S.

Thai left him swa, and furth thar gait can gang,
With hewy cheyr and sorowfull in thocht ;

Wallace, i. 252. MS.

So Lundy thair mycht mak no langar remayn,
Besouth Tynto lugis thai maid in playn.
Schyr Jhon the Graym gat wit that he was thar.

Ibid. ix. 615. MS.

A.S. wit, ge-wit, scientia, notitia. This is perhaps the primary sense ; although Dr. Johus. views the E. term as originally denoting the mind. In a simple state of society, knowledge itself would probably receive its name in the first instance, which would at length be transferred to the mind as the subject or seat of it. To suppose the contrary, is certainly to ascribe too much abstraction to an uncivilized people. It perhaps confirms this idea, that the s. is evidently from the v.

To WYT, v. a. To shun ; to avoid.

It wes gret cunnandnes to kep
Thar takill in till sic a thrang ;
And wyt sic wawis ; for ay amang
The wawys reft thair sycht off land.

WITCH-BEADS, s. pl. The name given to Entrochi. S.

WITCH-BELLS, s. pl. Round-leaved Bell-flower, S. Campanula rotundifolia, Linn.

There is a considerable analogy between this and its Sw. name in Dale-karlia. This is Maerebiael, i. e. the Mare's bell ; the night-mare being viewed as an incubus or evil genius. They are also called Thumbles, S.B. i. e.

W I T

thumbles, which corresponds to their name in Gothland, Fingerhatt, q. a covering for the finger.

WITCH-CAKE, s. A cake, according to tradition, prepared for the purposes of incantation. S.

WITCH-GOWAN, s. V. under GOWAN. S.

WITCHES BUTTERFLY. A large thick-bodied butterfly of the moth tribe, of a drab or light brown colour.

WITCHES KNOTS. Matted bunches resembling birds' nests, often seen on stunted thorns or birches ; supposed to be produced by a stoppage of the juices. S.

WITCHES THIMBLES. The Flowers of Foxglove. S.

WITCH-SCORE, s. A line drawn with a sharp instrument above the breath of one suspected of witchcraft. S.

WITCHING DOCKEN. An old name for tobacco. S.

WITCHUCK, s. The Sand-Martin, a bird. S.

To WITE, v. a. To blame ; to accuse ; the prep. with being often added, as, Ye need na wite me with that, S. For is also used.

S. Prov. "Wite your self, if your wife be with bairn ; spoken when people's misfortunes come by their own blame ;" Kelly, p. 357.

It is used, in an improper construction, in another emphatic Prov. "Aw thing wites, where nae thing weil fares ; i. e. Every thing is blamed, where nothing prospers." V. Kelly, p. 26.

A.S. wit-an, Moes.G. id-weit-jan, imputare, ascribere, exprobrare. Su.G. wit-a. Wit thet uk sielfwum, at tu owislika bides ; Id tibimet imputa, quod imprudenter petas ; Kon. Styr. ap. Ihre. Belg. Zij zich zelve to wyten hebben ; the same idiom as the S. "They have themselves to wite." This word is used both by Chaucer and Gower.

A. Bor. id. See Sup.

WITE, WYTE, s. Blame, S.

Besyde Latyne our langage is imperfite,
Quhilk in sum part is the cause and the wyte,
Quhy that Virgillis vers the ornate bewté
Intill our tounge may not obseruit be.

Doug. Virgil, 9, 40.

A.S. Su.G. wite is used, in a secondary sense, for the consequence of blame, that is, punishment. In A.S. it denotes both civil and corporal punishment. Hence Flit-wyte, the fine paid for a broil, S. fliting. Blodwyte, &c. Isl. vijte, noxa ; vyt-a, vitii notare aliquem, vytt-ur, vitii notatus ; G. Andr. p. 256. This writer seems to view it as allied to the Lat. term.

WYTELESS, adj. Blameless.

"If all be well, I's be wyteless." S. Prov.—"spoken with a suspicion that all will not be well ; and if so, I have no hand in it ;" Kelly, p. 202. "They wyte you, and you no wyteless ;" Ramsay's S. Prov. p. 72.

WITER, s. One who blames another. S.

WITEWORDIE, adj. Blameworthy. S.

WYTENONFA, s. A name for a disease. V. WED-ONYPHA.

WITH. To gae with, v. n. To miscarry ; to fail ; to go contrary to inclination or expectation, S. It is used both with respect to persons and things ; He's gane with aw the gither ; He has completely gone wrong ; either as respecting one's circumstances, or moral conduct.

With is here used as in A.S. and as Su.G. wid, signifying against. A.S. with-ga-en, with-ga-n, to oppose.

WITH, Wi', prep. 1. Against ; as, "I'll be wi' him for this yet." 2. In the sense of, according to ; as, "Wi' his tale."

Wi' THIS, adv. Upon this ; hereupon. S.

W I T

WITH THAT, adv. Upon that; thereupon; denoting one thing as the consequence of another.

Tresoune thai cryt, traytouris was thaim amang.
Kerlye with that fled out sone at a side.

His falow Stewyn than thocht no tyme to bide.

Wallace, v. 153. MS.

Isl. vid that is synon. Fluga fuglar upp hia theim, vid that faeldust hestur theirra, oc fellu menn af baki, sumer bruto hendur sinar, enn sumer factur, eda skeindust a vopnum sinom, fra sumum liopo rossin, oc foro their vid that heim aptur: Literally, "Fowls flew above them; with that," or, "in consequence of that," their horses took fright, and men fell from their backs. Some broke their arms, and others their legs. Some were wounded by their own weapons: from some their horses fled; and with that they returned home."—Kristnisag. p. 24.

In the Gl. this phrase is rendered, ideo, his factis.

WITH THI, conj. 1. Wherefore; Barbour. It seems to have been used so late as the reign of Ja. VI.

Bot thy greit grace has mee restord,
Throw grace, to libertie;

To thy mercy with thee will I go.

Poems, 16th Century, p. 111.

With thee is undoubtedly an error for with thi.

2. Provided; on condition.

And gyff that ye will trow to me,
Ye sall ger mak tharoff king,
And I sall be in your helping:
With thi ye giff me all the land,
That ye haiff now in till your hand.

Barbour, i. 493. MS.

Withy seems synon.

I shall dight thé a Duke, and dubbe thé with honde;
Withy thou saghtil with the Knight,
That is so hardi and wight,
And relese him his right,
And graunte him his londe.

Sir Gawan and Sir Gal. ii. 26.

A.S. with, propterea, and thy, quod.

To WITHER, v. n. To fret; to whine; to whimper. S.

WITHERGLOOM, s. The clear sky near the horizon. S.

WITHERLOCK, s. The lock of a horse's mane of which one takes hold when mounting on his back. S.

WITHEROU, s. A rogue. S.

WITHERSHINS, adv. In the contrary direction; contrary to the course of the sun. V. WIDDERSINNIS. S.

WITHERSPAIL, s. Goosegrass or clivers. S.

WITHERWECHT, s. The weight thrown into one scale, to counterbalance the paper, or vessel, in the opposite scale, which contains the goods bought; the witheweicht being adjusted before these goods are put into the other scale, S.B. See Sup.

A.S. with, against, and wiht, weight, q. opposite weight.

WYTHEST, adj. Apparently, wychtest, most powerful. S.

WITH-GANG, s. Toleration; permission to pass with impunity, Skene.

From gang, to go, and the prep. with. In the same sense, we say, S. that one should not be allowed to gang with a thing, when it is meant that one's conduct in any instance ought not to be tolerated, S.

WITH-GATE, s. Liberty; toleration. See Sup.

—"Procuring thereby not onlie private grudges, but publicke exclamations, against the with-gate and libertie granted unto such shameful scafferie and extortion."—Acts, Ja. VI. 1621, c. 19.

This, although synon. with With-gang, is formed from the s. gate, A.S. gat, via, instead of the v.

W I T

To GET THE WITHGATE. To gain the advantage; to get the better of; to overcome by some false pretence. S.

To WITHHALD, v. a. 1. To withhold, S. l quiescent.

2. To hold; to possess.

The Kyngis palice and all that rial hald

All hir allane ane douchter did withhald.

Doug. Virgil, 206, 22.

The goldin palyce now, with sternes brycht,

Of heuyn, in sete ryall, wythhaldis that wicht.

Ibid. 212, 38.

This v. resembles A.S. with-hæbban, which not only signifies resistere, but continere, retinere.

WITHLETTING, s. Obstruction.

"The following is the title of one of the sections of Barbour's Bruce, edit. 1620. "The withletting of the Passe of Endnellane," p. 272.

A.S. with, Isl. vid, Su.G. wid, against, and A.S. let-an, Su.G. laet-a, to permit; as denoting the reverse of permission, that is hinderance, opposition; in the same manner as A.S. with-cyosan, reprobare, from with, contra, and cyosan, eligere.

WITHOUTYN, prep. Without.

Thai gart serwandys, with outyn langer pleid,

With schort awiss on to the wall him bar:

Thai kest him our out of that bailfull steid.

Wallace, ii. 252. MS.

This in MS. is generally written as two words.

The acute Mr. Tooke rejects all former derivations of without, affirming that "it is nothing but the imperative wyrthutan, from the Anglo-Saxon and Gothic verb weorþan, wairthan,—esse." Divers. Purley, i. 217. Thus he views it as literally signifying Be out; as analogous to But. This, however, seems to be too great a sacrifice to hypothesis. Even on his own ground, it would have been more natural to have deduced this term from A.S. wit-an, discedere, to depart, to go away, to go forth. For ut witan is expressly rendered, Foras discedere, exire; Boet. p. 186, Lye.

It appears, however, that it is composed of A.S. with, versus, denoting motion towards a place, and utan, extra; as with westan, versus occidentem, Oros. i. 1. V. OUTWITH.

To WITHSAY, v. a. To gainsay; to oppose; to speak against.

Barbour gives the following account of the conduct of the English, under Edw. I.

And gyff that ony man thaim by
Had ony thing that wes worthy,
As horss, or hund, or othir thing,
That war plesand to thar liking:
With rycht or wrong it have wald thai.
And gyf ony wald tham withsay,
Thai suld swa do, that thai suld tyne
Othir land, or lyff, or leyff in pyne.

The Bruce, i. 210. MS.

This passage is quoted, Wyntown, viii. 18, 44.

To WITHSET, v. a. To block up; to stand in the way of.

And ane othyr, hat Makartane,

With set a pase in till his way.

Barbour, xiv. 107. MS.

A.S. with-sett-an, to resist. See Sup.

To WITHTAK, v. a. To lay hold of; to seize.

"And last of all, some violentlie intronettit, withtaken, and yit uphaldis the yronis of our Cunyehous, quhilk is one of the cheif pointis that concernis our croun." Proclamation, Francis & Mary, Knox's Hist. p. 147.

A.S. with-tæc-an, ad capere.

WITTANDLIE, WITTANLIE, adv. Knowingly. S.

To WITTER, WYTYR, v. a. To inform; to make known.

Witteryt, wytryd, informed.

For he said thaim that the King was Logyt in to sa strait a place,
That horssmen mycht nocht him assaile.
And giff futemen gaiff him bataile,
He suld be hard to wyn, giff he

Su.G. witr-a, id. Notum facere, indicare, Ihere. Isl. vit-ast, innotescere, apparere et praemonere. In Isl. it seems especially to respect the manifestation of a person. Hence witran, an apparition; Witrur, a term synon. with Alfar, Elfur, our Elves or Fairies, because these little demons (daemonioli) sometimes made their appearance. Verel. Ind. p. 295.

WITTIR, WITTER, s. 1. A mark; a sign; i. e. an indication.

In this place stikkit hich the prince Enee
Ane mark or wittir of ane grene aik tre,
In terme and taikin vnto the marineris,
Quharfor to turn agane as thaim efferis.

Doug. Virgil, 131, 48.

Now is he past the wittir, and rollis by
The roche, and haldis souirly throw the se.

Meta, Virg.

Ibid., 133, 14.

2. A pennon; a standard.

"He snatched away his spear with his guidon or witter."

Hume's Hist. Doug. p. 98. V. GUIDON.

3. In curling, the mark towards which the stones are shoved. Syn. Tee. S.

WITTRELY, adv. According to good information.

For I can noucht reherss thaim all.

And thought I couth, weill trow ye sall,

That I mycht nocht suffice thar to,

Thar suld sa mekill be ado.

Bot thair, that I wate wyttrily,

It occurs in O.E. in the sense of wisely, knowingly.

Whan ye witten witterly, where the wrong lyeth,

There that mischiefe is great, Mede may helpe.

P. Ploughman, Fol. 14. b.

WITTRYNG, WYTRYNG, WITTERING, s. 1. Information; knowledge.

For Schyr Eduuard in to the land

"Wate thingis to cum sa weill as I."

Barbour, iv. 642. MS.

A. Bor. wittering, a hint. Isl. vit-a is given by Verel. as synon. with Sw. foreboda, to prognosticate; and, as we have seen, is frequently used to denote preternatural appearance. It seems derived from Moes.G. wit-an, scire; and is thus allied to the various terms respecting prophecy or divination, mentioned under the article WYSS WIFE.

WITTER-STONE, s. Apparently, a stone originally placed as a witter or mark.

"— Find, that the mill-dam and mill-land of Pitlessie have been past memory as it now is, and that it is not the occasion of the regorging of the water upon the mill of Ramorney; and that the stone called the witterstone is not a stone for the regulating thereof." Fountainhall, i. 66.

WITTER, s. The barb of an arrow or fish-hook; the barbs of a trident, or spear for striking fish, S.

To WITTER, v. n. "To fight; to fall foul of one another; Gl. Sibb.; perhaps to take one by the throat.

V. WITTERS.

Belg. veter, a point; Teut. wette, acies cultri.

WITTERT, part. adj. Barbed. S.

WITTER, s. A tree reserved in a general cutting. S.

To WITTER, v. n. To struggle in whatever way; often, to struggle for a sustenance. S.

WITTERS, s. pl. Throats. See Sup.

"The queans was in sic a firryfarry, that they began to misca' ane anither like kail-wives, an' you wou'd hae thought that they wou'd hae flown in ither's witters in a hand-clap." Journal from London, p. 8.

This seems corr. from Lat. guttur.

WITTING, s. Knowledge. S.

WITTINS, s. pl. Knowledge. Without my wittins, without my knowledge, S.

This seems the E. part. in pl. used as a s., unless from the A.S. part. wittende, knowing.

WITTIS, s. pl. The senses; the organs of sense.

Myself is sound, but seikness or but soir;

My wittis fyve in dew proportioun.

Henrysone, Bannatyne Poems, p. 132.

It is used in the same sense by Chaucer.

"This is to sayn the dedly sinnes that ben entred into thyn herte by thy five wittis." Tale of Melibeus, p. 284, edit. Tyrwhitt.

To WYVE, WYWE, v. a. To weave.—WYVER, s. A spider. S.

To WIZE, v. a. To entice away. V. WEISE. S.

WIZEN, s. The throat, S. See Sup.

"It tasted sweet i' your mou, but fan anes it was down your wizen, it had an ugly knaggim." Journal from London, p. 3.

This is an improper use of E. weasand, the windpipe.

WIZZARDS, s. pl. Quick-grass, or other weeds, dried, withered, or wizzened, on fallow fields. S.

To WIZZEN, v. n. To become dry. V. WISEN.

WLISPIT, pret. Lisper. V. ULISPIT. S.

WLONK, adj. 1. Gaudily dressed; used in the superl. wlonkest.

Thus to wode arn thei went, the wlonkest in wedes,

Both the Kyng, and the Quene:

And all the douchti by dene;

Sir Gawayn, gayest on grene,

Dame Gaynour he ledes.

Sir Gawan and Sir Gal. i. 1.

2. Rich.

There he wedded his wife, wlonkest, I wene,

With giftes, and garsons, Schir Galeron the gay.

Ibid. ii. 28.

W O D

It is also used as a s., like bricht, schene, &c. denoting a woman of rank, or splendidly dressed.

The wedo to the tother wlonk warpit thir wordis.

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 50.

Here corrected from edit. 1508.

A.S. wlonce, wlance, gay, splendid, rich. This adj. seems to have been also used substantively, to denote an elegant woman. Wlanc wundenloce wagon; Splendidam tortam capillis (foeminam) portabant; Lye. Wlonce monige, magnates plurimi, is a phrase also used.

It is not improbable, that this word gives us the origin of the vulgar term Flunkie, universally used in S. for a servant in livery; q. one who wears a gaudy dress, as referring to his parti-coloured attire.

WO, interj. Addressed to draught-horses, when the driver wishes them to halt, or stop altogether. S.

WOAGE, s. A military expedition. V. WIAGE.

WOB, s. A web, S. wab. See Sup.

Maitland Poems, p. 333.

WOBSTER, WOBSTAR, s. A weaver.

"Wobsters suld be challanged, that they make over many lang thrummes, to the hurt of the people." Chalmerlan Air, c. 25, § 1.

Find me ane wobstar that is leill,

Or ane wakar that will not steill,

(Thair craftines I ken;)

Or ane millar that has na falt,

That will steill nowder meill, nor malt,

Hald thame for hely men.

V. WEBSTER.

Lyndsay, S.P.R. ii. 191.

WOBAT, adj.

I have ane wallidrag, ane worm, ane auld wobat carle.

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 48.

It may be the same word which is frequently used, Ang., although generally pron. wobart, signifying feeble, decayed; as, a wobart, or wobat, bairn, a child that appears weakly or decayed. Wobart-like, having a withered or faded look.

It seems, however, to be properly a s. and the same with woubit, a hairy worm. V. VOWBET.

WOCE, s. Voice.

Than all answer with a cry,

And with a woce said generally

That nane for dout off deid suld faile,

Quhill discumfyt war the gret bataile.

Barbour, ii. 407. MS.

Quhy grantis thow not we micht ione hand in hand?

And for to here and rander wocis trew?

Doug. Virgil, 25, 39.

To WOCHÉ, v. a. Apparently, to assert a claim to any property, and invite those who oppose this claim to exhibit their objections. S.

WOD, WODE, WOOD, s. A wood.

— In the first frost eftir heruist tyde,

Leuis of treis in the wod dois slyde.

Doug. Virgil, 174, 11.

Towart Meffen then gan thai far;

And in the woud thaim logyt thai.

Barbour, ii. 304. MS.

A.S. wudu, Belg. woud, id. The S. pron. is wud.

WOD, WODE, VOD, adj. 1. Mad, S. wud. One is said to be wud, who is outrageous in a state of insanity. See S.

W O D

A wod dog, one that has the hydrophobia, S.

"Quhen it [the sterne callit canis] ringis in our hemis-pere, than dogis ar in dangeir to ryn vod, rather nor in ony vthir tyme of the yeir." Compl. S. p. 89.

It also occurs in this sense, O.E.

— Bitten by a wood-dog's venom'd tooth.

Fletcher's Faithful Shepherdess, Act. ii.

This seems to be the primary sense. Moes.G. wods is the term used in describing the demoniac, Mark v. 18, who was exceeding fierce. A.S. wod, amens, insanus. Isl. od-ur, id. Belg. woedt. This sense is retained in O.E. woode.

"Tweye men metten him that hadden develis and camen out of graves ful woode so that no man myghte go bi that wey." Wiclif, Mat. viii.

2. Furious with rage; denoting the act, S. It is sometimes conjoined with wraith or wroith, angry, q. angry to madness. See Sup.

Maist cruell Juno has or this alsua

Sesit with the first the port clepit Scea,

And from the schippis the oistis on sche callis,

Standand wodwraith ennarmed on the wallis.

Doug. Virgil, 59, 27.

Wod wroith he worthis for disdene and dispite.

Ibid. 423, 16.

A.S. wod, furiosus. Isl. od-ur is used both as signifying insanus, and ira percitus.

This is most probably the origin of the name Odin or Woden, the great God of the Northern nations, whence our Wednesday; from od-ur, or wod, furiosus. Some have viewed this deity as the same with the Mercury of the Romans. But as, like Mercury, he presided over eloquence, in other respects his attributes correspond exactly with those of Mars. For he is still represented as the God of battle, as dispensing the fate of it, and as feasting on the slain. V. Verstegan, p. 80. His name seems indeed to express the rage of battle; and his character is analogous to that of Mars, as described by the Poet.

Amyd the feild stude Mars that felloun syre,

In place of mellé wod brym as ony fyre;

The sorrowful Furies from the firmament

By the goddis to tak vengeance war sent.

Doug. Virgil, 269, 9.

3. Having a fierce or fiery temper; expressive of the habit. A wud body, a person of a very violent temper, S.

4. Ravenous; in relation to appetite.

Bot the vile bellyis of thay cursit schrewis

Haboundis of sen maist abhominabill,

And pail all tyme thare mouthis miserabill

For wod hunger and gredy appetyte.

Doug. Virgil, 75, 1.

5. Wild, as opposed to an animal that is domesticated. Hence wod catt, a wild cat. The term is used metaph. by Blind Harry.

Yon wood-cattis sall do ws litill der;

We saw thaim fail twyss in a grettar wer.

V. WEDE, v.

Wallace, x. 809. MS.

ANCE WOD AND AY WAUR. 1. Increasing in insanity. 2.

One who, being in a passion, still waxes more furious. S.

LIKE WUD, adv. Like one who is infuriate, mad. S.

WOD, WUD. In the wud o't, an expression applied to a person, when eager to obtain or do any thing, or when greatly in need of it, S.B.

It seems merely an oblique use of A.S. wod, Isl. od-ur, mente captus, q. having the mind so engaged, as to be able to attend to nothing else.

WODMAN, s. A madman. S.

WODNES, s. Fury; madness, S. See Sup.

spur. See Sup.

WODDER, s. Weather. "Wynd and wodder," Aberd.S.

WODE FRIE. Void and free, without any armed men. S.

WODENSDAY, s. Wednesday, Roxb.

WODERSHINS, adv. V. WIDDERSYNNIS.

WODEWALL, WOOD WEELE, s. "Expl. a bird of the thrush kind; rather perhaps a wood-lark;" Gl.
Sibb. It appears to be the green Woodpecker. See S.

I herde the jay and the throstell,

The mavis menynd in hir song,

The wodewale farde as a bell

That the wode aboute me rung.

True Thomas, Jamieson's Popular Ball. ii. 11.

"Farde is beryd, made a noise," in another MS., which is certainly preferable. In the Gl. wodewale is expl.
"redbreast."

WODROISS, s. A savage.

The rowch wodroiss wald that bustouiss bare,

Our growin grysly and grym in effeir.

Mair awfull in all thing saw I nebare

Bayth to walk, and to ward, as wethis in weir.

That drable felloun my spirit affrayit.

So ferfull of fantasy.

Houlate, ii. 24. MS.

Here, as in Bann. MS. rowch, saw, wethis, are put for rowth, sall, withis, in S. P. Repr.

It seems doubtful whether the word in MS. be not rather wodwiss, as ro and w are often undistinguishable.

According to this reading, the original term most probably is A.S. wude-wase, in pl. wude wasan, satyrs, fauns, Gl. Aelfric, p. 56, (unfael wihtu synonym.) from wudu, a wood.
The origin of wasan is uncertain.

This A.S. term seems to have been corr. into wode- house, O.E., used in a similar sense.

"Those [actors] said above to have been on board the city foyst, or galley, are called monstrous wilde men; others are frequently distinguished by the appellation of green men; and both of them were men whimsically attired and disguised with droll masks, having large staves or clubs, headed with cases of crackers. At the bottom of the thirty-second plate is one of the green men, equipped in his proper habit, and flourishing his fire-club; and at the top a savage man, or wode house, a character very common in the pageants of former times, and [which] probably resembled the wilde men." Strutt's Sports, p. 282. This immediately refers to the age of Henry VIII. V. p. 190, also 279, N.

Drable, mentioned by Holland, may signify servant;
Teut. drevel, a servant, a drudge, a slave; mediastinus, Kilian.

WOFT, s. The woof in a web. V. WAFT.

To WOID, v. a. To divide.

Gert woid the ost in four partis about,

With wachys feyll, that no man suld wsche out.

Edit. 1648, Divided.

Wallace, viii. 744. MS.

WOYELEY, adv. Sir Gawan and Sir Gal. i. 24.

He shal be wounded, I wys, woyeley I wene.

It refers to the treacherous manner in which King Arthur is said to have been slain. A.S. wolice, prave, inique; wo-lic, pravus.

WOIK, pret. v. Fled; wandered.

The voce thus wyse throwout the cietie woik.

Vagatur, Virg. ii. 17.

Doug. Virgil, 39, 12.

Rudd. refers to Ital. vog-are, Fr. vog-uer, to swim;
viewing these as well as woik, as perhaps derived from Lat. vag-ari. But undoubtedly, it is more probably the same with A.S. woc, woce, ortus est, suscitatus est, from waec-an, suscitari; E. awoke. Or it may be from A.S. weolc, revolvit, from wealc-an. But the former is preferable.

WOYNE, s. Maitland Poems, p. 164.

The trone of tryell, and theatre trew,

Is for to regne, and rewle above the rest.

Who hes the woyne him all the world dois vew;

And magistrat the man dois manifest.

This has been expl., difficult situation, difficulty; Sw.
wonda, difficultas. It may be allied to A.S. wine, Su.G.
winne, labor, winn-a, wond-a, laborare, curare.

WOISTARE, WOUSTOUR, s. A boaster, S. vouster;
Rudd.

Bot war I now, as vmquhile it has bene,

Ying as yone wantoun woistare so strang thay wene,

Ye had know sic youtheid, traistis me,

But ony price I suld all redde be.

Doug. Virgil, 140, 49.

Sic vant of woustours with hairtis in sinful statures,

Sic brallaris and bosteris, degenerait fra thair naturis,—

Within this land was never hard nor sene.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 43. st. 9.

Rudd. views this as the same with waster, wastour, in
P. Ploughman; probably led to adopt this idea from its being rendered by Skinner, Thrasso, a hector. But the term there evidently signifies a spendthrift or prodigal. Those of this description were persons who songe at the nale, who would give no help to the Ploughman to erie, i. e. till, his half acre, but hey trolly lolly, Fol. 32. b. Therefore Peter thus addresses them.

Ye be wasters I wote wel, and Trueth wot the sothe,—

Ye wast that men winnen, with truayle and wyth tene,

And Truth shall teach you his teme to dryue,

Or ye shal eat barly bread, and of the broke drinke.

It is indeed afterwards said;

—Than gan a wastoure to wrath him & wolde haue fought,

And to Piers the Plouwman he proferd his gloue,

A britoner, a bragger, and bofeted Pierce also,

And bad him go pysse with his plow, forpyned schrewe, Fol. 33. a.

But the terms britoner, and bragger, shew that wastoure conveys a different idea. It is under the later character that this ancient writer lashes the clergy for their prodigality and indolence. V. Voust.

WOITTING, part. pr. Voting.

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 48.

In edit. 1508, it is crandoun, apparently the same with Crawdon, q. v. But wolroun appears preferable, because of the alliteration.

This word seems synon. with Culroun. It is well known that q and u are frequently interchanged. Now Su.G. gall signifies testiculus, and Teut. ruyn-en, castrare. That gall was also written wall, is highly probable from the variety of similar terms, allied in signification; as Germ. wol, pleasure, luxury; Alem. welun, id. welig, voluptuous; Germ. wal-en, luxuriose crescere, wels, amia. BEE WORDE of occurs in the sense of become of.
"Then many shall wonder what can bee worde of such a blazing professor, when they shall see all his rootlesse graces withered and wasted." Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 425.

WILL WORD of occurs in the same sense, as signifying, will become of. S.

Belg. word-en, ge-word-en, to become; Su.G. waerd-a, anciently woerd-a, wurd-a, Isl. verd-a, interesse, pertinere. Although A.S. weorth-ian is not radically different, I do not find that it was used in this sense. V. WORTH, v.

To WORK or WURK, v. a. 1. To sprain; to wurk one's shacklebane, to sprain one's wrist. 2. To trouble; to vex; to torment. V. WARK, v. S.

To WORK to one's self. A decorous phrase used by the peasantry, signifying to ease nature. "He's wurking to himself." S.

WORL, WORLIN, s. A puny and feeble creature. See S.
Worlin wanworth, I warn thee it is written,
Thou skyland skarth, thou has the hurle behind.
Dunbar, Evergreen, ii. 57.

When that the Dames devoutly had done the devore
In having this hurcheon, they hasted them hame,
Of that matter to make remained no more,
Saving next how that Nuns that worlin should name.
Montgomerie, Watson's Coll. iii. 19.

Worlin is merely a dimin. from worl, wurl, wroul, which are all corr. from Warwolf, q. v. There seems to be no good reason to doubt that A. Bor. "orling, urling, a stunted child, or any ill-thriving young stock," (Gl. Grose,) has the same origin.

WORM, * s. 1. An old name for a serpent; often one of a monstrous size. 2. A designation given by old people to the toothache. 3. The hungry worm, the gnawings of hunger. S.

WORM-MONTH, s. The month of July. S.

WORM-WEB, WORM-WAB, s. A spider's web. S.

WORRY-CARL, s. 1. A snarling ill-natured carl, who speaks as if he would worry one. 2. A large coarse pear. S.

WORRYCOW, s. A bugbear, &c. V. WIRRY-COW. S.

To WORRIE, v. a. To strangle. See Sup.
"I juge that we troubyll not thame quha fra amangis the gentiles ar turnit to God, bot that we wryte that thay abstaine fra the filthynes of ydolis, fra fornicatioun, fra that is worreit, and blude." Kennedy's Catechisme, p. 11. V. WERY.

To WORRY, v. n. To choke; to be suffocated, S. To be worried, A. Bor.
"Ye have fasted lang, and worried on a midge;" Ramsay's S. Prov. p. 82.

WORRYOURIS, s. pl. Warriors.
Thai walit out worryouris, with wapinnis to wald.
Gawan and Gol. i. 1.

Although some may suppose that this designation, as apparently allied to the v. worry, is but too applicable to many who have been celebrated as warriors, we ought certainly to read worryouris, as in edit. 1508.

WORSCHIP, WIRSCHIP, s. 1. A praiseworthy deed; a valorous act.
Throw his gret worschip sa he wroucht,
That to the Kingis pess he brought
The Forest off Selcryk all hale;
And alsua did he Douglas Dale;
And Jedworthis forest alsua.
And quha sa weile on hand couth ta
To tell his worschippis, ane and ane,
He suld fynd off thaim mony ane.
Barbour, viii. 423, 429. MS.

2. Honour; renown.
It is no wirschep for ane nobill lord,
For the fals tailis to put ane trew man down;
And gevand credence to the first recoird.
He will not heir his excusatioun.
Henrysone, Bannatyne Poems, p. 136.

A.S. weorthscipe, honour, estimation.

WORSSET, WORSSETT, s. Corr. of E. worsted. This is still the vulgar pronunciation, S. See Sup.
"On ilk ell of narrow cloth, serges, and other worsted, or hair stuffs imported, at or above forty shillings the ell 2s." Spalding's Troubles, II. 141.

WORSING, s. Injury. S.

To WORSLE, v. n. To wrestle.
"According to your desire, Sir, we shall worsle with God in prayer that your end may be peace." Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 1073.

WORSLING, s. Wrestling.
"I cannot expresse what a worsling I finde within mee." Z. Boyd's Last Battell, p. 12. V. WARSELL.

WORSUM, s. Purulent matter. V. WOURSUM. S.

To WORT, WORT-UP, v. a. To dig up. See Sup.
"Ane swyne that eitis corne, or wortis othir mennes landis, salbe slane but ony redres to the awnar." Bellend. Cron. B. x. c. 12. Grunno subruentem, Boeth.

"What more is the rest troubled of a dead bodie, when the diuell caries it out of the graue to serue his turne for a space, nor when the witches takes vp and ioynts it, or when as swyne wortes vp the graues?" K. James's Dæmonologie, p. 124.

W O S

"I wroote or wroute, as a swyne dothe;" Palsgrau.

From A.S. wrot-an, versare rostro, "to roote, as the swine doth, to digge or turne up;" Somner. Lancash. to wroote. Belg. wroet-en, wroet-en.

WORT, v. impers. Become; corr. from Worth, q. v. S.
To WORT, v. a. To waste any article, particularly of food; to be prodigal of it, so as to put it to disuse. S.
WORDS, s. pl. The refuse of straw, hay, or other fodder which cattle will not eat. E. Orts. S.
To WORTH, WOURTH, v. n. 1. To wax; to become; part. pa. wourthin.

And sum of thaim nedis but fail
With pluch and harow for to get
And othyr ser crafftis, thair mete.
Swa that thair armyng sall worth auld;
And sall be rottyn, stroyit, and sauld.

Barbour, xix. 175. MS.

And he for wo weyle ner worthit to weide.

Wallace, i. 437. MS.

Of Troiane wemen the myndis worth agast.

Doug. Virgil, 149, 23.

So clappis the breith in breistis with mony pant,
Qubil in thare dry throttis the aynd wourth skant.

Ibid. 134, 17.

This ilk Nisus, wourthin proude and gay.

And baldare of his chance sa with him gone,

Ane vthir takill assayit he anone. Ibid. 291, 20.

Moes.G. wairth-an, A.S. weorth-an, weord-an, Alem. uuart-en, Teut. word-en, fieri, esse, fore.

2. It worthis, v. imp. It becomes, Him worthit, it was necessary for him, &c.

Thir angrys may I ne mar drey,
For thought me tharfor worthit dey,
I mon sojourne, quhar euyr it be.

Barbour, iii. 322. MS.

And gif he nykis you with nay, you worthis on neid
For to assege yone castel.— Gawan and Gol. ii. 2.

In presoune heir me worthis to myscheyff.

V. WORDIS. Wallace, ii. 199. MS.

WORTH,* adj. Good; valuable, S.; without including the idea of comparison as in E. S.

NAE WORTH. Worthless; not good; of no value; not trusty. S.

WORTHELETH.

The blissit Paip in the place prayd thame ilk ane
To remane to the meit, at the midday;
And thay grantit that gud, but gruching, to gane;
Than to ane wortheleth wane went thay thair way:
Passit to a palice of price plesand allane,
Was erectit ryelly, ryke of array. Houlate, iii. 3.

Mr. Pink. reads this as one word, rendering it worthy. But in Bannatyne MS. it is worthe lith, i. e. worth, honourable, and at the same time lithe, warm, comfortable; unless corr. from A.S. weorth-lic, honorandus, insignis.

WORTHYHED, s. The same as worschip; Barbour. Belg. waardigheyd, worthiness.

WOSCHE, WOUSCHE, pret. v. Washed, S. woosh, pron. wush, S.B. weesh, Rudd.

Of his E dolpe the flowand blude and atir
He wosche away all with the salt watir.

Doug. Virgil, 90, 46.

Scho warmit wattir, and hir serwandis fast

His body wousche, quhill filth was of hym past.

Wallace, ii. 266. MS.

WOSLIE, WOZLIE, adj. A term applied to a shrivelled, small-featured, and hard-looking person. S.

W O U

WOSP, WOSPE, s. A measure, or certain quantity. S.

WOST, pret. v. Wist, i. e. knew. S.

WOST, s. Perhaps the same with Voust, Voist, a boast. S.

WOSTOW. Wotest thou, knowest thou.

Quhat wostow than? Sum bird may cum and stryve

In song with the, the maistry to purchase.

King's Quair, ii. 40.

WOT, s. Intelligence, S. wat, E. wit.

"They that speirs meikle will get wot of part;" Ferguson's S. Prov. p. 31.

WOT, pret. v. Waxed; perhaps corr. from Worth. S.

WOTHER-WEIGHT, s. The same as Witherwecht. S.

WOTIS, s. pl. Votes. S.

WOTLINK, s. A wench; used in a bad sense.

I saw wotlinkis me besyd

The yong men to thair howses gyde,

Had better lagget in the stockis.

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 100.

Dr. Leyden views it as comp. of wod and linkis, q. mad wench. Gl. Compl. vo. Vod, p. 383. Sibb. thinks that it is perhaps a diminutive of wlonky, or wlonkis, q. gaily dressed girls. But the origin is quite obscure.

WOUBIT, s. A hairy worm. S.

WOUGH, WOUGH, s. 1. Evil; privity; in a general sense.

Sche crid merci anough,

And seyde, "For Cristes rode,

What have Y don wough,

Whi wille ye spille mi blode?"

Sir Tristrem, p. 102. st. 159.

2. Injustice; injury.

"—Vnjustice, and against the law, with wough, wrang and vnlaw." Quon. Attach. c. 80. V. UNLAW.

3. Trouble; fatigue; used obliquely.

Tristrem with Hodain,

A wilde best he slough;

In on erthe house thai layn,

Ther hadde thai joie y-nough,

Etenes, bi old dayn,

Had wrought it with outen wough.

Sir Tristrem, p. 149. st. 17.

i. e. "Giants, in ancient days, had erected it without any difficulty."

4. Wo, mischief; in a physical respect.

The wyis wroght uther grete wandreth and weuch,

Wirkand woundis full wyde, with wapnis of were.

Gawan and Gol. iii. 5.

Hearne expl. wough as used by R. Brunne, "wo, grief, affliction, harm." In p. 123, the only place I have marked, it occurs as a v.

Geffrey of Maundeule to fele wrouh he wough,

The deuelle yald him his while, with an arowe on him slouh.

i. e. "to great wrath he waxed." The writer seems to play on the designation of this Geffrey, in the second line.

A.S. wo, woh, wohg, weoh, perversitas, pravitas, error. But its primary signification is curvatura, flexio; being transferred from that which is literally crooked to what is morally so. Wo, woh, wohg, weo, are also used adjectively; pravus, perversus. They also signify, crooked, distorted; curvus, tortus. Wough, in the quotation, sense 1., may inde-d be viewed as an adj.

From woh, in its literal sense, are formed, woh-fotade, having distorted feet, woh-handede, &c.; in its metaphorical, woh-dom, unjust judgment, woh-full, full of iniquity, &c. Woge gemeta, unjust measures.

Isl. vo simply signifies, a sudden or unexpected calamity; volk, misery.

ToWOUGH, v.n. To bark. WOUGH, s. The bark of a dog. S.

W O U

To WOUD, v. a. To void; to evacuate. S.
WOUDE, pret. Waded.

Out of the myre full smertlie at he woude;
And on the wall he clame full haistely
Was maid about, and all with stanis dry.

Dunbar, Maitland Poems, p. 84.

Wod is the imperf. of A.S. wad-an, vadere, ire. See S.

WOUF, Wouf, s. The wolf, S.

The wouf and tod with sighing spent the day,
Their sickly stamacks scunner'd at the prey.

Ramsay's Poems, ii. 498.

"Ye have given the wouf the wedder to keep;" Ram- say's S. Prov. p. 82.

To WOUF, Wouff, v. n. To bark, S. See Sup.

Su.G. ulfw-a, ululare, to cry as a wolf, from ulf, a wolf.
The common pron. of wolf, S. wooff, nearly approaches to that of the v. Belg. guyv-en, to howl as a dog.

To Wow, v. n. To howl, Moray.

—The wolf wow'd hideous on the hill,
Yowlin' frae glack to brae.

Jamieson's Popular Ball. i. 234.

WOUK, pret. Watched.

The quethir ilk nycht him selwyn wouk,
And his rest apon dayis touk. Barbour, ii. 552, MS.

Till ner mydnycht a wach on thaim he set;
Him self wouk weill quhill he the fyr sa ryss.

Wallace, vii. 476, MS.

WOUK, Wouke, s. A week, S.B. ook. See Sup.

Tristrem's schip was yare;
He asked his benisoun;
The haven he gan out fare,
It hight Carlioun:

Niyen woukes, and mare,
He hobbled up and doun
A winde to wil him bare,
To a stede ther him was boun.

Sir Tristrem, p. 75. st. 4.

—All the folk off thair ost war
Refreschyt weill, ane wouk or mar.

Barbour, xiv. 132. MS.

O.E. writers also used this term.

Unto Kyngeston the first wouke of May
Com S. Dunstan, opon a Sonenday.

R. Brunne, p. 37.

Wormius observes that, even before the introduction of Christianity, the Gothic nations divided time by weeks;
using for distinction Runic letters, Fast. Dan. Lib. i. c. 15.
V. Mareschall. Observ. De Vers. Gothic. p. 511.

A.S. wuca, wic, wica, id. Dan. uge, wge, anciently wika, wiku. Seren. views Moes.G. wik, ordo, as the origin of the terms denoting a week.

WOULD,* pret. v. to Will. 1. Used by most of our old writers for should, like will for shall. 2. At times used for must. S.

WOUN, adj. Woollen. S.

WOUND.

With that come girdand in greif ane wound grym Sire.
With stout contenance and sture he stude thame beforne. Gawan and Gol. i. 7.

This seems the pret. of A.S. wand-ian, vereri, to dread, to be afraid; used for forming a superlative. Wond, veritus est, Lye; q. frightfully grim. Hence, most probably the provincial term, South of E., "woundy, very great;"

WOUNDER, Wondir, adv. Wonderfully.

The mene sessoun this Anchises the prince,
In til ane wounder grene vale ful of sence
Saulis inclusit.—

Doug. Virgil, 189, 6.

W O W

A.S. wundor, miraculum, is often used adverbially, in the ablat. wundrum; as wundrum faest, surprisingly firm; wundrum faeger, wonderfully fair.

WOUNDRING, s. A monster; a prodigy.

Before the portis and first jawis of hel
Lamentacioun, and wraikful Thochtis fel
Thare lugeing had, and therat duellis eik—
Witles Discord that woundring maist cruel,
Womplit and buskit in ane bludy bend,
With snakis hung at euery haris end.

Doug. Virgil, 173, 2.

A.S. wundrung, admiration. Wundor itself signifies a prodigy; ostentum.

WOURSUM, Worsum, s. Purulent matter, S. pron.

Thir wretchit mennis flesche, that is his fude,
And drinkis woursum, and thar lopperit blude.

Doug. Virgil, 89, 25.

O quhat manere of torment cal ye thys!
Droppand in worsum and fylth, laythlie to se
So miserabil embrasing, thus wise he
Be lang proces of dede can thaym sla. Ibid. 229, 47.

Rudd. derives it from A.S. worms, wyrms, pus, tabes; wyrmsig, putridus, wyrms-an, putrescere. Perhaps rather from A.S. wyr, pus, (Fenn. weri, Sw. war, waras, id.) and sum as denoting quality.

WOUSPE, s. V. WOSPE. S.

WOUSTOUR, s. A boaster. V. WOISTARE.

WOUT, s. Countenance; aspect.

To the lordly on loft that luffly can lout,
Before the riale renkis, richest on raw;
Salust the bauld berne, with ane blith wout.

V. VULT. Gawan and Gol. iv. 22.

To WOW, v. a. To woo or make love to.

Robeysn Jok come to wow our Jynny
On our feist-eivin quhen we wer fow.

Bannatyne Poems, p. 158.

That this is from A.S. wog-an, nubere, appears from the use of wogere, procus, amasius, a wooer, a suitor; S.
wowar. Seren. thinks that E. woo has primarily signified the lamentation of love-sick swains, as being nearly the same with Sw. voi-a sig; queri, lamentari.

To WOW, v. n. To howl. V. under WOUF.

WOW, interj. 1. Denoting admiration or surprise. 2.
Expressive of grief. 3. Expressive also of gratification. S.

Out on the wanderand spretis, wow, thou cryis,
It semys ane man war manglit, theron list luke.

V. Vow. Doug. Virgil, Prol. 158, 27.

To WOW, v. n. To wave; to beckon. S.

WOWF, adj. In some degree deranged; half-mad. S.

WOWFISH, adj. Approaching to derangement. S.

WOWFNESS, s. The state of being wowf. S.

WOWN, s. Wont; custom.

—Nere in that land

Than wes a yhowman by duelland,
That wes cald Twyname Lowrysoun;
He wes thowles, and had in wown
By hys wyf oft-syis to ly
Othir syndry women by. Wyntown, viii. 24. 166.

A.S. wuna, Su.G. wana, Isl. vande, id. The same verbs, which anciently signified to dwell, also denoted custom or habit. Thus Alem. uuon-en, manere, (whence Germ. wohn-en, habitare.) occurs with the prefix, ki-uuonent, solent, ki-uuonin, solito. Hence also uuonahaite, consuetudo, uuone, mos. The transition is very natural. For residence or habitation is merely permanency in a place. And what is custom or wont, but permanency in a thing?

W R A

WOWNE, adj. Wont; accustomed.

—A gret ecleps wes of the sowne:
Thare-for folk, that wes not wowne
To se swilk a want, as thai saw thare
Abaysyd of that sycht thai ware.

Wyntown, viii. 37, 72.

To WOWT, v. a. To vault; to arch. S.

WRA, s. "Company; society," Rudd.

Sathane, the clepe I Pluto infernalle,
Prince in that dolorus den of wo and pane,
Not God thereof, bot grettest wrech of all.
To name thé God, that war ane manifest lee,—
Set thou to Vulcane haue ful grete resembling;
And art sum time the minister of thundring;
Or sum blynd Cyclopes, of the laithly wra,
Thou art bot Jouis smyth in the fire blawing,
And dirk furnace of perpetuall Ethna.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 161, 18.

From "Fr. fray, sperma piscium, [Isl. frae, semen,] whence the E. fry: or from the A.S. wreath, grex," Rudd.
Su.G. wrath signifies a herd of swine.

To WRABBE, v. n. Apparently to writhe, as synon.
with wry. S.

To WRABIL, v. n. "To crawl about." Rudd., more properly, to move in a slow undulating manner, like a worm; to wriggle; S. warble, wurble; as, to wurble in or out. It is sometimes used actively, as to warble, or wurble, one's self out, to get out of confinement of any kind by a continuation of twisting motions.

About hir palpis, but fere, as thare modyr,
The twa twynnyis smal childer ying,
Sportand ful tyte gan do wrabil and hing.

Doug. Virgil, 266, 1.

Warple is used in the same sense, S.B.

At greedy glade, or warpling on the green,
She 'clipst them a', and gar'd them look like draff.

Ross's Helenore, p. 17.

Teut. wurbe-en, Belg. wervel-en, gyros agere, in orbem versare. Belg. wervel is used in composition, to denote the joints of the back-bone; as would seem, from their power of flexion. Perhaps these terms are allied to Su.G. hwerft-a, to move in a circle, in gyrum agere; whence hwirfel, vertex, hwerfla, in orbem cito agere; Ihre.

WRACHIS, Doug. Virg. V. WRAITH.

WRACK, s. For its different senses, V. WRAK.

WRACK, s. Dog's grass; Triticum repens. S.

To WRACK up, v. n. To clear up. E. Rack, v. S.

WRACK-BOX, s. The oval vesicle full of air growing on some species of sea-weed. S.

WRAIGHLY, adv.

The verray cause of his come I knew noght the cace,
Bot wondir wraighly he wrought, and all as of were.

Gawan and Gol. i. 13.

"Untowardly," Pink. But it may signify, wretchedly, from A.S. wraecca, wretched; or rather strangely, from wraeclice, peregrè, "on pilgrimage, in a strange country, farre from home;" Somner.

WRAIK, WRAK, s. 1. Revenge; vengeance.

O Turnus, Turnus, ful hard and heuy wraik
And sorouful vengeance yit sal the ouertaik.

Doug. Virgil, 228, 44.

2. Anger; wrath.

For paciently the Goddis wraik, him thoct,
Schew that by fate Enee was thiddir brocht.

Doug. Virgil, 369, 21.

3. Destruction; wreck, E.

Fyfe wrakys syndry has oure-tayne
Of Goddis lykyng this Bretayne;

W R A

Quhen Peychtys warrayd it stoutly,
And wan of it a gret party;
Syne the Romanys trybute gate
Of Bretayne.—

Wyntown, i. 13. 27.

It is sometimes written wrack.

"To make any publick dispute I thought it not safe, being myself alone, and fearing, above all evils, to be the occasion of any division, which was our certain wrack."
Baillie's Lett. i. 132.

4. As denoting one who threatens or brings vengeance or destruction.

This vengeabil wraik, in sic forme changit thus,
Euin in the face and visage of Turnus
Can fle, and flaf, and made him for to growe,
Scho soundis so with mony hiss and how.

Doug. Virgil, 444, 19.

This is spoken of one of the Furies,—

Clepit to surname Dire, wikkit as fyre,
That is to say, the Goddis wraik and ire.

Ibid. 443, 30.

This seems to determine the origin of E. wretch, as properly denoting one who is the object of vengeance.

A.S. wraec, wraece, wracu, Belg. wraecke, ultio, vindicta.
A.S. wraecc-an, Su.G. wraek-a, Moes.G. wrik-an, ulcisci.

WRAITH, WRAYTH, WRAITHE, WRETH, s. 1. Properly, an apparition in the exact likeness of a person, supposed by the vulgar to be seen before, or soon after death, S. V. Gl. Sibb. A. Bor. id. also swarth.

This goddess than furth of ane bois cloude
In liknes of Enee did schape and schroude
Ane vode figure, but strenth or curage bald,
The quhilk wouderus monstoure to behald
With Troiane wappinnis and armour grathis sche,— Sic lik as, that thay say, in diuers placis
The wrathis walkis of goistis that ar dede.

Doug. Virgil, 341, 42.

Thiddir went this wrayth or schado of Enee.

Imago, Virg.

Ibid. 342, 21.

Nor yit nane vane wrethis nor gaistis quent
Thy chare constrenit bakwart for to went.

Ibid. 339, 15.

It seems to be the same word that is elsewhere written wrachis, from the similarity of c and t in MSS.

And were not his expert mait Sibylla
Taucht him thay war bot vode gaistis all tha,
But ony bodyis, as waunderand wrachys waist,
He had apoun thame ruschit in grete haist.

Ibid. 173, 27.

Mr. Tooke expl. this, vapours, as synon. with rack, rak; justly commending Rudd. for not altering the text. But how can the learned writer excuse himself for using this liberty with respect to wrethis, Doug. Virgil, 339, 15.; wrathis, 341, 42.; and wrayth, 342, 21., which he alters to wrechis, wrachis, and wraych? V. Divers. Purley,
II. 393.

"Phi. And what meane these kindes of spirits, when they appeare in the shadow of a person newly dead, or to die, to his friends?"

"Epi. When they appeare vpon that occasion, they are called Wraithes in our language: Amongst the Gentiles the diuell' vsed that much, to make them beleue that it was some good spirit that appeared to them then, either to forewarne them of the death of their friend, or else to discouer unto them the will of the defunct, or what was the way of his slaughter; as it is written in the booke of the histories prodigious." K. James's Daemonologie, Works, p. 125.

"The wraith, or spectral appearance, of a person shortly to die, is a firm article in the creed of Scottish superstition. Nor is it unknown in our sister kingdom. See the story of the beautiful lady Diana Rich.—Aubrey's Miscellanies, p. 89." Minstrelsy, Border, I. Introd. CLXVI.

This word is used in the same sense, A. Bor. Fetch, synon.; only it seems restricted to "the apparition of a person living." Gl. Grose.

2. The term is sometimes used, but improperly, to denote a spirit supposed to preside over the waters.

The wraiths of angry Clyde complain.

Lewis's Tales of Wonder, No. I.

Hence the designation, water-wraith, S.

Scarce was he gane, I saw his ghost,

It vanish'd like a shriek of sorrow;

Thrice did the water-wraith ascend,

And gave a doleful groan thro' Yarrow.

Ritson's S. Songs, i. 155.

"I believe gin ye had seen me than (for it was just i' the glomin) staakin about like a hallen shaker, you wou'd hae taen me for a water-wraith, or some gruous ghaist." Journal from London. p. 4.

The wraith of a living person does not, as some have supposed, indicate that he shall die soon. Although in all cases viewed as a premonition of the disembodied state; the season, in the natural day, at which the spectre makes its appearance, is understood as a certain presage of the time of the person's departure. If seen early in the morning, it forebodes that he shall live long, and even arrive at old age; if in the evening, it indicates that his death is at hand.

Rudd. says, "F. ab A.S. wraeth-an, infestare." Other conjectures have been thrown out, that have no greater probability. I have sometimes thought that the term might be allied to Su.G. raa, genius loci, whence Sioeraa, a Nereid, a Nymph. In Dalekarlia, as Ihre informs us, (vo. Raa), spectres are to this day called raadend. But I rather incline to deduce it from Moes.G. ward-jan, A.S. weard-an, Alem. wart-en, custodire; as the apparition, called a wraith, was supposed to be that of one's guardian angel. A.S. weard, Isl. vard, Alem. Germ. wart, all signify a guardian, a keeper. Now the use of swarth, S.B. shews that the letters have been transposed, in one or other of the terms; so that the original pronunciation may have been ward, or wart.

When the maid informed the disciples, that the apostle Peter was standing before the gate of the house in which they were assembled, they said, "It is his angel;" Acts, xii. 15. This exactly corresponds to the idea still entertained by the vulgar. If literally rendered, in our language, it would be, "It is his wraith," i. e. his guardian angel. For the notion, that every one had a tutelar angel, who sometimes appeared in his likeness, was not peculiar to the Jews, but received by the ancient Persians, by the Saracens, and by many other Gentile nations. V. Wolf. Cur. Philol. in loc.

WRAITH, s.

The yunger scho wond upon land weil neir,
Richt solitair beneth the buss and breir,
Quhyle on the corns and wraith of labouring men,
As outlaws do, scho maid an easy fen.

Henrysone, Evergreen, i. 144.

"Waste," Gl. Ramsay. But it seems rather to signify, provision, food; Su.G. ward, Isl. verd, id.; A.S. ge-weor-dung hus, refectorium, Gl. Aelfric; from Su.G. war-a, to eat.

WRAITH, adj. Wroth.

WRAK, WRAIK, WRACK, WRECK, WREK, s. 1. Whatever is thrown out by the sea, as broken pieces of wood, sea-weed, &c., S.

2. It is often appropriated to sea-weed, S.

"The Polack—is frequently caught close by the shore, almost among the wrack or ware." Barry's Orkney, p. 295.

"Rackwick, near a place where sea wrack, or weed, is thrown in with impetuosity." Ibid. p. 224.

"The shores abound with plenty of fine broad-leaved rich sea-weed or wreck for manure." P. Ballantrae, Ayrs. Statist. Acc. i. 113.

This receives different names in different parts of S.

"Button wrack, and lady wrack, are best for kelp, and the only kinds used, unless the price be very high. Except these two kinds, every other is very expensive in manufacturing, and produces but little kelp." P. Kilfinichen, Argyles. Statist. Acc. xiv. 181, 182.

O.E. reke, id. "Reke, wede of the sea brought uppe wyth the flowd;" Huloet. Eliot, id. vo. Ulua.

3. The weeds gathered from land, and generally piled up in heaps for being burnt, S. wreck, id. Norfolk; Grose. See Sup.

"There are amongst them that will not suffer the wrack to be taken off their land, because (say they) it keeps the corn warm." Pennecuik's Tweeddale, p. 6.

4. Trash; refuse of any kind.

Ane wreche sall haif na mair,
Bot ane schort scheit, at heid and feit,
For all his wrek and wair.
For all the wrak a wreche can pak,
And in his baggis imbrace,
Yet deid sall tak him be the bak,
And gar him cry, Allace!

Blyth, Bannatyne Poems, p. 182.

Lord Hailes confounds this word with Frack, ready, q. v. But, in this poem, the wealth of a miser is represented as mere trash, because he can carry nothing away with him, when he leaves this world; and is therefore characterized by two metaph. terms, both used to denote the refuse cast out by the sea, wrek and wair. Wrak is used in the same sense in another poem.

Quhill I had ony thing to spend,
And stuffit weill with warldis wrak,
Amang my freinds I wes weill kend.

Bannatyne Poems, p. 184. st. 2.

Su.G. wrak not only signifies what in E. is properly denominated wreck, but any thing that is of little value, mere trash; Dan. vrag, id. This, however, has not been the original form of the word, but rak, rek. Thus wag-rek, bona naufragii, is from wag, waag, a wave, and rek-a, to cast away, to drive, q. what is driven ashore by the waves. Su.G. rak is synon. with wagrek; Ihre, vo. Reka. Wagrech seems to be the origin of O.Fr. varech, whence Skene improperly deduces ware; L.B. varect-um, warect-um, Jus vareci. Isl. hrak, res abjecta; Olav. Lex. Run.

WRAKER, WRACKER, s. A person who was appointed to inspect the barrels made for packing fish. S.

To WRAMP, v. a. To sprain any part of the body, S. Cumb. I've wrampit my kute, I have sprained my ancle.

That this word has, in the Goth. dialects, signified to distort in general, appears from Belg. wrempe-en, although used in a restricted sense, to distort the mouth.

grain. As applied to pulse, to cleanse them from the sand, Loth.
- This is distinguished from riddling ; as in the latter operation, every thing is allowed to pass through the sieve except the straw. By the way, I may remark that, although Skinner naturally enough deduces A.S. hriddel, a sieve, from hredd-an, liberare, because grain is thus freed from the chaff, he does not seem to have observed that Teut. red-en signifies to sift, whence Germ. reyter-en, id.

Ibid. 134, 51.

Luctantem, struggling, is the word used by Virg. in the latter passage. In the former, wriggle seems correspondent, as there is an evident allusion to the barbarous custom of tying a cock to a tree, and throwing at it.

Rudd. views it as probably corr. from wriggle. It seems nearly synon. with O.E. wrall, which Junius renders, curam atque solitudinem alicui rei impendere. It occurs in a work ascribed to Chauc.

In winning all their witte they wrall.

Ploughman's Tale, v. 349.

Junius derives it from Dan. wrolig, discrucior animo, disquietor; wrolig sinde, mens distracta.

wuzlie body,” a person with a meagre or shrivelled face. 2. Applied to one stunted in growth, or unhealthy in appearance. S.

Y consonant corresponds to A.S. G before a vowel. This has generally in S. been printed z, from the resemblance of the A.S. letter to the form of the Roman z, although there is not the least affinity as to power. Sibb. has observed, that "the printers having no such character in their founts,—substituted z in many of the early printed books," whence, "in the sixteenth century, it came to be written in its short form, or without a tail, and at last, in more instances than one, to be pronounced as if it actually had been s or z."

But this, I apprehend, must not entirely be laid to the charge of our typographers, but perhaps primarily to the inaccuracy, if not, in some instances, to the ignorance of the writers or copyists of MSS., who, in writing the A.S. g, did not properly distinguish it in form from the long z, or z. V. Macpherson's Rules for reading Wyntown's Chronicle.

This being a gross corruption, which can serve no end but to mislead or perplex the reader, it is uniformly rejected in this Dictionary, even where the language quoted has been printed in this manner. There can be no objection to this change, that would not be equally valid against the correction of any other error in orthography. For antiquity can never sanction absurdity.

Sibb. has justly remarked, that in some of the most ancient MS. copies of Wyntown's Chronicle, and Barbour's Bruce, the words year, yearn, young, &c. are written yhear, yhearn, yhing, &c. which ascertains the pronunciation beyond a doubt. This holds true, at least, in a variety of instances.

He also observes, that the power of the A.S. g, in the instances referred to, "was uniformly gh." That it was so, is probable. But we have not sufficient evidence for asserting this without limitation. G, in the same connexion, is aspirated in Belg. V. Sewel's Nether-Dutch Academy, p. 3. This seems to be the reason why Kilian writes the prefix ghe, as ghe-waer, certus, ghe-weer, arma, &c. But in Germ., before e and i, it is pron. as y consonant. G also, the seventh letter of the Moes.G., being entirely different from the third, which is written precisely as the Gr. Gamma, seems to have been pronounced as y consonant. Thus Gr. γῶτα is written by Ulphilas gota, γῶταῖοι, γῶτας gudas, &c. The Northern writers, in rendering this letter, use j, which has the sound of y.

Rudd. observes that "it is very ordinary with old authors to prefix y or i to verbs, participles, and verbal nouns, for ornament or the verse's sake: which they have done in imitation of the Anglo-Saxons, who made the same use of their ge, afterwards changed into y or i."

But, as far as I have observed, scarcely any of our writers have adopted this mode, except the Bishop of Dunkeld: and it is certainly foreign to our dialect of the Goth.; in which there is hardly a vestige of any prefix, similar to that of the A.S., having been used.

There seems to be no necessity for particularizing these words; as, in most instances, the only thing that distinguishes them from common E. is the use of this prefix. Doug. uses ybaik for baken, ybe for be, yberied for buried, yboe for born, ybound for bound, ybrokin for broken, &c. Any that deserve particular attention, will be found under the letter I.

It may be added, that, in the south of S., y consonant is prefixed to a variety of words which are elsewhere pronounced without it; as yaik for ache, yaiker, an ear of corn, yield, age, for eild, yill for ale, yesh, hiccup, for eesh, S.B. &c. &c. This must be attributed to the connexion of the southern counties with the Anglo-Saxons; as y, in this form, is merely the vestige of A.S. ge prefix. It is not so easy to account for the similar use of this consonant, in some instances, in Banffs. and Buchan.

Y, in the Buchan dialect, is often prefixed to a word beginning with a vowel; as, Yaffu for awful, Yauvins for awns, the beards of corn, &c. It is also introduced between the initial consonant and a vowel; V. TYAUVE, v. &c.

YA, YHA, adv. Yea, yes, Moray.

He said, "Thir V ar fast cummand:

"Thai ar weill ner now at our hand.

"Sa is ther ony help at the?

"For we sall sone assaillyt be."

'Ya Schyr,' he said, 'all that I may.'

"Ya, wilt thou?" said Wallace, "then tak thee that."

Jamieson's Popul. Ball. ii. 175.

Moes.G. ja, jai, Su.G. ja, A.S. ia, ya, gea, Arm. ja, id.

YAA, adv. Yes, Shetl. V. YA, YHA.

To YAAG, v. a. To importune incessantly.

YAAGER, s. A travelling pedler, &c. V. YAGGER.

YAAL, interj. Expressive of defiance. V. YAIL.

To YABBLE, v. n. 1. To gabble, Fife. 2. To scold; to speak in an ill-natured style. 3. To be querulous.

YABBOCK, s. A chattering talkative person.

YABLE, adj. Able; old pronunciation of South of S.

To YACK, v. n. To talk precipitately and indistinctly.

YACKUZ, s. A person who yacks, or talks thick.

YACK, s. In a yack, in a state of perplexity.

YACKLE, s. A grinder; a double tooth.

YAD, s. A piece of bad coal, which becomes a white ashy lump in the fire, Fife; Gaist, synon.

YAD, YADE, YAUD, s. 1. A mare, South of S. 2. Properly, an old mare, S.; in Yorks. it signifies a horse; E. jade, a worn-out-horse, A. Bor. yaud.

Suppois I war ane auld yaid aver,
Schott furth our cleuchs to squishe the clevir,
I wald at Youl be housit and stald.

Dunbar, Chron. S.P. i. 339.

On his grey yade as he did ride—

He prick'd her on wi' meikle pride.

Ritson's S. Songs, i. 197.

"If wads were yads, beggars wad ride;" Ramsay's S. Prov. p. 42, i. e. wishes, or would be's. Kelly gives it otherwise; "If wishes were horses, beggars would ride;" p. 178.

Lye observes, on the E. word, that a horse of twelve years old or above is called jalk-ur, from jad or jada, which denotes the failure of the teeth; Add. Jun. Etym. Himenjodijr, is rendered, equi solis, in the Voluspa; from himen, heaven, and jod, which, I apprehend, is the word that properly signifies offspring. Teut. gade denotes a mate, male or female, properly among birds. Sibb. views the word as formed from the v. to go; yaid, or yede, signifying gone, spent, or wasted." Chron. S.P. i. 340.

YAD-SKYVAR, s. Apparently, one who drives an old mare.

This is one of the terms used by Dunbar in his Flyting. Mutton dryver, gurnal ryvar, yad skyvar, foul fell thee.

Evergreen, ii. 60.

From Yad, q. v. and perhaps Su.G. skiufwa, to drive.

YAD, YAUD, s. A thread which has been let over one of the reel-spokes, in the act of reeling. S.

To YADDLE, v. n. To contend. V. YED. S.

YADOCK HIDIS. Aberd. Reg. spelled corr. with Z. S.

To YAFF, v. n. 1. To bark; properly denoting the noise made by a small dog; to yelp, S. See Sup.

2. To prate; to talk pertly; used as expressive of contempt, S. 3. To reprehend in a sharp tone of voice. S.

It seems the same with O.E. yawlp, allied to A.S. gealp-an, exclamare, gloriari; Isl. gialf-ra, incondita loqui. The latter term nearly expresses the idea in sense 2.

YAFFING, s. The act of barking. S.

YAGGER, s. 1. A travelling pedler; a hawker. 2. A clandestine purchaser of things unfairly disposed of. S.

YAGHIES (gutt.), s. The sound caused by the fall of a soft but heavy body. Nearly syn. with Soss. V. DUNT. S.

To YAIK, YAIK, v. n. To ache, S.A.

Thay chaist away Justice and Equitie,

For laik of quhilks my heid dois wark and yaiik.

V. WARK. Lament. L. Scotl.

"Oyle—is profitabil aganis gret labouris of the boddy, & mittigatis the yaicking of the membris." Abp. Hamilton's Catechisme, Fol. 160, b.

This is merely a provincial pron. of ache.

To YAIK, v. n. To quiver; to shake.

I saw the ashtre and the aik,

That Aeolus gart yield and yaiik

By his maist bitter blast.

Burel's Pilgr. Watson's Coll. ii. 16.

As it is written zaiik, it may perhaps be z proper, and thus be meant merely for shake.

YAIKE, s. A stroke or blow. S.

YAIL, YALE, s. interj. Expressive of astonishment mingled with contempt, at arrogance in any person. S.

YAIR, YAIRE, YARE, s. 1. An enclosure, commonly of a semi-circular form, built of stones, or constructed of stakes and wattled work, stretching into a tide-way, for the purpose of detaining the fish when the tide ebbs, S.

"All they quha hes cruves or yares, stanks, or mylnis in waters, quhere the sea flowes and ebbes, or quhere salmon, troutes, or the frye of anie fisch of the sea, or of fresch waters ascends and descends; that ilk hecke of the cruves sall be at the least twa inche wide." 1 Stat. Rob. l. c. 11, s. 1.

Qui habent croas, vel piscarias, seu stagna, &c. Lat.

"There are a good number of salmon caught on the sea coast, sometimes by nets and cobles, called a stell fish-ing, but chiefly by means of yaires, or small inclosures, built in a curve or semicircular form near the shore. At high water the salmon comes within these yaires, and at low water is easily taken, having no way to escape." P. Killearn, Ross. Statist. Acc. i. 282.

"The — Yair Fishings, so productive in this parish, seem to be almost peculiar to it. A yare is built of stones gathered from the tide water mark, about four feet in height, and of considerable length, and stretches out into the river in the form of a crescent, or of three sides of a square; but to give it a probability of succeeding, it must proceed from a point of land, so as to inclose a bay." P. Cardross, Dunbartons. Statist. Acc. xvii. 217.

2. It is also used to denote a sort of scaffolding, which juts out into a river or frith in a straight line, S.

"Upon the point of these inches, they erect what are called yares, a sort of scaffold projecting into the water, upon which they build little huts to protect them from the weather; from these scaffolds they let down at certain times of the tide, their nets, and are often very successful in taking the smaller fish, such as herrings, garvies or sprats, sparlings or smelts, small whittings, haddocks, sea trouts and eels." P. Alloa, Clackman. Statist. Acc. xviii. 597.

There seems scarcely any reason to doubt that yare, yair, is radically one with E. wear, "a dam in a river, fitted for taking fish," Baillie; also, expl. "a net of twigs to catch fish," Johns. This is from A.S. waer, wer, piscina, septum, piscatorium, piscium capiendorum et custodiendorum locus; "a place or engine for catching and keeping of fish;" Somner. Isl. fishaver, fishever, id. (piscina, G. Andr.) Franc. uiiere, Belg. wijer.

Junius derives the Franc. word from Lat. vivar-ium. Somner, with more propriety, refers to A.S. be-wer-ian, cohibere, to restrain. Hence, he says, nostratum warren pro vivario;—Gallis, (G. pro W. amantibus) garenne. To these we may add L.B. gueren, vivarium piscium, as well as wareнна, id. Du Cange.

We might conclude, from analogy, that yair and wear are from the same fountain; as various Goth. words, beginning with g, gu, and y, are to be viewed as belonging to one stock. Thus E. garden, S. garth, and yard, are not radically different from S. ward, L.B. wara, signifying an enclosure, a piece of ground fenced by a wall, hedge, ditch, or palisade.

But we have no occasion for analogical reasoning; as gaerd has been anciently used in the same sense with wer. For as the A. Saxons called a wear wer, fisc-wer, the Swedes gave it the name of fish-gaerd. In Legibus Patriis, dicitur decipula, confecta ex contis in orbem positis, ad decipiendos pisces, qui immissi exitum non inveniunt; Ihre. vo. Gaerd, sepimentum.

To this term our yare seems immediately allied, the g being softened into y. It is to be observed that fishgarth, although not mentioned by Johns., is a term used in the O.E. laws, as would appear, precisely in the same sense with wear and our yare. Skinner refers to the 23d Henry VIII. c. 18. It is also used, S.B.

"Tenants who live on the banks of a burn sometimes build a fish-garth or dam, with an opening to receive a kind of osier basket, or what they call an hose-net for catching fish." P. Peterculter, Aberd. Statist. Acc. xvi. 389.

It confirms the idea, that wear, garth, and yare, are all from the same root, that the Sw. term for a warren, is kanin-gaerd, our cuningaire, in which the g is still retained, i. e. an enclosure for rabbits. Warren, indeed, in its primitive sense, denoted an enclosure for fishes and fowls, as well as for smaller quadrupeds.

It may be supposed, that wer, and garth or yare, are derived from terms radically different, because we find not only Moes.G. ward-jan, A.S. weard-ian, custodire, be-wer-ian, defendere, and Su.G. waer-ia, id.; but Moes.G. gards, in aurtigards, hortus, as well as A.S. geard, Su.G. gaerd, Isl. gard-r, sepimentum. But the Moes.G. and A.S. nouns are, I imagine, to be traced to the verbs ward-jan and weard-ian. Su.G. waerd-a, custodire, tueri, is undoubtedly from the same source with gaerd-a, sepire. The latter merely expresses a particular mode of keeping or protecting; i. e. by means of a fence. The difference of form only illustrates, what is well known as a characteristic of the Goth. dialects, that g and u are often interchanged; and shews that this has been the case in a very early period. Perhaps we may view the Ital. and Fr. mode of pron. as uniting the different forms of the Goth. dialects, in the combination of g with u. V. CRUVE.

YAIR-NET, YARE-NET, s. A long net extending into the bed of a river inclined upwards, and fixed by poles, S.B.

"Interrogated for the heritors, Whether the feith-nets, and conceit-net, and yare-net, are stent-nets? depones, That they are not; and that no net[s] can be counted stent-nets, unless such as cross the water." State, Leslie of Powis, &c. 1805, p. 78.

The contrary, however, is asserted on the other side.

"The conceit, and yare nets extend at least three fourths across the channel of the river, and are fixed, stented, and immoveable nets, which proprietors of the fishing are expressly discharged, by the foresaid decision, from using." Ibid. p. 356.

"That the yare-net is about thirty-six fathoms in length, and about two and one-half fathoms in depth; and the conceit-net is thirty fathoms in length, and two and one-half fathoms in depth; and the poles that fix each end of the yare-net may be about two fathoms and one-half in length." Ibid. p. 109.

YAKEE, s. A double tooth, whether in man or beast, Orkney.

This is undoubtedly allied to Isl. iaxl, a grinder, dens molaris, G. Andr. p. 131; and to ialk-r, which denotes feeble manducation, munching, Ibid. p. 129.

To YALD, v. a. To yield; pret. yald.

So tyl hys hart stoundis the pryk of deith;
He weltis ouer, and yaldis vp the breith.

Doug. Virgil, 339, 40.

The gaist he yald with habundance of blude.

Ibid. 56, 50.

Isl. gialld-a, retribuere, luere.

YALD, YAULD, adj. 1. Sprightly; alert; active; vigorous; strong, S.A. Loth. A yauld ganger, a powerful walker. 2. Sharp; as respecting the temperature of the air.

I can see no reason why Sibb. should conjecture, that this may be from A.S. ield, barren.

Isl. gilld-r expresses the same idea; Viribus et virtute praestans; gilld-a, valere.

YALD, adj. Niggardly; parsimonious. S.

YALLACRACK, s. Intemperate altercation; excessive noise of voices. S.

YALLOCH, s. A shout; a shrill cry; the act of yelling, S. also yalloch.

Quhil all the hyllis rummesit thaym about,
And fer on brede thik woddis gaif ane schout.

Doug. Virgil, 447, 4.

Su.G. gal-a, to cry, to vociferate; gell-a, to resound; Belg. gill-en, to squeak, Sewel.

YALTIE, adv. Slowly.—YALTIE, interj. Take leisure. S.

YALTOCO, interj. A common expression of surprise, or of defiance, among the vulgar. V. YELLY, YEALTOU.

To YAMER, YAMMER, YAWMER, v. n. 1. To shriek; to yell; to cry aloud.

The birsit baris and beris in thare styis
Raring all wod furth quhrynis and wyld cryis,
And grete figuris of wolfis eik in fere,
Youland and yammerand grislie for to here.

Doug. Virgil, 204, 54.

Yamer, also yomerand, occurs, Sir Gawan and Sir Gal. i. 7, rendered "muttering," in Gl. But from the connexion it evidently conveys a stronger idea.

There come a Lede of the Lawe, in londe is not to layne,

And glides to Schir Gawayne, the gates to gayne;
Yauland, and yomerand, with many loude yelles,
Hit yaules, hit yamers, with waymyng wete.

2. It is now generally used, as signifying, to fret; to whine; to whimper, S. See Sup.

It is surprising that Rudd, should say of a word, which has so many cognates; Vox, ut videtur, a sono confecta. Sibb. properly mentions Germ. jammer-en, plangere; jammer, luctus, planctus; A.S. geomr-ian, [geomer-ian, to groan, to grumble] and perhaps Lat. gem-ere.

It may be observed that yomerand most nearly resembles the A.S. v. while yamer has greater affinity to the Germ.

To the terms already mentioned, we may add A.S. geomer, plaintive; Su.G. jaemmer, a groan, Isl. ymr, whence ymr-a, to groan heavily. Perhaps the root is retained in Isl. ym-ia, to emit a querulous voice, to groan, whence ymr.

YAMER, YAWMER, YAMERING, s. 1. A cry; a yell.

The air was dirkit with the fowlis,
That come with yawmeris, and with yowlis.

Dunbar, Bannatyne Poems, p. 22. st. 16.

"The yamering was sa huge, that few apperit othir to revenge the injuris of ennymes, or yit to defend thair realme." Bellend. Cron. B. x. c. 13. Luctus, Boeth.

- combined with clay or sand; a denomination of soil, Orkn. See Sup.
 "This substance, combined with clay or with sand, forms a soil here as common as any other, and universally known by the name of Yarpha, or bog soil, whose characteristic is a black colour connected with the power of retaining moisture, which has been supposed to account for the dampness prevalent in the country." Barry's Orkney,
 p. 10.
 Isl. jarp-ur signifies black, dark-coloured. But the radical term in yarpha seems to be iard, Su.G. jord, earth;
 perhaps originally the same with iardfall, eruptio terrae, Su.G. iordfall, sinking of the earth; or contr. from iord-

 YAXE, s. An axe, Buchan.
 YE, YIE, term. (corr. printed zie.)

It has been supposed, that this had its rise among our ancestors, by the pronunciation of e mute, in words of Fr. origin, as is commonly done by the Dutch at present. In this manner chenyie is deduced from Fr. chaine, sainyie, from saine. Gl. Compl. vo. Chenyeis.

But there is no evidence that the Scots ever pronounced e mute. The form of many of our terminations seem to have proceeded from an imitation of the liquid sound used by the French, in consequence of g preceding n in the original word; or, where this was not the case, in consequence of the S. noun following the form of the verb which retained the sound of the Fr. infinitive or participle; as en-chainer, en-chainé. Failyie is merely Fr. faillir or failli; tailyie, a slice, taillir or tailli.

In some instances, the term ye or yie has originated from the softening of vo, or ve, the last syllable of some Lat. words. Thus assoilyie is from absolve, the beginning of a prayer for the dead, in the Romish Litany.

This word is similar in signification to E. fruit, effect, return, &c. allied perhaps to the E. v. yield, and seems the same with the following word.

YEILD, s. 1. Recompense, or rather compensation.

The Psalmes sayis David war and wyse,
 Blist mot thay be that keips law and justice:
 Thairfoir I wald that ye sould not presume,
 Na to have count, upon the day of Dome,
 For mans body thair to give ane yeild,
 Quhome to ye sould be sickar speir, and sheild,
 Of all the realme, quhom of ye beir the croun,
 Of lawit and leirit; riche, pure; up and down.

Priests of Peblis, S.P.R. i. 29.

2. A subsidy. S.

Skene expl. yelde, "a gift or donation;" Verb. Sign. in vo. "Yeild," he elsewhere says, "is called ane gift, tribute, or taxation, as in the auld actes of Parliament maid be King James the First, it is written that ane yeilde was gaddered for the reliefe of him out of England. And ane vther yeilde was collected for resisting the rebelles in the North;" vo. Herreyelda.

It does not properly signify a gift: being evidently from A.S. geld, gild, a tax, tribute, custom; also, payment, compensation; from geld-an, gild-an, to pay, to discharge a debt. Su.G. geld, what is expended, whether under the name of a fine or tribute; geld-a, to pay. Hence, Germ. Belg. geld, money, geld-boete, a fine; Germ. geldstrafe, id. V. YEIL.

It may be questioned, however, whether yeill is not used in the same sense with yeil given above; q. "Readers who have some return for their trouble."

Burns, iii. 73.

2. A cow, although with calf, is said to gang yeld, when her milk dries up, S.B. Thus, a yeld cow is distinguished from a ferry or farrow cow, which is one that continues to give milk for a longer time, as not being pregnant. In the same manner, a yeld nurse signifies a dry nurse. This is an improper sense. See S.

"The yell cattle vary in numbers according to the season of the year—cattle not giving milk; N." P. Tugland, Galloway, Statist. Acc. ix. 317.

3. Applied to cattle or sheep that are too young to bear, Dumfr.

4. Applied metaph. to broth.

"Any thing is better than the yell kail, S. Prov. An apology for having little, or bad, flesh meat. Yell is properly what gives no milk; here it signifies, boil'd without meat, or having no butter." Kelly, p. 42.

5. In a single state; without a mate; applied to birds, &c. 6. Used to denote sterility of soil. 7. Applied to hard rocks, which will not quarry without gunpowder. 8. Bleak; cold; applied to the weather which threatens a bad crop. S.

Both Rudd and Sibb. derive it from A.S. eald, old. But there is no affinity. The origin is Isl. gelld, gall, in-faecundus, effactus; gelld aer, pecus sterile, non praebens, aer signifying a ewe; gelld-ast, to give no milk, lactem cohibere; G. Andr. In like manner, gallvid signifies wood, or a tree that bears no fruit; and gallnoet, E. gallnut, q. a nut that has no kernel: argalli, Specul. Regal., anni infocunditas, annona declinans, q. a yeld year. Dan. gald, Su.G. gall, id. gallko, vacca sterilis, precisely our yeld cow. Ihre views Isl. galle, vitium, defectus, as the origin; whence gallad-ur, vitiosus. He has a suspicion, he says, that the Isl. word properly denotes that kind of defect which is caused by magical arts, and that it may thus be derived from galld-r, incantatio. This conjecture, indeed, may seem to have considerable connexion with our term, in one sense; as almost all the Northern nations have formed the notion, that milk is peculiarly under the influence of witchcraft, as well as cattle in general.

Germ. gall also signifies barren. But Wachter assigns to it a different origin; Sterilis, quia castrato similis.

YELDE, s. A subsidy. V. YEILD. S.

YELDER-EE'D, adj. Having an evil or unlucky eye. S.

YELDRICK, YELLOW YELDRICK. V. YELDRING. S.

YELDRING, YELDRIN, s. A yellow-hammer, S. Emberiza citrinella, Linn.; tautologically yellow-yeldrin, also yellow-yite. Yold-ring, A. Bor. Youlring, Sibb. Scot.

"Citrinella, the Yellow Youlring." P. 18.

An ingenious friend has supplied me with the following account of the vulgar prejudice against this bird.

"The superstition of the country has rendered it a very common belief among the illiterate and children, that this bird some how or other receives a drop of the Devil's blood every May morning. Children hang by the neck all the yellow-hammers they can lay hold of. They often take the bare gorbals, or unfledged young, of this bird, and suspend them by a thread tied round the neck, to one end of a cross-beam, which has a small noose hung from the other: they then suddenly strike down the stone-end, and drive the poor bird into the air. This operation they call Spangie-hewit." Hewit seems derived from A.S. heuut, heuod, the head. Spang is to fly off with elasticity; q. to make the head spring or fly off.

In other parts of S. this devoted bird's communication with the Devil is believed to be far more frequent. For it is said to receive three drops of his blood every morning.

The first part of the word is evidently from A.S. geole, Su.G. gul, yellow. The term. rin, properly, as would seem, ring, may respect the yellow ring which at least partly adorns the neck of this bird. A.S. geole wearte, luscinus, (for luscina) Gl. Aelfr.

To YELL, v. n. To roll, a term applied to a ship.

Yawl, id. is used as a sea-term, E.

Barbour, xi. 329. MS.

Skinner ludicrously derives this s. from the A.S. and Teut. particle ge and mese, a table. But it retains the very form of Isl. geimsla, Su.G. goemsel, custodia. As Su.G. goema obliquely signifies, to hide, goemsel also denotes a lurking place.

YEPIE, s. A blow, as with a sword. V. EPIE. S.

YERD, YERTH, s. Earth; soil. V. ERD. Also,

To YERD, to bury. V. ERD, v.

Spalding uses the term in sense 3.

"They found yerded in the yard of Drum, a trunk filled with silver work," &c. Troubles, ii. 184.

Yerthe sometimes occurs in O.E.

"I take one out of the yerthe that was buried;" Palsgrae.

CAULD YIRD. The cauld Yird, the grave. S.

YERD-FAST, adj. Firmly fastened in the ground, S. See S.

Doug. Virgil, 112, 42.

Rudd. overlooks this term, which is from A.S. geare, gere, certo. Geare is also used as an adj. He wiston gear; They were sure; Luk. xx. 6.

YERESTRENE, s. "The night before last," Gl. Sibb.

This seems a corr. of Here-yestreen, q. v. also Here-yesterday.

To YERK, v. a. "To bind tightly, as with a small cord;" Gl. Sibb. See Sup.

He derives it from A.S. gerd-an, cingere. If not from gearc-ian, parare; abbrev. perhaps from ge-recc-an, corrigere, regere; whence ge-reccelic, strictus, firmus.

To YERK, v. n. 1. To be in a state of fermentation, a term applied to beer, Ang.

Perhaps a frequentative from Germ. gaer-a, Su.G. goer-a, effervescere. Drickat goeres; cerevisia, addito fermento, effervescit. It may, however, be merely a peculiar use of the E. v. because of the quickness of motion.

2. "To do any thing with agility," Gl. Shirr. S.B. This differs from the E. v. only as being used in a neut. sense.

3. To be engaged in any work that requires much exertion; to be laboriously and earnestly engaged. S.

4. To be busy, or keenly engaged, applied to the mind. "I will say nothing, but I will yerk at the thinking." S. Prov. Kelly, p. 182.

Su.G. yerk-a, however, has a sense somewhat analogous; postulare, insistere; Seren. vo. Jerk.

To YERK, YARK, v. a. To beat; to strike smartly, S. jerk, E., yark, A. Bor. See Sup.

But ere the sport be done, I trow

Their skins are gayly yarkit

And peel'd thir days.

Fergusson's Poems, ii. 74.

A.S. gerecc-an, to correct, to punish; Isl. hreck-ia, to beat, pulsare; jarke, pes feriens.

YERK, s. A smart blow; a jerk, S., yark. See Sup.

To YERK, v. n. Figuratively applied to the rays of the sun, when they beat powerfully on any object. S.

YERKER, s. A sudden and very severe blow. S.

YERKIN, s. The seam by which the hind part of the upper leather of a shoe is joined to the forepart. S.

YERN-BLITER, s. The name given to the snipe, S.B. sometimes pron. yern-bluter. It appears to be the common snipe, or Scolopax Gallinago of Linn.

"The niest morning they had me up afore the sky, an' I believe afore the levrick or yern-bliter began to sing, an' hurl'd me awa to Portsmouth." Journal from London, p. 9. V. EARN-BLITER.

To YESK, v. n. To hickup, S. V. YEISK.

YESK, s. The hickup. S.

To YESTER, v. a. To discompose. I never yester'd him; I never gave him any disturbance, Ang.

This is perhaps the same with Gaster, Essex, to startle, scare, or affright suddenly; or with Gaster'd, as used by Beaumont and Fletcher.

"If the fellow be out of his wits, then will I never have any more wit whilst I live; either the sight of the lady has gaster'd him, or else he's drunk." V. Divers. Purley, p. 461.

Mr. Tooke mentions Gaster in connexion with Agast.

It may be allied to Su.G. yster, ferox, or A.S. ge-styr-an, turbare. Seren. derives agast from A.S. gast, spectrum, q. terrified in consequence of seeing a spectre. Junius gives the same etymon.

YESTREEN, YISTRENE, s. Yesternight, S.

A.S. geat, O.Belg. gat, id. Su.G. gaatt, postis januae; Isl. gat-r, gaett-er, ostium, janua, Verel. gaatt, giaett, ante latus, latera ostii, G. Andr. p. 84. The origin is probably gat, foramen, from gat-a, perforare; as door has been derived from Germ. thor, thur, foramen. It may, however, be from Su.G. gaa, to go, q. a passage; as door has also been traced to Moes.G. thairh, A.S. thruh, per, through, because it is that by which we pass from one place to another. V. Doer, Ihre.

YETT-CHEEK, s. The side or post of the gate. S.

YETHOUSE, s. A gate-house. S.

To YET, YETT, Yyt, v. a. 1. To pour, S. yete, yett, poured. See Sup.

On bois helmes and scheildis the werely schot

Maid rap for rap, reboundand with ilk stot.

Scharp and awfull inccessis the bargane,

Als violent as euer the yett down rane

Ibid. 150, 44.

Belg. giet-en, A.S. geot-an, Isl. Su.G. giut-a, Moes.G. giut-an, Germ. Alem. giezz-en, Germ. giess-en, fundere; Su.G. utgiut-a, effundere. Hence Jute, to tipple, jute, weak and bad liquor, S. q. v. Ewte, Exmore, to pour in, is from the same origin.

2. To cast metals. Yyt, molten, cast.

Sum goukis quhil the glas pyg grow al of gold yyt.

Doug. Virgil, Prol. 238, b. 51.

YETLAND, YETTLIN, adj. Of or belonging to cast iron, S. See Sup.

"The ploughs in general are of Small's construction.

They have a cast yetland mould-board, which is curved."

P. Ormistoun, E. Loth. Statist. Acc. iv. 167.

YETLIN, s. 1. Iron not made malleable. 2. A boiler. S.

A. Bor. yetling, a small iron boiler, is evidently from the same origin. The term is also used as a s., pron. yettlin, S. Su.G. giut-a is commonly used in this sense.

Giuta en klocha, to cast a bell; giuta stycken, to cast guns.

Teut. ghiet-en, id. Metael ghieten, conflare, fundere; ghieter van metael, fusor, conflator; Kilian. Germ. giess-en, id. Belg. een klok gieten, to cast a bell.

To YETHER, v. a. 1. To bind firmly. 2. To beat or lash severely; properly, to leave the mark of the stroke. S.

YETHER, s. 1. A severe blow. S. 2. "The mark left by tight binding, as with a small cord," Gl. Sibb., Border; probably allied to A. Bor. yeather, "a flexible twig, used for binding hedges;" Grose.

YETHERING, s. Striking. S.

To YETT, v. a. To fasten in the firmest manner; to rivet, Loth. Ruce, synon. Perhaps allied to Isl.

gat-a, perforare.

To YEUK, v. n. To itch. V. YOUK. S.

YEUNS, s. pl. The refuse of grain, &c. V. YAUPRIE. S.

YEVERY, adj. Greedy; voracious.

A.S. gifer, gifra, gifre, avidus, vorax, rapax, gulosus. Wael gifre fugel, a fowl fond of carrion; gifer, a glutton. Perhaps Su.G. giri, girig, and Teut. ghierigh, avidus, are allied.

YEVRIOME, adj. Having a craving appetite. S. To YHARN, v. a. Eagerly to desire.

The kynryk yharn I nocht to have.

Bot gyff it fall off ryght to me. Barbour, i. 158. MS.

A.S. georn-ian, gyrn-an, desiderare, concupiscere; Moes.G. gairn-an, Su.G. girn-as, Isl. girn-ast, cupere. V. YARNE.

YHARNE, YHERNE, adj. Eager; keen.

Wyntown, vi. 10. 152.

YHEMAR, s. A keeper. V. YEMAR.

YHEMSEL, s. Custody. V. YEMSEL.

YHIS, adv. Yes.

"Yhis," said a woman, "Schyr, perfay,

"Off strang men I kan yow say."—

"Yhis," said scho, "Schyr, I will blythly

"Ga with yow and your cumpany."

Barbour, iv. 470, 484. MS.

Some view this as contr. from yea is. But A.S. gese, gise, gyse, are used in the sense of immo, etiam.

YHUDE, pret. Went. V. YEDE.

YHULE, s. Christmas. V. YULE.

YHUMAN, YUMAN, YOMAN, YEOMAN, s. 1. A person of inferior station; as, a husbandman or farmer.

"Item, all quha are inferiour in parentage, are husbandmen, (or yeomen.) And the Cro of ane husbandman, is saxtene kye." Reg. Maj. B. iv. c. 36. §. 4. Rustici, Lat.

This has been deduced from Fris. gaeman, comp. of gae, Belg. gaw, gouwe, a country, a village, and man, q. the inhabitant of a village. But perhaps it is rather from Teut. ghe-meyn, A.S. geman, communis, vulgaris.

As Junius renders gaeman, incola ejusdem pagi, Sibb. views it as "corresponding with Scot. Portioner, the owner of a small piece of land." Yeoman, in E., indeed bears this sense; as denoting "a man of a small estate in land." But I have met with no evidence that it was ever thus used in S. When Skene gives it as synon. with husbandman, we cannot suppose that he understood the latter as denoting a landed proprietor.

2. It seems sometimes to signify a farmer's servant.

In the contré thar wonnyt ane

That husband wes, and with his fe

Ofitsyss hay to the peile led he.—

And him selff, that wes dour and stout,

Suld by the wayne gang ydilly;

And ane yuman, wycht and hardy,

Befor suld dryve the wayne; and ber

Ane hachat, that war scharp to scher,

Wndre his belt.—

Barbour, x. 172. MS.

The term, however, may be here used according to the signification following.

3. It also denotes a peasant or inhabitant of the country employed as a foot-soldier. Yhumanry, the peasantry armed on foot.

And of all Irland assemblit he Ibid. xix. 171. MS.

Dystroyit, I apprehend, is an error of the copyist, for destreinyit. In Edit. 1620, the word is strenyied.

4. As used by Blind Harry, it denotes soldiers on horseback.

Wallace sum part befor the court furth raid,

With him twa men that douchtye war in deid.—

Wallace raid furth, with him twa yemen past.—

Wallace slew iii, by that his yemen wicht

YICKIE-YAWKIE, s. A wooden tool used by shoemakers to polish the edges and bottoms of shoe-soles. S.

YIE, term. (printed Zie.) V. YE.

YIELD, adj. V. YELD.

S.

YIELD OF THE DAY, the influence of the sun; also, the height of the day. When the ice melts, although there be no proper thaw, it is said to be owing to the yield of the day, Ang.

This may be from E. yield, as denoting that the frost gives way. But it may be traced to A.S. eld, S. eild, age, q. the advancement of the day, analogous to the use of the term height. Isl. ellding, age, is used somewhat in a similar sense. Naetur ellding, senium noctis, diluculum; the age of the night, the dawn of day. So in Lat. senium lunae denotes the last quarter of the moon.

YIFF-YAFF, s. A puny person who talks a great deal, and to little purpose. V. NIFF-NAFF. S.

YILL, s. Ale, S. This is the vulgar pron. in the West and South of S. "Yill-wife, or browster-wife, a woman who brewed and sold ale;" Gl. Sibb.

YILL-CAP, s. A wooden vessel from which ale is drunk. S.

YILL-CUP, s. A cup of wood or horn for holding ale. S.

YILL-HOUSE, s. An alehouse. S.

YIM, s. A particle; an atom; the smallest portion of any thing, Ang. It is sometimes pron. as if nyim; but this is most probably from ane being used as the article between two vowels, q. ane yim. See Sup.

Su.G. em, im, ime, vapour; Isl. hioom, a very small spark, the most minute object, dust, vapour; G. Andr.

YIMMET, s. A piece; a lunch; several yims of food. S.

YIRLICH, adj. Wild; unnatural. Syn. Elritch. S.

To YIRM, v. n. To whine; to complain; also, to ask in a querulous tone; implying the idea of continuation, S.

Sibb. writes earm, yearm, explaining it, "to teaze or importune in the whinning manner of a mendicant;" and deriving it from Teut. arm, pauper, Moes. G. arm-an, misereri. Perhaps more immediately allied to Isl. harm-a, lugeo, plango; harm-r, luctus; G. Andr. p. 107. Jarm-a, balare, jarm-ur, vox avium; Verel. See Sup.

YIRMS, s. pl. Small-sized fruit. S.

To YYRNE, v. n. To coagulate; to curdle.

Also written Ewden-drift, q. v. This may be formed from the old part. pa. of yield, q. snow which is driven as yielding to the force of the wind. Did we seek a more antiquated source, we might suppose a resemblance to the name of Odin, A.S. Eowthen the great deity of the Goths, q. the effect of the power of Odin; especially, as, according to their mythology, he had the direction of the air and tempests.

To YOUK, YUKE, YUCK, v. n. To itch; to be itchy,
S. yuck, id. Lincoln.

Junius mentions this as a S. word, referring to the Prov., I'll gar you scart where you youk not; i. e. I'll make you scratch where you itch not. This Prov. is used metaph.; as when a parent threatens to beat a child. It is commonly expressed in this manner; I'll gar you claw where ye're no youky.

It seems also to signify the causing of pain or vexation of mind without any previous apprehension.

"Thay—throw a proud presumption of thair auin wis-dome, hearis thame selfis, or sik as flatters thair yeuking earis," &c. J. Hamilton's Facile Traictise, p. 42.

To one who does any thing that may expose him to capital punishment, or who seems to make advances to an action of this kind, it is sometimes said; Your neck's youk-

Rudd. says, that he can offer nothing certain concerning the origin of this word. Sibb. entirely overlooks it.
There can be no doubt that it is merely A.S. geolster, geolhstor, "virus, sanies, tabum: poison, venome; black, corrupt, filthy matter or blood;" Somner. Hence geolstru, virulentus; virulent, full of poison; Id.

It might seem formed from geolw, yellow, as indicating the colour of purulent matter, and ster, a term., yet retained in some Goth. dialects, by which substantives are formed from verbs, and adjectives from substantives; as Belg.

is not probable that the latter has any affinity to geolster.

By the way, it may be observed that A.S. gist, Su.G.

state of fermentation, are to be traced to Alem. ges-en,
Su.G. gaes-a, jaes-a, to ferment. According to Wachter,

Mr. Pinkerton has justly observed, that this was “originally the Gothic Pagan feast of Yule or Jul,” Gl.
Maitl. Poems. The ancient Goths had three great religious festivals in the year. Of these Yule was the first.
It was celebrated at the time of the winter solstice, in honour of the Sun, whom the Goths worshipped under the name of Thor. As at this period the Sun began to return, they expressed their joy in this manner, and endeavoured to secure a propitious year. Mallet's North.
Antiq. i. 130. 131.

It must be acknowledged, that the same confusion may be remarked in the Gothic mythology, as in that of Greece and Rome. The attributes of one deity are often transferred to another. Hence the Sun is sometimes recognized by the name of Odin; and we are informed, that this deity was denominated, by the inhabitants of the North, Julcat- ter, or the Father of Yule, because this feast was observed in honour of him. V. Keysler, Antiq. Septent. p. 159.
This confusion may in part be accounted for, by a circumstance which Mallet has taken notice of. The different northern nations had their partialities; and as they all observed the feast of Jul, some might ascribe the honour to one deity, and others to another. “The Danes seem to have paid the highest honours to Odin. The inhabitants of Norway and Iceland appear to have been under the immediate protection of Thor; and the Swedes had chosen Freya for their tutelar deity.” North. Antiq. i. 97.

I. Many conjectures have been formed as to the origin of the NAME. Some have derived it from Gr. ιουλος, which denoted a hymn that was wont to be sung by women in honour of Bacchus, as appears from the following verse:

Δευδαλιδας τευχουσα καλας ηειδεν ιουλος.

“And preparing the salted flour, she sung the pleasant Iuli.”

Didymus and Athenaeus assert, that the hymn was in honour of Ceres; and the same thing is intimated by Theodoret, in his work De Materia et Mundo, when he says; “Let us not sing the Iulus to Ceres, nor the Dithy- rambus to Bacchus.” By the way, it may be remarked, that, according to the learned Verelius, Ceres was by the Goths called Frigga or Freia. Not. in Hervarar S. p. 52.
Hickes observes, that this agrees very well with the Yule- games of our ancestors, who celebrated this feast after the completion of harvest, and at the commencement of a new year, over the labours of which Ceres was supposed to preside.

It has been objected to this derivation, that it is improbable that the Goths would borrow the term from the Greeks. But if we could view the words as having a common origin, it might rather be supposed that the Greeks had borrowed theirs from the Goths, as the Pelasgi seem to have been of Scythian extract. With our ancestors, however, the worship of Ceres was certainly appropriated to Freya, while Yule was consecrated to the Sun.

G. Andr. very fancifully derives Isl. Jol, the name of this feast, from Heb. יובל, jobal, i. e. jubilee. Others have traced it to Lat. jubilum. Some have more reasonably referred to גל, gul, laetari.

Because the 25th of December was reckoned the middle of winter by Julius Cæsar, it has been conjectured that the Goths gave the name of Jul to this day. Venerable Bede, in one passage, seems to embrace this opinion. V. Worm. Fast. Dan. L. i. c. 7. Our Buchanan, having observed that Yule was a revival of the ancient Saturnalia, adds, that the name of Julius Cæsar was substituted for that of Saturn. Nostri Julia id festum vocant Caesaris videlicet nomine pro Saturno substituto. Hist. L. i. c. 24.

But it is extremely improbable, that Yule should receive its designation, among the Goths, from Julius Cæsar. "For what reason," as Loccenius inquires, "would they give this honour to him, who, so far from subduing them, never came into their territories?" According to Strabo, who lived under Augustus and Tiberius, the regions beyond the Elbe, where the sea was interposed, were quite unknown to the Romans in his time. Lib. vii. p. 249. V. Loccen. Antiq. SueoGoth. p. 23.

Wormius, although in one place he seems disposed to concede, that the Cimbric name of this feast was adopted out of compliment to Julius, elsewhere prefers a different hypothesis. "The months called Giuli (including part of December and January) receive their denomination from the retrograde motion of the sun, causing the increase of the day.—The name originates, if I mistake not, from the winter solstice, because then the sun seems as it were to rest, before he approaches nearer to the Equator. For, to this day, huile denotes rest, as at huile, to rest; and the change of H into G is easy." Fast. Dan. p. 41.

The A.S. gave the name of Geola to two of their months, December and January, calling the first Aerre-geola, or the first Yule, and the second Aeftera-geola, or the later Yule. Bede supposes that they received this designation, a conversione Solis, in auctum diei, from the sun turning back, to the lengthening of the day; the one preceding, and the other following, this change. De Temporum Rat. c. 13. Ihre adopts this idea, observing that C.B. chwyl signifies retrogradation.

Nearly allied to this, is the opinion of those who derive it from Su.G. huel, or rather hiul, rota, a wheel. Ihre has observed, (vo. Hiul) that, in the Edda, fagra hwel, i. e. beautiful wheel, is one of the designations of the Sun. Perhaps, it may be added, that a wheel seems to have been the emblem of the sun, in the old Danish Fasti.

Others understand the name as simply signifying The Feast. The learned Hickes views i or j, and A.S. ge, merely as intensive particles, conjoined with Isl. and Su.G. oel, commessatio, compotatio, convivium, symposium. The term literally signifies ale or beer, the chief liquor among the Goths; and metonymically, a feast.

In Isl. i indeed is an intensive particle, often prefixed to words for the greater emphasis; as igillde, a great price, isurt, very bitter, igraenn, very green, &c. Dr. Thorkelin adopts this etymon; Fragments of Irish History, p. 94. V. Mallet's North. Antiq. ii. 68. Gl. Eddae Saemund. vo. Aul. It is a singular coincidence, that Ir. and Gael. cuirm, which denotes ale, also signifies a feast or banquet.

Isl. jol has also been viewed (q. jo-ol) as "denominated in honour of the god Jaw or the Sun. As ol, according to the original use of the word, signifies nourishment in general, from ek el, alo, and thus includes the idea both of meat and drink, it more especially denotes a joyous and splendid feast. Very fat meat is called jolfeitt hiot; and a well-fed horse, allin hestr. Some have derived Jol from the eating of horse-flesh. This animal, indeed, was sacred to the Sun (Jaw), and was doubtless, in ancient times, sacrificed in honour of this deity." Gl. Eddae Saemund., vo. Jolnar.

Passing a variety of other etymons, I shall only add that of several learned writers, who derive the term from Moes.G. wil, the Sun; C.B. haul, Arm. gouil, hiul, id. The resemblance of the Gr. name of this luminary, ἥλιος, has been remarked.

Where there is so great a diversity of opinions, I cannot pretend to determine which of them ought to be preferred. I shall only say, that the latter derivation, and that from huel, rota, together with that of Hickes, seem to have the chief claim to attention.

II. This festival, among the Northern nations, was the great season of SACRIFICE. On this occasion human victims seem generally to have been offered to their false gods. According to Ditmar, (in Chron.) at this general convention, the Danes once in nine years increased the number of human sacrifices to ninety-nine. Besides these, they offered as many horses, dogs, and cocks, in place of hawks. V. Ihre, vo. Hoek, p. 912.

The Persians sacrificed horses to the Sun. This noble animal was, indeed, sacred to him. We must view it as a remnant of the same Eastern idolatry, that the Goths offered horses at the feast of Yule. V. El. Sched. de Dis. German. p. 102.

"The Greenlanders at this day keep a Sun-feast at the winter solstice, about Dec. 22. to rejoice at the return of the Sun, and the expected renewal of the hunting season." Crantz's Hist. Greenland, i. 176. V. Mallet, ii. 68.

The Goths used also to sacrifice a boar. For this animal, as well as the horse, was, according to their mythology, sacred to the Sun. To this day it is customary, among the peasants in the North of Europe, at the time of Christmas, to make bread in the form of a boar-pig. This they place upon a table, with bacon and other dishes; and, as a good omen, they expose it as long as the feast continues. For to leave it uncovered, is reckoned a bad omen, and totally incongruous to the manners of their ancestors. They call this kind of bread Julagalt; Verel. Not. ad Hervarar S. p. 139. For a fuller account of this ancient custom, V. MAIDEN, s. 2. See Sup.

Hence, as has been observed, we may perceive what is meant in the Indiculus Superstitionum et Paganarium Synodo Liptiniensi subjunctus, sect. 26. when we meet with this title, De Simulacro de Consparsa Farina. Keysler, ut sup. pp. 159, 160.

In our own country, the use that is made of the Maiden, or last handful of corn that has been cut down in harvest, bears a striking analogy to this custom. It is divided among the horses or cows, on the morning of Yule, sometimes of the new year, "to make them thrive all the year round." To this custom Burns seems to allude, in his beautiful Poem, entitled, The Auld Farmer's New-year Morning Salutation to his Auld Mare Maggie, on giving her the accustomed ripp of corn to hansel in the new year, iii. 140.

A guid New-year I wish thee! Maggie,
Hae, there's a ripp to thy auld baggie, &c.

This custom varies in different places. In some, the horses generally get a feed of corn on the morning of Yule; and the Maiden is given to the horse called the Winder, which leads the rest in the plough.

The ancient Romans had a rite analogous to this, in the celebration of the Feriae Sementinae, a festival appointed to be kept at the beginning of seed-time, for imploring their deities, particularly Ceres and Tellus, to give success to their labours. On this occasion, the oxen, used for labour, were crowned with garlands, and received a double portion of food. In allusion to this custom, Ovid says;

State coronati plenum ad praespe juveni. Fast. Lib. i.

Something similar to the custom of the Julagalt has evidently subsisted in the Orkney Islands, although the vestiges of it are not now understood.

"In a part of the parish of Sandwick, every family, that has a herd of swine, kills a sow on the 17th of December, and thence it is called Sow-day. There is no tradition as to the origin of this practice." Statist. Acc. xvi. 460.

This, indeed, may be viewed as a relique of the heathen worship of the ancient Goths, in sacrificing a boar to the Sun.

It is the opinion of some learned writers, that the Sun was worshipped under the name of Saturn. Servius (in Virgil. Lib. i.) says, that the Assyrians worshipped Saturn under the name of Bel, and that the Sun and Saturn are the same. V. Minut. Fel. Not. pp. 45, 46. It is certainly a well-founded idea, that Bel or Belus, the great god of the Chaldeans, was the Sun. This is asserted by Macrobius, Lib. i. c. 22. Uranus, i. e. the Heaven, being the father of Saturn, and Rhea, or the Earth, his sister and wife; it seems highly probable, that the worship of Saturn was originally derived, by the western nations, from that of the Sun as adored in the east. At the same time, it is evident that they incorporated many things of their own into this part of their mythology. But as they had different deities that bore the same name, they seem to have often jumbled together allegories concerning nature, the history of their departed heroes, and mere fables, in their accounts of one particular deity.

By supposing that Saturn was another name for the Sun, we can easily account for the striking similarity of the rites used by the Romans in their Saturnalia, celebrated in the latter part of the month of December, to those of the Northern nations. Nay, as the Celts undoubtedly worshipped the Sun under the name of Bel or Belenus, and as some of the most solemn acts of the Druidical worship were performed about this season; we find Goths, Celts, and Romans, conspiring in the observation of a great feast at the time of the winter solstice.

As the Druids then employed their golden bill, for cutting the mistletoe, it is remarkable, that the falx, the bill or scythe, was the badge of Saturn, because he was supposed to preside over agriculture; Rosin. p. 294. Banier's Mythol. ii. 260.

His worship, in another respect, agrees with that of the Sun. For it seems to be admitted, that human sacrifices had been offered to him by the Carthaginians; Banier, ibid. p. 258. In the same manner the Pelasgi are said to have worshipped him; Rosin. ut sup.

A custom, similar to that of the Julagalt already described, prevailed among the ancient Italians, in the worship of Saturn. We are informed by Dionysius of Halicarnassus, that Hercules, on his return from Spain to Italy, abolished the horrid custom of offering human sacrifices to Saturn; and, having erected an altar to him on the Saturnine mount, presented those offerings, which the Greeks call τυμολα αχνα, which, according to the Scholiast on Thucydides, were of paste figured like animals; Banier's Mythol. B. i. c. 3, p. 259.

Something of the same kind has been observed among the Egyptians. According to Jerome, indeed, it would seem to have been a general custom among the heathen, to distinguish the end of the old year, or the beginning of the new, by peculiar religious ceremonies.

The passage I refer to, is his comment on these words, Isa. lxx. 11, "That prepare a table for that troop, and that furnish the drink-offering unto that number." He renders it, "That place a table to Fortune, and pour out upon it;" or, according to the Septuagint, "pour out a drink-offering to the daemon." Then he says; "But there is an ancient idolatrous custom in all cities, and especially in Egypt and in Alexandria, that on the last day of the year and of the last month, they place a table covered with meats of different kinds, and a cup mixed with honey, expressive of abundance, either of the past, or of the future year." These words, That prepare a table for that troop, are viewed by the learned Vitringa, as respecting the worship of Apollo or the Sun, who, he apprehends, is there in Heb. called Gad; as he renders Meni, explained in our version, "that number," the Moon. In Isa. lxx. 11. V. MONE.

In our own country, there are still several vestiges of this idolatry. In Angus, he, who first opens the door on Yule-day, expects to prosper more than any other member of the family during the future year, because, as the vulgar express it, "he lets in Yule." The door being opened, it is customary with some to place a table or chair in it, covering it with a clean cloth, and, according to their own language, to "set on it bread and cheese to Yule." Early in the morning, as soon as any one of the family gets out of bed, a new broom besom is set at the back of the outer door. The design is, "to let in Yule." These gross superstitions, and the very modes of expression used, have undoubtedly had a heathen origin; for Yule is thus not only personified, but treated as a deity, who receives an oblation. See Sup.

It is also very common to have a table covered, in the house, from morning to evening, with bread and drink on it, that every one who calls may take a portion; and it is deemed very ominous, if one come into a house, and leave it without participation. However many call on this day, all must partake of the cheer provided.

It was customary with the Romans, at this season, to cover tables, and set lamps on them. This is one of the observances prohibited as heathenish, in the early canons of the Church. V. GYSAR.

Here I may also mention some other ridiculous rites practised on this day. Any servant, who is supposed to have a due regard to the interests of the family, and at the same time not emancipated from the yoke of superstition, is careful to go early to the well, on Christmas morning, to draw water, to draw corn out of the stack, and also to bring in hale from the kitchen-garden. This is meant to insure prosperity to the family.

A similar superstition is, for the same reason, still observed by many on the morning of the New-year. One of a family watches the stroke of twelve, goes to the well as quickly as possible, and carefully skims it. This they call "getting the scum or ream (cream) of the well."

This superstitious rite, in the south of S., is observed on the morning of New-year's day.

Twall struck.—Twa neebour hizzies raise;

An', liltin, gaed a sad gate;

'The flower o' the well to our house gaes,

'An' I'll the boniest lad get.'

"Upon the morning of the first day of the new year, the country lasses are sure to rise as early as possible, if they have been in bed, which is seldom the case, that they may get the flower, as it is called, or the first pail-full of water from the well. The girl, who is so lucky as to obtain that prize, is supposed to have more than a double chance of gaining the most accomplished young man in the parish. As they go to the well, they chant over the words, which are marked with inverted commas." Rev. J. Nicol's Poems, i. 30.

This seems to be a very ancient superstition; and may perhaps be viewed as a vestige of the worship of wells, which prevailed among the Picts. This rite was not unknown to the Romans. Virgil attributes the observation of it to Æneas. The act of skimming water with the hand was one of the rites necessary in order to successful augury.

— Et sic affatus ad undam
Processit, summoque hausit de gurgite lymphas,
Multa deos orans, oneravitque aethera votis.

Virg. Æn. ix. 23.

Or, as it is rendered by the Bishop of Dunkeld :

And thare withal with wourdis augural,
Eftir thare spayng cerymonis diuinal,
Vnto the flude anone furth steppis he,
And of the stremys crop ane litil we
The wattir liftis up into his handis,
Ful gretumlie the Goddis, quhare he standis,
Besekand til attend til his praier.

Doug. Virgil, 274, 15.

The stremys crop, i. e. the surface of the stream.

III. Yule, as has been already observed, was celebrated as a FEAST, among the ancient Goths. At this time, those who were related had the closest intercourse. They used by turns to feast with each other. These entertainments they called Offergilden: for the term gild denotes a fraternity or association, for the purpose of having money, meat, drink, &c. in common. Keysler. Antiq. Septent. p. 349. Thence gild or guild among us denotes a society possessing a common stock.

It was also customary during Yule, particularly in Sweden, for different families to meet together in one village, and to bring meat and drink with them, for the celebration of the feast. The same custom was observed, when there was a general concourse to the place where one of their temples stood. Erat veterum more receptum, ut cum sacrificia erant celebranda, ad templum frequentes convenirent cives omnes, ferentes secum singuli victum et comestum, quo per sacrificiorum solennia uterentur, singuli etiam cerevisiam, quae isto in convivio adhiberetur. Snorr. Sturl. Heimskring. S. Hakonar, c. 16.

I need not say, that this is most probably the origin of the custom still preserved among us, of relations and friends feasting in each other's houses, at this time. The vulgar, in the Northern counties of S., have also a custom which greatly resembles the Offergilden. On the morning of the new year, it is common for neighbours to go into each other's houses, and to club their money in order to send out for drink, to welcome in the year. This is done in private houses.

During the times of heathenism, the solemnities of Yule lasted three days. The festival seems to have been sometimes continued for eight days. Hakon Skulderbreds S. c. 11, 14.

The festive observation of this season, even where there is no idea of sanctity in relation to the supposed date of our Saviour's birth, is far more general in the N. of S., than in other parts of the country. There is scarcely a family so poor, as not to have a kind of feast on Yule. Those have butcher-meat in their houses on this day, who have it at no other time; it being the day appropriated for the meeting of all the relations of a family.

Among the lower classes, it is universally observed according to the Old Style. "Our fathers," say they, "observed it on this day;" and, "They may alter the style, but they cannot alter the seasons."

The ancient inhabitants of the North were never at a loss for the means of celebrating their Yule. Johnstone (Antiq. Celto-Normann.) has a Note referring to this subject, which exhibits their character in its true light. "The Scandinavian expeditions," he says, "were anciently conducted in the following manner. A chieftain sailed, with a few ships, for Britain, and collected all the scattered adventurers he could find in his way. They landed on the coast, and formed a temporary fortress. To this strong hold they drove all the cattle, and having salted them, the freebooters returned home, where they spent their Jol, or brumal feast, with much glee. Such an expedition was called a Strand-hoggua, or strand slaughter." P. 65.

IV. The GIFTS, now generally conferred at the New-year, seem to have originally belonged to Yule. Among the Northern nations, it was customary for subjects, at this season, to present gifts to the sovereign. These were denominated Jolagiasfir, i. e. Yule-gifts. They were Benevolences of that description, which, if not given cheerfully, the prince considered himself as having a right to extort. Hence, it is said of Hacon, King of Norway, A. 1093. Hann tok tha oc af vid tha iolagiasfir; Is quoque tributa, quae donorum Jolensium nomine solvi debebant, eis remisit. Johnstone, Antiq. Celto-Scand. p. 230.

The Romans, at this season, were wont to send presents of sweetmeats, such as dried figs, honey, &c. to which they gave the name of Strenae. This was meant as a good omen; and, by this substantial emblem, they also expressed their wishes, that their friends might enjoy the sweets of the year on which they entered; Rosin. Antiq. pp. 29, 250. The custom which prevails in S., of presenting what the vulgar call a sweetie-skön, or a loaf enriched with raisins, currants, and spiceries, has an evident analogy to this.

In some of the northern counties of S., the vulgar would reckon it a bad omen, to enter a neighbour's house, on New-year's day, empty-handed. It is common to carry some trifling present; as, a bit of bread, a little meal, or a piece of money.

Those gifts were also called by the Romans Saturnalia; Rosin. p. 294. Saturnalia,—says Tertullian, strenae captandae, et septimontium, et brumae, et carae cognationis honoraria exigenda omnia, &c. De Idololatria, c. 10. V. also his work, De Fuga in Persecutione, c. 13.

Tertullian severely reprehends the Christians, for their compliance with the heathen, in paying some respect to these customs. "By us," he says, "who are strangers to sabbaths, and new moons, once acceptable to God, the Saturnalia and the feasts of January, and Brumalia, and Matronalia, are frequented; gifts are sent hither and thither, there is the noise of the Strenae, and of games and of feasting. O! better faith of the nations in their own religion, which adopts no solemnity of the Christians." De Idololatria, c. 14. We accordingly find that the Strenae were prohibited by the Christian church. V. Rosin. Antiq. p. 29, and vo. GYSAR.

The Strenae are traced as far back as to King Tatius, who, at this season, used to receive branches of a happy or fortunate tree from the grove of Strenia, as favourable omens with respect to the New-year; Q. Symmach. ap. Rosin. p. 28.

It appears that, in consequence of the establishment of the monarchy under Augustus, all orders of people were expected to present New-years-gifts by the emperors themselves; Sueton. in August. c. 57. During the reign of this prince, these were given at the Capitol. But Caligula was so lost to a sense of shame, as to publish an edict expressly requiring such gifts; and to stand in the porch of the palace, on the Calends of January, in order to receive those which people of all descriptions brought to him; Sueton. in Calig. c. 42. Even Augustus pretended to have a nocturnal vision, requiring that the people should annually, on a certain day, present money to him, which he received with a hollow hand, cavam manum asses porrigentibus praebens; Id. in August. c. 91. It was reckoned a handsome enough way of receiving gifts, when the bosom-fold of the cloak was expanded. But when they were received utraqve manu cavata, as it would be expressed in S., in goupins, it was accounted a species of depredation. Hence rapine was proverbially expressed in this manner. V. Ammian. Marcellin. Lib. 16. Rosin. Antiq. p. 29.

The Strenae were considered as of such importance, that a particular deity was supposed to preside over them, called Dea Strenia; Rosin. p. 28. This might be the principal reason why they were condemned by Christians in early times. To have any concern with them, might be reckoned a symbolizing in some sort with idolatry.

V. This season, in very early times, was characterized by such DISSIPATION, that even the more sober heathens were scandalized at it.

Among the Northern nations, "feasting, dances, nocturnal assemblies, and all the demonstrations of a most dissolute joy, were then authorized by the general usage." Mallet's North. Antiq. i. 130.

On account of the hilarity usual at this season, Wachter concludes, that Germ. jol-en, to revel, Belg. joolig, homo festivus, as well as Fr. joli, and E. jolly, have all their origin from Jol, Yule.

The Saturnalia, among the Romans, at length lasted for seven days, the Sigillaria being included. During this season of festivity, all public business was suspended; the Senate, and the Courts of Justice, were shut up. All schools also had a vacation; Rosin. p. 98. I need scarcely remark the striking similarity of our Christmas Holidays.

Masters and servants sat at one table. Some, indeed, say, that masters waited on their servants. Every thing serious was laid aside; and people of all ranks gave themselves up to jollity; Bochart. Phaleg. p. 3.

There can be no doubt that, in the dissipation by which the new year is ushered in, we have borrowed from the heathen. The account which Seneca the Philosopher gives of this season, might seem to have been written for our times. "It is now," says he to his friend Lucilius "the month of December, when the greatest part of the city is in a bustle. Loose reins are given to public dissipation; every where may you hear the sound of great preparations, as if there were some real difference between the days dedicated to Saturn, and those for transacting business. Thus, I am disposed to think, that he was not far from the truth, who said that anciently it was the month of December, but now the year. Were you here, I would willingly confer with you as to the plan of our conduct; whether we should live in our usual way, or, to avoid singularity, both take a better supper, and throw off the toga. For what was not wont to be done, except in a tumult, or during some public calamity in the city, is now done for the sake of pleasure, and from regard to the festival. Men change their dress.—It were certainly far better to be thrifty and sober amidst a drunken crowd, disgorging what they have recently swallowed." Epist. 18. Oper. p. 273.

I have not met with any proof that the Romans disguised themselves during the Saturnalia; although this custom seems to have prevailed, during the same season, among the Celts, as it certainly did among the Goths. But such disguises were permitted in the worship of Cybele, the mother of the gods. To this purpose we have the testimony of Herodian. "Yearly, in the beginning of Spring, the Romans celebrate the feast of the Mother of the gods. On this occasion, the most striking symbols of wealth, which any one possesses, even royal furniture, and the most wonderful productions of nature or art, are wont to be carried before the deity. Liberty is given to all to indulge themselves in any kind of sport. Every one assumes whatever appearance is most agreeable to him. Nor is there any dignity so great, that a man may not invest himself with the emblems of it, if he pleases. Such pains are taken to deceive and to conceal the truth, that what is real cannot easily be distinguished from what is done in mimicry." Hist. Lib. i. c. 32.

Cybele, it may be observed, is admitted to be the same with Rhea or the Earth.

The ancient Northern nations worshipped Frea or Frigga. Her festival was observed in the month of February. She seems to correspond to Cybele in the Roman Calendar. As Cybele was the Mother of the gods, Frea was believed to be, not only the daughter, but the wife of Odin; Mallet. ii. 30. In the Edda it is declared, that all the other gods sprung from Odin and Frea. She was the same with Herthus, Hertha, or the Earth. Tacitus describes her under this very designation, of the Mother of the gods. Matrem Deum venerantur Aestii; insigne superstitionis formas aprorum gestant; German. c. 45. The Northern nations indeed sacrificed to Frea the largest hog they could find. This exactly agrees with the Roman mode of worshipping Cybele. For they sacrificed a hog to her; Rosin. p. 232.

With respect to the disguisings customary, during this festivity, among the Goths, and also in our own country, V. ABBOT of UNRESSON and GYSAR. It may be added, that Dr. Johnson, in his Journey to the Western Islands, mentions a custom, which has probably been transmitted from the Norwegian lords of the Hebrides.

"At new year's eve, in the hall or castle of the laird, where at festivals there [is] supposed to be a very numerous company, one man dresses himself in a cow-hide, on which others beat with sticks; he runs with all this noise round the house in a counterfeited fright; the door is then shut, and no re-admission obtained after their pretended terror, but by the repetition of a verse of poetry, which those acquainted with the custom are provided with." V. Strutt's Sports, p. 188, N.

During Yule, our forefathers seem to have been much addicted to Games of Chance. This custom still prevails. Even children lay up stores of pins, for playing at Te Totum. In some parts of the country, merchants generally provide themselves, about this time, with a coarser sort, which they call Yule-pins.

This custom is analogous to that of the Romans. Although games of chance were prohibited by the laws, these provided an exception for the month of December. V. Adam's Antiq. p. 458.

One species of amusement, on this day, S.B. is wad-shooting. This signifies shooting at a mark for a prize that is laid in pledge. V. WAD-SHOOTING.

VI. CANDLES of a particular kind are made for this season. For the candle, that is lighted on Yule, must be so large as to burn from the time of its being lighted till the day be done. If it did not, the circumstance would be an omen of ill fortune to the family during the subsequent year. Hence large candles are by the vulgar called Yule-Candles. Even where lamps are commonly used, the poorest will not light them at this time.

There is no reason to doubt that this custom has been transmitted from the times of heathenism. Rudbeck informs us, that Su.G. Jule lius denotes "the Candles of Yule, or of the Sun, which, on the night preceding the Festival of Yule, illuminated the houses of private persons through the whole kingdom." Atlantic. P. ii. 239. See Sup.

There is a striking conformity between this rite and that of the ancient Romans, in their celebration of the Saturnalia. They used lights in the worship of their deity. Hence originated the custom of making presents of this kind. The poor were wont to present the rich with wax tapers: Cereos Saturnalibus muneri dabant humiliores potentioribus, quia candelis pauperes, locupletes cereis utebantur. Fest. Pomp. Lib. 3. Yule-candles are, in the N. of S., given as a present at this season by merchants to their stated customers.

By many, who rigidly observe the superstitions of this season, the Yule-candle is allowed to burn out of itself. The influence of superstition appears equally in others, although in a different way. When the day is at a close, the portentous candle is extinguished, and carefully locked up in a chest. There it is kept, in order to be burnt out at the owner's Late-wake.

I may observe, by the way, that the preservation of candles has been viewed by the superstitious as a matter of great importance. This notion seems to have been pretty generally diffused. An Icelandic writer informs us, that a spakona, a spae-wife or sibyl, who thought herself neglected, in comparison of her sisterhood, at some unhallowed rites observed for foretelling the fate of a child, cried out; "Truly, I add this to these predictions, that the child shall live no longer than these candles, which are lighted beside him, are burnt out." Then "the chief of the Sibyls immediately extinguished one of the candles, and gave it to the mother of the child to be carefully preserved, and not to be lighted while the child was in life." Nornagestz Sag. ap. Bartholin. Caus. Contempt. Mortis, p. 686. See Sup.

VII. A number of MISCELLANEOUS SUPERSTITIONS may be mentioned, in relation to Yule, which are still regarded by many, especially in the North of S. Some of them, like those already referred to, may be traced to heathenism; others seem to have had their origin from the darkness of Popery. The bare mention of them must, to any thinking mind, be sufficient to shew their absurdity.

In the morning one rises before the rest of the family, and prepares food for them, which must be eaten in bed. This frequently consists of cakes baked with eggs, called Care-cakes. A bannock or cake is baked for every person in the house. If any one of these break in the toasting, the person for whom it is baked, will not, it is supposed, see another Yule. V. CARE-CAKE.

On this day, as well as on New-year's-day, Handsel-Monday, and Rood-day, superstitious people would not allow a coal to be carried out of their own house to that of a neighbour, lest it should be employed for the purpose of witchcraft. See Sup.

The generality of people in the North of S., even of those who have no attachment to the rites of the Church of England, so far retain a traditionary regard for Yule, that they observe it as a holiday. They would reckon it ominous to do any work; although they can give no better reason for their conduct, than that "their fathers never wrought on Yule."

Women seem to have a peculiar aversion to spinning on this day. This bears strong marks of a pagan origin. The ancient heathens would not suffer their women to spin on a holiday. Hence Tibullus says;

Non audeat ulla lanificam pensis imposuisse manum.

And Ovid relates, that Bacchus punished Alcithoe and her sisters for presuming to spin during his festival.

There is a singular passage in Jhone Hamilton's Facile Traicte, which, while it affords a proof of the traditionary antipathy to spinning on Yule-day, also shews how jealous our worthy reformers were against the observation of all festival days.

After declaring the opposition of the Calvinian sect to all halydayes except Sunday, he says: "The Ministers of Scotland—in contempt of the vther halie dayes obseruit be England,—cause thair wyfis and seruants spin in oppin sicht of the people upon Yeul day; and thair affectionat auditeurs constraines thair tennants to yok thair pleuchs on Yeul day in contempt of Christs Natiuitie, whilk our Lord hes not left vnpuisit; for thair oxin ran wod and brak thair nekis, and leamit [lamed] sum pleugh men, as is notoriously knawin in sindrie partes of Scotland." Pp. 174, 175.

The term Yule is also used for Christmas; A. Bor. They have their Yu, or Yule-batch, i. e. Christmas-batch; their Yule-games, and Yule-clog, or Christmas-block. "In farm-houses, the servants lay by a large knotty block for their Christmas fire, and, during the time it lasts, they are entitled by custom to ale at their meals;" Grose's Gl.

Yole occurs in the same sense in O.E.

His Yole for to hold was his encheson.

R. Brunne, p. 49.

Bourne, speaking of the custom of lighting up candles, and of burning the Yule-clog, says, that it "seems to have been used as an emblem of the return of the Sun, and the lengthening of the days. The continuing of it," he adds, "after the introduction of Christianity, may have been intended for a symbol of that Light which lightened the Gentiles;" Antiq. Vulgar.

"In Yorkshire, and other Northern parts, they have an old custom after sermon or service on Christmas-day, the people will, even in the churches, cry Ule, Ule, as a token of rejoicing, and the common sort run about the streets singing, Ule, Ule, Ule, Ule, &c. V. Blount's Dict. vo. Ule. V. YULE-E'EN.

That some such childish cry was anciently used in S. at this season, seems probable from the old Prov., "It is eith crying yool on anither man's stool;" Ramsay's S. Prov. p. 45.

To YULE, YOOL, v. n. To observe Christmas according to the customary rites.

"The lords refused to let the lady marchioness go to the castle with her husband, unless she would ward also, and with great intreaty had the favour to yool with him, but to stay no longer." Spalding's Troubles, i. 48.

YULE-E'EN, YULE-EWYN, s. The night preceding Christmas, the wake of Yule, S.

Till Auld Meldrum thai yeid thair way,
And thar with thair men logyt thai,
Befor Yhule ewyn a nycht but mar.
A thowsand, trow I, weile thai war.

Of Ingland, that at Melros lay,
He met rycht stowtly in the way.

Wyntown, viii. 36. 69.

This the A.-Saxons denominated Myd-wyntres maesse-aefen, vigilia Nativitatis Christi. For they called Christmas itself mid-winter, and myd-wyntres maesse-daeg, i. e. the mass-day in the middle of winter; as, for a similar reason, they gave the name of mid-summer to the day observed in commemoration of the nativity of John Baptist.

The Northern nations called this night Modranect, or Moedrenech, (Modranatt, Ihre,) not according to the sense given by Sibb., as being "the night of mothers," but the Mother-night, "as that which produced all the rest: and this epoch was rendered the more remarkable, as they dated from thence the beginning of the year, which among the northern nations was computed from one winter solstice to another, as the month was from one new moon to the next." Mallet, i. 130. We learn from Wormius, that to this day the Icelanders date the beginning of their year from Yule, in consequence of ancient custom which the law of their country obliges them to retain. They even reckon a person's age by the number of Yules he has seen; so that one who has lived during the celebration of this feast for twenty times, is said to be twenty years of age, although he was born on December 24th, or the very day preceding Yule-e'en. This night they denominate Jolanat; and he who, according to this mode of reckoning, is twenty years of age, is said to have lived xx Jolan-actur; Fast. Dan. Lib. i. s. 12.

Y U L

A similar mode of reckoning is retained in some parts of S. V. SINGIN-E'EN.

The Goths also called this Hoekanatt; because, in times of heathenism, on this occasion hawks were sacrificed. Ihre observes, (vo. Hoek,) that, as this feast was instituted in honour of the Sun, the Egyptians, according to the testimony of Horapollo, accounted hawks sacred to that luminary, because, by a secret power of nature, they could steadfastly look at him.

The vulgar, in the North of S. especially, have a great many ridiculous notions with respect to the eve of Yule, and on this night observe a number of superstitious rites.

It is believed by some, that, if one were to go into the cow-house at twelve o'clock at night, all the cattle would be seen to kneel. This wild idea seems to refer to our Lord's being born in a stable. Many also firmly believe, that the bees sing in their hives on Christmas-eve, as welcoming the approaching day.

It has been observed, on the word Yule, that on this day women abstain from spinning. On the evening preceding, they will not even venture to leave any flax or yarn on their wheels; apprehending that the devil would reel it for them before morning. Women in a single state assign another reason for this caution. Their rocks would otherwise follow them to church on their marriage-day. If any flax be left on their rocks, they salt it, in order to preserve it from satanical power. If yarn be accidentally left on a reel, it must not be taken off in the usual way, but be cut off.

The same caution is exercised on Good-Friday; but a reason is given, different from both of these that have already been mentioned. On this day, it is said, a rope could not be found to bind our Saviour to the cross, and the yarn was taken off a woman's wheel for this purpose.

It is a striking proof of the tyrannical influence of custom on the mind, that many who have no faith in these observances, would not feel themselves easy, did they neglect them.

Some farmers, I have been assured, are so extremely superstitious, as to go into their stables and cow-houses on Yule-e'en, and read a chapter of the Bible behind their horses and cattle, to preserve them from harm.
